Granted such an extension of tôrah did include the prophetic writings, it is important to see just how the process began, and eventually came to include oral case law discussion which in turn hardened into positive precept. It is a truism of social and psychological processes that the more consciously a battle is taken up against influence and environment, the more likely it is that such influence and environmental factors will be assimilated—a phenomenon known to psychology as the “law of reversed effort.” Some interesting illustrations of this tendency can be seen in the history of Judaism in the NT period, both orthodox and sectarian. The Essene Manual of Discipline (1QS) for example, contains the nearest approach in early Judaism to a creed. Presumably, even when consciously warring against Greek influence in the second century B.C., the Essenes unconsciously assimilated some of the Hellenistic concern for such statements. The climate of the times was heavily in favor of such Greek fondness for abstract generalizations.

Similarly, in orthodox Judaism the influence of Hellenism was deep and lasting even when that influence was being most fiercely contested. So far as we know at present, the Essene material at Qumran contains not a single Greek loan word; the Mishnah is full of them (cf. Liebermann, Hellenism in Jewish Palestine). No doubt the process was gradual, but in the field of hermeneutics the change can be seen in the NT material itself. The Qumran commentaries and Matthew’s gospel are midrashic, using a sermon-style of exposition and explanation. The method was known to Paul, and he used it (e.g., 1 Cor 10:1–5; 2 Cor 3:4–18); but his own training had been at the hands of those deeply influenced by the exacting discipline of Greek hermeneutics, and his concern is in the main with the precise meaning of words and phrases. Philo found it possible to allegorize the Law (though this was a wholly Greek phenomenon), and Jews in the Dispersion lived in the midst of city-societies that had been open to Stoic and mid-Platonic thinking for generations. Even Galilee, nearer to the center of orthodox Judaism, was surrounded by Greek cities and was thoroughly cosmopolitan.

We should bear all of this in mind as we examine the passage in which Jesus is commonly thought to have been most sweeping in his condemnation of those concerned for the Law. Some have maintained that the passage implies a wholesale condemnation of the Law in favor of something to be promulgated by himself.

In this connection nothing is more important than the condemnation of the scribes and Pharisees in Matt 23:13. Though various translations have been offered for the phrase which opens each particular condemnation, the KJ will serve to give the general sense rendered by most translators: “Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!” “Hypocrites” is simply the Gr. hupocritēs, and such has been the influence of translation that two results have followed: (1) the assumption that the Greek precisely denotes one self-consciously playing a part, an actor, whose whole way of life and even convictions may be at variance with the role in which he is cast, or in which he has cast himself; and (2) that the “hypocrisy” or play acting of the scribes and Pharisees so castigated casts a doubt on the continued validity of the Law in the mind and teaching of Jesus. We have rejected the translation “hypocrite” in this commentary because it is merely the Greek word, and its primary meaning in Greek is not “actor.” (The linguistic evidence from the remainder of the New Testament is set out in an appendix, below.)

According to context, our translations of hupocrisis (Matt 23:28, RSV “hypocrisy”) and hupocritēs, hupocritai (Matt 6:2, etc., RSV “hypocrite,” “hypocrites”) are varied, but as the appended note demonstrates, all are based on an understanding of the words as denoting an overscrupulous, pettifogging concern with the minutiae of law.

An interesting link with LXX usage is found at Matt 23:28—the equation of hupocrisis (the only example of this word in Matthew) with lawlessness (anomia). It is not necessary to be well acquainted with moral or ascetical theology to be aware that scrupulosity is rightly condemned as sin, and also that what is ostensibly concerned with a punctilious observance of law inevitably becomes self-concerned. In this way the function of law is lost, or at best hopelessly obscured as the ego overcomes social concern. Furthermore, as Paul indicated, law as an end in itself, divorced from the relationships with God and man which are its real concern, becomes an intolerable burden. Doubtless “hard cases make bad law,” but an overweening legalism which fails to take proper cognizance of particular circumstances, time, and persons, infallibly produces the attitude of mind which Jesus condemned in the Pharisee lawyers.

Far and away the most prevalent form of hupocritēs to be found in Matthew is hupocritai. We have in chapter 6 rendered the plural by “overscrupulous” (6:2, 5, 16). The exact, punctilious observance of every possible legal prescription and custom, written and unwritten, in the realms of prayer, fasting and almsgiving would tend to produce (and, Jesus charges, did produce), not an offering of self to God, but an exhibition of legal rectitude to those who saw it. At 7:5 the translation is “Casuist!” We realize that casuistry is important in any system of moral theology. It is emphatically no prerogative of seventeenth- and eighteenth-century Jesuits, still less of the Roman Catholic Church, but in popular estimation it almost always bears a pejorative meaning similar to that now enjoyed by the adjective “apocryphal.” Here at 7:5 there is enough of the pejorative sense to indicate Jesus’ impatience with the legalism which is aware only of failure of observance in others. At 15:7 we have elected to use the colloquialism “Shysters!” which connotes a total disregard for the purpose of the Law while ostensibly paying reverence to it. The incident which provoked Jesus’ exclamation in 22:18 seemed again to demand “You casuists!” for here the aim of a supposedly harmless question was to bring a charge of lawlessness against him.

Matthew 23, which contains no fewer than seven passages where hupocritai is used (vss. 13, 14, 15, 23, 25, 27, 29), ought to demonstrate to the thoughtful the reverence in which Jesus held the Law of his fathers. Not infrequently, and especially in homiletics, critics have not seen this, and have instead depicted Jesus as condemning the Mosaic Law. We have already called attention to the manner in which Jesus protested against later oral glosses and interpretations imposed on the Law, and chapter 23 underlines that contention. In this chapter we have translated the familiar opening words of the “seven woes” (vs. 14) by “Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers!” Jesus’ criticism is not directed against the Law, or against case law and casuistry as such—John 8:1–11, whatever its historical background, does represent Jesus as dealing with a particular “case”—but against that willful disregard for the purpose of the Law, against that misuse of law which supposes that all human experience is ultimately capable of being subject to legislation. The fate of the slave in 24:51, whose final destiny lies with the “timeservers” (our translation), is fitting end to the career of one who judged that he could take the law into his own hands.

Here we must pay some attention to conflicting legal approaches to the observance of the Law in the time of Jesus. The differing outlooks of the two great legalists Shammai and Hillel had in the course of half a century hardened into schools of interpretation, often in violent opposition to each other. Both schools had followers among the lawyers, and both gave rise to large amounts of oral law and legal tradition which the “scribes” (lawyers) were only too anxious to write into precise legislation. Despite the more humanitarian attitude of Hillel and his followers, the increasing application of Greek hermeneutics among them gave impetus to a heightened awareness of words and meanings. For both schools the continued existence of the secular state and a sacrificial cultus centered in Jerusalem provided a field in which the possibilities for the growth of legalism were almost unlimited.

We have called attention to the prophetic tradition in which Jesus stood. Standing in that tradition revering the Law and the Covenant enshrined by that tradition, Jesus could be moved to anger at manipulations of the Law. The OT prophetic record is too well known to need recapitulation. When Jesus protested that the Sabbath was God’s gracious gift to man, and not an institution intended to dominate man’s life (Mark 2:27), he spoke from the prophetic tradition, from conviction that men under the Covenant should be free from self-concern to serve God. While it is true that there is a saying similar in character to Mark 2:27 attributed to Rabbi Simeon (“To you the Sabbath is given over, and you are not given over to the Sabbath”), R. Simeon speaks toward the close of the second century A.D., and it may be doubted whether the saying of either Jesus or R. Simeon would have been acceptable in the inflamed state of opinion before A.D. 70.

For Paul, Jesus as Messiah was the “end,” the goal, of the Law (Rom 10:4) and Jesus himself regarded the Sabbath as peculiarly appropriate to God’s gracious acts performed through himself. A new community was being forged and a Kingdom proclaimed, and therefore the true function of the Law was being declared. So far from being abolished by the proclamation of the Kingdom, it was being championed. But the Law was also to bring men to the Messiah (Gal 3:24). What the Mosaic Law could become when regarded as not merely custodian but father, mother, family and even life itself, Paul the ex-Pharisee testifies eloquently in both his Roman and Galatian letters.

The Mosaic Law, and the demands of the Gospel, apply only to those whose allegiance is claimed either by circumcision or baptism. No doubt Christianity, through its periodic missionary activity, has manifested a greater awareness of responsibility to those beyond its borders than has Judaism. But nothing in Christian history has been more reprehensible than attempts by Christians of all persuasions to impose a universal code of ethics supposedly derived from the Christian faith. In this respect the champions of “situation ethics” are no better than proponents of the Roman Inquisition or European and American Puritanism. By the use of the “parable” from case law, coupled with a use of “love” in a non-covenantal sense, the more vocal members of the “situation ethics” school are doing no more—and emphatically no less—than did the Reformers, Catholic and Protestant alike, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Christian morality may be based on a longer historical experience than were—say—the ethical systems of Confucius or Aristotle, but to attempt to impose Christian standards in a desperate attempt to prove their “relevance” is precisely the kind of unscrupulous behavior castigated by Jesus.

N.B. A recent article (Kenzo Tagawa, “People and Community in the Gospel of Matthew,” NTS 16 (1970), 149–63, is of considerable importance for the discussion above, in its examination of the position of the Gentile in Matthew’s gospel.

APPENDIX

Hupokrisis, Hupokritēs, Hupokrinesthai

This appendix is the result of the study of possible translations of the Greek term hupokritēs (pl. hupokritai) in Matthew, with the implications of such translations for study of Jesus' attitude to the Law (see above). This appendix is intended to present the evidence on which the study was based.

The English translation (or rather, transliteration) hypocrite, and the associated hypocrisy, carry a minatory meaning which most users of the word think that they fully understand. It is assumed that a "hypocrite" is one who consciously plays a part, an actor, one who may (out of whatever motives) adopt an attitude which is at variance with his own convictions. In short, it is taken for granted that the later Greek sense of "actor" for hupokritēs is the sole meaning in the New Testament, indicating (in this view) that Jesus intended to execrate the Pharisees in general as "two-faced," saying one thing but meaning (for themselves) something quite different. While this sense of the word prevails in popular (and academic) circles, Jews can justifiably complain that the gospels consistently misrepresent the Pharisees.

We contend that the Greek verb krinein and its derivatives (especially hupokrinesthai) are all primarily concerned with interpretation. It was in later Greece, when interpretation became more and more identified with the stage, that hupokritēs meant "actor." It would seem that both apokrinesthai and hupokrinesthai have a basic common meaning, both concerned with correct recitation, but with a slight shift in meaning in Attic Greek for apokrinesthai in the direction of "answer," and in Ionic toward the meaning of "recite actor's lines." However, this latter meaning could not be solely concerned with a correct text, since a variation in text almost invariably carries with it a change of emphasis or even interpretation.

The verb krinesthai originally meant—in Homer—"to interpret (dreams)" (Odyssey 19. 535, 555) and it is only in later times that it came to mean "playing an actor's part." The intermediate sense, through which the later meaning developed, was that of reciting, interpreting, answering (dialogue). It is true that such recitation, interpretation, and answering of questions initially had to do with the epic poetry of Greece, but it is important to remember that "to play a part" was a derived, not a primary meaning. (References are too numerous for the scope of this commentary, but they may easily be consulted in H. G. Liddell and Robert Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon, 9th rev. ed. by H. S. Jones and others, Oxford University Press, 1940, and in the relevant article of [TWNT \[Vol. VI, ed. Gerhard Friedrich, 1969\].](#)) Something of the initial meaning of the word

may be discerned in the confusion attending hupokrinesthai and apokrinesthai, partly because of a similarity of prefixes: in the New Testament apokritheis eipen is common for “he answered,” following the Attic Greek apokrinesthai, where it is normal in this sense.

However much we may have succumbed to pejorative connotations in our English transliteration of hupokritēs, we are still accustomed to using the English word “critical” and its congeners in a more or less neutral sense. The Gr. kritikos is similarly neutral, implying a capacity for discernment. We may even carry the sense a step further and speak of someone as “hypercritical,” intending to convey the idea that a person is given to fine, hairsplitting distinctions, but we do not at the same time accuse such a person of “being a hypocrite” in our modern sense. We suggest only that his faculty of discernment is carried too far for ordinary purposes. The Gr. krinein hardly needs comment here: it meant “to judge, to evaluate”—normal activities of one who undertook to interpret Greek epic poetry, whether this had to do with individual words, or with allegorical meanings attached to various passages.

Thus hupokritēs came to mean one who declaimed or recited Greek poetry or drama, especially Homer. In this sense hupokritēs occupied somewhat the same position as the reciter of epics, saga, and folk tales in Scandinavian and Celtic cultures, not to mention the Greek rhapsodist or the Arab rāwī (cf. Plato Timaeus 72B; Lucian Somnium 17 et al.). But the reciter of the Homeric poems, which were sacred literature to the ancient Greeks, also had to be an interpreter (cf., e.g., Timaeus Sophista). Only in a secondary sense did hupokritēs stress that the interpreter was also an actor or was consciously playing a part (cf., e.g., Plato Republic 373B.) So also the adjective hyperkritikos, though not found in LXX or New Testament, also designates a skilled declaimer, or one with good natural diction (cf. Aristotle Rhetoric 3. 1. 7; Poetics 19. 7, 27. 6). The metaphorical use—as of one pretending to be something other than he is—cannot be documented before the second century A.D.

With this material as background we now turn to the use of the words in question in NT, with such material from LXX as serves to illuminate NT use.

First there is hupokrinesthai. An interesting case is to be found in R. H. Charles’s treatment in Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of Ecclus 1:29. Accepting the original Hebrew reading of penê (“in the presence of”) instead of pî (“in the mouth of”), we have “do not be overcritical in the presence of men, but be careful what thou sayest.” There are examples of the verb in 2 Macc 5:25, 6:21, 24. Apollonius in 5:25 fills the role of a “man of peace,” and this is the nearest we come in biblical material to hupokrinesthai as “playing a part.” Far more instructive are the examples of 6:21, 24. Eleazar, an aged scribe, is asked to interpret, to demonstrate, a fine point of law. He is asked to provide meat of his own choice, to consume it as though it were pork, thus seeming to render obedience to the royal decree and at the same time save himself and his people. It is not that (6:21) the old man is asked to play a part—though that would follow as a result of his action—but that being skilled in the Law, he might satisfy the letter of the Law while at the same time satisfying the legal demands of his interrogators. Evidently they were well assured that however hairsplitting the interpretation might be, Eleazar’s compliance would produce the maximum satisfaction for both sides. It is the kind of hairsplitting legal scrupulosity (hupokrisis) which the old man rejects in 6:24–25. It is not “deceit” (NEB) or “dissimulation.” That hupokritēs and allied forms have to do with this kind of legal interpretation is clear from Ecclus 32:15 and 33:2: the man who truly seeks the Law, who does not hate it, will find it a strength and support. But the hupokritēs, the man whose keeping of the Law is characterized by scrupulosity, is in a wholly different case. Using the Law for his own purposes, he becomes enmeshed in its provisions, stumbles over it (32:15), and in the end is as unstable in his opinions as a ship in a storm (32:2). These examples from the Greek Ben Sira are of considerable importance, since they date from the late second century B.C. (Unhappily, the Hebrew text of the passages in question is obscure.)

In two versions of LXX we have examples of hupokrisis in addition to II Maccabees. Aquila and Theodotion, as well as Symmachus, use the word in Isa 32:6, where the fool plots hupokrisis. Interestingly, the received text of LXX reads “iniquity,” or “lawlessness.” Nothing breeds disrespect for law more easily than a suggestion that it can be manipulated to serve a number of varying or even contradictory ends. One version of LXX provides us with hupokritai instead of the received “robbers” in Hos 6:9. The suggestion is presumably that Israel’s religion had become so corrupt that manipulations of its Law were tantamount to robbery.

Job provides some interesting examples. Elihu’s speech in 34:30 speaks of the dangers lying in wait when a ruler is hupokritēs (Heb. ḥānēf, translated “godless” in RSV, and “impious” by Marvin H. Pope in Job, AB, vol. 15). Under such a ruler, all respect for law would come to an end. The same speaker, in further developing the theme of the lawless ruler, uses hupokritēs again. in 36:13.

The Heb. ḥānēf seems to be a particularly poor foundation upon which to build. Ḥānēf, “blasphemous, wicked,” also appears in the Dead Sea Manual of Discipline (1QS) with synonymous words; it is rendered by hupokrisis in three Greek versions (Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion) at Isa 32:6, and the word appears to carry moral rather than legal implications. The word does appear in a specifically legal context in Dan 11:32 (early second century B.C.) in speaking of the enemy who seduces, persuades to apostasy, those who violate the Covenant. The use made of both noun and verb in Jeremiah is normal in character and has to do with covenant law only in context. Daniel 11:32, when speaking of the “godlessness” (hanûphāh) in the land, equates the state of affairs with treachery. Jer 3:9 and 23:11 (where the word hānēf is used) argue that the wickedness of the land is a result of the flagrant pursuit of heathen rites.

We may also here adduce the evidence from Arabic and Syriac. The Syr. nāsēbai b-appei, a “respector of persons,” used as a translation of hupokritēs in the New Testament, is the lawyer or judge who manipulates the law for a person. Prima facie, the Arabic is less tolerant of this kind of interpretation, and ḥanîf (a loanword from Hebrew through Aramaic) denotes the true believer, the truly orthodox Muslim. It is certainly true that the scrupulously orthodox can on occasion be capable of some impressive legal hairsplitting. Unless the Heb. hānēf at a later stage carried with it some such concern for scrupulous observance it is hard to see how the Arabic derivative could have achieved its meaning. The statement in Winckler’s article (TWNT, VI, p. 563, n. 25) that ḥanîf means “heathen” in Arabic is contrary to all Muslim belief and usage from the Quran (Koran) onwards, and is based on a misunderstanding of the Arabic Muslim meaning. It would make Abraham—described as ḥanîf in the Quran—into a heathen, whereas to Muslim Arabs Abraham was the friend of God, the ancestor of all Arabs, as well as the first true believer. Other usages of words from the trilateral stem are loan words from Syriac, where the words are used of pagans.

We now turn to NT evidence outside Matthew’s gospel. Conveniently, we may begin with Paul. His charge against Peter in Gal 2:3 is that Peter’s vacillating conduct arose simply from casuistry (hupokrisis), a casuistry which was not called into play until the situation in Antioch was complicated by the arrival of Jewish Christians from Jerusalem. The apostolic condemnation in 1 Tim 4:2 deals with the sort of casuistry (hupokrisis, RSV “pretensions”) which attempts to make universal rules out of occasional or voluntary ascetical practices. Two other examples of hupokrisis outside the gospels deal with the same theme. James 5:12 is in fact an example of the word divided into its two elements; the warning against surrounding plain statements with a mass of qualifications and oaths is paralleled in Matt 5:37. The letter adds the warning “lest you fall into casuistry,” or “lest you fall under judgment”—the words will tolerate either sense. 1 Peter 2:1 links hupokrisis with malice and guile. The RSV translation here is “insincerity,” which in the context is just barely possible.

The uses of hupokrisis in the gospels are revealing. Mark 12:15 represents Jesus, in the dispute about the poll tax, as being wholly aware of the casuistry which would fasten for polemical purposes on any statement he made. (The parallel in Matt 22:18 uses “malice” of his questioner’s attitude, and we have translated hupokritai by “You casuists!”) The Lukan version speaks of his questioners’ “craftiness”—frequently, indeed, the mark of the casuist. Luke 12:1 speaks of Jesus warning his disciples against the hyper-legalism of the Pharisees, though the parallels in Matthew and Mark do not have the word hupokrisis. In Matt 23:28 Jesus emphatically links the casuistry of the scribes and Pharisees with lack of respect for the Law—a usage to which we have already called attention.

In the gospels there is one example of hupokrinesithai. In Luke 20:20, Jesus’ critics sent spies who represented themselves as men simply concerned for a declaration of his attitude on a point of law, but in reality casuists ready to manipulate his reply in order to provide an opportunity for persecution.

We now turn to the familiar hupokritēs (plural hupokritai). As a transliteration of the Greek, “hypocrite” was known in English at least as early as the Ancren Riwe (“Rule for Anchoresses”) of the thirteenth century, where it means a dissembler; “the false ancess is an hypocrite” answers to our modern usage. The only use of “hypocrite” in English throughout the Middle Ages was ecclesiastical, and we have no evidence for its use before the thirteenth century. “Hypocritical” is apparently sixteenth century: the example which comes nearest to the translation we defend comes from an Act of Parliament of Henry VIII, mentioning “the hypocritical and superstitious religions among us.” A letter of 1711 also speaks of one who “in King Edward’s time hypocris’d and comply’d with the Reformations.”

All in all, the direct transcription of the Gr. hupokritēs has obscured the real attitude of Jesus to the religion of his own time, and has at the same time been responsible for great misunderstandings of the Pharisees.

Mark has but one example of hupokritēs, 7:6 (=Matt 15:7) and the translation “You casuists!” precisely fits the context. Luke 6:42 (=Matt 7:5) comes as the conclusion of warning that there is a casuistry so concerned with rectitude in others that it cannot see its own shortcomings. Luke 12:56 is in a similar category: the casuists castigated there are so busily engaged in quite minor “cases” (which are here the indications of fair or foul weather) that the really dramatic signs of the times wholly escape them. They cannot see the wood for the trees. In the final example (Luke 13:15), we have rendered the parallel in Matt 15:7 “shysters”; this sense is equally demanded by the Markan parallel (7:6). Here again we have an example of case law which has been allowed to run riot, and in so doing has obscured the very nature of law itself.

If all that we have tried to demonstrate is true, then granted the “Jewishness” of Matthew’s gospel, it is no surprise that the word hupokritēs should be so frequently used in that gospel. One example of hupokritai, the plural, in Matthew (6:2, 5, 16) is very near the Greek of “those who demonstrate or interpret.” To charge those who are condemned in this chapter with being “hypocrites” in the usual English sense is to miss the point. It was not that these people were consciously acting a part which did not correspond to their own inner convictions, but that they were parading their own scrupulousness in public. This is the reverse side of casuistry: not merely an attempt to legislate for all possible contingencies, but setting up a self-conscious example, and thus bringing the service of God into contempt.

In Part X of the Introduction we hope we have established Jesus’ reverence for the Law of Moses as a declaration of the will of God, and that he demanded of his disciples—Jews like himself—that they pay reverence to those charged with the duty of teaching that Law (Matt 23:2). This is followed in the same chapter with the most stringent denunciations against misuse of that duty, and (coupled with examples from case law) the most numerous occurrences of hupokritai. (Matt 23:13–32). In this instance we have translated the word by “you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers,” since the phrase “Pharisee lawyers” throughout the seven “woes” includes both scribes and Pharisees. It is abundantly clear from the context that Jesus is impatient with the disciples of both Hillel and Shammai. In spite of the greater flexibility of interpretation associated with the name Hillel, the advent of Greek hermeneutical methods could often mean that the school of Hillel was every bit as exacting in the requirements of the Law as that of Shammai. The middôt (to which reference has been made in Part IV above) provided a logical foundation upon which legal speculation could, and did, proliferate. No matter that the schools of Shammai and Hillel were often opposed to each other: both could, and did, provide an atmosphere in which legal hairsplitting made the Law less and less an expression of man’s responsive loyalty to God and God’s gracious gift to his people, but at the same time more and more a matter of uncertainty. The agricultural peasant, dealing every day with all forms of nature, organic and inorganic, was driven to exasperated near-contempt for the legal directives that interfered with his livelihood. The city dweller, too, in daily contact with those from outside the borders of Israel, must often have developed scorn for a discipline which made finer and finer distinctions of observance so long as the national state and sacrificial cultus remained intact. The final example of hupokritai in Matthew (24:51) we have translated by “timeservers.” Those who manipulated law brought it into contempt and deserved to be numbered with the ungodly.

Outside the gospels, but of outstanding importance as evidence for our position in this appendix, is the Didache (Teaching of the Twelve Apostles), which—following J.-P. Audet in his 1958 edition and commentary (La Didaché, Études Bibliques, Paris: Gabalda)—we date about the third quarter of the first century A.D.

The words hupokrisis, hupokritai occur in various contexts, and—as Audet observes in his study of the work—the words do not carry condemnation on moral grounds. Didache viii 1 refers to hupokritai who diverged from the traditional days of fasting (Wednesday and Friday) in favor of other days (Monday and Thursday), while viii 2 simply repeats the injunction of Jesus in Matt 6:5. Didache ii 6, in a discussion of the “way of life,” forbids hupokrisis along with other sins of self-seeking, sins which display a flagrant disregard for the rights of others. So too in Didache iv 12: the believer must disdain all hupokrisis and everything else which is displeasing to the Lord. There is inherent improbability in Winckler’s suggestion (TWNT, VI, p. 569) that the hupokritai in Didache are Jews. It seems plain that the author or compiler of Didache was calling attention to the dangers inherent in a situation where some Christians were trying to demonstrate their spiritual superiority by using extraordinary fast days. We seem to be in the presence of a controversy over calendrical usage, such as characterized the dispute of the Essenes with orthodox Judaism about the dates of feasts (implications of which can be found in the New Testament), or the later controversy in the Church about the date of Easter. The dissidents are not being accused of “hypocrisy” or moral turpitude in our modern sense. Their self-conscious rectitude, whether or not it was derived from sectarian practice, plainly constituted a threat to the unity of the Christian community. This seems to be the burden of the injunctions of Didache ii 6 and iv 12. Once more we are in the presence of a legalism which can find some justification for its interpretation of law or custom, and in the process of doing so adopt—albeit unconsciously—an attitude of superiority.

Our treatment of the words which head this appendix was done independently of Winckler’s work in the TWNT, but we have checked some points from it, as we have indicated. It is necessary to indicate our disagreement with some of the conclusions which Winckler draws from the rabbinic writings. His assertion (TWNT, VI, p. 563, n. 26) that Rabbi Eleazar used ḥānēf in the sense of “heretic” must be contested: it is the legal oppressor, not the heretic, who is compared with a menstruous woman. Similarly with Rabbi Benjamin in the same note: what is under discussion by that rabbi is the legal casuist who oppresses people. Although Winckler—in our view—correctly estimates the evidence from the classical and Hellenistic sources, he quite fails to assess the contribution made by the Jewish concept of law when dealing with LXX.

X. MIRACLES IN MATTHEW

The Old Testament proclaims, without argument (since it knew nothing of Greek logic), what has come to be called “theism.” This is most often expressed in such terms as “the living God,” the personal, active, overruling Lord of heaven and earth. Throughout the Bible, Old Testament and New, God is conceived as the only and original source of power, from whom all authority is derived. In the biblical view, there are no limitations to God’s power; with him all things are possible. Here, however, it is necessary to insist that one of the marks which distinguished the Hebrews from the rest of mankind was the assumption—and in the face of national corruption, the insistence—that God’s power is not arbitrary or a matter of whim like that of Poseidon, for example, but is always a declaration of a will that can never be anything but holy and righteous. The God of Israel was also unique in another way. While there was nothing particularly distinctive about seeing God as the Lord of nature—most divinities in the Middle East were nature gods, some of them crudely so—it was a unique insight to see God as the sole Lord of history. (It is important to remember at this point that for all the emphasis on God’s rule over the events of human history, Israel came to understand this crucial concept through her own experiences during the Exodus from Egypt, an event which for all succeeding generations left an indelible mark on the biblical record.) In the Old Testament there was never any question as to whether or not the Lord of nature and of history could perform “mighty wonders”; the Exodus alone was sufficient proof. For the New Testament, which inherited Israel’s faith, the outward sign of the delivering power of God was the raising of Jesus from the dead. In both cases, Exodus and Resurrection, God acted from outside human history, and yet within its framework. The Exodus was not simply an event in history—it was enshrined in the Passover Feast, itself no mere commemoration but a pledge for the present and the explanation of the future. Similarly the Resurrection, commemorated at Easter and on each Sunday, was not merely a past event in history—it was the well-spring of all Christian faith and hope.

It is only with this understanding of the God of Israel as an active, all-powerful God of history that we can go on to discuss the miracles with any meaning. For the biblical writers, miracles are interventions by divine power in the affairs of men, especially when considered as the means by which God declared himself and his purposes to men. In biblical times, the absence of any such concept as “the laws of nature” (as developed by Francis Bacon and his successors) made it necessary to use some such term as “sign” to denote extraordinary happenings beyond ordinary human experience.

Far too much attention has been focused on the miracle narratives by exponents of the “form criticism” school. Bultmann maintains that the stories were told to emphasize the superior status of Jesus as a wonder-worker, a thaumaturge; he finds the origin of the stories in the quite common Hellenistic miracle stories (cf. Rudolf Bultmann, Study of the Synoptic Gospels, in Form Criticism, ed. and tr. F. C. Grant [London, 1934], pp. 36 ff., and Chicago: Willett, 1934). One difficulty with this view is the exaggerated form in which the similarity is usually stated. Another is that the Hellenistic wonder-workers in question are, so far as we know, post-Christian in date. Still another difficulty comes from the assumption that Greek religion and mythology were already being accepted by Jews en masse during the late pre-Christian and early Christian periods.

In his Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition, 2d ed. (Tübingen: Vandenhoeck & Rupprecht, 1931), pp. 236 ff. and 247 ff.), Bultmann recommends that we consider that both Greek and Jewish “wonder stories” arose in the same atmosphere, and so pari passu did the gospel miracle narratives. Bultmann holds that faith, as Jesus demanded it, was not faith in him as a person (though Bultmann prefers to speak of a “faithful adherence to the preaching of Jesus”), but simply trust in him as a wonder-worker. The writers of our gospels, and the oral tradition underlying them, according to Bultmann, were simply concerned to demonstrate the proofs of Jesus’ supernatural powers.

To accept such an interpretation, it would be necessary to find an explanation for the total absence of any appeal in the rest of the New Testament to the factor of miracle in any explanation of the person of Jesus. And how to account for the way in which the evangelists play down the element of wonder in the stories? The NT writers never use the words teras, terata (wonder, wonders) alone to describe the miracles of Jesus and the apostles: they always qualify the words with semeion, semeia (sign, signs), and indeed in John, only the word “sign” is admissible.

Substantially, Bultmann’s position is also that of Martin Dibelius (From Tradition to Gospel, tr. from the rev. 2d ed. of Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums by the author and B. L. Woolf [London: Nicholson, 1934], pp. 70 ff.; New York: Scribner; 1934). Dibelius has it that the miracle narratives in the New Testament belong to a class he calls Novellen and not only assumes that these stories belonged to a well-known genre, but also provides us with a totally unattested class of “storytellers” in the primitive Church whose function it was to collect from Jewish and Gentile sources stories of heroes and gods whose exploits could be assimilated into the story of Jesus, in order to improve his public image (p. 96).

Neither Dibelius nor Bultmann seem able to agree on which miracle stories are intended merely as “wonder-tales” and which are “paradigms” (narratives with an important “pronouncement” embodied in them). Before accepting their conjectures, the reader should note that there is a total lack of historical evidence for the motives imputed to the NT writers, and should consider several other vital factors as well.

(1) One of the few things that is certain about the universe as we now know it is the total uncertainty of any firm statement of invariable cause and effect. It is not even certain how far we are justified in speaking of “invariable sequence.” Only the most unsophisticated among us can any longer pretend that miracles, in whatever sense understood, “cannot happen.”

(2) Perhaps far more serious—from the standpoint of the biblical student—is the downgrading of the Old Testament which the view of Bultmann and Dibelius involves. Dibelius is certain that the miracle stories were simply “tales” and not intended for incorporation into sermons on salvation. But the Old Testament is abundantly clear that what our English Bibles call God’s “mighty acts” are in the majority of cases a declaration of his overruling providence in caring for his elect people—individuals are seldom the object of miracles in the Old Testament. The Hebrew words commonly translated by teras (wonder) and later by the Latin miraculum (hence the English “miracle”) do not have the kind of connotation commonly evoked by the word “miracle” in modern English. Generally speaking, the OT words designate “signs,” in the same sense in which the prophets used symbolic acts designed to effect what they portrayed (cf. 2 Kings 13:14–19; Jer 27–28). In no case are these signs used for self-aggrandizement, but always as manifestations of the overruling purposes of God.

(3) A premise underlying much modern writing on miracles holds that because there is nothing which cannot ultimately be proved or disproved by rational understanding, then miracles in the sense of God’s overruling of the natural order cannot happen. Conservative Christians may well have brought this attitude upon themselves by relying too heavily on the value of miracles as proof of, for example, the divinity of Jesus. The result has been, in much Christian apologetic, a disastrous cleavage between the preaching of the kingdom by Jesus on the one hand, and the necessity of dealing with the gospel miracle stories on the other. The evidential emphasis on miracles has been much used since the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, but it belongs essentially with belief in the fixity of the natural order, and belief in a doctrine of immutability in the so-called laws of nature. This emphasis had no place in the minds of the NT writers, for whom miracles might be expected daily, and for whom miracles were no necessary sign of divinity. Paul can attribute miracles to the forces of evil (2 Thess 2:9), in the gospels the Pharisee community can be represented as casting out devils (Matt 12:27; cf. Luke 11:19), and the disciples of Jesus are puzzled by their own inability to exorcise a demon (Mark 9:28; Matt 17:20). Jesus himself emphatically rejects the view that miracles are needed as evidence of his own status (Mark 8:11–12 and parallels).

(4) Both Bultmann and Dibelius suggest that the whole framework for the miracle stories is such that they exactly fit the formal pattern of Hellenistic wonder-stories, and are therefore like them in lack of credibility. This framework is said to be (a) a description of the condition of the patient, with attendant detail; (b) a description of the cure together with the words (if any) of the wonder-worker; (c) the admiring comments of the bystanders together with the behavior of the former sufferer. In view of the nature of stories of healing, similarity in form is to be expected. But such comparisons offer little or no basis for the evaluation of the content of the story itself. Parallels are not hard to find in the claims made for patent medicines during the past century.

The task of interpreting the miracles is of supreme importance in view of the fact that they loom so large in the gospels. John records only seven, but in the majority of cases they are the points upon which important blocks of teaching are built (cf. especially John 6). The miracle narratives should not just be accepted as they stand and then “spiritualized” away. For all the service that Alan Richardson’s Miracle-Stories of the Gospels (New York: Harper / London: SCM, 1941) rendered, it must be agreed with James Kallas (The Significance of the Synoptic Miracles, London: SPCK, 1961) that Richardson is so intent on discovering homiletic and religious meaning in the narratives that one is left wondering precisely how far the events recorded any longer have validity. As Kallas (p. 4) rightly observes, Richardson so allegorizes Mark’s two feeding stories that the events are of small moment. The blind man at Bethsaida is summarized in the words “whether [he] was a historical person or not is a secondary question” (Richardson, p. 86). Richardson has on many occasions done great service to NT scholarship, particularly in exposing the frequent pretensions of some whose hold on historical evidence is slender at best; but we are unlikely to find satisfactory explanations in his work for the integral connection which the gospels make between Jesus’ proclamation of the reign of God and the signs by which that preaching was accompanied.

Raymond E. Brown points out that “the miracle was not primarily an external guarantee of the coming of the kingdom; it was one of the means by which the kingdom came” (New Testament Essays [Milwaukee: Bruce, 1965], p. 171). It is important to see miracles in the gospel narrative in the setting of Jesus’ proclamation of the Kingdom: miracle is not an appendage, a verifying afterthought; it is, on the plain statement of Jesus himself, bound up with the announcement of the reign of God (cf. Matt 12:22–30; Luke 11:14–23). For Jesus, the characteristic of his healings was the manifestation of the warfare between God and Satan, good and evil, light and darkness.

This concern with the conflict between God and Satan is important, as there is perhaps nothing which has fascinated men more than the problem of the origin of evil. To deny the existence of evil in men is consummate folly, but when we have said that all the faculties of man's being are shot through with potentialities for evil we are no nearer solving the question of its origin. It may be that we are not likely to arrive at anything which is better for popular use than the personalized and concrete "Satan."

The task of understanding the miracles is not made easier by taking a superior attitude toward the (supposed) simplicity of a first-century belief in a personalized, concrete evil. It is true that the figure of Satan was a latecomer in Jewish thinking, but by the dawn of the NT era that figure had come to occupy a very important position. The NT picture of sharply divided dominions (cf. especially 1 John 5:19), epitomized by the teaching and practice of Jesus himself (cf. Mark 3:22 ff. and also Mark 1:24), is a faithful mirror of the kind of language which is now so familiar to us from the Dead Sea scrolls. For Jesus, the casting out of devils was an essential part of his ministry, which had itself begun with Jesus throwing down the gauntlet in OT terms in the temptation narrative. This narrative will be discussed in its proper place. Here it is sufficient to point out that where the Old Testament sees God's "mighty acts" as primarily focused on and conveyed through a people, the gospels see them as initially channeled through one person, Jesus. For Jesus, the exorcisms and healings were a direct indication of the assertion of the reign of God (Matt 12:28), even though after a ministry of such signs (Luke 13:32) it must have seemed that the victory lay temporarily with the enemy (Luke 22:53).

The OT writers do not divide man into body, soul, and mind; "salvation" in the OT is the "saving" of the whole man—deliverance from evil, of whatever kind. Healing, casting out of devils is an assertion of order against chaos, the reign of God over the dominion of darkness. Kallas (Significance of the Synoptic Miracles, p. 64), and Arthur Gabriel Hebert (The Throne of David: A Study of the Fulfilment of the Old Testament in Jesus Christ and His Church [London: Faber, 1941], pp. 143 ff.; New York: Morehouse, 1941) before him, emphasize the eschatological character of the healings which Jesus performed on the Sabbath, asserting the creative character of God's work.

What have often been called the "nature miracles" (such as the stilling of the storm in Mark 4:37 ff.) can equally be seen as a demonstration of the order of God's dominion against the disorder and chaos which can and does threaten men. As Raymond Brown points out (New Testament Essays, pp. 175–76), the restoration of order to God's creation is a constant theme of OT prophecy, especially in the Isaianic collection.

It is possible that some of the miracles as now recorded may originally have been parables. The incident of the coin in the fish's mouth (Matt 17:24–27) is perhaps easier to understand if this was originally a parable which changed its form in the course of transmission, its meaning now lost. There is certainly no suggestion that Peter did catch a fish with a coin in its mouth.

Attention has already been directed to what OT scholars have labeled "prophetic symbolism." To this category would appear to belong the miraculous catch of fish (Luke 5:10 emphatically does give this meaning), the blasting of the fig tree (Mark 11:12 ff. and 20 ff.), and possibly also the walking on the water (Matt 14:22–33; cf. Gen 1:2). If indeed the nature miracles, or some of them, were prophetic signs, then they share with similar signs in the Old Testament the purpose of proclaiming to men the gracious will of God and the sovereignty of his rule.

Some mention must be made of the element of faith, which finds so prominent a place in the narratives. If in the past miracles have been stressed in order to lead men to faith in God, this concern is not paramount in the gospels. There, it is man's faith which causes God to respond with his saving act (cf. Matt 15:28; Mark 9:24; Luke 5:20; etc.), because such trust in God is witness to a humility which accepts God's sovereign rule. Lack of faith can put obstacles in the way of open declaration of that rule (cf. Matt 17:19–20). Jesus declares that wholeness, "salvation," has been brought to the sufferer through that sufferer's faith (cf. Luke 8:48, 17:19, 18:42).

It is worth while to add one comment at this stage. We are still accustomed in common speech to refer to the extraordinary as "miraculous" and our vocabulary is full of such phrases as "miracle of endurance," "miracle of modern surgery," or we speak of the "miraculous mind of a Newton" (or whomsoever we choose). Yet there are those who assert that miracles came to an end at the close of the apostolic period—this in spite of John 14:12 and the accounts of signs performed by the apostles in the early days of the Church (Acts 3:1–10). Either the understanding of miracle shared by the authors of this commentary differs radically from that held by those who make the assertion, or those who make it are holding to views about the physical world which cannot be sustained by the present evidence. Much will in any case depend upon the share which we are prepared to allow to human apprehension and understanding in our appreciation of the extraordinary.

Note. This part, X, has intentionally not considered the terms which John's gospel uses in dealing with miracle. It seems better to leave all such considerations to the author of the commentaries on the Johannine books, and confine attention here to the synoptic gospels. The reader is referred to Raymond Brown's Introduction in his first volume of The Gospel According to John, i–xii, AB, vol. 29, New York: Doubleday, 1966. When reference was made to Brown's excellent study of miracles in his New Testament Essays, we discovered that the treatment given to miracle there not only closely resembled our own approach, but there was even what might appear to the reader to be verbal similarity. However, our first inclination to rewrite this section was more than outweighed by our satisfaction that three commentators of different confessions had found common ground on this sensitive question.

XI. PARABLES IN MATTHEW

One popular definition of parable describes it as “an earthly story with a heavenly meaning.” This is a woefully thin description for a form of teaching that angered Jesus’ critics so. However well adapted to modern homiletic concerns, the parables in the gospels were directed to asking fundamental questions about spiritual issues in the time of Jesus.

We have used the phrase “the parables in the gospels” advisedly. In order to recognize the importance of the parable as a tool of instruction, it is essential to know something of the history of this device. So far as we know at present, Jesus was the first person to use this method of teaching extensively. The form had already been established; what Jesus did was to take it and make such wide and varied use of it that he gave the parable as a method of teaching renewed vitality. In fact, he perfected the form so well that Christians were reluctant to use it thereafter, knowing they could never be as effective as he was. In addition to hesitation about using a form brought to such perfection by Jesus, the influence of Paul—who did not use the device—was probably important. Paul was more familiar with exposition that examined the precise meanings of words and phrases. Whatever the experience of his earlier life, it seems unlikely that the homiletic exposition of law would have appealed to him. This older homiletic method of exposition continued to be used by the rabbis, especially by Rabbi Aqiba (ca. A.D. 80–130).

The parables of Jesus have manifested an astonishing viability in interpretation. In a wide variety of homiletic circumstances, they have stood the test of constant reapplication and reinterpretation in the light of changing religious and social conditions. Sometimes, a parable causes difficulty because of the dissimilarity between the common assumptions shared by the parable and its inaugural audience and the social customs of its later readers. Most of the difficulty, for example, which is felt about the story of the unjust steward (Luke 16:1–8) arises from twentieth-century ignorance of the laws which governed trading practice at that time.

The parable is found as a form in the Old Testament, but it is not used very extensively. Nevertheless, its use and the manner of its use—together with some consideration of the persons represented as using it—prompted us to certain conclusions. The first genuine parable in the Old Testament is the hypothetical case presented by Nathan to David (2 Sam 12:1–6), and is sharply distinguished from allegory or fable. Fables are usually animal stories that point up a moral, and are primitive in form and content, however well adapted for continuing use. Allegory—essentially a Greek device—is generally rooted in mythology; the identification between an idea or object and its symbol is easy. The rise of allegory was the concomitant of the development of philosophical thinking in the Greek intellectual revolution of the seventh-fourth centuries B.C. 2 Sam 12:1–6, wholly unlike the fable of the trees in Judg 9:7–15, presents a hypothetical legal case, with a possible issue of guilty or not guilty. David understood it as a specific legal issue which was being presented to him, and his reaction was to set the appropriate penalty. The high incidence of what has been called “covenant lawsuit” in the prophets has been examined carefully by a number of first-class scholars, following the lead of G. E. Mendenhall (Law and Covenant in Israel and the Ancient Near East, Pittsburgh: The Biblical Colloquium, 1955). But it now seems clear from present evidence that the Israelite prophets may well have been what can loosely be called “jurists”: men concerned with, versed in, and consulted upon, aspects of civil law, as distinct from ceremonial law, which was the concern of the priests.

The expression “civil law” demands careful explanation and limitation, in the face of the division of our own law into categories of law which deal with civil, criminal, property, and ecclesiastical jurisdiction and the like. The function of the prophets, we believe, was to look after the moral and social behavior of the covenant-people of Israel, comprehending all the facets of law which we divide into separate departments. Leaving to priests matters of ceremonial and cultic law, what did concern the prophets was what may with justice be called “prophetic covenant-law”—a pragmatic, empirical approach to the day-to-day living of Israel, as a people and as individuals, living by God’s will. It was a homiletic exposition of law, composed of official case law and later custom, embracing every facet of life lived under the Old Covenant. Civil case law, apodictic moral law, criminal law, commercial law, land tenure—all came under the purview of these men whom hitherto we have mainly regarded as simply vehicles of God’s revelation. Yet the clues were at hand, had we looked for them, and one of them is to be found in H. W. Fowler’s A Dictionary of Modern English Usage (2d ed., revised by Ernest Gowers [Oxford University Press, 1965], p. 558). Fowler wrote: “Allegory (uttering things otherwise) and parable (putting side by side) are almost exchangeable terms. The object of each is, at least ostensibly, to enlighten the hearer by submitting to him a case in which he has apparently no direct concern, and upon which therefore a disinterested judgement may be elicited from him, as Nathan submitted to David the story of the poor man’s ewe lamb. Such judgement given, the question will remain for the hearer whether Thou art the man: whether the conclusion to which the dry light of disinterestedness has helped him holds also for his own concerns.”

The prophets claimed an intimate acquaintance with the previous decisions of God (cf. Amos 3:7; Jer 23:18, 22, and see also 1 Kings 22:19 ff.; Job 1:6 ff.), and it is at least possible that their apparently easy access to the royal courts of Judah and Israel—and even before that in the united monarchy—indicates a highly privileged place in the national structure. Something of this nature is necessary to explain the immunity of, for example, Micaiah ben Imlah (1 Kings 22.) in spite of his disdain for royal authority; of Elijah, whose persecution was largely instigated by Jezebel, (with Ahab's reluctant acquiescence); and of Jeremiah, when the nobility hesitated to dispatch him out of hand because of his unpatriotic preaching. As early in the prophetic history as Samuel, the prophet (although raised in cultic circles in Shiloh) seriously contended for the superiority of the prophetic office, and also apparently made serious attempts to elevate that office to the total exclusion of the priesthood. (For the importance of Samuel in the history and development of prophecy, cf. W. F. Albright, Archaeology, Historical Analogy, and Early Biblical Tradition, The Rockwell Lectures, 1962 [Louisiana State University Press, 1966], pp. 42 ff.) Even after the Babylonian Exile, and before apocalyptic had sharply illuminated the conflict felt between the overt and the hidden in the will of God, the prophets Haggai and Zechariah used their office to chide the returned exiles for not rebuilding the temple. They plainly felt that molding responsible opinion was part of their prerogative.

The emergence of men professionally trained in law, who did not depend for their effectiveness on homiletics to emphasize the demands of covenant-law, meant the gradual disappearance of the prophetic order from Israelite society. It is worth noticing, however, that the fate of the desecrated altar stones in 1 Macc 4:46 still apparently depended on possible future prophetic advice. The ascendancy of professional teachers of the Law—the beginnings of the process can be seen in Ezra—meant that by the time of the ministry of Jesus the teachers of law had abandoned the parable as a means of instruction.

Two final references from the Old Testament will suffice here. A parable illustrative of the use of case law or legal process can be seen in Isaiah 5, which is cast in poetic form. It points a case, presented at the beginning in metaphorical terms, concerning the rights of an owner to dispose as he sees fit of an unproductive vineyard. From vs. 8 onwards, the hypothetical case is changed to a formal charge, and the figurative illustration is made concrete: Israel is guilty of covenant disloyalty, both toward God and man, and the penalty is exile. Psalm 78 rehearses Israelite history as “parable” (vs. 2, Heb. māshāl); the tenor of the psalm is an indictment of Israelite rebellion against covenant-law.

This study will confine its remarks on textual and allied problems in the parables as recounted by Matthew to comparisons with parallel material in Mark and Luke. One difference in the way in which transmitted material is handled by two of the evangelists can be usefully demonstrated from Matt 5:25 ff. In the Matthean context, the passage occurs in that part of the Great Instruction which deals with the Law, whereas in Luke (12:58 ff.) it appears in a section concerned with the crisis produced by the coming of The Man. In Luke we have a warning about the urgency of the situation in which Israel finds herself—one in which time is short, and the decision to accept or reject a “day of the Lord” (epitomized in Jesus) must be made quickly. The context in Luke reinforces the sense of urgency. Jesus’ opponents are castigated for failure to read the signs of the times (12:54–56), they have been warned that the delay in the householder’s coming to cast up his accounts is apparent only (12:41–48). The saying is significantly followed by the warning that the fate of the Galileans may be theirs as well (13:1–5), like that of the unproductive tree (13:6–9). So far this is straightforward; the man called to account is God’s Israel, about to be put to the test for failure to understand the nature of the challenge which is posed by the ministry of Jesus. It must be said that in the context of Luke chapters 12 and 13, this parable makes very good sense. Yet this is not quite as neat and ordered, and not quite so obvious, as perhaps our summary has made it. Assuming the above interpretation to be correct, not only does Luke’s version cast Jesus in the role of accuser (which is explicitly denied in John 5:45), but the language employed is—to say the least—violent, and the accuser is depicted as dragging the defendant by the scruff of the neck. If we add to this the close relationship between Jesus and the Father which is assumed all through the synoptic gospels, then we have the odd circumstances of accuser and judge being in league together.

Matthew’s version puts the saying in a wholly different context. In Matthew, the language is not only less forceful, but the exhortation appears to be designed as reinforcement of the lesson of charity emphasized in 5:21–24, and no amount of manipulation will produce anything like the Lukan confrontation between Jesus and Israel. It appears that we have, in Matthew, the ending of a parable, the substance of which has been lost, but which was remembered as being important enough to be cited frequently. It is probable that the original parable, of which only the ending remains, was some kind of story with the “accuser” as a Satan-figure after the manner of Job, or Rev 12:10. The Greek words employed by Matthew and Luke, and by the Apocalypse, all indicate such a figure—a “prosecutor” or “adversary.” We are in this instance uncertain of the aetiological motif of the saying, but the use which Jesus made of the parable as a teaching form was so perfect that we can almost with certainty rule out any question of expansion of the original materials—contraction is far more likely.

We have spent some time on this example because it illustrates three things.

First, it emphasizes the care taken to preserve the oral tradition, though different strands of the tradition might be found at variance as to the precise origin of an individual item in that tradition. Secondly, it underlines the possibility that we are employing an altogether too modern technique by positing another source to explain seeming documentary dependence for material common to Matthew and Luke, but not found in Mark. Thirdly, not only do similar items of the tradition appear in different contexts in the synoptic gospels, but the wording is often so markedly different as to demand—on the “documentary” theory—an almost unlimited number of hypothetical sources.

THE PARABLE AUDIENCE

Jeremias, in his Parables of Jesus (pp. 33 ff.), calls attention to the changes which one finds in the synoptic gospels from one kind of audience to another. For the detailed examination which Jeremias gives, the reader must be referred to his invaluable work. In the scope of this Introduction, we can only hope to indicate some of the ways in which we find the change of audience significant.

As we have already seen (in Part V, above), the word “disciple” in Luke’s tradition refers to the life of the continuing community, and no sharp distinction is drawn in the use of the word in Luke between the inner circle of the disciples and the crowds who followed Jesus on some occasions. Accordingly, where the Matthean tradition ascribes the parable of the lost sheep to the private instruction of the inner circle of disciples (Matt 18:1), in Luke (15:3–7) the parable is addressed to Jesus’ opponents. (Mark agrees with Matthew in making a distinction between public and private teaching. In Mark the saying about salt—9:50—is addressed to the disciples, while in Luke—14:25—it is a “public” saying.) It should be noted in passing that the Johannine tradition attributes “shepherd” sayings to the opponents of Jesus (John 9:40, 10:6, 16 ff.). If we are correct in assuming the quasi-legal background of “parable,” then the interpretation of “covenant” was common ground to friends and foes alike.

In this particular instance the “lost sheep” may be an errant member of the community of the New Covenant or (in the Lukan context) the Gentile for whom under the Old Covenant little concern was shown. Which interpretation came first we have at present no certain means of knowing. Jesus may himself have used the parable in different contexts; but the possibility ought not to be ruled out that Jesus told the story and invited comment and interpretation from his audience—a method of eliciting response which was introduced by Socrates. Some such explanation may underlie Mark 4:10 describing the parables of vss. 21–32 as addressed to the disciples, while later stating (vss. 33–34) that they were addressed to a general audience. Matthew (13:34 f.) is in agreement with the second of the Markan statements.

Something of the “audience-history” of the parables may be historically preserved in the Gospel of Thomas (xxxiv) where the saying about the blind leading the blind stands alone. In Matthew (15:14) it is directed against the Pharisees, whereas in Luke (6:39) it is a solemn warning to a general audience. In Matt 15:12–14 the saying appears in some private questioning by the disciples about ritual cleanliness, and arises out of the opposition of the Pharisees, a context where Mark is without the saying. Luke places it (6:39 ff.) in his version of the Great Instruction.

No amount of attempted harmonization will dispel the uncertainties attaching to other sayings in the category of parable, where two different audiences are envisaged for the same saying. Such is the case in Matt 7:16–20, where the lessons to be derived from the tree and its fruit are expounded to the crowd as well as to the disciples, and in another instance to the Pharisees (12:33–37; cf. Luke 8:16, 11:13—the lamp on its stand). It must be said, however, that in the case of sayings of a non-legal and metaphorical character, we are not dealing with the more extensive material of parable proper. Illustrative sayings are far more likely than parables to have been used on more than one occasion.

The assumption by Jeremias (among others¹⁹) that a process is discernible by which parables originally addressed to the crowds were later attributed to private teaching begs all manner of questions. First, the Lukan use of the word “disciple,” to which attention has already been called, makes any Lukan evidence very hard to apply to this issue. Secondly, allowing that the evangelists felt free to choose material from accessible traditions, such choice would certainly have influenced them in the placing of this highly versatile parable material in what appear to us to be wholly disparate settings. Once again, if we are correct in seeing parable as a quasi-legal device, then the appearance of the same kind of “case” in more than one situation ought to be no matter for surprise. Thirdly, it is difficult to know what exactly Jeremias means when he states (of the parable of the lost sheep) that it “had lost its original Sitz im Leben, and had been transformed by the Church into hortatory material, a phenomenon of frequent occurrence” (Parables of Jesus, p. 43). Of what persons did the Church consist in this statement? Are the evangelists being considered innocent victims of later editors who were more preoccupied with congregational disputes than with the Kingdom of God? Was, or was not, Matthew (or any other evangelist, for that matter) a member of the “Church” under discussion? If for Jeremias the “Church” under consideration is held to be later than the milieu depicted in the NT books, then when did this transformation of parable from “proclamation” to “sermon” take place? There seems to be some Hegelian analysis at work here: (a) thesis, a parable of direct kerygmatic content, addressed either to a public or private audience; (b) antithesis, the same material, with some or all of its original meaning eroded by being placed in a different context by another writer; (c) synthesis, later ecclesiastical tradition which not only accepts (b), but transforms both it and (a) by making of them a community sermon.²⁰

Having established that the parable was primarily a literary form arising from case law, we should point out that any legal statement or judgment, particularly of a constitutional character, is liable to appear and to be quoted in a multitude of situations and at different periods. In that case, statements as to the temporal priority of one gospel over another, based simply on parable material, do not really have much meaning.

In the light of our discussion of “parable” as quasi-legal in origin, the word “rabbi” as applied to Jesus is obviously important. The rabbi was and is still in conservative circles, an expositor and interpreter of case law. It has periodically been stated that the title “rabbi” in the gospels is an anachronism, that it came into use only after the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70, and some have gone so far as to argue that the title was actually unknown at the time of Jesus. However, the term is applied to Jesus no fewer than fourteen times in Matthew, Mark, and John, and both Mark and John preserve the even more honorific rabbouni, transliterated into English as “rabboni.” (The term is caritative, rather in the tradition of calling the Czar of Russia “Little Father” before 1917.) While it is odd that the gospels should have gone out of their way to preserve a Jewish title at a time when missionary enterprise was already directed toward Gentiles, archaeology has disproved the claim that the title was anachronistic. The late E. L. Sukenik (“A Jewish Tomb on the Mount of Olives,” Tarbiz 1 [1930], 140–41) reported the finding of an ossuary, quite certainly Jewish, on which the name of the deceased was matched by the description of him as didaskalos (Greek for “teacher,” and the word used by Matthew and Mark to render the Hebrew “rabbi”). The question was examined later by Herschel Shanks (“Is the Title ‘Rabbi’ Anachronistic in the Gospels?” Jewish Quarterly Review 53 [1963], 337–45).

THE MATTHEAN TRADITION

Matthew's arrangement of parable material falls into three sections. The first deals with the Kingdom in broad outline; the second becomes more detailed, making application of the covenant principles; the third reflects Jesus' decision to go to Jerusalem for the last time. The parable material begins in Matthew at a significant point in his tradition. It first appears at the end of a period of instruction for the Twelve, at a point where Jesus' ministry has been questioned by John, and follows directly upon a charge against Jesus of collaboration with the powers of evil. With Jesus' demand to know who was genuinely of his community (12:46 ff.), there appears to be a break with the synagogue, and the stage is set for decisive proclamation of the nature of the Kingdom. It is unlikely that John was the only one with questions, and so Matthew 8 begins with a public statement of the characteristics of the Kingdom.

The Nature of the Kingdom (Matt 13:1–52)

Verses 3–8: The Parable of the Sower (Mark 4:3–8; Luke 8:5–8). This parable is noteworthy in that it occurs also in the Gospel of Thomas (9), where it is embroidered with extra detail (e.g., a worm which destroys crops). The story of the sower fittingly opens this section on the kingdom, for the “case” which it presents looks to the End-time, to the harvest (a common eschatological motif). In spite of an interpretation offered later in the chapter (vss. 18–23), the story does not indicate whether the Sower is the Father or The Man. The primary emphasis is on the harvest itself, the miraculous end (in an age innocent of knowledge of plant biology) of the laborious task of sowing. It is impossible to determine with certainty whether in its first use Jesus intended in this parable to equate the harvest with his own preaching, and thus the winnowing-time with Israel’s long history, or whether he saw this apparently misunderstood and ill-rewarded preaching as merely the sowing, with the harvest identified with a future judgment.

NT scholarship has emphasized the folly of allegorizing the parables, of attempting to see in each detail some identifiable feature of Christian proclamation, or some equation of this person or that with the Father or The Man. Such allegorizing, it is suggested, is the work of the primitive Christian community (as, e.g., in the interpretation offered in Matt 13:18–23, 37–43) and was quite foreign to the mind of Jesus. This kind of supposition, based as it is on an ignorance of the allegorizing of detail in intertestamental Jewish literature, has been assailed by Raymond Brown in his perceptive “Parable and Allegory Reconsidered” (in New Testament Essays, pp. 259 ff.).

Too frequently, commentators of various allegiances, having nothing in common but form criticism, assume without further argument that varying interpretations of parables in one gospel or another (or in different contexts in the same gospel) are the work of “the Church,” or “the community,” conceived as a body almost inimical to the pristine purity of the proclamation of Jesus. Some go so far as to determine which was the original interpretation of Jesus and which the result of later ecclesiastical thought. In this respect, the “Sower” parable is a locus classicus for all such commentators. If what we have said above on the nature of parables is correct, then the very flexibility of “case law” is sufficient to account for the use by Jesus of the same basic “case” or parable in different contexts, and with varying interpretations.

Verses 10–13: Why Parables? (cf. Mark 4:10–12; Luke 8:9–10). The parable of the sower having ended, the question posed by the disciples in vss. 10 ff. is natural enough. But a clearer answer is demanded than that commonly assumed —that Jesus deliberately veiled his teaching about the Kingdom in obscure allusions. Certainly in the political climate of his own time the unqualified use of the word “kingdom” would have been an invitation to armed revolt, with all the mundane entanglements which Jesus’ own utterances explicitly excluded (cf. John 18:36). We make the following two suggestions:

(1) Our examination of the distinction made in Matthew’s tradition between private and public teaching is reinforced by Jesus’ reply at this juncture. Direct, and even extended, teaching about the nature of the Kingdom can be given to the disciples, because they have been trained in their association with Jesus to examine afresh all their preconceptions about that Kingdom. Even here, however, Jesus employed “cases” in parables, easily remembered, so that the implications would not later be missed (cf. here J. Vincent, “Did Jesus Teach his Disciples to Learn by Heart?,” [StEv, III, No. 2 \[1964\], pp. 105–20](#)). For those who came to Jesus expecting or demanding either a revolutionary or a wonder-worker, a different approach was necessary. Such people had to be given the opportunity to examine their preconceptions by means of “cases,” parables, and encouraged to draw their own conclusions from them. It is worth noting that the important saying of Jesus at Matt 13:11 has been preserved by all three synoptic gospels. Small wonder, too, that the Pharisees (15:12) were angered by a use of case law which put them in the wrong.

(2) The disciples were given access to the prior decisions of the Father (13:11, 16–17); they were able to learn a great deal about the nature of the Kingdom from the parables because their faith was strong. But for those coming to Jesus who were unbelievers, often hostile or curious, the parables were a testing ground. For them the parables either obscured the Kingdom—in which event it was at least not misunderstood—or they provided an opportunity for opposition to the reign of God to declare itself openly. For some, the parables gave pause in which hesitation might change to faith. It is clear that in the Matthew tradition parables have a decisive function similar to that of the signs and the discourses in the Johannine tradition.

Verses 24–30: The Weeds in the Field (cf. Mark 4:26–29). Bearing in mind the functional distinction between the “Kingdom of Heaven” as the Messianic Community and the “Kingdom of the Father” as future event in Matthew, this parable discusses the proclamation of the Kingdom by Jesus.²¹ If parable in the Old Testament began as case law connected with the Covenant, and both the rabbis and Jesus continued that use, then we are right in looking for an explanation of the Covenant in this parable, seen against the background of Jesus’ proclamation. The first parable describes the sower sowing in good soil on the one hand, and indifferent and poor soil on the other; the second also sees the seed as good, but when growing, inextricably mixed with weeds sown by an enemy. Between the two parables comes the private reply to the disciples' question. Both the weeds in the second parable, and the indifferent and poor soil in the first, are to be seen as the opposition to Jesus' proclamation, an opposition which is in the end infidelity to the Covenant which all his teaching implies or assumes. That the second parable is capable of being used, and later was perhaps almost exclusively used (cf. 1 Cor 5:4) as warning against overhasty judgment, or overzealous disciplinary action, in no way militates against this interpretation. It is entirely possible that both interpretations derive from Jesus. A comparison of this passage with Mark 4:26–29 will illustrate the great flexibility of the parable form. In spite of a similarity of wording with this Matthean example, Mark stresses the miraculous growth of the proclaimed Kingdom.

Verses 31–32: The Mustard Seed (Mark 4:30–32). The emphasis is not on the future size of the Kingdom compared with its insignificant beginnings, but on the purpose of God which assures its growth. The thought is echoed in Acts 13:41, quoting Hab 1:5: The scoffers and the opponents are reduced to silence before the miracle of divine intervention.

Verse 33: The Leaven (Luke 13:20–21). Again we have a concentration on the overruling purpose of God, similar to that found in the preceding example.

Attention has already been called to the quotation from Ps 78, which is here inserted by the evangelist to explain Jesus' teaching methods. The parables are concerned, as is the psalm, with God's choice of Israel, and with the extension of that Israel into the Kingdom which Jesus proclaimed. In these days which led up to the inauguration of the New Covenant as in the time of the Sinai Covenant, there are the faithless who cannot see the purpose of God. For them, the "cases" embodied in the parables are a hindrance to understanding just as they are valuable assistance to the faithful who see, and who therefore understand (cf. Mark 13:51, and also—for links between this theme and John's gospel—G. L. Phillips, "Faith and Vision in the Fourth Gospel," in Studies in the Fourth Gospel, ed. F. L. Cross, London: Mowbray, 1957. For an examination of Phillips' theme, cf. Brown, John, i–xii, Appendix I [3]).

Verses 44–46: The Treasure in the Field. Whether this saying expresses God's mercy and condescension in seeking man (cf. John 3:16), or—more probably—the joy of the disciples in having found the secret of the Kingdom, hidden from the faithless, either interpretation demonstrates the costliness of the Kingdom. Jesus must give himself completely and the disciples no less: the disciple must match his teacher's effort. The "fine pearl" of vss. 45–46 makes the same point. For Jesus and for the disciples, the claims of the Kingdom are absolute.

Verses 47–50: The Net. This parable fittingly closes the chapter, for it anticipates the End-time, the harvest, the gathering in of all kinds, good and bad, Jew and Gentile, when final judgment will be made. The saying also had an immediate meaning regarding the circumstances under which it was told: criticism of those admitted to the fellowship of the Kingdom, to discipleship, is an encroachment upon the prerogatives of the Lord of the harvest.

The Community (Matt 18:12–14, 23–35)

The second grouping of parable material follows a significant part of the narrative (13:53–17:27), in which Matthew deals with an increasing tension between Jesus and his critics. Jesus runs into disbelief in his own countryside (13:53–58), the execution of John the Baptist compels his withdrawal, and he faces the challenge to faith and understanding in the rehearsal of the Messianic Banquet (14:13–21). The circle of disciples draws closer to him in the face of increasing opposition on the part of the lawyers (15:1–20), and in response to the demand for a sign (16:1–4), Jesus warns against the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees (16:5–12).

The confession of Jesus' Messiahship by Peter (16:13–20) is a decisive point in the Matthean record. It is immediately followed by the first intimation of the coming Passion and death of the Master, and a plain warning to the disciples of the cost of their allegiance.

The vision on the mountain (17:1–9) completes a narrative in which Jesus has made clear statements and Peter, speaking for the rest, has acknowledged his mission. Jesus here begins, in Matthew's scheme, to outline some of the "cases" with which the infant community must soon be concerned.

Verses 12–14: The Lost Sheep (Luke 15:3 ff.) In the Matthean tradition, the case of the lost sheep appears to follow directly from Jesus' statement about the care members of the covenant-community must have for each other. The Lukan version places the parable more firmly in the context of the community which grows out of the Israel of the Old Covenant. The following parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15:11–32) may be interpreted as dealing with the duty of reconciliation within the Kingdom of the Messianic community. It seems to apply to the need, crucial in the infant Church, to bring together the adherents of the Sinai Covenant who had never strayed from the Father on the one hand, with Gentiles, who seek pardon and reconciliation along with Jews, on the other, in the community of the New Covenant.

It is hoped that the discussion of parables below will illustrate our central contention—that the parable was a literary device which grew out of interpretation of covenant-law. We do not dispute the legitimacy of parable-interpretation in the later Church, and we have no wish to minimize the flexibility of the parables of Jesus, especially in homiletic context. Very plainly, when Jewish Christianity had all but disappeared, and tension between Gentile and Jew in the Church was a thing of the past, the interpretation of parables would undergo considerable change. We are concerned, however, to point out that the movement of the church into an exclusively Gentile milieu was not so early as often supposed. (For example, the first Corinthian letter, with its Semitisms and OT allusions, ought to give pause to any assertion that most of Paul's converts were already Gentile.)

We believe that many commentators on the parables bring to their study an unconscious background of homiletic interpretation which belongs to the post-Jewish history of the Church. In doing so they tend to find a development in the material which may not in fact be there. We suggest that the parable material, whether dealing with relations between individuals or with ethnic groups, is best understood in the New Testament context as concerned wholly with the impact which the community of a new covenant must make on the thinking of those to whom Jesus first addressed the parables.

Verses 23–35: The Unmerciful Servant. This parable is found only in Matthew, and pursues the theme of forbearance and forgiveness in the community of the Kingdom. Whatever remission the disciples have received will be canceled in the End-time if they do not exercise the same mercy that has been bestowed upon them.

The Covenant (Matt 20:1–16, 21:28–41, 22:1–14, 24:45–51; 25:1–13, 14–30). Knowing well the implications of his decision to go to Jerusalem for the last time, Jesus—in Matthew’s arrangement—can be more specific about the meaning of his teaching. However reinterpreted in later commentary and homiletic, the parables in this section are crisis parables, reflecting the compulsion under which both Jesus and his opponents acted, from their conflicting understanding of the Covenant.

20:1–16: The Workers in the Vineyard. Israel could claim, with justice, that she had borne the burden of God's revelation to the world for many centuries, with all the obligations of a Law associated with the Covenant. (For the Law as "burden," cf. Acts 15:28.) While from time to time Israel had by conquest and assimilation added other groups to the people, long before the ministry of Jesus Israel was a highly self-conscious ethnic entity, proud of its separation, expectant of privileged treatment by God for having been the keeper of his word. But the proclamation of Jesus, though addressed to the people of the Covenant, did not exclude the Gentile world. (Cf. here the important monograph of Joachim Jeremias, Jesu Verheissung für die Völker, the Franz Delitzsch Lectures for 1953 (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1956) in the English translation by S. H. Hooke, Jesus' Promise to the Nations, London: SCM / Naperville, Ill.: Allenson, 1958). In Matthew's version Jesus clarifies his point by speaking of a vineyard—substitute for Israel in the prophetic literature and in the Psalms. Moreover, the phrase "Kingdom of heaven," used to denote the Messianic community of Jesus, clearly indicates that he is talking about the admission of those who have not borne the burden; they will be judged equally with those who have.

20:28–32: The Two Sons. This parable is prompted by the question of the chief priests and elders about Jesus' authority, which Jesus counters with a searching question of his own about the authority of John. Jesus demands a plain commitment, for or against the authenticity of John's calling. His questioners refuse and so Jesus recounts this parable and the next, the two being closely linked. "Son," as an appellation of Israel, is common in the Old Testament; this is the sense here. Those who would be most zealous in claiming the title of "son" were the most culpable in their lack of response to John: the outsiders, the "non-observants," had repented.

Verses 33–41: The Vineyard (Mark 12:1–9). Here again we have the familiar figure of the vineyard for Israel. The accusation and verdict in the parable is that Israel has failed in its commitment to the Covenant, and in the death of Jesus would fail even more grievously. Accusation and verdict are followed by a judgment that the Kingdom will henceforward be given to others. This parable illustrates very strikingly what has aptly been called the "covenant lawsuit in the prophets" (cf. article of that title by H. B. Huffmon, JBL 78 1959), 285–95. Undoubtedly this parable looks to the inauguration of a new Covenant.

22:1–10: The Wedding Invitations (cf. also Matt 25:10; Rev 19:7 ff.) This parable reinforces the point of the last one, and again emphasizes God's freedom of action. God's choice of Israel in no way bound him permanently; faithlessness on Israel's part, her rejection of a summons by God, would lead to repudiation.

This is no more than OT prophetic teaching; but linked here with controversial questions about John's authority and Jesus' own proclamation of the Kingdom, such a consideration would have been hidden from his critics by the blindness of their own opposition.

It is necessary here to add that nothing which has been said above is meant to imply a permanent rejection by God of his ancient people, still less that the judgments pronounced by Jesus against his critics and opponents are to be taken (as they have been, unhappily, in the past) as valid judgments against the entire institution of Judaism. Paul's statement should be recalled here: "Has God cast off his people? By no means!" (Rom 11:1). The apostle readily admitted his error in persecuting the Church, after his conversion, and saw that it was sin. But at no time did he say that his actions had been insincere, motivated by a perverse disregard of truth or desire of gain. Many of Jesus' critics were pious men, and continued to be devoted servants of the Law, and of the Giver of that Law, long after the events of the passion, death and resurrection of Jesus. We are not entitled to question their sincerity, even though Christian belief in Jesus as Messiah would compel us to hold that they were mistaken about Jesus and his message.

Verses 11–14: The Wedding Garment. This is in all probability an incomplete parable, for which no parallel exists in the other gospels. Its ending is perhaps unsatisfactory to us because we have no precise knowledge of the social customs pertaining to weddings in the time of Jesus, or of the garments which guests were expected to wear. (A rabbinic parallel does exist for this parable, however, on which cf. Jeremias, Parables of Jesus, pp. 131, 187. Here a king sent invitations to a wedding, but did not specify the time. The wise dressed themselves for the wedding, while the foolish went on working, and when the summons finally came the foolish ones were not admitted. This rabbinic parable comes almost certainly from Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai about A.D. 80, and may have had a long oral tradition before being committed to writing.) As it stands in the gospel, the parable carries the clear warning that mere knowledge of the Kingdom's advent is not enough—there must also be response to the proclamation, and people must prepare themselves.

24:45–51: The Slave Set Over the Household (Luke 12:42–46). The homiletic flexibility of the parable in later circumstances must not distract our attention from its proper place in Matthew's framework. (In somewhat different circumstances, it has the same function in Luke's account.) Jesus anticipates his "coming," which particularly in the Matthean context is likely to mean his passion and death, when he enters the Father's glory. Worth underlining here is the connection with the Johannine vocabulary of the passion: the "day," the “hour,” the “knowledge” reserved to the Father, all familiar to us from John, are to be found preceding this parable in vss. 36–44. This parable is a challenge to his hearers, to the Israel of his time: his people must be on their guard lest they miss the significance of the “coming.” In other words, it underlines and emphasizes the warning to “this generation” in vs. 34, and looks forward to the “from now on” of 26:64. All the “signs” demanded of him have already been given, if men had but looked. There remains only the hour, the time of his coming to the Father in death, and the Father’s acceptance of that death in the resurrection. It is Jesus’ hearers who will be on trial, not Jesus. Those who have been set over the Lord’s household are indeed in a perilous position.

25:1–13: The Waiting Maidens. This is clearly another parable of warning, again with the motif of a wedding celebration. Israel’s role as the Lord’s bride is a commonplace of OT thought. This parable is concerned with the impending inauguration of the New Covenant, and the sealing of it in blood: the new community will then be espoused to its Lord. Some will be ready and waiting for the sign of the bridegroom’s coming, but judgment awaits those who—though summoned—fall asleep when the time of the espousals has arrived. No excuses can help an Israel that has been taught to read the signs of his coming, and then fails to recognize them.

Vss. 14–30: Faithful and Unfaithful Slaves (Luke 19:12–27). This parable fittingly closes the Matthean cycle. At the end of the parable Jesus makes abundantly clear his own role as the Father’s deputy in judgment. The parable states the basis of that judgment—use or misuse of the gifts of God. In varying degrees, all members of the Covenant-community of Israel had been richly endowed by God (cf. Rom 3:1–4), and since the endowment is of God’s free gift, failure to respond to God’s calling is without excuse. Those who fail to respond will find themselves stripped even of their first endowment (cf. 5:29, and also 21:43, 24:1–2).

It should be evident that the parables of Jesus are not the simple and artless teaching forms they have commonly been assumed to be. They are neither simple instructions to an infant Messianic Community nor merely concerned with the controversies between Jesus and his opponents (conceived of as sections or factions of Judaism). If we are to appreciate and understand the parables fully, it is imperative that we set aside our own traditional homiletic interpretations and Jesus’ immediate controversies, and see the parables in the context of a living tradition of case law.

Two final comments should be made.

(1) Given a heightened awareness of the centrality of “covenant” in OT thought, resulting from the attention paid to the prophets (especially Jeremiah) in the intertestamental period, it ought to be no surprise to discover the principle of case law applied by Jesus to life under covenant. Jesus' use of case law was not so new that his critics did not recognize its force; it was the directness and simplicity of Jesus' method which made it so distinctive.

(2) Any consideration of the role of "covenant" in the teaching of Jesus, whether implicitly through the form of parable, or explicitly at the Last Supper, must raise again in acute form the long discussion about just how aware Jesus was of his own mission and authority. It seems likely that any reflection on covenant by Jesus would mean he had considered the implied claim that any "New" Covenant must have God as author, and the OT requirement that it be sealed in blood. If this contention is valid, then Jesus must have known the inevitable cost of his own ministry at the very outset of his public teaching.

XII. THE MESSIAH IN MATTHEW

It would be wholly out of keeping with what we have seen of the nature of a “gospel” to find in it a fully developed Christology. There is nothing in the New Testament approaching “ontology”—that which is concerned with the being, essence, or nature of a person or thing. Even the Pauline letters, interpretative and reflective though they are, are not systematic theological works. The person of Jesus in Paul’s letters is not so much discussed as implied, and the meaning of his mission and works is never discussed over-all, but rather applied only on an individual case basis.

There was a tendency in the years before 1945 to discuss NT Christology in a mathematical fashion, and to talk of a “high” and “low” Christology depending on the precise elements of a divinity of Jesus thought to be ascertainable in every part of the New Testament. This was understandable in an age which assumed that Messianic expectation was comparatively simple in character in the period before Jesus. The discoveries at Qumran have changed all that, though, and we now have valuable control evidence on Messianism in the century before the birth of Jesus. It is now clear that the ancestral lines of the Messianic titles of the New Testament are widely diverse, with disparities and similarities existing side by side with contradictions in emphasis. Indeed, it is only now that one such title, known to us hitherto from Acts 7:52 (and one doubtful additional use in Matthew)—ho dikaios, the Righteous One—is beginning to disclose its line of development. It is in fact doubtful whether Christology would ever have made much progress before the end of the NT period, had not Paul used the phrase: “Jesus is Lord.”

It is possible to find some rough guidelines to Christology in the gospels, but we should remember that any scheme which we construct in order to examine the NT material is a scheme which we impose on the material, and not necessarily a conscious production of the NT writers. With that caution in mind, it is fair to look at the gospels in the light of what they have to say about Jesus’ involvement in God’s act of deliverance. In precisely what way is Jesus involved—as central figure, or as herald in a more immediate sense than was true of John the Baptist; and if he was the central character in the proclamation, was this centrality that of a major prophet (i.e., as interpreter of the will of God in major events) or was Jesus the one and only agent of God in the acts themselves? Here we find some variation in the NT material.

For example, Mark’s account of the transfiguration (Mark 9:2–13) leaves room for question, in spite of “This is my Son, the Beloved One.” We have to wait for Matthew’s account of the entry into Jerusalem to have the transfiguration account put into perspective. This Jesus is indeed Messianic King (Matt 21:1–9), and Matthew sees all this in the light of Israel’s expectation, even if this King is about to suffer and die. Similarly, Mark raises the question of authority in the matter of Jesus’ treatment of the Sabbath, but Matthew closes the question with an assertion of Jesus’ dominion over the Sabbath (cf. Mark 2:23–28, Matt 12:1–8); and Matthew’s tradition omits Mark’s saying that the Sabbath is made for man. Here there is no doubt as to the centrality of Jesus in God’s act, God’s declaration of himself. Mark’s use of the term “Son of Man” received further definition in Matthew’s tradition. Mark does not identify, or appears not to identify, Jesus with the Son of Man in 8:38, but the parallel Matthaean version (Matt 10:32–33) does. This occurs in a context of judgment. Judgment, in the Old Testament, is God’s prerogative, and the prophets are interpreters or heralds of his judgment; Matthew makes it plain that Jesus himself claims the prerogative, and is not merely its herald or interpreter. So, too, with the healing of the paralytic in Matt 9:1–8: here, Jesus acts not as judge but as restorer, as the agent of salvation, and God’s saving act is declared through Jesus as its principal, and not as its herald. Matthew either omits, or does not know, Mark’s question about who is able to forgive.

The nearest approach to philosophical analysis in Matthew’s treatment of the person of Jesus is his account of an incident which Mark covers in 10:17–18. In Mark, the questioner is told by Jesus to explain his use of the term “good” as a description of Jesus. Matthew poses the question quite differently: “Why question me about what is good?...” In Matthew, the adjective “good” is omitted before the word “Teacher” (19:16–17).

There may be other clues to Matthew’s Christology in his treatment of the continuing Messianic Community, the Church. Matthew’s understanding of the person of Jesus is bound up, and springs from, the understanding which the Twelve—and later the community—had of their relationship to Jesus. Some of this was examined in our section on the Church and the End (Introduction, Parts I–III), but it is germane to our discussion to remark that Matthew emphasizes the continuing presence of Jesus with his people in the matter of future rewards (Matt 10:40, 18:5, 20, 28:20). If so, the relationship of Jesus to the community, conceived as permanent, must inevitably raise questions about the relationship of Jesus to the Father. If we bear in mind the identification of the Son of Man with Jesus in Matthew, we shall be in a better position to appreciate what he is saying when he places Jesus in the center of the picture of judgment in 10:32–33 and 16:27 (where the angels are his; cf. Mark 8:38).

We can now examine the use the evangelist makes of the Messianic titles which he applies to Jesus. Their justification, to Matthew, lies in the usage of the Old Testament, but it must not be supposed that the OT evidence is either uniform or simple. Moreover, for Matthew the Church embodies the proclamation of the Kingdom after the resurrection, and it is this interest in the community of believers that shapes the evangelist's understanding of Jesus as Inaugurated of the Kingdom.

Matthew's gospel alone describes the community of the Messiah as Church, ekklēsia, the qahal Yīsrā'el or qahal Adonai of the Old Testament (Matt 16:18, 18:17). Incidentally, in the Greek, the use of ekklēsia does justice, too, to the notion of the Church as the assembly of the freeborn (cf. Matt 17:26). This community, which is the Son of Man's kingdom (13:41) and to whose members (through the Twelve) he has entrusted the secrets of that Kingdom (13:11), whose members have already seen and heard what the Old Testament looked in vain to see and hear (12:16–17), is described by various metaphors to show its importance (5:13–16). But the relationship of the community to the Founder chiefly occupies Matthew's attention; this relationship is used occasionally to introduce Messianic titles. Although the Messiahship and function of Jesus is seen in OT terms, and the Twelve are known by a name that echoes OT and rabbinic usage (see "Disciples," in Part V above), there is enough flexibility in Matthew to have made his work the preferred gospel of the primitive Church. Jesus is the King-Messiah, sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (15:24); yet he is also, as raised from the dead, the one who has all authority in heaven and earth, through his disciples summoning all to discipleship (28:19). As the Son of Man coming to the Father (25:31 ff.; cf. Dan 7:13–14), he will judge all men (25:31 ff.).

Matthew's Christology has undertones which may be missed unless examined carefully. Part V of this Introduction dealt with "Disciples" as a technical term, and as a term which reveals something of the sources of the gospels. In Judaism, the disciple might hope to attain to the status of teacher (and, in later Judaism, to be ordained to that title and function), but Matthew makes it clear that those who come to Jesus remain in the status of disciples (23:8 ff.), as men called to sacrificial service. Similarly, Jesus' disciples may ask questions, but there is no discussion; any such give-and-take relationship is out of the question, and discussion in our gospels is represented as taking place only between Jesus and his enemies. The disciples are witnesses to a Person, not guardians of a tradition (cf. Isa 43:10, 12), and the fact that Matthew can use the word "disciple" after the resurrection testifies to the status of the Twelve in relation to the Lord (Matt 28:19). In Luke's Acts it is clear that the term "disciple" is applied to the generality of believers, and no longer to the inner circle of Jesus' followers. Matthew's continued use of the word after the resurrection heavily underlines the complete dependence of the inner circle on Jesus for their mission to Israel and beyond it. In Matthew, the calling and commission of the disciples (4:18 ff.) precedes the teaching of Jesus, which emphasizes that the Twelve are witnesses to a proclaimed Kingdom (10:7) and to the Herald and Agent of that Kingdom (cf. John 15:16). With this preface we may now turn to the use which Matthew makes of the specifically messianic titles.

The Gr. kurios, which can with equal accuracy, according to context, be translated “Lord” or “Sir,” is indeed ambivalent in Greek, but Matthew’s use of it is clear. The relationship of disciple to Master underlies his use of kurios: the slave is not above (or superior to) his lord (10:24), and in his own household, in his own community, Jesus is Master, is Lord. It is significant that Matthew does not allow the disciples to use the term “Teacher,” or “Rabbi,” presumably because he felt it to be too familiar, though he allows it to the Pharisees and to strangers. Mark uses “Teacher” in the addresses of the disciples (cf. Mark 4:38, 9:5, 38, 10:35, 13:1). Luke does the same, though he changes Mark’s term to a Greek one which is more readily understood by Greek readers (Luke 5:5, 8:24, 45, 9:33, 49, 17:13). Matthew’s tradition is consistently “Lord” (cf. Matt 8:25 and Mark 4:38; Matt 17:4 and Mark 9:5; Matt 20:33 and Mark 10:51). It is necessary to be cautious here. We have already seen that kurios is ambivalent in meaning, and can be employed both as an address to deity or to royal authority, but also as polite address to equals or superiors. It is true that there is the solitary use of “the Lord” (ho kurios) which Matthew (21:3) uses of Jesus alone (cf. Mark 11:3). But it must be added that kurios is used of master and lord in respect of slaves and property, of superior and inferior (cf. Matt 13:27, 21:30, 25:11, 20, 22, 24). One might plead that all Matthew has done is to make uniform the varied usages of Mark. But it is hard to escape the conclusion that Matthew deliberately meant his use of kurios to indicate a term of majesty, if not divinity.

Matthew has two principal uses of the term “Lord” (kurios).

(1) It is used of Jesus in his activity toward men in various situations, especially in healing—i.e., “salvation”: 8:2, 6, 8, 25, 9:28, 14:30, 15:22, 25, 16:22, 17:4, 15, 18:21, 20:30, 33, 26:22. We should take care not to concentrate on the “healing” aspect of those restored to health to the point of forgetting that for those who witnessed such events, the healing was only part of the “salvation” of the whole man.

(2) More importantly kurios is applied to Jesus as the Judge of the time to come: 7:21 ff., 25:11, 37, 44.

There is no better illustration of the way in which kurios is used of majesty than in the story (Matt 24:45 ff.) about the landowner who delays his return; a story which is an illustration of the saying: “Watch [for] you do not know on what day your Lord is coming” (24:42).

By itself, the name “Jesus” (Heb. Yēshū‘ for older Yōshū‘) has no known Messianic meaning, and the name was very common at the beginning of our era. But in the Old Testament, Moses’ successor is the agent of God in leading his people into the Promised Land, and it is this connection with God’s saving activity that Matthew would appear to emphasize. The first verse of Matthew’s gospel seems to lay stress on the unique claim of this particular “Jesus” to bear the name, for the reason that he alone will save God’s people—from sin (1:21).

Jesus uses the title “prophet” of himself (12:41, 13:57), and popular sentiment accords him the title (16:14). Like the prophets Jesus speaks with authority (7:28, 21:11, 46). This fits in with our original contention, that under this kind of title Jesus is regarded as central to God’s saving activity and is here on earth as its major herald. There is nothing in the term “prophet” to indicate by itself a highly developed Christology. In the thought of the time, there was often no clear distinction between the Messianic figure and his forerunner.

It might have been expected that Matthew, with his interest in OT fulfillment in Jesus, would have laid greater emphasis on the Isaian “Suffering Servant” motif. (The sheer quantity of material written on this topic in technical and semitechnical works on the Old Testament is by now nearly overwhelming, and there seems to be no clear way in which the “Servant Songs” of Isaiah can be categorized as applying to an ideal Israel, or a representative of Israel. At times, both ideas appear to be present.) In fact, though there is only one quotation from Isa 53 in Matthew (8:17), and though the title “Servant” occurs but once, at Matt 12:18, it is probably safe to say that many of the “Son of Man” sayings in Matthew can be read with the figure of the Suffering Servant in mind. In Matthew, as in the other gospels, only Jesus uses the title “Son of Man.” John 12:34 is the only exception. The possible shades of meaning in the Servant Songs are matched by those which attach to “Son of Man” in OT and subsequent usage. Various, “Son of Man” in Hebrew and Aramaic can be used to designate “a man,” “the man,” “Man” (in general), or (as in Daniel and Enoch) “The Representative Man.” This last use parallels Paul’s use of the figure of First and Second Man in 1 Cor 15. Even where usage would appear to dictate a single interpretation, the result is inconclusive. For example, the term “Son of Man” occurs nearly eighty times in Ezekiel, and can well bear the vocative meaning “O man,” yet in the contexts where it is most often employed, it is addressed to a prophet standing in close relationship to God as herald of God’s purpose for Israel. It appears, therefore, to have possessed an honorific meaning, or even to have been a title of dignity. At the same time, it bears testimony to the subordinate role of the prophet in relation to the Lord whose message he proclaims. For Jesus himself, in Matthew's gospel, the designation combines both the humility of the ministry—and thus far the subordination of the Son to the Father—and the majesty of the Son of Man in judgment (cf. Matt 8:20 and 25:31). This title is the subject of our Introduction, Part VII, above.

"Son of David" (rejected as a title in Matt 22:41 ff.) is used as a title of honor and dignity in the genealogy (1:1), through the ministry (9:27, 12:23, 15:22, 20:30, 31, 21:9, 15), but always by others. The evangelists all reject the title, save for Matthew's first use of it in his prologue. Some believed the Coming One would be of the lineage of David, but Matthew's treatment of Jesus-Messiah cannot be summarized in a single line of thought or development. In Israel's midst is "something greater" than the temple (12:6), than Jonah or Solomon (12:41 f.), something greater than king, prophet, or priest. It is in this greater sense that we must examine Matthew's use of the title "king": "King of the Jews" (2:2, 27:11, 29, 37), "King of Israel" (27:42), "your King" (21:5) and "the King" (25:34, 40), and "his kingdom" (16:28) all have a forward-looking, eschatological sense, reaching beyond the ministry and the Passion.

The title of "Messiah" (Gr. Christos) as "king" is in fact far more common in John's gospel and in the Pauline letters than it is in the synoptic gospels. And as the faith spread into a more and more Hellenized world, it ceased to be a title and became a proper name, "Christ." In Matthew, apart from 1:1, all the uses of "Christos" are with the definite article—"the Messiah." It is used most after the confession of Peter in chapter 16, where—with the predictions of the Passion—the crisis in the Messiahship of Jesus can be said to have finally broken. The picture is not simple; from material in the Dead Sea scrolls, we know that the lines of speculation and development around Messianic expectation were very diverse.

We have seen so far that Matthew presents a varied picture of Jesus. This much, however, is clear: according to our present evidence, the Messiah in Israel had normally been considered purely human, though with very marked qualities and attributes.

We must now consider Matthew's use of the title "Son." In the Psalms, the anointed king (the "Messiah") is spoken of as God's son in an adoptive sense (e.g., Pss 2:7, 89:26–27), but in Matthew the idea of Jesus as a son is so intimate that it marks him off from his contemporaries completely. Jesus is "God's Son" in the mouth of the tempter, (4:3, 6) "Son of the living God" in Peter's confession (16:16), "my Son, the Beloved One" at the baptism and the transfiguration (3:17, 17:5), or "my son" simply, in the words of scripture (Pss 2:7, 90; Hos 11:1) as meaning that he embodies Israel. The use of "Son" in the Psalms would suggest a Messianic title, but taken in conjunction with Matthew's use of “Lord,” “Son” suggests far more than a leader of great moral and dynamic qualities. The accusations that Jesus is usurping and exercising divine authority (9:3, 26:65) are assumed to be true in 11:25–30. Here a relationship with the Father, a “Christology,” is assumed which far outstrips any known Messianic expectation. Whatever may be the origin of the baptismal formula in 28:19, it depends on an intimacy of relationship with God which is already foreshadowed in 11:25 ff. It appears inescapable that the Jews rightly interpreted many of the sayings of Jesus as carrying an implication that God was his Father, in a manner not shared by others—in fact in a manner unique to Jesus. A study of the implications of the sayings of Jesus, especially of those in which he speaks of his Father, leaves the reader of the New Testament with precisely the same impression that Jesus’ opponents had; it is hard to avoid the conclusion that Jesus meant to convey the fact of a unique relationship which he had with God, a relationship moreover which implied deity. John’s tradition states the clear implication of Matthew’s gospel in the words “I and the Father are one (John 10:30).” It is worth examining all the passages in which Jesus refers to the Father, either with reference to the disciples or to himself. We see that there is always a careful separation made between the two relationships, to which again the gospel of John bears testimony.*

The predictions of the passion, and the New Covenant inaugurated on the eve of the passion, will be discussed in their proper context in the commentary. But attention is called to them here because a mere examination of titles, Messianic or quasi-Messianic, is of little value unless they are seen against the scriptural background, interpreted at the time of the acts of the one to whom the titles are applied.

There is a very good examination of the difficulties attendant on any discussion of messianic hope in the time of Jesus by M. de Jonge (“The Use of the Word ‘Anointed’ in the Time of Jesus,” [NovT 8 \[1966\], 132–48](#)). It is recommended to the reader with some knowledge of Hebrew and Greek. See also J. C. O’Neill, “The Silence of Jesus,” NTS 15 \(1969\), 153–67, with special reference to the “Messianic secret.”

XIII. AUTHORSHIP AND CHRONOLOGY

A

Not only are there clear differences between John and the synoptists as to the length of the ministry of Jesus, together with puzzling discrepancies in the chronology of the final week of that ministry (assuming uniform calendrical usage): there are also striking difficulties in setting up a chronology which relies wholly on the synoptic gospels. The manner in which Matthew groups his material in whole blocks of teaching, together with the way in which Luke's "travel diary" is employed to introduce teaching, makes any attempt to outline a chronology of Jesus' ministry almost impossible. Such considerations, together with a paucity of detail in other directions, make anything like a "life" of Jesus, in a modern biographical sense, impossible.

It is commonly supposed that the lack of any but fragmentary information about the early life of Jesus is due to the lateness of the gospels, written down after almost all information about his early life had by that time disappeared. It is often suggested that nothing had happened; Jesus is supposed to have lived as an apprentice and assistant carpenter with a life so quiet that there was nothing to record until the vacuum was filled by the miracles of the non-canonical gospels. Below it will be pointed out how drastically the almost complete break in the continuity of Christian life in Palestine affected the tradition. Nearly all the relatives and contemporaries of Jesus had died, so that it may have proved impossible to describe his early life meaningfully. But this is still an inadequate explanation. In our opinion, the only satisfactory alternative is that Jesus was so completely absorbed by his sense of mission that he seldom said anything about his childhood and youth, even to close associates.

Other features in our gospels are hard to accommodate to modern biographical ideas. Not only is there complete silence about Jesus' life between his birth and the beginning of the ministry (except for one incident recorded by Luke), but both Mark and John begin their accounts with the ministry—John after a theological prologue, Mark after a brief announcement of great theological significance. This is not all. The passion narratives in all four gospels, from a purely biographical standpoint, are out of all proportion to the rest of the material (Mark's passion is about a third of the whole work). This can be understood only when we realize that the purpose of the writers was chiefly theological—that is, to lead up to the passion of Jesus and in the process make clear what was the purpose of that passion, and its consequences for the Messianic Community.

The differences between John and the synoptists in the traditions they record are not confined to the chronology of the final week of the ministry. The synoptists record a ministry mainly in Galilee, of a duration impossible to determine, whereas John's record says little of Galilee, emphasizes Samaria, and records a ministry in Judea which the others do not. That Matthew knew of a ministry in Samaria seems plain from 10:5 (on which see our NOTE in the commentary), and Luke refers to Jesus as expecting to be received in Samaria (Luke 9:51–52). Acts records the missionary activity of the early Jerusalem community among the Samaritans. Evidently there are whole areas of ministry in the life of Jesus of which we read almost nothing in our present gospels.

The baptismal ministry of John, together with the words which he employed to carry out and to further that ministry, make almost inevitable the conclusion that John spent his early and formative years among Essenes, and in all probability at Qumran. (Cf. here Jean Daniélou, The Dead Sea Scrolls and Primitive Christianity, tr. from the French by Salvator Attanasio, Baltimore: Helicon, 1958; W. H. Brownlee, "John the Baptist in the New Light of Ancient Scrolls," in The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. Krister Stendahl, New York: Harper, 1957; London: SCM, 1958; Robinson, "The Baptism of John and the Qumran Community," in TNTS; et al.\) To this we must add the fact that Jesus was, at a crucial point in the ministry, little known in Nazareth, previously described as his home. Nazareth was then a mere village; no building remains of this period have yet been found, and it is nowhere mentioned by Josephus. From Luke 4:22 and John 6:42 we learn that only comparatively few of the people of Nazareth knew Jesus by sight. In the former passage the Greek clearly means, "Isn't this the son of Joseph?" In the latter we read, "Isn't this Jesus, the son of Joseph?" (Translation of Brown, in his commentary John, i–xii, §24.) In view of the implied statement in Matthew, Luke and John (see commentary below on Matt 13:55), it seems that he had been away for a relatively long time.

The three synoptic gospels all mention a stay of forty days in the wilderness while he was undergoing severe temptations from the devil. It may safely be inferred that he was well acquainted with the desert and had spent a good part of his early manhood in the Dead Sea Valley and Arabia (which at that time meant the land of the Nabataeans). We have interesting parallels which do not prove, but certainly suggest, that he spent much more time in the desert than we are told. When Paul spent three years in Arabia (Gal 1:17–18) (including Damascus, which at that time was also under the Nabataeans), we can scarcely separate his stay there from a desire to walk in the Master's footsteps. Taken alone, this phase of Paul's life might be purely coincidental, but as has been pointed out by a number of recent writers (especially Daniélou, cf. above), John the Baptist grew up in the desert, presumably with the Essenes (cf. COMMENT on §7, 3:1–12).

This was probably a fairly widespread practice among pious Jews who were not too happy about the temptations of the city. Josephus, who came from a noble Jewish family closely associated with the Hasmonean priest-kings and who, like Jesus, had received a good legal education before he was fifteen, spent three years in the desert according to his own statement in the Life. Part of this period was spent with the Essenes, but most of it was spent with an ascetic named Bannus, probably an ex-Essene. His description of the latter's mode of life in the desert reminds one very closely of the manner of life of John the Baptist, who also dressed in skins and lived on whatever he could find. Unfortunately Josephus does not tell us just what Bannus' teachings were, but we may safely suppose that they were not too remote from those of the somewhat earlier John the Baptist. It is true that Josephus was a little younger than Paul and at least thirty years younger than Jesus, but it is clear that his stay with Bannus did not influence him against John the Baptist, whom he mentions favorably in Antiquities XVIII.v.2. Among the points which Bannus had in common with the Essenes was his practice of frequent ablutions with cold water; like John he lived on what he could find in the desert. This practice was doubtless much more frequent than the cases mentioned might suggest. The tradition of spiritual purification by living in the desert was very old in Israel. It is, for example, found especially in the traditions of Moses and Elijah, both of whom went into the desert to commune directly with God.

We must then ask what contact Jesus had with John in his early years for both to be represented in Matthew as presenting the same proclamation (cf. Matt 3:2, 4:17). From that point, we must also ask what John the Baptist assumed Jesus had in common with himself when sending messengers from prison with his bewildered questionings. In the light of the teaching of Jesus as that teaching is preserved for us in the gospel according to John, it seems hard to avoid the conclusion that both John the Baptist and Jesus had spent some part of their adult years in close contact with the Essenes, and presumably at Qumran. It is plain that by the time John began his ministry he had abandoned the somewhat vague messianic expectations of the Essenes for the emphatic pronouncement that the Kingdom was at hand.

The duration of the ministry of Jesus—not to mention that of John the Baptist—is impossible to determine from our gospels. A range of dates is provided for the birth of Jesus both by Matthew (2:2, 22) and more exactly, though without independent verification, by Luke (2:1–2). Those who may wish to pursue the very vexed questions about possible dates for the birth of Jesus may with considerable profit refer to Jack Finegan's Handbook of Biblical Chronology (Princeton University Press, 1964), especially pp. 215 ff. It is Luke who dates the beginning of John's ministry and then goes on to say that Jesus was "about thirty years old" when he began his ministry. In effect, all we have is a range of dates from the birth in the days of Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) and Augustus (31 B.C.–A.D. 14) to a terminus ad quem in the time of Pontius Pilate, prefect and later procurator of Judea (A.D. 26–36). On the gospel evidence, therefore, Jesus at the end of his ministry could have been anywhere from thirty-six to forty years old, accepting the controlling dates of Archelaus the Tetrarch (4 B.C.–A.D. 6) and the high priesthood of Caiaphas (A.D. 18–36). The duration of the public ministry of Jesus appears to cover little more than a year in the synoptic gospels, whereas the Johannine tradition has three celebrations of Passover in the course of the ministry. Early church tradition (Eusebius, Epiphanius, etc.) assumes a ministry of two or three years.

The gospels were not intended to be biography in any sense in which we understand the term, and it is impossible to reconstruct the ministry with anything approaching precision. Apart from the fact that each evangelist arranged his material so as to suit his particular method of presentation, we are dealing with material which combines private instruction to the inner circle with public preaching and teaching, along with other activities such as traveling and healing. The disciples came from very different backgrounds, and it is clear that some came from sectarian circles (John, disciple of John the Baptist, Simon the Zealot, and Matthew the Pharisee). In this latter case, if the ministry was not to be wholly compromised, then there was need for sustained teaching and understanding. Not only so, but the careful distinctions made in Matthew and Mark, and also in John, between private instruction and public teaching are often obscured by critical NT scholars. There are many reasons for this, not least of which is the manner in which the universal availability of the gospels to us, in every language, has obscured their necessarily limited availability in the period when the traditions were first committed to writing.

There are other considerations, too. The first, and perhaps the most important, is the extremely compact character of much of the material which we now have. We assume far too readily that in some sense the gospels were intentionally compiled not only for the continuing Messianic Community but also for remote posterity. Aside from any possible limits on such an enterprise which may have been dictated by convictions in some circles that Jesus would soon return in glory, many of the allusions in the gospels are only now becoming clear to us. For example, with the sectarian material already available (most manuscripts are still unpublished) we are now far nearer to an understanding of such terms as "Son of Man" than has been the case for many centuries. Yet we must assume that such expressions were used by the evangelists without explanation on the simple ground that those who made use of their work were perfectly familiar with the theological content and interpretation of the terms. The second consideration concerns the extent to which we assume our gospels to have been addressed to Gentile Christians. (Note in this connection the knowledge of Judaism which Paul obviously expected of his converts in Corinth.) It is not simply that recent research and archaeological discovery have called attention to the relative size and importance of Jewish colonies in the Dispersion (e.g., at Sardis)—we must re-examine the assumption commonly made that the Pauline letters (to use but one example) were addressed to congregations which were mainly, if not wholly, Gentile.

Enough evidence exists (which we are publishing elsewhere)²² to demonstrate that passages such as the Aramaic in 1 Cor 16:22 were at quite an early date seriously misunderstood in the process of transmission in the Greek text. Equally serious has been the fate of such passages as Matt 10:5, 34, 40–41. These particular examples are discussed in the commentary proper, but it is interesting to note when, and how, during the transmission (or translation), such misunderstandings arose. It is also of the highest importance to emphasize that in their original form they would have been quite clear to one familiar with the Jewish speech and milieu in which the sayings were first uttered.

What we appear to have in Matthew's gospel is a kind of teacher's guide, a collection of blocks of material from the private instruction of Jesus to the inner circle, together with other material from public teaching, and the whole assembled in a rather loose chronological framework. It is here that our difficulties multiply. How long were the periods of private teaching, as compared with those of public preaching? Our own suggestion is that after the ministry of John and the baptism of Jesus (where, on the Johannine evidence, some of the future disciples first met Jesus), there was an extended period of private itinerant teaching and instruction with the inner circle. But it is plain that this period was interspersed with occasional sermons, times of withdrawal, and isolated acts of healing. That this period gave rise to questioning, prompted either by enthusiastic indiscretion of some disciple, or by sheer curiosity among the hearers of Jesus, may account for much of the growing hostility during the ministry. The sermon at Capernaum recorded in Luke 4:16–22 reads in context like Jesus' response to a challenge.

In the synoptic gospels the confession of Peter and the transfiguration together represent a watershed in the ministry. We may not be too far wrong in supposing that it was there that the large-scale public ministry began. The opposition to Jesus which had already been aroused by occasional acts of healing, and the claims implicit in them (cf. Mark 2:1–12), together with trenchant criticism of abuses in interpreting the Law, now had opportunity to crystallize. From the transfiguration onwards the gospel narrative is one of increasing tension and of progression to what Jesus regarded as the inevitable end of his ministry.

If this is so, and the evangelists shaped their material in such a way that we are easily led into finding a quasi-biographical framework which never existed in the period of oral transmission, then how reliable are the recorded traditions, and what chronological indications are there of dating in our sources? Except in Scandinavia, it is doubtful whether systematic analysis of the oral tradition in the New Testament has been taken with anything approaching adequate seriousness by NT scholars. The importance of that tradition has been repeatedly stressed by Harald Riesenfeld (cf. "The Gospel Tradition and Its Beginnings," in The Gospels Reconsidered, New York: Humanities Press / Oxford: Blackwell, 1960); by Anton Friedrichsen (cf. "Jesus, St. John and St. Paul" in The Root of the Vine, ed. A. G. Hebert, London: Dacre Press, 1953), and by Stendahl (cf. The School of St. Matthew). There can be no doubt at all that the tenacity of oral tradition in the interpretation of Jewish law was extremely great, and recent discoveries have emphasized its antiquity (see Solomon Gandz, The Dawn of Literature, Osiris IV, Bruges, 1939; and W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity: Monotheism and the Historical Process, 2d ed. [Johns Hopkins Press, 1957], pp. 64 ff.). We now know, thanks to the work of such scholars as Louis Finkelstein, J. Weingreen, Manfred Lehmann, and many others (much of whose work has not yet been published) that oral tradition in pre-Talmudic Jewish sources, are often extraordinarily accurate even as far back as the Exilic period or earlier. The data contained in our rabbinic sources of the second century A.D. and later are proving to be reliable for earlier times than generally believed. The sayings of the leading Jewish teachers of the intertestamental and NT periods were preserved with remarkable tenacity for centuries after their original date. It has been shown again and again that the methods of teaching employed by Jesus are extremely close in their character to those of the early rabbis. It has also been shown that mnemotechnic devices—for instance, the arrangement of sayings of Jesus according to key words—were well known in rabbinic times and go back to high antiquity. The structure underlying many of the NT logia can be paralleled most closely in Pirqê Abôth (Sayings of the Fathers).

Archaeological research confirms the statements of Josephus and others as to the widespread devastation of Jewish Palestine during the prolonged struggle which began about A.D. 66 and ended in A.D. 73 with the fall of Masada. Not a single synagogue is known to have survived, though synagogues were rebuilt on the same or a neighboring site, as at Capernaum and especially at the Hot Springs of Tiberias (Hammātā d'Tiberia). The Jewish population of Palestine was greatly reduced by pagan massacres, internecine fighting, and slaughter by the Roman armies. Very large numbers of Jews were carried off as slaves. Christians were regarded as traitors by Jews and as Jews by pagans. The result was an almost complete interruption of Christian life in Palestine for a generation, if not longer. According to the well-known tradition preserved by Eusebius (whose accuracy has been strikingly vindicated by Ugarit and Chenoboskion), the Christians fled from Jerusalem to Pella in the eastern Jordan Valley. Pella was in an exposed location, open to pagan and Jewish reprisals, so it is in the highest degree improbable that it was more than a temporary refugee camp for fugitives who were planning to move on to safer places in Syria and Mesopotamia. The great break in the continuity of Palestinian tradition about A.D. 66–73 was stressed by W. F. Albright in The Archaeology of Palestine (Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1949), pp. 240 ff., and in The Background of the New Testament and Its Eschatology: Studies in Honour of Charles Harold Dodd, eds. W. D. Davies and David Daube (Cambridge University Press, 1956), pp. 155 ff.

It thus seems clear that the period of relative calm envisaged by so many NT scholars for the production of the four gospels during the last third of the first century A.D. never existed—least of all among the refugees from Palestine. We may reasonably assume that some Jewish Christians fleeing from Palestine took with them fixed oral traditions, especially those underlying the so-called “Q” source, which we believe to have been orally transmitted before it was included in our gospels of Matthew and Luke. Once outside of Palestine, and scattered in all directions, the refugees found it necessary, for the preservation of the oral tradition, to put it into writing and publish it as fast as possible. Where the four gospels were written becomes a matter of relative indifference, as long as we recognize that they must have been composed in substantially their extant written form no earlier than the late 60s and no later than the 70s or early 80s.

We do have, as it happens, an important and almost entirely neglected body of evidence for the tenacity with which the oral tradition about Jesus was preserved during this extremely difficult period of almost complete discontinuity in the life of Palestinian Christians. This consists of the proper names, including both personal and place names, found in the four gospels and preserved in the Syriac version. The Syriac tradition has been strangely disregarded; it was generally rejected even by such authorities as Dalman and Lagrange. If we examine the Syriac recensions of the gospels carefully, we find that the most important recensions—the Vetus Syra (second or third century), the Peshitta (about fourth century), and the Syro-Palestinian lectionaries (about fifth century)—agree almost throughout in the form of proper names. This agreement does not hold, however, in a few obscure place names which have not yet been identified with certainty by modern scholars.

That proper names are of exceptional importance for the relation of oral and written tradition, especially in cognate dialects, has been stressed particularly by E. Y. Kutscher, in a German article on Mishnaic Hebrew in Rocznik Orientalistyczny 26 (1964), 33–48, on the great value of proper names in fixing the relations between recensions in different Aramaic dialects. The only other way in which we can explain some of the phenomena which we list here is by the incredible supposition that native scholars were somehow trained in modern philological method and sent from Syro-Mesopotamian monasteries on fact-collecting expeditions to Palestine. Since no such notion is conceivable, our only other solution is to suppose that the names were carried from Palestine, embedded in pre-gospel tradition by Aramaic-speaking Christians who found refuge in Syria and Mesopotamia.

In some cases, of course, no problem is involved, since names like Yôḥanān (John), Shim'ôn (Simon), Maryam (Mary), Martā (Martha) could not have been forgotten. There is a striking parallel between the names found on Jewish ossuaries in the neighborhood of Jerusalem, dating from the last century of the Second Temple (30 B.C.—A.D. 70), and the names occurring in the gospels. We find roughly the same proportion of Greek and Hebrew names among them as in the gospels: not only such names as John, Simon, Mary, and Martha, but also such names as Shalôm (Salome)—all very common in this period. However, there are also names which are not so obvious. For instance, Bartholomew has not generally been recognized as containing the patronymic which is well attested as Tlmy, the normal transcription of Greek Ptolemy, in Nabataean and South Arabic inscriptions, as well as in rabbinic sources (see commentary on 10:3). Since we already have so many Greek names among the disciples of Jesus, such as Andreas, Philippos, and Kleopas (for the very common Greek name Kleopatros), there is nothing surprising about this. But we also have names such as La'zar (Lazarus), which appears in the same spelling in the ossuary inscriptions as a shortened form of “Eleazar.” It is not self-evident that Alphaeus, which looks superficially like Greek Alpheus (with which it used to be connected) should appear in Syriac as Ḥalfay, also the short name of Rabbi Ḥalaftā (who flourished toward the end of the first century). This Jewish name meant “compensation.” An epithet like Boanergēs is correctly transmitted in Syriac as benay regesh (rigshā), “sons of noise.” One suspects that the curious Greek form is a corruption, resulting from confusion with some such word as Doric boa, Attic boē, “loud cry.”

The place names are, however, more significant than the personal names, since place names seldom wander as personal names do so easily. Here we have such clear cases as Bethsaida “house of fishing/hunting” spelled with ṣade, and Capernaum, which is well known from Jewish sources as Kephar Naḥūm (village of Nahum). Bethany appears in the Syriac recensions as Beth-‘anyā, which (as pointed out by Albright in the Annual of the American Schools of Oriental Research 4 [1924], 158–160) is a shortened form (with haplography) of older Beth-‘ananyah, mentioned as Ananiah (‘Ananyah) in Neh 11:32. An equally obvious case is Bethesda, which is spelled in all Syriac recensions Beth-ḥisdā or -ḥasdā. This is a normal transcription from Aramaic into Greek, and the name was common in later times, usually in the alternative form Ḥisdai/Ḥasdai, short for biblical Ḥasadyahu. This obviously correct identification, which shows that Aramaic tradition had accurately preserved the name of the long-since destroyed Pool of Bethesda, has been abandoned by some scholars since the publication of the copper strips from Qumran, where a name Beth-esdatain was erroneously read in the official publication by J. T. Milik with M. Baillet and R. de Vaux of Les ‘Petites Grottes’ de Qumran, Discoveries in the Judaean Desert of Jordan, III (Oxford University Press, 1962), p. 297. Beth-esdatain was promptly identified by Milik with Bethesda, though the word itself is otherwise wholly unknown and fails completely to yield a satisfactory meaning. Besides, the context was completely misunderstood by Milik; we must read with J. M. Allegro (The Treasure of the Copper Scroll [New York: Doubleday, 1960], p. 53) and D. N. Freedman, Beth-ashwahayn, “the house of the two reservoirs.” In our opinion there can be no doubt whatever about the correctness of this reading, though a few obscurities remain in the following lines. The word for “underground reservoir” which occurs in Hebrew inscriptions and texts from the ninth century B.C. to the second century A.D., was pronounced ashwah, later ashôah; it appears in the name of the town Shôḥîn of the Talmud (Asochis of Josephus) in central Galilee. In this case the poor hand of the carver is responsible for the mistake, but the editor’s poor paleography and philology have served us ill. Where the place itself was located we do not know, probably in Jerusalem. In any event, this cannot possibly be the Bethesda of the gospel of John, the only plausible form of whose Aramaic name has been correctly transmitted by all the Syriac recensions.

One of the most stubborn of all place names in the gospels is Gethsēmane. Because of its great importance in the passion narrative, which was almost certainly the first part of the gospels to be written down, there can be no reasonable doubt that the form of the name would be correctly transmitted in Syriac. The Greek form Gethsēmane, spelled at the end variously with epsilon- iota, iota, or ēta, was almost certainly influenced by the Greek verbal form sēmanēi, meaning “he will show” or “he/it will show/mean.” But the Syriac recensions have Gedsīmān (Gessēmānīn in the Syro-Palestinian lectionaries) and Gessēmani in some Greek manuscripts). G. Dalman, Orte und Wege Jesu (Gütersloh: Bertelsmann, 1924), p. 340, gave up his earlier explanation of the name as “oil press,” following long-standing conventional ideas, and preferred to render “wine press of signs” or “wine press of omens.” But we cannot disregard the Syriac recensions, because Gedsīmān, etc., makes no sense at all as a corruption of an original Gethsīmān. More important, however, is the fact that there is no real evidence at all for the supposed meaning “oil press” for the name in question, since gath is nowhere used in the Bible or in Aramaic literature in the sense of oil press, if we except two very doubtful rabbinic passages alluded to as possibilities by Dalman. On the other hand, the word gad, gaddā, “good luck,” is exceedingly common in Aramaic as well as in Hebrew-Phoenician in the same sense. It must originally have been the personal name of the owner of the place, in which case he would bear a name of pagan origin which could well be borne by a Jew; “The (astrological) omen(s) is/are (my) good luck.” There are many parallels; a good one is the Aramaic name Naḥash-ṭāb, which appears in Aramaic and South Arabic, and in Greek transcription (second century A.D.) as Naastabos, meaning “good luck,” or “(my) luck is good.” Note in connection with pagan Naḥash-ṭāb that sīmān ṭōb is synonymous with mazzāl ṭōb, “good (astrological) omen” in later Hebrew.

It is most improbable that the words for wine press and oil press ever coincided in Hebrew and Aramaic, since the presses are entirely different in appearance and the processes of extracting oil and wine are as different as possible. Furthermore, wine presses were generally hewn out of solid rock outside a town or village, whereas oil presses were generally found in a town.

It is also noteworthy that the few cases which remain stubborn and from which we cannot learn anything appear only accidentally in the gospels. For instance, Aenon and Salim are mentioned in John 3:23 as places where John the Baptist baptized (probably in Samaria; see Harvard Theological Review 17 [1924], 193 f.). Though the places still exist as ‘Ainûn and Sâlim, early Christian tradition shifted them both to the middle Jordan Valley, south of Scythopolis, which was swampy and more accessible, though there are no satisfactory sites or names to be found there. In a case like this, where Jesus was not involved at all (only John baptized there), it would not be strange to find the tradition forgotten. In the gospel of John we have memories transmitted through a former disciple of John the Baptist. In any case, there would be no reason why mention of towns connected only with John the Baptist would be remembered in traditions concerned with Jesus.

The case of Gergesa, which also appears as Gadara and Gerasa (see commentary on Matt 8:28), is inscrutable. We have followed the Syriac Gadara, for reasons given in the commentary. How the name became corrupted from Gergesa is a mystery. Perhaps the most plausible suggestion is that the original name was Gergesa, belonging to a village in Gadarene territory, and later confused in some Greek texts with Gerasa, whereas the Aramaic tradition remembered that it was in Gadarene country, since Gadara overlooked the Sea of Galilee directly from the southeast but at a greater distance than the putative Gergesa. In earlier times Grgš appears as a personal name in Syria and as an ethnic name in Palestine.

One of the most striking cases is, at first sight, extremely simple. Arimathea appears in the Peshitta as Rāmethā (though there may be some doubt as to exact vocalization). The Syro-Palestinian lectionary recension offers instead, as pointed out by M. J. Lagrange in RB 34 \(1925\), 489 f., Remtīs, which today is pronounced Rentīs by the local population. The spelling Remtīs is in agreement with the Greek Remphthis of Eusebius, underlying Jerome's Remfthis. On the various forms of the name, see the commentary on Matt 27:57. The Peshitta reading is most significant, since it sounds quite different from the Greek and could not possibly have been based on direct translation or transliteration from Greek. It must, therefore, go back to the original tradition as transmitted orally.

In view of the material accumulated in these illustrations, it becomes probable that there are many key Aramaic words and phrases which were preserved by the Syriac recensions in substantially their original form. To be sure, there were undoubtedly dialectal variations, but they were seldom significant about the Christian era. Even centuries later, differences between the Aramaic of Edessa and Dura, on the one hand, and of southern Syria and Palestine, on the other, were seldom serious bars to communication. From the Jewish ossuaries and inscriptions we know that Jewish Aramaic was not divided into really fixed dialects, though there were, of course, differences in the speech of the Aramaic-speaking population in different parts of the continuum Syria-Palestine-Mesopotamia.

We may therefore reasonably suppose that Jewish Christians fleeing from Palestine took with them firmly fixed oral traditions, especially those underlying the so-called “Q” material, and put them into Greek as soon as they could, realizing that they might otherwise be lost.

The contention that Mark was a Roman gospel, compiled around the teaching and reminiscences of Peter, has almost everything to commend it, and it is nowadays generally accepted. But to proceed from there to argue that Mark is the basis, not only of the framework of Matthew and Luke, but also of considerable quantities of material in both, is to carry a historical hypothesis too far. Under the conditions prevailing in Palestine at the generally accepted date of Mark (ca. A.D. 65), it is hard to imagine that Christians in Palestine were waiting for a gospel tradition from Rome in order to begin writing down their own oral tradition.

Later church speculations about the missionary spheres of the eleven disciples may well reflect traditions about the circumstances of their departure from Palestine. For all the “finished” appearance of the gospels, we must reckon with the serious gaps which they present. There was no information, apparently, from Jesus himself about his early life—presumably reflecting either the death or the dispersal of those few who might have had access to such information. All that we have is a tantalizing glimpse of a visit to Jerusalem recorded by Luke (who seems to have made strenuous efforts to recover what he could). The account of Jesus’ reception in Nazareth must raise serious doubts as to how long he remained there after the return from Egypt. There is, besides, the probability that, as a young builder, he had become familiar with much of Palestine and neighboring areas. The Johannine tradition certainly gives the impression that the author knew a great deal more than he recorded, but along with that impression goes the obvious fact that this tradition was far more concerned with preserving knowledge of Jesus’ teaching.

There is further confirmation of this when we look more closely at the account of the election of Matthias in Acts 1. Examples of choice by lot carried out with inscribed potsherds have been found at Arad and Masada. (On choosing by lot, cf. J. A. Fitzmyer, “Jewish Christianity in Acts in the Light of the Qumran Scrolls,” in Studies in Luke-Acts: Essays Presented in Honor of Paul Schubert, eds. L. E. Keck and J. L. Martyn [Nashville: Abingdon, 1966], pp. 250 ff.) We have generally assumed that the Greek text of Acts 1:21–22 has been transmitted accurately, and that the number of the apostolic band was being made up by including one who had been with Jesus all along. But there is a serious flaw in this interpretation. It is explicitly stated—in the common interpretation—that the proposed candidate should be “one of the men who have accompanied us ... beginning from the baptism of John ...” (Acts 1:22, italics ours). Not only is there possible confusion of names in the lists of the Twelve as we have them (we shall have something to say of this below), but it is clearly stated in our gospels that some of the disciples were called in Galilee after the baptism by John. By the time of the events recorded in Acts 1:21–22, there can have been very few who not only had accompanied Jesus right through his ministry, but who also had firsthand knowledge of the ministry of John. We suggest that the Greek of this important section in Acts should read: oudeis oun²³ tōn sunelthontōn hēmin andrōn en panti chronō hō eisēlthen kai exēlthen.... Considering what follows (martura tēs anastaseōs autou sun hēmin genesthai hena toutōn) with its emphasis on hena toutōn, “one of these,” the confusion between oudeis oun, “no one, therefore,” and dei oun, “it is therefore necessary,” is easily explained. On our supposition, Peter is represented as saying that there was no one left who had, like Judas, accompanied the inner circle all the way through Jesus’ ministry. So the traditional number of twelve (as at Qumran) was restored from “one of these”—i.e., from the company described in 1:15. What was required was a witness to the resurrection, not someone who had been witness to the whole ministry. If our reconstruction of this reading is correct, then not only is it clear that Paul (who obviously does not fulfill the conditions of 1:21 on the usual interpretation) was able to claim apostleship without continued protest from Jerusalem, but it also makes clear how the extension of the term “apostle” to Barnabas could so easily be accomplished.

We have spent some time on this, partly as demonstrating that the number of firsthand witnesses to the ministry of Jesus was not so limitless as is commonly assumed, and partly also as an indication that the conventional number of “the Twelve” probably did not become fixed until the final stages of the ministry. Indeed, it is possible that the number of the inner circle achieved fixed form as a consequence of the saying recorded in Matt 19:28. Students of the Old Testament are familiar with the varying traditions in the OT sources as to the names of the groups subsumed under the title “the twelve tribes.” We may assume that some, though by no means all, of the apparent confusion in the list of the Twelve in the gospels and Acts derives from our own assumption that the inner circle must always have consisted of the same persons throughout the ministry.

In any assessment of chronology, authorship, and reliability in the gospels, we are faced with (1) a relatively small number of people who had access to the facts of Jesus’ ministry, (2) the early disappearance from the scene of some of the witnesses, and (3) the apparent dismissal by Jesus himself of any recollection of his early years as unimportant. Correspondingly, we must reckon with the desire to record the oral tradition at a comparatively early date, not only on account of a steadily worsening political climate, but also—and more especially—on account of the removal to other spheres of action of many who could provide valuable information. We have no reason to call in question the essential veracity of Luke’s statements in the preface to his gospel.

Before we look at these considerations as they may apply to Matthew’s gospel, let us pay some attention to a common tendency among many NT scholars. This is the assumption on the part of many writers on NT subjects that there was at some early time a uniform Greek text, which might be reconstructed from the standard recensions, from which all manner of conclusions might be drawn, and upon which all kinds of structural edifices might be erected.²⁴ Along with this is the tendency on the part of some (often the same) scholars to postulate relatively—in some cases ludicrously—late dates for much NT material. To make these assumptions is to overlook entirely the salient fact that the Hebrew Bible did not become a fixed text until after the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, a fact to which the Dead Sea scrolls are eloquent witness. (Cf. Jan de Waard, A Comparative Study of the Old Testament Texts in the Dead Sea Scrolls and the New Testament, Leiden: Brill, 1965; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1966.) There are some examples in our present gospel of Matthew to which we have called attention in the body of the commentary, where a zealous attachment to a so-called fixed text has often completely obscured, or even changed, the original sense (cf., for example, 10:34). In the course of writing this commentary it has become increasingly clear to us that we may well be dealing with material which had been transmitted in Aramaic and occasionally in Hebrew. This is a situation which would be much more likely in the third quarter of the first century than at any time earlier or later.

A very strong argument for the originality of the material handed down in Matthew, as well as in the other gospels, is the archaic Jewish-Aramaic in which it was originally composed—whether in oral or written form does not really matter. Thanks to the discovery of so much early post-biblical Hebrew and especially of late pre-Christian Palestinian Aramaic among the manuscripts of Qumran, it is possible to reconstruct the original Aramaic of many passages with a close approximation to accuracy in syntax, morphology, and vocabulary—see especially J. A. Fitzmyer, The “Genesis Apocryphon” of Qumran Cave I, Rome: Biblical Institute Press, 1966), and CBQ 30 \(1968\), 417–28. The value of this criterion will become clear in the pages of our commentary, in which we deal with obscurities in the present Greek text which can probably be traced back to Aramaic (or Hebrew). We must not forget that the current Hebrew used in the scribal schools of Palestine in the early first century A.D. was of the type illustrated by the numerous quotations from the early rabbis preserved in the Mishnaic tractate Pirqê Abôth, which can now usually be put back into Aramaic of the same period without difficulty. This is naturally also true in reverse: much Jewish Aramaic can be traced back to the late Hebrew of this period. A careful analysis of the proper names in the Syriac recensions of the gospels has also proved very fruitful, and we can now expect some key words and expressions in the utterances of Jesus to be preserved in Syriac (see above).

B

We propose now to examine briefly some of the characteristics of this gospel. Our principal conclusions as to its framework were indicated in Part IV of this Introduction, and will not be repeated here.

The evangelist's use of the Old Testament is not only important in providing him with a biblical framework within which to set the ministry of Jesus, it also gives us some indication of his theological attitudes. The evangelist's eschatology is of the traditional orthodox Jewish type represented especially by the Pharisees. It is important to remember that the evangelist gives new life to traditional concepts such as The Man ("Son of Man") represented in Daniel and Enoch, by seeing them in the light of the ministry of Jesus. If we contend (as we have already done in Part IV above) that Matthew sees the ministry of Jesus in almost exclusively biblical terms, we must at the same time remind the reader that when this gospel was being written there was no agreement as to the exact extent of Scripture beyond the Law and the Prophets (the latter including the earlier historical books and the major and minor prophets). The evangelist shows little interest in any specifically sectarian vocabulary, though he was certainly well aware of it, and not infrequently uses phraseology of the Qumran type. For all the wealth of Christological titles such as "The Righteous One"—and the high estimate placed on the Messianic Community as "Kingdom of heaven"—there is no proliferation of community titles such as one finds at Qumran. Nowhere, for example, is the Community referred to as "the Restored Israel" or "the community of the New Covenant." It is not too much to say that this gospel represents conscious return to Scripture. To that extent, we may be correct in describing the evangelist as in all probability a Galilean, aware of but not inclined toward sectarian theological speculation, and rather "old-fashioned" in his approach to Scripture. As we pointed out in Part IV, the evangelist's pēsher method of commentary was in process of being superseded by the Greek hermeneutical methods which had been introduced by Hillel the Elder in the late first century B.C.

C

Traditionally, this gospel was written by Matthew, the tax collector described in 9:9 and 10:3, and further identified with the Levi of Mark 2:14 and Luke 5:27 (properly, as we shall see, “the Levite”). There are some uncertainties in the NT lists of the Twelve, but the difficulty found in the Levi of Mark 2:14 as a son of Alphaeus, along with a James similarly described in Matt 10:3, is more apparent than real. Two sets of brothers are known to us from the lists of disciples, and there is no reason why two sons of Alphaeus should not also have joined Jesus in his ministry, just as there were two Judases and two Simons.

None of this carries us very far, for the main controversy has always centered around the identification of Matthew with Levi in our present texts. (Perhaps the best modern study in short compass is that of Barnabas Lindars, “Matthew, Levi, Lebbaeus and the Value of the Western Text,” [NTS 4 \[1958\], 226–32; cf. also Rudolph Pesch, “Levi-Matthäus \[Mc 2.14/Mt 9.9; 10.3\] ein Beitrag zur Lösung eines alten Problems,” ZNW 59 \[1968\], 15–23.](#)) There is a simple solution to the difficulty, and one which we believe has the merit of doing justice to all available facts. It is that Levi is not (as usually held) a personal name, but the tribal designation of the man who was called by Jesus from his tax collecting. That is to say, the person under discussion is “Matthew the Levite,” Gr. Matthias ho levitēs. We have called attention in the commentary to the widespread disuse of the definite article in Aramaic in the NT period. It would therefore not be surprising if a translator/scribe, faced with Levi in his original, came to the conclusion that this was a personal name—it was, after all, common at this period—and therefore rendered it as such in Greek.

Everything which we judge to be characteristic of this gospel—its conservatism, its interest in the traditional oral law, in lawyers and Pharisees, its traditional eschatology—all this fits admirably into the background of an author who was a Levite. The struggle of the Levites as an order for a firm and lasting place in the ecclesiastical framework of Judaism after worship was centralized at Jerusalem (but especially after the return from Exile) need not detain us here. There are excellent summaries both in The Jewish Encyclopaedia and in Kittel’s TWNT, ad loc. A Levite of the time of Jesus would normally have been a Pharisee, educated, and from an orthodox \(i.e., not sectarian\) background. With lower status than the Jerusalem-centered priesthood, more numerous than the temple cult could readily absorb, most Levites would be compelled to seek a livelihood apart from the worship of the temple. If Matthew the Levite found a living as a tax collector for the political authorities—and his education would certainly fit him for such responsibility—then his rejection by his fellow Pharisees would follow inevitably. So too would inevitably follow carefully collected reminiscences of Jesus' attitude to the Law and to those who made their living by oral interpretation of that Law. (It is worthy of mention here that Stendahl, in his School of St. Matthew [mentioned above], pp. 30–31, quotes von Dobschütz as suggesting that Matthew was a converted rabbi. However, it is by no means clear what he had in mind in using the term “rabbi,” since there were as yet no ordained rabbis.

Apart from the fact that church tradition ascribes this gospel to Matthew, what indications are there of anything which may be called certainty in the ascription? It must be said at once that there is no single feature to which we can point and say without equivocation, “This demands that we ascribe this present work, or the larger part of it, to Matthew the Levite, called by Jesus from his work as tax collector, and who accompanied Jesus throughout his ministry.” All that we can establish, and that largely by inference, has been stated in the preceding paragraphs.

We are now at the point where we can examine the strength and weakness of the early church tradition as to Matthean authorship. Our earliest testimony as to the author or compiler of the gospel is Papias, in a quotation by Eusebius, and referred to also by Irenaeus—again in a quotation in Eusebius. While this sort of evidence is somewhat indirect, it would be unwise to dismiss it out of hand. Though early church historians such as Eusebius have often been disregarded by some modern NT scholars as being inaccurate, the recent discoveries of Gnostic and gnosticizing literature at Nag Hammadi (Chenoboskion)—discoveries which certainly vindicate the accuracy of the descriptions of Gnosticism by Irenaeus and Hippolytus—give new credibility to these early writers.

It is with such Church Fathers that we must now deal. Eusebius (ca. A.D. 270–340) quotes Papias (ca. A.D. 130) as saying that “Matthew compiled (sunetaxe) the oracles (or “sayings”—ta logia) in the Hebrew language (Hebraïdi dialektō), but everyone interpreted them (or “translated them”—hermēneusen d’auta) as he was able” (Eusebius Historia Ecclesiastica III. 39. 16). Similarly, Irenaeus is quoted by Eusebius as follows: “Matthew published a gospel in writing also, among the Hebrews in their own language (en tois Hebraïois tō idia autōn dialektō) while Peter and Paul in Rome were preaching the Gospel and founding the Church” (Eusebius V. 8. 2). That Eusebius himself shared the view that Matthew evangelized Jews and compiled his gospel in “his native tongue” is clear from III. 24. 5–6. The same writer quotes Clement of Rome (d. about 101) as stating that the first of the four gospels which are alone unquestionable (tas anantirrētous graphas) was compiled by Matthew, who was “once a tax collector but afterwards an apostle.” There is no necessity whatever to suppose that Irenaeus was dependent on Papias for his information—Irenaeus, on his own showing, was near enough to the same authorities as those used by Papias himself.

It is not here that the difficulty lies, but in another quotation from Papias, also found in Eusebius. Irenaeus declares Papias to have been a hearer (akoustēs) of John, and a companion of Polycarp (the word translated “companion” is hetairos). It is worth mentioning here that whenever Eusebius’ quotations can be checked from other sources, he is found to be accurate. In the case of Irenaeus, there is a later Latin translation of his Adversus Haereses alongside which Eusebius’ quotation from V. 33. 4 may be measured. Now Irenaeus declares Papias to have been a man of ancient times (archaios anēr), but a recent article takes issue with what it considers to be an attempt to deny Papias dealings with first-generation Christians. C. Stewart Petrie (“The Authorship of ‘The Gospel according to Matthew’: A Reconsideration of the External Evidence,” NTS 14 [1967], 15–32), suggests that Eusebius wished to deny that Papias had contact with first-generation Christians, because Papias was a millenarian (chiliasm)—a theological approach which Eusebius deplored—and also because Eusebius was anxious not to have the Apocalypse credited to the apostle John. For all the care which the article takes, we do not think that its author has really disposed of “the elder John,” or “John the Elder” as easily as he assumes (NTS 14 (1967), 19 ff.). What is of considerable importance here is the careful distinction which Eusebius represents Papias as making. Papias (Eusebius III. 49. 3–4) declares: “But when someone turned up who had been closely associated with the ancient worthies” (Petrie’s translation of presbuteroi) “I would enquire about the sayings” (or “discourses”) “of the ancient worthies, what Andrew or what Peter had said (eipen) or what Philip or what Thomas or James, or what John or Matthew, or any other of the Lord’s disciples had said, and also the things which Aristion and the ancient worthy John, disciples of the Lord, were saying.” Of interest here is the fact that Papias represents the second John as being still available when he writes, since he is (according to Eusebius) careful to make a distinction between those who had said, and those who at the time of writing were saying.

We appear to have an important testimony from Papias, through Eusebius, that he was in touch with men who had known the apostle John, and could collect reminiscences as to what the first-generation Christians had had to say about our earliest gospel sources. (See Appendix A.) A careful choice of words is imperative here. Papias’ recorded words—that Matthew compiled ta logia in Hebrew, and everyone translated as he was able—do not necessarily mean that our present gospel of Matthew must be taken as a mere translation of a whole gospel readily available in Hebrew. So far as we know, several (if not many) honest attempts at translating ta logia may have been made, and the phrase is by no means free from considerable ambiguity. It has been taken as a collection of the sayings of Jesus by some, by others as a source which might be roughly equivalent to the elusive “Q,” and by yet others to be a kind of collection of OT testimonia, or a collection of Matthew’s OT quotations. The last may be ruled out, now that we are in possession of whole bodies of pēsher (commentary) material from Qumran, which we have found to be represented with such skill in Matthew’s gospel.

Much depends on precisely what interpretation we give to Papias’ use of ta logia, and here the evidence from LXX and other sources is not always clear as to what influences were at work in the New Testament, and therefore (at another remove) in the minds of early Christian authors. Certainly Irenaeus seems to use the phrase ta logia as meaning the whole message of the Gospel, and not merely sayings of Jesus. It is interesting that the verdict of Kittel, in the article which appears above his name in TWNT, rejects the notion that Papias’ use of the word logia ought properly to be confined to sayings, or collections of sayings, of Jesus. Here again, the translation of hermēneusen is of interest. There has been (as we saw in Part XI on Parables) an almost inexhaustible variety of interpretations offered of the parables in the light of changing social and religious conditions of Christendom through the ages. But this is strictly a matter of interpretation, however complex the hermeneutic problems may be. Granted that with the movement of the Messianic community from a Jewish milieu into the Gentile, Greek-speaking world, there were certainly problems of translating shades of meaning, it is hard to suppose that what Papias had in mind was a situation where those who first had access to Matthew’s work Hebraïdi dialektō were left without authoritative interpretation of the message of the Kingdom. It seems to fit the natural sense of the passage from Papias far more easily if we assume that he declares Matthew’s gospel to have been translated as men were able.

D

Before we attempt to summarize what we have so far said, there is one further puzzle to be investigated—that of the otherwise unknown Matthias, elected to fill the place of Judas (Acts 1:15–26). Papyrus and parchment were not in such abundant supply, or so inexpensive, in the first century A.D. as to warrant careless use, and a repeated story or narrative must therefore be treated as being of considerable importance to the writer or compiler. This, we suggest, explains for the repeated account of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, and of the feeding of the multitude in the gospels. Now, even granted that the writer of Acts considered it necessary to record the election of a man to fill the place of Judas in the Twelve, it must yet be asked why Luke told the story at length, instead of contenting himself with a mere record that the election was duly made. Here we can only conjecture, and it is well to bear in mind that what is being said at this point has only the merit of conjecture and nothing more. Gr. Matthaios (Aram. Mattay) and Gr. Matthias (pronounced Matyā in Syriac) are alternative shortened forms of the same Hebrew original Mattatyahu, and are also both common names in the period under discussion. It is a possibility to be reckoned with that Luke records the election at some length as being that of a man known to have had some connection with our present gospel of Matthew, whether as compiler of oral tradition, or (being in possession of intimate knowledge of the ministry of Jesus) as supplier of some of the historical framework of the gospel.

Papias' statement that Matthew compiled ta logia in Hebrew, and that each translated them as he was able, does not commend our present Greek text as a firsthand translation—indeed, there are indications that by the time our present Greek text took shape there were already serious misunderstandings of the original. It will be recalled that Streeter posited an “M” source as laying the foundation of our present gospel of Matthew, a Jewish-Christian source used by Matthew and then applied later to the finished work which bears his name. (Streeter, The Four Gospels. The references to the “M” source are widely scattered through the book, and it is not possible to detail them here.)

The reader has already been warned that there are no firm conclusions to be drawn as to the authorship of our present gospel of Matthew. But there are some things which can rightly be said by way of summary, which may serve to indicate that whatever might be made of Papias' ta logia, there is some substance to the supposition that this gospel owes something to Matthew, a Levite, a former tax collector turned disciple of Jesus. We present the summary findings as follows:

1. The author was a conservative-minded Jew, aware of but not inclined to sectarian views.

2. The gospel as we have it preserves material which details Messianic titles (the Prophet, the Righteous One) already archaic in the time of Jesus.

3. The interest of the gospel in the Law, in ecclesiastical matters, in oral interpretation of law and custom, would come most readily from a man trained in the legal disciplines, or from one who had been in constant touch with men so trained.

4. The preservation of sayings of Jesus about the Law, and about some of its interpreters, would be precisely the kind of interest we might expect from a Levite.

5. We do not find Matthew—in spite of much pleading by some commentators—engaging in an attempt to represent Jesus as a “new Moses.” To the contrary, we find that the author’s interest lies in carefully preserving sayings of Jesus which re-establish the true principles of the Mosaic Law.

6. However interpreted later, Matthew’s collection of parables reflects his consuming interest in the spiritual history of Israel as a chosen people. The ministry of Jesus required him to re-examine the theological implications of God’s choice of his ancient people.

7. We do not regard Markan priority either in time or as a necessary source, historical or otherwise, of either Matthew or Luke as being in any sense proved.

8. It is too often assumed that traditions grow from nothing, and this unwarranted assumption is often made about the traditional ascription of this gospel to Matthew.

9. If Mark’s gospel is accepted as having been written in Rome, around the year A.D. 65, and if it is equally accepted that our present gospel of Matthew is substantially dependent on Mark, then our knowledge of conditions in Syria-Palestine after that date demands not only that Matthew was written far away from a Palestinian milieu—which may well have been the case—but also that the Matthean Palestinian tradition was dependent on a Palestinian tradition from overseas.

10. Archaic expressions, interest in ecclesiastical matters, carefully recorded statements of Jesus about the Law, a conservative type of eschatology, together with an already dying method of commentary, all serve to convince us that we are dealing with an author or compiler, or both, thoroughly versed in legal commentary, who would have had nothing apart from antiquarianism to inform him if his work was written or compiled at the end of the first century.

The Levite Matthew fulfills the conditions for an author which we have outlined above far better than any other candidate known to us from the New Testament. That there is no certainty to this hypothesis, we readily concede. But it has the merit of taking Papias and those who cite him seriously, and of accepting historical and archaeological evidence of chaotic conditions in Palestine between A.D. 60 and 75. It also saves us from the inherent absurdity of supposing that Palestinian Christians—Jewish Christians at that—would have based the first Palestinian gospel on a recent arrival from Rome. It is very doubtful whether in the thoroughly confused situation which must have immediately preceded the flights of Jewish Christians from Palestine, there would have been time or encouragement for composition of a Palestinian gospel. But the traditions were there, the need of putting them down and translating them into Greek was becoming more obvious every day, so that it can scarcely have taken more than a very short time after the main emigration before our Greek gospel of Matthew emerged from the Aramaic oral and written traditions which had been carried with them by the refugees. Recent suggestions that Matthew was composed in Antioch are not unreasonable in themselves, but cannot be proved.

Precisely what place the Matthias of Acts 1 had in all this, we may never know. We have merely suggested above that the account of his election in Acts is evidently of some significance in Luke's mind apart from his simply filling the place of Judas.

We have already stated, in the earlier parts of this Introduction, that we do not find it necessary to accept the notion of dependence of Matthew on Mark. And (as has more than once been pointed out by others) it is much simpler to suppose that Luke was in some sense dependent on Matthew, or had access to the same Palestinian traditions as those employed by Matthew, than it is to have recourse to written sources such as the hypothetical "Q." It is perhaps only our own unwillingness to treat oral tradition seriously which has impeded an adequate assessment of Matthew as an independent Palestinian check on the accuracy of Mark's Petrine reminiscences.

One of the most extraordinary historical aberrations is the notion—straight from the German Romantics of the eighteenth century—that Jesus must have been an extremely simple, unlearned man without formal education and inexperienced in the ways of the world. The principal roots of its contemporary manifestations are, first, misplaced emphasis on the Pauline kenōsis (from kenōō, "to empty out"), according to which Jesus abdicated his divinity so that he could live the life of a mortal. This inevitably led to exaggerated emphasis on his humanity, to the point of denying him any exceptional ability to learn by study or experience. According to this point of view, he lived as a carpenter's son in Nazareth nearly all his life, doing only the humblest jobs open to a carpenter, and then suddenly becoming completely superhuman toward the end of his life. The other, and opposite, point of view, which led to surprisingly similar conclusions, is illustrated by Gerhart Hauptmann's famous novel Der Narr in Christo, Emanuel Quint (1910), where we have an account of the short career of a mentally retarded carpenter's son whose one ambition was to live the life of Jesus. He is represented as being capable of imitating Jesus to the extent of his ability, trying to do only good and resisting temptation of all kinds in order to pursue his chosen path. When evil emerged around him it came in spite of his efforts, and the final collapse of his mission was inevitable.

The picture of Jesus that emerges from the four evangelists—properly focused—is quite different. Here we have an exceptionally able man who traveled and studied, one whose range of interest and experience was much greater than that of any of his disciples. This young man was familiar from his own school years, supplemented by further study and wide experience, with the teachings of the Pharisees, as well as with those of his near relative, John the Baptist. Matthew, the ex-Pharisee, was particularly interested in the use by Jesus of early rabbinic case law, corrected when too legalistic by application of the Torah and the ethical teachings of the Prophets. In Matthew we have a systematic effort to collect this material, often without too much attention to context or absolute consistency. In John we have the apostle's recollections of his first leader, John the Baptist, as well as of his second leader, Jesus. They were bound together into sermons whose warp was the common teaching of John the Baptist and Jesus. The resulting theology is that of Jesus, but in terms of the largely Essene vocabulary of John the Baptist. (See Appendix B.) There is no reason to doubt that Jesus used the same vocabulary on occasion, but in the gospel it is too consistently Essene in verbiage to be exclusively the very words of Jesus. There is no means of knowing exactly what words we owe to direct translation of Jesus' vocabulary, what to the Evangelist, and what to the "Elder." (See Appendix A.)

APPENDIX A

The Presbyter John

The article by C. Stewart Petrie, mentioned in Part XIII above, is valuable as further rehabilitation of Papias as a reliable source of information. However, it seems to us that in his anxiety to see justice done to Papias, he has gone beyond the evidence in suggesting that Eusebius was wrong, or even deliberately misleading, in his judgment of Papias. Eusebius affirms that Papias knew John the Elder, and that he was not an eyewitness of the apostles (Historia Ecclesiastica III. 39. 2). Irenaeus certainly claims that Papias was a hearer of the apostle John, but there is in reality no conflict between Irenaeus and Eusebius at this point. For Papias' present tense in "what Aristion and John the Elder were saying" must be taken at its face value. Papias may have been a hearer of John the Apostle, but for purposes of his statement, he says only that he was recording what Aristion and the Elder were saying when he began collecting his reminiscences.

Some observations are in order here about Papias' statement. It runs in our present text: ... ha te Aristion kai ho presbuteros Ioannēs tou kuriou mathētai legousin, "the things which Aristion and John the Elder, disciples of the Lord, were saying." But Aristion is totally unknown to us as a disciple, and had he been one for any length of time (such as to make him a definitive witness to the tradition), it is hard to imagine what circumstances could have kept him out of the record. However, if the Greek of Papias originally read ... ho presbuteros Ioannēs <ou> tou kuriou mathētēs, "... John the Elder <not> the disciple of the Lord," then we suggest that the whole context in Papias makes much more adequate sense. (Cf. in this connection John 14:22, Ioudas ouch ho Iskariōtēs, "Judas [not Iscariot].") The incidence of two ou endings in the two words preceding mathētai in our present text would more than account for the omission of ou (a third one), and once that omission had been made it would be necessary to make mathētēs a plural. If it is being said that John and Aristion were disciples of the Lord, it is odd (to say the least) that the unknown Aristion takes precedence over the apostle.

It is worth noting here that Pirqê Abôth has a chain of transmission of the Law similar to that outlined by Papias. Pirqê Abôth assumes that Josh 24:31 and Judg 2:7, in speaking of the elders who outlived Joshua and carried on the Mosaic tradition, are, so to speak, the third link in the chain Moses-Joshua-the elders. Pirqê Abôth describes the chain as Moses-Joshua-the elders-the prophets-the men of the Great Synagogue. Similarly, we appear to have in Papias, Jesus-the disciples-the elders.

John the Presbyter (or the Elder) is introduced to us in the salutation as author of II and III John, and it may well be that it was he of whom Papias speaks. For a discussion of this John, cf. Brown, John, i–xii, pp. LXXXVIII ff., and especially p. XCI.

APPENDIX B

The Gospel of John and Hermetic Literature

In 1953 Professor C. H. Dodd in his book, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge University Press, 1954), pp. 10–54, considered it possible that the gospel of John had been somewhat influenced by the Hermetic Corpus. This suggestion was carried further by Professor W. D. Davies in his Invitation to the New Testament (New York: Doubleday, 1966). At the time when Dodd wrote, he followed G. R. Driver's first view that the Dead Sea scrolls were very late and historically worthless, as he remarked in the Introduction to his book. He can scarcely be blamed for holding this view, since the late H. H. Rowley was then almost alone among British scholars in accepting their early date. (This was before Cecil Roth and Driver came to the conclusion that the Scrolls were actually much earlier—though they were still too late in their date, as subsequent discoveries have demonstrated.) Dodd later changed his opinion (briefly?) in private correspondence, but Davies followed his teacher in hesitating to connect the phraseology of John with the almost identical phraseology of the Qumran scrolls. (On this, see Brown, John, i–xii, pp. LVIII f.)

Two decades ago the Hermetic Corpus, even though extant almost entirely in late mediaeval and even later manuscripts, was believed to be early, and the earlier parts were dated by the leading recent authority, André Festugière, in the second-third centuries A.D., with a possibility that parts were even earlier. The vaguely similar atmosphere of some theological concepts of the Corpus Hermeticum and the gospel of John was exaggerated by both Dodd and Davies. Actually, the Hermetic writings were somewhat influenced by post-Johannine Gnostic writings, such as “The Apocryphon of John” (to be published by Martin Krause), which may have been composed as early as the late first or the early second century A.D.

Besides the mediaeval Corpus Hermeticum (André Festugière, La révélation d'Hermès Trismégiste, 4 vols., 1949–54; text edited by A. D. Nock and André Festugière, 1946 [Paris: Libraire Lecoffre, 1955]), there is a Latin treatise of similar character (the Asclepius) preserved among the alleged books of Apuleius (second century A.D.), but the attribution to him is not accepted by contemporary scholars. (On the Hermetic treatises from Chenoboskion, see the survey by Jean Doresse, Les livres secrets des Gnostiques de l'Égypte [Paris: Librairie Plon, 1958], pp. 256–63, 279–80, and The Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics, tr. by Philip Mairé [New York: Viking, 1960], pp. 241–48; London: Hollis & Carter, 1960.) (A definitive edition of the new Hermetic material is expected at any moment from the expert hand of Martin Krause.)

The mediaeval Corpus contains a prayer which was called Tabula Smaragdina, rendered traditionally “Emerald Table,” but properly (green) jasper plaque. A very early form of this prayer is found in Treatise 25 of Chenoboskion. The Coptic treatise, which is related in part to the Asclepius (see above), says that the text of the prayer is to be written on plaques of jasper, defended by eight guardians, four with heads of frogs and four with heads of cats. The reference to the eight animal-headed figures naturally refers to the Ogdoad of Thoth at Hermopolis Magna. Nothing is said about these animal-headed divinities from Egyptian mythology in later Hermetic literature. In our earliest Egyptian sources there were eight divinities which together formed the Ogdoad, divided into two groups of creatures with frogs’ heads and serpents’ heads. Many centuries later, in the Nineteenth Dynasty, they appear in Egyptian syncretism as four male and four female baboons (cf., for instance, the tomb of Sethos I at Thebes). Apparently the cats’ heads were a misunderstanding of the “dog-heads,” Egyptian baboons (Papio cynocephalus). For the symbolism in question see the material collected by R. T. Rundle Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt (London: Thames, 1959), p. 55 and passim; New York: Grove, 1960. It is perfectly clear that the description of the jasper plaque in the Chenoboskion papyri is itself very late, probably fourth century A.D., when there was no longer an accurate memory of the details of Egyptian mythological iconography. Furthermore, there are too many references in the Hermetic treatises from Chenoboskion to permit any doubt that in the Ogdoad and Ennead there are authentic survivals from Egyptian mythology (confused with the astrological Hebdomad), but that little precise information was available when the Hermetic treatises of Chenoboskion were composed. Since the documents are written on papyrus in fourth-century A.D. book hand, they must have been copied in that century. The surprising lack of exact information about Egyptian religion makes it highly unlikely that their composition was any earlier than that same fourth century A.D. But the treatises of the Corpus Hermeticum do not mention these Egyptian mythological representations at all, and they also contain even less reference to pagan Egyptian ideas as well as to Gnostic speculations than we find in the new papyrus codices. In fact, the mediaeval Corpus Hermeticum is permeated with Neoplatonic and specifically Christian ideas (especially post-Johannine). It follows that there is no longer any solid basis for dating any of the previously known Corpus Hermeticum as early as the second or third century A.D., at least in its preserved form. This fits in extremely well with the fact, known to later Greek compilers of bibliographic data, that among the leading writers on alchemy (to which the Corpus Hermeticum was increasingly devoted) were such figures as Synesius and Zosimus. There has been a general tendency in recent decades to distinguish the “alchemists” Synesius and Zosimus from the well-known polymath, bishop of Cyrene and pupil of Hypatia, and the eminent historian (the first half of the fifth century for Zosimus, and 360[?]-414 for Synesius).

When we bear in mind that Bishop Synesius was himself a Neoplatonist who emphasized the unity of nature like the alchemists and wrote treatises on oneiromancy, astronomy, etc., it should become rather evident that the partly demythologized and neo-platonized Corpus Hermeticum has a later background than the pseudo-Egyptian gnosticizing hermeticism of the new codices.

As for Zosimus, “the Theban,” there is no good reason why he cannot be identified with the Egyptian-born historian who was so well informed about the wars of Emperor Aurelian with Palmyra. Zosimus finished his “Decline of Rome” after A.D. 425; the later treatises on the letters Omega, Kappa and Iota are often attributed to a “Pseudo-Zosimus,” or “Zosimus Alchemista.” They show an extraordinary mixture of pagan, Jewish and Gnostic names and myths (cf. Doresse, Secret Books of Egyptian Gnostics, pp. 99–101, 278, Eng. ed.). It must again be emphasized that there is no good reason to distinguish him from the historian—after all, the greatest scientific genius of modern times, Sir Isaac Newton, hoped to end his career by salvaging as much alchemy as possible. Our attestation of the earliest compositions in the mediaeval Corpus is really no earlier than the fifth century A.D., and the less said about dependence of the gospel of John upon them, the better.

In short, we may safely dismiss modern “critical” scholarly judgments about the figures in question and may date the development of the later Corpus Hermeticum well after the fourth century A.D., when the codices of Chenoboskion were copied. It then becomes impossible to explain anything in John’s gospel as derived from the Corpus Hermeticum.

SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY

This bibliography represents an attempt to provide suitable material for general readers and does not claim to be exhaustive.

In the course of the last thirty years attention has been paid to Luke-Acts and to John, with continuing work on Mark, to the almost total neglect of Matthew. The search to discover some kind of Sitz im Leben for Luke-Acts has been relentlessly pursued, and all kinds of suggestions, probable and improbable, have been made on the basis of the Lukan material. Some of this has been valuable, but none of it has so far faced the outstanding (and in some ways fundamental) question: Why were gospels written at all? To answer it by pointing to an expected early parousia (a coming of Jesus in glory, in contrast to the humility of the ministry) does not meet the case at all. For if the early Christian community was anxiously awaiting a return of Jesus to this earth, and this time in recognizable glory and at a very early date, then it is hard to see what motives can have led evangelists to commit the record of the ministry to writing. Similarly, suggestions that the character of our gospel material was dictated by the demands of a lectionary (of a type still unknown outside the gospels) goes far beyond what evidence we have. The primary purpose of narration in the gospels was theological. That is to say, our gospels were compiled around accepted oral tradition concerning the advent of Israel's expected Messiah. The variety of messianic expectation in the time of Jesus, and in the century immediately preceding his ministry, provided enough reason to make the record as accurate as possible in the face of possible misrepresentation and even manipulation. That this latter danger was only too real can be readily seen in later gnosticizing works and in the apocryphal gospels.

I. THE BACKGROUND OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

- Albright, W. F. "Retrospect and Prospect in New Testament Archaeology," in The Teacher's Yoke (memorial volume for Henry Trantham). Baylor University Press, 1964. This is a useful supplement to the same author's The Archaeology of Palestine, Harmondsworth: Penguin Books, 1949, and From the Stone Age to Christianity: Monotheism and the Historical Process, Johns Hopkins Press, 1940, 2d ed., 1957; Anchor Books, 1957; Oxford University Press, 1958.
- Anderson, Hugh. Jesus and Christian Origins. Oxford University Press, 1964. This is an invaluable commentary on, and examination of, modern critical inquiry into the NT sources and the history which may be discovered behind them. The author is quite free of that inhibiting despair which finds itself incapable of discovering historical fact behind the proclamation of the early church.
- Black, Matthew. An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts. Oxford University Press, 1954, 3d ed., 1967. It has often been observed that this author tends to overstate his case. Since the time of its publication, it has served as a valuable corrective of those who see Hellenizing or Hellenistic sources behind practically everything in the early books of the New Testament.
- Daube, David. The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, The Jordan Lectures, 1952. London: Athlone Press, 1956. This book, now unhappily out of print, is of great importance for the serious student of the New Testament. It is a gold mine of information, and the author's training in Roman law serves him well in interpreting and evaluating contemporary Jewish sources. The work was produced and the lectures given before the study of the Dead Sea scrolls had achieved the paramount importance which it now has.
- Davies, W. D. "Reflexions on Tradition: The Aboth Revisited," in Christian History and Interpretation: Studies Presented to John Knox, eds. W. R. Farmer, C. F. D. Moule, and Reinhold Niebuhr. Cambridge University Press, 1967. We have had occasion in the commentary to refer frequently to the Pirqê Abôth, and Davies' essay is a most useful introduction.
- Finegan, Jack. The Archaeology of the New Testament. Princeton University Press, 1970. This is the first modern attempt to deal comprehensively with the many recent findings in the field. It is characterized by a respect for the traditions preserved by ecclesiastical writers. Although the writer devotes most of his space to sites connected with the ministry of Jesus, there is a good discussion of the traditions surrounding John the Baptist and his possible connection with the Essenes.

——— Handbook of Biblical Chronology. Princeton University Press, 1964. Reference is made to this work in various places in the Introduction and commentary, and it is an invaluable tool in the hands of the student. It is certainly the finest work of its kind in English.

Finkel, Asher. The Pharisees and the Teacher of Nazareth. Leiden: Brill, 1964. This work has the merit of treating Jewish oral tradition seriously, and of setting Jesus against the background of his own time.

Fitzmyer, Joseph A. Essays on the Semitic Background of the New Testament. London: Geoffrey Chapman, 1971. This collection of previously published essays by one of the world's leading Aramaic scholars is not directed primarily at the general reader. However, such a reader will undoubtedly profit greatly from a study of this work.

Josephus, Flavius. Jewish Antiquities, Loeb Classical Library.

——— The Jewish War, Loeb Classical Library.

——— The Jewish War, tr. by G. A. Williamson. Harmondsworth and Baltimore: Penguin Books, 1959. These two works are of fundamental importance for our understanding of the New Testament. The rehabilitation of Josephus as an historian is only one of the results of recent archaeological research. It should be noted that all our references to Josephus in this commentary are taken from the Loeb Classics edition of H. St. J. Thackeray, Ralph Marcus, Allen Wikgren, and L. H. Feldman.

MacMullen, Ramsey. Enemies of the Roman Order. Harvard University Press, 1967. This is an excellent account of intellectual unrest and disorder within the framework of the Roman imperial system. It is particularly valuable as a study of astrology and then-current popular "philosophy."

McNeile, A. H. An Introduction to the Study of the New Testament, 2d ed. rev. by C. S. C. Williams. Oxford University Press, 1953. This is the revision of a work published much earlier in this century, but still a valuable reference source.

Neill, Stephen C. The Interpretation of the New Testament, 1861–1961. Oxford University Press, 1964. This is invaluable for the reader who wishes to know the way in which NT scholarship has developed in the century under review.

II. THE NEW TESTAMENT SOURCES

- Knox, W. L. The Sources of the Synoptic Gospels, ed. H. Chadwick. 2 vols. Cambridge University Press, 1953, 1957. Knox will be remembered by all NT scholars for his painstaking work on the early Church as seen in Acts and the Pauline letters. It is no disparagement of the author's great learning to indicate here that recent archaeological research, together with continuing work on the material from Qumran and elsewhere, has called many of his conclusions in question.
- Kümmel, W. G., ed. Introduction to the New Testament, 14th rev. ed. of Paul Feine and Johannes Behm, Einleitung in das Neue Testament (Heidelberg; Quelle & Meyer, 1965) tr. by A. J. Mattill, Jr. London: SCM / New York and Nashville: Abingdon, 1966. The great value of this book lies in the very full bibliography, and although the authors of this commentary would wish to dissent from many of the views in Kümmel's work, it is an outstanding work of source material for the student of the New Testament.
- Moule, C. F. D. The Birth of the New Testament, 2d ed. London: Adam & Charles Black, 1965. This book, for all its comparative brevity, is exemplary in its caution and in its treatment of historical evidence. It is marked by a precision on one hand, and a lack of guesswork on the other, which set it apart from a good deal of current NT writing.
- The Phenomenon of the New Testament. London: SCM, 1967. This short work will give the general reader an insight into what prompted the early Christians to give expression to their faith in the form which we now know as the New Testament.
- Sanders, E. P. The Tendencies of the Synoptic Tradition. Cambridge University Press, 1969. It is doubtful if what has come to be called "the Synoptic Problem" will ever be fully resolved. This work will be found especially useful to the student of the NT who wishes to be kept informed of some of the current debates on the question.
- Stendahl, Krister, ed. The Scrolls and the New Testament. New York: Harper, 1957; London: SCM, 1958. The quantity of literature on the Dead Sea scrolls proliferates at an almost alarming rate. It is a tribute to the authors of the articles in this volume that the work still stands as one of the best summaries available of the links between the Qumran scrolls and the New Testament.
- Streeter, B. H. The Four Gospels. London: Macmillan, 1924, rev. ed., 1930. In spite of the fact that much has been written since Streeter's book, it is fair to say that hardly any book on NT sources can be found which does not at some point refer to it. But cf.

Aland, Kurt, "The Significance of the Papyri for Progress in New Testament Research," in The Bible in Modern Scholarship, ed. James Philip Hyatt (New York and Nashville: Abingdon, 1965), pp. 337 ff.

Taylor, Vincent. The Formation of the Gospel Tradition. London: Macmillan, 1933. It is still possible, after all these years, to commend Taylor's book as being the most easily understood scholarly statement of the way in which our gospels may have achieved their present form.

It is necessary to indicate here that what has come to be called "the Synoptic Problem" is matter for almost endless debate among NT scholars. No attempt will be made here to guide the reader through what has become a veritable jungle of speculation. All that we can usefully do here is to refer the general reader to the indispensable

Synopsis of the First Three Gospels, 9th ed., eds. Albert Huck and Hans Lietzmann, in conjunction for the Eng. ed. with F. L. Cross. Oxford University Press, 1957. To this we add two books which tackle the problem from quite different angles:

Farmer, W. R. The Synoptic Problem. New York: Macmillan, 1964. de Solages, Bruno. A Greek Synopsis of the Gospels, translated from the French by J. Baissus. Leiden: Brill, 1959.

For readers with a knowledge of German and NT Greek, there are two indispensable works in dealing with the New Testament generally and (for our purposes) Matthew in particular. They are:

Kittel, Gerhard et al., eds. Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament (abbr. TWNT). Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–. Translated by Geoffrey W. Bromiley as Theological Dictionary of the New Testament. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1964–. For the serious student of the New Testament, Kittel's work is of capital importance. However, not infrequently the theological predilections (not to mention the confessional positions) of the individual contributors are allowed to color what should be an unbiased philological analysis. It is further regrettable that the progress of knowledge since 1933 has not been reflected by publishing supplementary studies bringing the contents up to date.

Strack, H. L., and P. Billerbeck. Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch (abbr. StB). Six volumes. Munich: Beck, 1922–61. It is necessary to exercise some caution in using rabbinic parallels to gospel material as presented in StB, since the reader must often discover for himself that the parallels quoted sometimes belong to Jewish sources long posterior to the New Testament.

III. ON MATTHEW'S GOSPEL

This bibliography has already called attention to the comparative dearth of recent work on Matthew. We list here only a few books specifically on this gospel.

Allen, W. H. The Gospel According to St. Matthew, International Critical Commentary. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark; New York: Scribner, 1907. Although this work is dated, the student of the New Testament comes back to it time and again, impressed with the author's erudition, caution, and (for his time) perspicacity as to NT sources and tradition. It remains the most valuable commentary on this gospel in English which we possess.

Butler, B. C. The Originality of St. Matthew: A Critique of the Two-Document Hypothesis. Cambridge University Press, 1951. The learned author has more than once been accused of special pleading. It must be said, however, that whatever its defects, the book does effectively challenge the common views as to the priority of Mark.

Kilpatrick, G. D. The Origins of the Gospel According to St. Matthew. Oxford University Press, 1946. We include this book because it represents an imaginative attempt, before the discovery of the Dead Sea scrolls, to give some account of the way in which this gospel might be thought to have taken shape.

Stendahl, Krister. The School of St. Matthew and Its Use of the Old Testament. Lund: Gleerup, 1954. It is doubtful whether this work has ever received the recognition which it rightly deserves. The author has not only put us in his debt with a very rich bibliography, but has also set Matthew firmly against the background of Jewish life and thought in the mid-first century A.D.

Since it is often asked where a good one-volume commentary on the whole Bible may be found, we suggest two:

Brown, Raymond E., Joseph A. Fitzmeyer, and Roland E. Murphy, The Jerome Biblical Commentary. Englewood Cliffs, N. J.: Prentice-Hall, 1968.

Lowther Clarke, W. K. One Volume [U. S., Concise] Bible Commentary. London: SPCK, 1952; New York: Macmillan, 1953. The first has taken full account of recent work on the Dead Sea scrolls; the second has the merit of being the work of one author throughout.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS WORKS ON PARTICULAR THEMES

It will be obvious that much of the content of our Introduction, Parts VI–VIII, is sympathetic to the views expressed by Günther Bornkamm in Überlieferung und Auslegung im Matthäusevangelium (Neukirchen, 1960), tr. by Peter Scott as Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, eds. Günther Bornkamm, Gerhard Barth, and H. J. Held. Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963; London: SCM, 1964.

Moore, A. L. The Parousia in the New Testament. Leiden: Brill, 1966. The whole theme of the “coming” of Jesus (parousia) is so interwoven throughout the New Testament that it is not possible to do justice to the books of the New Testament without treating it very seriously indeed. Moore’s work is one of the latest dealing with this subject. It has the merit of a very full bibliography. It will be plain from the commentary that the authors of this present work would dissent from many of Moore’s conclusions.

There is currently much interest in Jesus’ own understanding of himself and his ministry. Two recent studies are valuable here:

Brown, Raymond E., “How Much Did Jesus Know?” CBQ 29 (1967), 315–45, and in Jesus: God and Man. Milwaukee: Bruce, 1967.

Fuller, Reginald H., “The Clue to Jesus’ Self-Understanding,” in StEv, III, No. 2 \(1964\), pp. 58–67.

Material on the Kingdom in Matthew is almost without limit. We here call attention to a recent article to demonstrate that there is still room for a good deal of argument about Matthew’s understanding of the Kingdom:

Walker, William O., Jr., “The Kingdom of the Son of Man and the Kingdom of the Father in Matthew,” CBQ 30 (1968), 573–79.

Works on the miracle stories continue to proliferate. There is now available a massive study of the miracle narratives which examines the narratives from every angle, including the medical and the psychological. Among these is van der Loos, H. The Miracles of Jesus. Leiden: Brill, 1968.

No bibliography would be complete without referring to two works of Joachim Jeremias which have bearing on this gospel:

The Parables of Jesus, tr. by S. H. Hooke from the German 6th ed. of Die Gleichnisse Jesu, Göttingen, 1962. New York: Scribner / London: SCM, 1963.

The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, tr. by Norman Perrin from the German 3d ed. rev. of Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu, Göttingen, 1964. New York: Scribner / London: SCM, 1965.

Nothing illustrates better the contrast between the skepticism of some scholars and the objectivity of others than the current debate about the term “Son of Man.” For example:

Tödt, H. E. Der Menschensohn in der synoptischen Überlieferung, 2d ed. (Gütersloh, 1963), tr. by D. M. Barton as The Son of Man in the Synoptic Tradition. London: SCM / Philadelphia: Westminster, 1965. This work is characterized by an almost complete skepticism as to the genuineness of sayings of Jesus about the “Son of Man.” With it, compare:

Jeremias, Joachim, “Die älteste Schicht der Menschensohn-Logien,” ZNW 58 \(1967\), 159–72.

Maddox, Robert. “The Function of the Son of Man according to the Synoptic Gospels,” NTS 15 \(1968\), 65–69. This is a refreshing contrast to much study on this topic, in that the author is prepared to see the title as being functional, and is therefore quite open to the suggestion that Jesus himself could well have used the term in a variety of ways, all of which are reflected in our sources.

Fitzmyer, J., The “Genesis Apocryphon” of Qumran Cave I. Rome, Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1966. Our indebtedness to this work, by an outstanding scholar in the field of Qumran Studies, will be plain both in the Introduction and in the course of the commentary.

The following may be unreservedly commended to the general reader:

Avi-Yonah, Michael. Illustrated World of the Bible Library, Vol. V, The New Testament. New York: McGraw-Hill, 1961.

——— and Emil Kraeling. Our Living Bible. London: Olbourne Press, New York: McGraw-Hill, 1962.

Considering the volume of recent publication in German, or in translation from the German, some surprise may be expressed that so little of it is mentioned here or in the body of the commentary. The fact is that during the past fifty years a steadily increasing proportion of German NT scholarship has been devoted to “existentialist” and related types of exegesis, which almost wholly disregard the canons of historical judgment accepted as a matter of course in other historical fields.

A most useful summary of source material for the study of Matthew will be found in Martin, Ralph P., “St. Matthew’s Gospel in Recent Study,” ET 80 \(1969\), 132–35.

There are references to other books and articles throughout the commentary. It is hoped that what has been provided will stimulate the interested reader of the New Testament to make his own way through the bibliographies provided in the works we have mentioned.

V. GREEK TEXTS

Three principal Greek texts were employed in the preparation of the commentary:

The Greek New Testament: Being the Text Translated in the New English Bible, 1961, ed. by R. V. G. Tasker. London and New York: Oxford and Cambridge University Presses, 1964.

The Greek New Testament: (Edition of the American Bible Society) ed. by Kurt Aland, Matthew Black, Bruce M. Metzger, and Allen Wikgren. New York, 1965.

Novum Testamentum graece, ed. Alexander Souter, 2d ed. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1947.

MATTHEW

1. THE GENEALOGY OF JESUS

(1:1–17)[†]

1 ¹ The list of the ancestry of Jesus-Messiah, son of David, son of Abraham.

² Abraham was the father of Isaac, Isaac of Jacob, and Jacob was father of Judah and his brothers. ³ Judah was the father of Perez and Zerah (by Tamar) and Perez fathered Hezron, who was the father of Ram. ⁴ Ram was father of Amminadab, Amminadab of Nahshon, while Nahshon was father of Salmon. ⁵ Salmon fathered Boaz (by Rahab), Boaz was father of Obed (by Ruth), Obed was the father of Jesse, who was the father of King David.

⁶ David was father of Solomon, by the wife of Uriah, ⁷ and Solomon fathered Rehoboam. Rehoboam was the father of Abijah, who was father of Asa. ⁸ Asa was the father of Jehoshaphat, Jehoshaphat of Joram, Joram being father of Uzziah. ⁹ Uzziah was the father of Jotham, Jotham of Ahaz, and Ahaz was the father of Hezekiah. ¹⁰ Hezekiah was father of Manasseh, Manasseh fathered Amon, who was the father of Josiah. ¹¹ Josiah was the father of Jechoniah and his brothers, at the time of the deportation to Babylon.

¹² After the deportation to Babylon, Jechoniah fathered Shealtiel, who was father of Zerubbabel. ¹³ Zerubbabel was the father of Abiud, who was father of Eliakim, and Eliakim was the father of Azor. ¹⁴ Azor fathered Zadok, who was the father of Achim, who in turn was father of Eliud; ¹⁵ Eliud was the father of Eleazar, Eleazar of Matthan, and Matthan of Jacob. ¹⁶ Jacob was the father of Joseph, husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus who is called Messiah, ¹⁷ So there were in all fourteen generations from Abraham to David, fourteen from David to the Babylonian Exile, and fourteen from the Babylonian Exile to the Messiah.

NOTES

1:1 (Mark 1:1).

1:1. The Greek words biblos geneseōs can carry a number of possible translations, and our own “genealogy” is but one. As it stands, it occurs in LXX at Gen 2:4, 5:1, while geneseis is frequently employed to denote “descendants” in Genesis. But for the first readers of Matthew, it called attention also to the birth (genesis) not only of Jesus, but of the whole new order to which that birth gave rise.

Jesus. The word is the Greek rendering of a well-known Hebrew name. It was Yahōshû first, then by inner Hebrew phonetic change it became Yōshûa, and by a still later northern dialectal shift, Yeshûa. The first element, Yāhū (=Yahweh) means “the Lord,” while the second comes from shûa ‘ “To help, save.” The most probable meaning is “O Lord, save.”

Messiah. By the time of the later Pauline letters, the Gr Christos (=The Anointed One) was on the way to becoming a proper name instead of a title; it meant little, as a title, to those without a Jewish background. We have consistently translated the word as “Messiah.” In this instance we have hyphenated the phrase as Jesus-Messiah. In this period the Aram mešīhā could equally well mean “a Messiah” or “the Messiah,” since the affixed definite article ā came to be used for both definite and indefinite nouns. See Fitzmyer, The “Genesis Apocryphon” of Qumran Cave 1, p. 200, concerning the varying usage of the Aramaic article just before the time of Christ.

son of David. G. Dalman, The Words of Jesus (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1930), pp. 319 ff., may also be consulted on this. It was suggested by Yehezkel Kaufmann (“The Messianic Idea: The Real and the Hidden Son of David,” El Ha’ayin 5 [1961]), that after the Babylonian Exile the tradition grew that messiahs were sons-of-David “not because they were descended from David, but were sons-of-David because they were messiahs.” The same author goes on to suggest that the revelation of a messiah would carry with it a revelation also of lost genealogical information. But Kaufmann’s view was developed before the Dead Sea scrolls were adequately assimilated by scholars, and in the light of the Qumran material his view must be regarded as merely speculative. There would, moreover, be many families of Davidic descent in first-century Judea wholly unaware of their lineage, though others would have clung tenaciously to the tradition.

son of Abraham. Apart from the emphasis given in the Testament of Levi 8 to the descent of the Messiah from Abraham, the appellation has further significance. For all the stress in Matthew on the mission of Jesus to Israel, it was through Abraham that all the families of the earth were to be blessed (Gen 12:3), an idea which finds expression in 28:19. It was developed extensively by Paul (Rom 4–11; Gal 3–4) in defending the status of Gentile Christians as fellow heirs of God’s promises.

The genealogy makes use of the OT insofar as that served:

vs. 2 = 1 Chron 1:34; 2:1

vs. 3 = 1 Chron 2:4, 5, 9

vss. 4–6 = 1 Chron 2:10–13, 3:5, 10–15

vs. 12 = (i.e., down to Zerubbabel) 1 Chron 3:17–19

vss. 13–16 contain names otherwise not known to us in Scripture, but they are names well enough known from Jewish sources of the Hellenistic period, including an increasing number of Aramaic documents. The names are intermediate in character, and in part resemble names in the Edfu papyri (third century B.C.), the names of the translators of the LXX in the Letter of Aristeas, Josephus, Aramaic papyri, and ossuary inscriptions of the first century A.D.

Whatever may have been the original language of Matthew as it was first committed to writing, quotations from the OT in the Greek of the LXX occur. It would seem, however, on the basis of fragments (still mostly unpublished) from the Dead Sea, that what we mainly have in biblical quotations in Matthew is an old Palestinian recension related to the Lucianic text (cf. F. M. Cross, Jr., The Ancient Library of Qumran [New York: Doubleday, 1958], pp. 124 ff.).

1. 2–6 (Luke 3:31–34).

2. Jacob. The Hebrew of 1 Chron 1:34 has Israel.

3. The mention of Zerah (in its LXX form of Zara) and Tamar, names which have no function in the genealogy, suggests that the author, or an editor, had the LXX in front of him. LXX forms are used for Hezron (Hesrōm) and Ram (Haram, 1 Chron 2:9).

4. LXX forms (Naassōn and Aminadab from 1 Chron 2:10–11) are used for Nahshon and Amminadab.

5. Rahab is given as Rachab by Matthew, which is not an LXX form, but which does occur in Josephus (Antiquities, V. 8, 11, 15) as hē Rachabē or Raabē, indicating the change of pronunciation which was beginning in the time of Josephus. LXX forms are used, however, for Obed and Jesse (Iobēd and Iessai).

6–7. LXX forms occur here for Solomon (Solomōn), Uriah (Ouriou), and Rehoboam (Roboam).

8–9. Joram being father of Uzziah.... It is sometimes said by commentators that Matthew omits three kings (Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah) for the purpose of tidying up his pattern of three “fourteens.” This is not so, however. The evangelist here follows the LXX I Chronicles, which declares (3:11) that Joram was the father of Uzziah. Matthew continues, Uzziah was the father of Jotham, and the LXX has Joash his son, Amaziah his son, Azariah his son, Jotham his son. As a result, Matthew has omitted not Ahaziah (=LXX Ozeias), but Joash, Amaziah, and Azariah (=Uzziah). The reason for this can be found in the LXX, 1 Chron 3:11, where the son of Joram is called Ozeia. Generally, the LXX has Ochozeias (in Hebrew, Ahaziah), and Ozeia=Uzziah (cf. 2 Chron 26:3 ff.). If, therefore, Ozeia in 1 Chron 3:11 is a mistake, it would be natural enough in copying the text to assume that Ozeia=Uzziah and so pass on to Uzziah’s son Jotham, thus omitting three intervening kings by a familiar scribal error known as homoiooteleuton. It is more than likely that this present genealogy in Greek, with its notes on “fourteen generations,” belongs to an editor assimilating Matthew’s list to the LXX record.

11. and his brothers seems to have been recorded here in line with the list of Jehoiakim’s brothers in 1 Chron 3:15. As it stands, however, the verse is clearly impossible, because Jehoiakim (1 Chron 3:15) has been omitted, and it means that in the third division there are but thirteen names, beginning with Shealtiel. It can only be presumed that Jechoniah (1 Chron 3:16) is here an alternative for king Jehoiakim, and—as we have suggested—and his brothers is due to assimilation from 1 Chron 3:15, where the names of Jehoiakim’s brothers are given.

12. =1 Chron 3:17.

How dependent the present form of the genealogy is on the LXX can be demonstrated here. The Hebrew text has Zerubbabel as the son of Pedaiah (1 Chron 3:19), whereas the LXX has him as son of Shealtiel. Zerubbabel has apparently been confused with his cousin.

13–15. For the names included in this section, the author was dependent on sources which we do not possess. See NOTE on vs. 1. We have ten names covering over five hundred years, so it is only a fragmentary report. There must have been roughly twice as many names. The names themselves have probably been transmitted correctly; the first six names for the early post-Exilic period are names otherwise attested for that time, and the last four names are characteristic names of the last two centuries B.C. Since there is no trace of the usual papponymy (naming of a son after his grandfather), it follows that some such names may have been dropped from the list in oral transmission. The name Azor belongs to a common type of shortened form (hypocoristicon) of a name like Eleazar or Azariah. Achim is still obscure.

16–17. The genealogy comes to its climax with the birth of Jesus. Modern attempts to find deliberate traces of numerology in the compilation of this ancestry list, in addition to those of the editor in vs. 17, are often ingenious and frequently interesting. They are not, however, susceptible of proof, even when one goes so far as to point to the consonantal value of David’s name in Hebrew being fourteen as supporting evidence. Pleas for “six weeks of generations” and the like belong to what has been called the “desk mind” rather than to verifiable historical research. Equally unconvincing is the suggestion that the genealogy can be viewed as reaching one climax in David, declining to the Babylonian Exile, and then climbing to its highest ascent in Jesus the Messiah.

COMMENT

In the first section Matthew's purpose is to demonstrate who Jesus is: the Messiah, God's anointed representative, the expected King. He is also son of David, of the royal house of Judah by descent. Finally, he is son of Abraham, through whom God had promised that he would bless all the families of the earth (Gen 12:3). Beginning with vs. 18 (our §2), Matthew goes on to declare that Jesus was miraculously conceived in the womb of Mary through the agency of the Holy Spirit.

We have no good reason to doubt that this genealogy was transmitted in good faith. There are certainly considerable gaps in its scheme, and there are names which are not known to us from the OT record (vss. 13–15). But the genealogy begins with Abraham, the father of the Jewish people, and the evangelist uses the OT material insofar as this assists his tradition. The inclusion of four women, however, at least three of whom were considered to be Gentiles, and who might otherwise be excluded from such a genealogy (Tamar, Rahab, Ruth, and Uriah's wife), indicates that what we have is no mere conventional genealogy, but one which a Jewish Christian would only have used because tradition compelled him to do so. Such inclusions may also indicate that the evangelist's tradition saw these women (in their capacity as instruments of God's providence) as forerunners of Mary.

What we read in this genealogy is what the evangelist's tradition told him about Jesus, a tradition seen in the light of Israel's history. What precise historical basis there was for this genealogy is not open to our inspection; but it would be rash to dismiss lightly genealogies of the probable period in which Matthew's gospel was written.

Any extensive treatment of the genealogy in Luke's gospel (Luke 3:23–38) belongs to a commentary on that gospel, but some attention must be paid to it here. Both Matthew and Luke claim Davidic descent for Jesus through Joseph, while both at the same time affirm that the conception and birth of Jesus were virginal and miraculous. Equally, both claim that this Jesus is to be equated with a pre-existent "Son of Man" and also with the child born at Bethlehem. There are divergencies, however. Matthew (1:6) derives the Davidic ancestry through Solomon the king, son of David, while Luke's genealogy traces the ancestry through Nathan—also son of David. The two genealogies coincide again with Shealtiel and Zerubbabel (Matt 1:12, 13; cf. Luke 3:27, 28). Luke also has more names from the period of the Exile onwards, and so provides a more probable number of generations than does Matthew's genealogy for this period of time. The OT material in Luke from Terah onwards (Luke 3:35–38) is not used by Matthew.

What is being established in both genealogies is a claim to legitimate Davidic ancestry, even though later Jesus himself is represented as dismissing the Davidic ancestry as of little moment (cf. Matt 22:41–46 in COMMENT on our §81). That there is formal inconsistency here is not to be doubted: both evangelists claiming Davidic descent through Joseph, while at the same time giving us a tradition of virginal conception and birth. To make charges of dishonesty or to impugn the motives of the writers is—at this remove of time—perilous. Allowing for the very tenacious traditions with respect to ancestry among Jews at the time of Jesus, we are certainly entitled to say that both evangelists were faithfully recording the traditions which they had received, whatever the inconsistencies.

2. THE BIRTH OF JESUS

(1:18–25)[†]

1 ¹⁸The birth of Jesus-Messiah happened like this: When his mother Mary had been betrothed to Joseph, and before they came together, she was found to be pregnant by the Holy Spirit. ¹⁹ Joseph her husband, being a man of character, and unwilling to shame her, wished to divorce her secretly. ²⁰ But as he agonized about this, a divine messenger appeared to him in a dream, and said: “Joseph, son of David, do not be afraid to take Mary as your wife, for what is conceived in her is through the Holy Spirit ²¹ She will bear a son, and you shall call his name Jesus, because he will save his people from their sins.”²² All this happened so as to fulfill what the Lord had said through the prophet:

²³ See, the virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel (which means, God is with us). ²⁴ When Joseph had awakened from sleep he did the messenger’s bidding and took his wife. ²⁵ However, he had no marital relations with her until she had borne a son. He named him Jesus.

NOTES

1:18. Some late manuscripts and patristic sources omit Jesus before the Messiah. All early manuscripts and church fathers keep it.

betrothed to Joseph. In the Law (Deut 22:13 ff.) betrothal was a far more binding step than is our custom of engagement before marriage, and the penalty for fornication with one person while betrothed to another was death for both guilty parties. Cf. vs. 19, where Joseph is described as her husband, and vs. 20, where the Greek can be translated “Do not be afraid to take Mary your wife”—i.e., into your home.

(the) Holy Spirit (cf. also vs. 20). In Aramaic at this time there was no differentiation between the definite and the indefinite article. The absence of the definite article in Greek at this point is therefore not significant. The Spirit as the agent of God’s creative act is the explanation which Matthew gives here of Mary’s pregnancy (cf. Gen 1:2; Psalm 104:30), and which Joseph understands in his dream (vs. 20).

19. Joseph’s dedication to the Law is indicated in his description as dikaïos. Contemporary usage in Josephus shows that the Greek means “one obedient to the commands of God, an upright man, a man of character.” He decides to divorce Mary secretly—i.e., in the presence of chosen witnesses, without public scandal. Deigmatizai (to shame, or disgrace) occurs in the NT only here and at Col 2:15.

20. Only direct revelation, here in a dream, will indicate what is hidden in the purpose of God. Cf. 11:27, 16:7. For further examples of acts of revelation through dreams in Matthew, cf. 2:12, 13, 19, 22, 27:19.

divine messenger. Unless there is plain and inescapable evidence of a visitation by a heavenly being, an “angel,” we have translated the Gr. angelos by “messenger,” which is of course the actual meaning of the Greek. It is worth bearing in mind that in the majority of the cases in which “angels” have appeared to men in the Bible, they have been assumed by the beholders to be human beings.

do not be afraid.... According to Jewish law, the betrothal and the taking of the bride to the bridegroom’s house were the two parts, the beginning and the ending, of the legal process of marriage.

the Holy Spirit. See NOTE on vs. 18.

Jesus, ... from their sins. See NOTE on vs. 1.

22.... so as to fulfill. This is the first instance of Matthew’s fulfillment formula, hina plērōthē. On its importance, see Part IV of the Introduction. The formula, in varying words, occurs nine times in Matthew: 2:15, 17, 23, 4:14, 8:17, 12:17, 13:35, 21:4 (cf. 26:56), 27:9.

23. the virgin. The quotation is from Isa 7:14 and is given in the Greek of the LXX, with the substitution of they shall call for you (singular) shall call. The Greek is (uniquely) parthenos, “virgin,” for the Hebrew ‘almah, “girl.” It is possible on some views that Isaiah was using mythological terms current in his own time to demonstrate an expected deliverer’s birth. The LXX translators would appear to have so understood the passage, and only later did Greek translations of the Hebrew appear with the word one would expect, neanis, “young maiden” instead of parthenos.

Emmanuel ... God is with us. The sense is of God’s active vindication of his people (cf. Ps 46:7, 11). The theme of “recapitulation” in Matthew (see Part IV of the Introduction) finds its proper commentary on this verse at Matt 28:20.

24. awakened from sleep (Gk. egertheis, literally “raised up”). On this word, as a Semitic usage, see Dalman, Words, pp. 23, 36.

25. However, he had no marital relations with her. The Greek imperfect eginōsken (literally “did not know her”) would appear to militate against the tradition of Mary’s perpetual virginity. The verse is commonly cited by Protestants to indicate that Mary had other children, by Joseph. It has been common tradition in both Eastern and Western Christendom since at least the fourth century that Mary was virgin both before and after the birth of Jesus.

One factor is worth mentioning here. One of the men named as a brother of Jesus (Matt 13:56) is called Joseph. While it was certainly not unknown for sons to be named after their fathers, it was at the same time uncommon. There may thus be some grounds for the view that those described as “brothers and sisters” of Jesus were near relatives (cousins, according to Jerome) and not the children of Joseph and Mary.

COMMENT

The author, from his genealogy linking Abraham and David with the Messiah, has led his readers to expect an unusual birth narrative, and this he proceeds to give. The evangelist's tradition had two elements in it: (a) Jesus was the Messiah, and so he was son of David; (b) Jesus was conceived and born in a wholly miraculous manner, being conceived and born of a virgin without human intervention. Matthew gives expression to the facts as he found them in his tradition, and makes no attempt to reconcile them.

The first part, (a), has been briefly examined already. The second is not open to historical investigation, and we are not called upon to enter realms of faith or theology in a commentary of this nature. Some comment is, however, inescapable.

(a) All through the genealogy, egennēsen denotes legal inheritance and descent, not physical. The evangelist could only deal with his material by assuming that Mary's husband was the legal father of Jesus.

(b) The tradition of the virgin birth was known to Luke, and also—on one legitimate reading of the Greek—to John (John 1:13). It was well known as a polemical battleground in the time of Origen, ca. A.D. 185?–?254 (Contra Celsum ii 28, 32, 33, 39), and was also so known to Justin Martyr (106?–?165). Ignatius of Antioch (ca. 112) took the tradition for granted, as did Aristides, (ca. 140). Rendel Harris, in his edition of the Apology of Aristides, remarks that "... at that period the virginity of Mary was a part of formulated Christian belief." Additional evidence is also to be found in the Didache but there is considerable dispute as to the date and importance of this document; we ourselves can only say that we are convinced the work is almost certainly to be dated in the second half of the first century.

(c) The genealogy is certainly no proof that there is an attempt being made by the evangelist to exalt to quasi-divine status the naturally born son of Joseph and Mary. There is not the slightest indication that the genealogy was ever a separate document apart from the gospel; indeed, that genealogy paves the way for vss. 18–25 by informing us that Mary was betrothed to the Joseph of vs. 16.

(d) A Jewish Christian such as Matthew could only deal faithfully with his traditions and set them down as he knew them. If this procedure tells us nothing of the validity of the traditions, it at least tells us something significant about the honesty of an evangelist dealing with what he knew would cause speculation and scandal.

(e) The description of Jesus as "Son of Mary" in Mark 6:3 is possible evidence for a custom known to rabbinic sources of a man being named as "of his mother” when the father was unknown (cf. TB Yebamoth iv 13, which speaks of this custom as applied to “the natural son of a wedded wife”).

There is a good short discussion of the whole question of the place of the virgin birth in Christian tradition in Reginald H. Fuller’s “The Virgin Birth: Historical Fact or Kerygmatic Truth?” Biblical Research 1 (1957), 1–8. The reader is warned, however, that the literature on the subject is legion and covers every possible angle. The search on the part of some NT scholars for real or supposed Hellenistic parallels to the tradition of a supernatural birth can be set alongside the sobriety of David Daube’s investigation of a similar Jewish legend about Moses (cf. his New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, pp. 5 ff.).

3. THE VISIT OF THE MAGI (2:1–12)

2 ¹ When Jesus was born at Bethlehem of Judah in the time of King Herod, magi came from the east to Jerusalem. ² “Where,” they asked, “is the one who has been born as king of the Jews? For we have seen his star at its rising and we have come to pay him homage.”

³ When King Herod heard this he was disturbed, and the whole of Jerusalem with him. ⁴ Having assembled all the chief priests and the scribes of the people, he asked them, “Where is the Messiah to be born?” ⁵ They replied to him, “In Bethlehem of Judah. For it is so written by the prophet:

⁶ ‘And you, Bethlehem, in the country of Judah, are by no means least among the rulers of Judah; for out of you shall come a ruler who will govern my people Israel.’ ”

⁷ Then Herod secretly summoned the magi and established from them the time of the appearing of the star. He sent them to Bethlehem with the words ⁸ “Go and search very carefully for the child. When you have found him, tell me, so that I too may come and pay him homage.” ⁹ Having listened to the king, they went on their way. The star which they had seen at its rising went before them until it came to rest over the place where the little child was. ¹⁰ Seeing this star, they were joyful with great gladness. ¹¹ On coming into the house they saw the little child with Mary his mother, and prostrating themselves they paid him homage. They opened their treasures and presented gifts to him—gold, incense, and myrrh. ¹² Having been warned in a dream not to return to Herod, they left for their own country by another way.

NOTES

2:1. When Jesus was born at Bethlehem. The actual birth of Jesus is dealt with in this gospel by a simple Greek construction of two words, the genitive absolute, a participial phrase. Bethlehem is designated of Judah because there was another Bethlehem in Zebulun. Luke's account (Luke 2:1–7) tells how Jesus came to be born in Bethlehem, though subsequently brought up in Nazareth.

in the time of King Herod. Herod reigned from 37–4 B.C. Perhaps the best book on Herod for the general reader is Stewart Perowne's The Life and Times of Herod the Great, London: Hodder, 1956.

magi. The RSV perpetuates the unhappy translation of “wise men,” where the NEB has “astrologers.” We have consistently referred to the visitors as “magi,” as being less liable to misunderstanding. It is nowhere said that the magi were three in number, still less that they were kings, and certainly there is no indication that they were Gentiles.

2. To state, as do some commentators, that Jews would not have used the phrase “king of the Jews” is to be ignorant of first-century usage. The phrase was certainly used by the orthodox King Aristobulus I (104–103 B.C.), and in any case “Hebrews” and “Israel” were largely the pre-empted badges of Samaritans and Jewish sectarians respectively. (Cf. Abram Spiro, “Stephen's Samaritan Background,” Appendix V, in Johannes Munck, The Acts of the Apostles, AB, vol. 31.)

at its rising. Only with difficulty can the Greek mean “in the east”; and it is unlikely that the magi would have said “in the east” rather than something like “in our own land.” What we appear to have is a technical expression referring to the beginning of the phenomenon observed by the magi. There is no possessive pronoun (“its”) in the Greek, presumably because a copyist at some stage misunderstood the word rising (Gr. anatolē), assumed the Greek to mean “east,” and so omitted its (Gr. autou) before rising. The Greek word refers in pre-Christian literature to the rising of the sun and other stars. All the information which has been thought to be relevant to celestial phenomena in the presumed time of the birth of Jesus is listed in Finegan, Handbook of Biblical Chronology, pp. 238 ff.

pay him homage. The word used here and again in vs. 11 (proskunēsai) is common in Matthew (thirteen times as against two in Mark and three in Luke). It is a useful indication of style, emphasis, and the homogeneity of a work.

3. disturbed (or “frightened”—cf. 14:26). The same word, with the same meaning of deep agitation, is found at 14:26 (there used of the disciples). In both instances the fear results from a lack of faith.

5. In Bethlehem. On the expectation of a ruler from Bethlehem, cf. John 7:41 ff.

it is so written (Gr. gegraptai) = “the inspired text runs,” a common device in the rabbinic literature.

6. The quotation, from Mic 5:1, 3, does not follow the LXX text, and is an independent rendering of the Hebrew. The final clause who will govern (literally, be shepherd of) appears to have been assimilated to the form of 2 Sam 5:2.

7. Then (Gr. tote) is a favorite word of Matthew. He uses it, in all, ninety times.

11. gold, incense, and myrrh. All manner of symbolic meanings have been attached to these offerings, under the influence of Isa 60:6 and Ps 72:10, 11, 15. Justin Martyr is the first commentator whom we know to have seen the connection between the passages. There is no such connection made in Matthew (but see COMMENT below). Myrrh was certainly suitable for a king, and was used at his anointing (cf. Ps 45:8). But the gifts were also part of the common stock-in-trade of magi, and magical charms were written with myrrh-ink (cf. K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graeci Magicae: Die griechischen Zauberpapyri, Vol. I [Leipzig and Berlin: B. A. Tuebner, 1928], pp. 8, 16, 22, etc.). Regarded as the tools of a trade, offerings of the magi would not be gifts of homage, but a declaration of dissociation from former practices.

12. they left (Gr. withdrew) is a frequent word in Matthew (ten times), and later in Christian literature provided the word anchorite, one who withdrew from the society of men to follow the contemplative life. The same word has an interesting secular history, being used in the Roman period to indicate a “flight to the suburbs” to avoid city taxation.

by another way. This same feature—departure by another route—also occurs in Dio Cassius' account of the visit to Nero by Tiridates (Roman History LXIII 7).

COMMENT

This account of the visit of the magi to Bethlehem has on the face of it all the elements of historical probability, and yet at the same time elements which appear to belong more plausibly to parable.

It is, for example, well known that not only among Jews was there expectation of a semidivine hero-ruler. “Messianic” hopes were expressed in Virgil’s famous fourth Eclogue, and the emperor Augustus was described in inscriptions at Halicarnassus and Priene as the salvation of a new race of men, and as bringing peace on sea and land. The magos Tiridates and some followers came to Naples, and the story of their reception by Nero, and the attendant religious ceremonies, is fascinating. (There are details in Dio Cassius Roman History LXIII 1, 7; Suetonius Life of Nero 13.) Tiridates was moved to address Nero as “god.”

Astrology and the prevalence of magi as a professional class are both very well attested in the contemporary literature. Those Stoics whose works we know were enthusiastic supporters of astrology. Astrology developed early in the Mediterranean, rose to a quasiscience in the Achaemenian period—the earliest Babylonian horoscopes so far known are fourth-century B.C., of the time of Alexander—and was transformed in Egypt into the astrology which we know today. The results of this systematizing are found all over the Middle East, in cuneiform tablets of the Seleucid and Parthian periods, in demotic papyri of the Roman era, and in Greek and Arabic astrological literature. Some astrological texts had a very long life, being preserved in Byzantine Zoroastrian material.

In spite of the frequent condemnation of astrology in the OT, in the intertestamental literature and in the rabbinic writings, Judaism was deeply affected by the phenomenon, as has been demonstrated by Cumont and Bidez.* Josephus (Jewish War V. 214) is authority for the statement that the veil of the temple was adorned with stars, and many excavated synagogues in Rome and in Palestine have been found to have the signs of the zodiac depicted in them. Aramaic fragments have been found in Cave IV at Qumran which contain remains of an astrological treatise closely related to a work which circulated in Byzantine times under the name of Zoroaster. The Aramaic fragments may be late first century B.C. or early first century A.D. (cf. David Pingree, Isis 54 (1963), for further information).

In the minds of the people at that time, it was inconceivable that the birth of an important personage should go unattended by a stellar harbinger, and such a star is reported to have greeted the birth of Mithridates (ca. 131–63 B.C.). A late Jewish legend ascribes such a star to the birth of Abraham. But for Judaism there was another consideration, and that was the prophetic oracle of Balaam (Num 24:17). The promise is that of a “star coming from Jacob”; not only would this oracle be well known, but in circles which studied the prophets to find interpretations of the contemporary scene (such as the Essenes) such an oracle could not in the nature of the case have been without fulfillment. A messiah’s advent must be hailed by a star. (The leader of the patriots in the second Jewish War, A.D. 130–135, Bar Kosba, changed his resistance name, which probably meant “son of a young ram,” to Bar Kokhba, “son of a star.” This is known from the recently published Murabba‘at letters.)

So much by way of background. The historicity of the narrative in ch. 2 as it stands is not quite so easily elucidated, and commentators have ranged from dismissing the episode as astrological myth on the one hand to attempting on the other to pinpoint the exact comet or planetary conjunction which first appeared in the assumed year of the birth of Jesus (ca. 9–4 B.C.).

It must be said that the absence of the Matthean clause “that it might be fulfilled” (hina plērōthē) in the narrative, either in connection with Num 24, or—even more strikingly—Isa 60 and Ps 72, has to be taken very seriously indeed in any evaluation of the narrative as historical. The absence of the formula would be notable enough if, pace some commentators, Matthew’s quotations were mere proof texts. If, as we have maintained, his quotations are to be seen in context, then the omission of the formula is striking as casting doubt on how far the evangelist regarded the account as historical.

Historically, there is nothing in the least improbable about magi traveling from Babylon west, or indeed anywhere else in the Mediterranean world. They would find welcome audiences anywhere, from royal courts to market places. Consultation of magi by kings and prominent persons is well attested. With “messianism” of one kind and another in the air almost everywhere—and Herod cannot possibly have been ignorant of the hopes being entertained at Qumran—then the news of magi coming to seek a king would guarantee Herod’s calling for them. Herod was constantly concerned with real or imagined usurpers.

It is possible to maintain that Matthew’s story was intended as polemic directed against astrology (cf. C. S. Mann, “Wise Men or Charlatans?” Theology 61 [1958], 443–47 and 495–500, and later “The Historicity of the Birth Narratives,” in History and Chronology in the New Testament, London: SPCK, 1965; also W. K. Lowther Clarke, Divine Humanity, London: SPCK / New York: Macmillan, 1936). This may have been the view of Ignatius of Antioch (Letter to Ephesus xix. 3) at the beginning of the second century. What seems to us to be wholly inadmissible is the suggestion that Matthew was so anxious to represent Jesus as a new Moses, leading a new Exodus from Egypt (2:13–15, our §4) into the promised land (i.e., the kingdom—2:19–23, our §6), that the evangelist has constructed an allegory which includes Gentiles (the magi). There is, however, no indication in the story that we were meant to identify the magi as Gentiles.

If we assume genuine historical reminiscence in the account of the magi, then the omission of the “fulfillment formula,” hina plērōthē, must also be explained by some means which is valid in historical literary criticism. (E.g., why did the evangelist not quote Ps. 72:10, 11 or Isa 60:3, 6, 14?) The one suggestion which appears to carry any weight is as follows: The threat of Gnosticism was very soon felt by the church, as is evidenced by the Johannine letters and by Paul’s letter to Colossae. (Cf. also “Simon Magus as ‘The Great Power of God,’ ” by W. F. Albright, Appendix VII in Munck, The Acts of the Apostles.) It is probable, therefore, on this thesis that in the midst of the Gnostic struggle within the church or on its periphery a scribe or editor deliberately removed the Matthean formula. Any suggestion that Jesus, through the evangelist’s record, even appeared to acknowledge the legitimacy of astrology would have been avidly seized upon by the Gnostics. Plainly, we have no evidence for such editorial or scribal excision, but this suggestion does have the merit of preserving the narrative as broadly historical, and at the same time explaining an otherwise totally inexplicable omission by Matthew.

4. THE FLIGHT TO EGYPT (2:13–15)

2 ¹³ When they had made their departure, a divine messenger appeared to Joseph in a dream: “Get up,” he said, “take the young child and his mother and flee to Egypt. Stay there until I tell you, for Herod is about to search for the young child to kill him.” ¹⁴ He got up and took the child and his mother by night and withdrew to Egypt, ¹⁵ remaining there until Herod’s death. This was to fulfill the Lord’s saying through the prophet:
“I have called my son out of Egypt.”

NOTES

2:14. withdrew. See first NOTE on vs. 12 (§3).

15. On this quotation from Hosea 11:1 (which is not from the Greek of the LXX), cf. Introduction, Part IV.

COMMENT

Whatever may be the case with the story of the magi, there is no reason to doubt the historicity of the story of the family's flight into Egypt. The OT abounds in references to individuals and families taking refuge in Egypt, in flight either from persecution or revenge, or in the face of economic pressure. Even though Matthew does in fact make the connection, the story of the sojourn in Egypt does not depend necessarily on the reactions of Herod to a consultation with the magi. If we accept the substantial historicity of the Lukan birth narrative, then even a rumor of the events detailed in Luke 2:1–39 would have called forth predictably violent reactions from Herod.

It is certainly not necessary to see in this episode a second Moses fleeing the wrath of another king, preserved against a future Exodus from Egypt. We hope that the Introduction has made it clear that Matthew's OT quotations see Jesus as living, in himself, through the spiritual experience of a whole people, and not as an individual who becomes another Moses.

5. THE SLAUGHTER OF THE CHILDREN (2:16–18)

2 ¹⁶ Then Herod, when he realized that he had been outwitted by the magi, was furiously angry, and sent men to kill all the children in Bethlehem and its environs who were two years old or less, in accordance with the time which he had learned from the magi. ¹⁷ So was fulfilled the saying of the prophet Jeremiah:

¹⁸ “A voice was heard in Ramah, crying and loud lament;
Rachel weeping for her children, and she refused to be comforted, because they were no more.”

NOTES

2:17–18. The quotation from Jer 31:15 is not from the Greek of the LXX, but represents a translation of the Hebrew. For example, the LXX does not have her children (ta tekna autēs), though two versions of the LXX have epi tōn huiōn autēs (about her sons).

COMMENT

The slaughter of infants two years old or less in a town of the size of Bethlehem (population ca. 300) at this time would not only have been a comparatively minor incident, and so probably unknown to Josephus, but also completely in line with Herod's known character.

The evangelist sees the episode as yet another facet of Israel's whole spiritual experience, summed up in Jesus, and seen against the context of Jer 31. Cf. Introduction, Part IV.

6. RETURN FROM EGYPT (2:19–23)

2 ¹⁹ When Herod died, however, a divine messenger appeared in a dream to Joseph in Egypt. ²⁰ “Get up,” he said, “take the young child and his mother and return to the land of Israel, for those who sought the young child’s life are dead.” ²¹ So he got up, took the child and his mother and came into the country of Israel. ²² But having heard that Archelaus reigned in Judea in the place of his father Herod, he was afraid to go there. Being warned in a dream he withdrew into Galilean territory ²³ and went to live in a town called Nazareth. So was fulfilled what was spoken through the prophet:
“He shall be called a Nazorean.”

NOTES

2:23. He shall be called a Nazorean (Nazōraios). There have been many suggestions as to the possible origin of this saying. Some have seen in this evidence that early in his life Jesus was pledged to the life of a Nazirite. But not only is the Greek for Nazirite Naziraios—apart from Judg 13:5 there is no clear OT source from which Matthew might have derived his quotation. If the quotation were simply a “proof-text,” then there would be some slight justification for suggesting that what we have here is a text attesting to yet another wonderful birth, somewhat similar to that of Samson. But if the quotation is to be seen in total context, then another and more likely source must be found. The standard Syriac text (Peshitta) of this verse, which follows an earlier and more authentic tradition of Semitic place names, almost everywhere reads Naṣath and Nāṣrāyā, while the later, more Greek-influenced Christian Palestinian Aramaic has Nazrath and Nazōrāyā. (Both gentilics are well attested; see W. F. Albright, “The Names ‘Nazareth’ and ‘Nazorean,’ ” JBL 65 (1946), 397–401. See also J. A. Sanders, “ΝΑΖΩΡΑΙΟΣ in Matt. 2²³,” JBL 84 (1965), 169–72.)

We looked for a passage in the prophets where a form of the Hebrew consonants nṣr appeared, but where also the meaning had been lost or obscured, both in the Hebrew Masoretic text (MT) and in the Greek of the LXX. Jeremiah 31:6 not only appears to be the only such example, but it also provides the necessary context against which the incidents of vss. 19–23 can be measured. The Hebrew MT cannot be correctly vocalized at this point, for it is not grammatically coherent; but with slight modifications in vocalization, the verse could be read: “For there is a day (in which) the guards (Heb. nōṣrīm) on Mount Ephraim will call.” The LXX probably means, “For there is a day when those who defend (the faith) will proclaim on the mountains of Ephraim.” It is clear that the verse in Matthew does not fully conform either to the LXX or the MT; it presumably rests upon a lost “Old Palestinian” recension of a type not infrequent in the NT (see NOTE on 1:1), and which may have been vocalized as passive (Heb. yiqqār^eū) to mean: “There is a day when the defenders will be called on Mount Ephraim.” Nor was it even necessary for the passive form to appear in the text, since in rabbinic exegesis we frequently have biblical passages interpreted through slightly different grammatical forms, different from anything found in our known texts. Such changes were introduced in the Talmud by the formula: “Do not read ..., but read ...” Rabbi Grossfeld (formerly a student in Near Eastern Studies of Johns Hopkins University) has kindly called our attention to Aaron Heimann’s Hebrew work, Treasury of Words of the Wise (Tel Aviv), pp. 62–65, illustrating this device.

Matthew once more calls our attention, against the context of Jer 31, to the role of Jesus and/or his family in the history of the whole people.

This quotation, together with hints and allusions elsewhere in the gospels, may provide us with some indications about Jesus’ early life. The Jeremiah context explicitly mentions Mount Ephraim, and there is solid ground for asserting that in the pre-Christian Essene literature (e.g., the Nahum Commentary) the inhabitants of Ephraim were identified in the commentators’ own day as Samaritans. (The credit for this discovery is due to the late Abram Spiro, with whom one of us worked through the fragments while in Detroit.) John 8:48 records the hostile supposition that Jesus was in fact a Samaritan, and the burden of the assertion in John 8:33 seems to be that those talking with Jesus were hinting that while they were free-born, and their lineage never in question, he may have come from a people of mixed Assyro-Babylonian lineage, from a line of heretical Jews (cf. also John 8:39, 41). Similarly, Matt 17:26 has a reference by Jesus to the free-born sons. All this, coupled with the manifest interest in Samaritans not only on the part of Jesus and his disciples (cf. NOTE on 10:5), but also on the part of the early Jerusalem church (cf. Acts 8) has to be explained.

Joseph is described as a tektōn in our sources (Matt 13:55; Mark 6:3), which certainly indicates a builder and perhaps even a contractor (cf. NOTE on 13:55). Equally, our sources agree that his family was Judean, as was that of John the Baptist. The probability is that in the fashion of Mediterranean antiquity Joseph traveled a good deal in the pursuit of his calling, and more than one stay in Samaria is highly likely.

Whether Jesus traveled as a child with Mary and Joseph we do not know, apart from the incidents recorded in Matt 2:13–15 and Luke 2:41–51, but it is clear that when Jesus visited his own home territory (cf. Matt 13:53–58 and parallels) he had been away so long that he was almost unknown. John 7:5 represents members of his own family as being hostile to him.

Jesus' home during all the years before the active ministry remains unknown to us. All that we can say with any certainty is that Jesus and John the Baptist must have spent a considerable amount of time together.

It is possible that the evangelists are silent about the early years of Jesus not only out of respect for a tradition about his birth which might give rise to scandal, but also for reasons which can loosely be termed "spiritual." If the passion and resurrection of Jesus were to have validity outside the confines of Judaism (a matter of pressing urgency in the Pauline ministry), then the Messiah must essentially be identified with all races and peoples and not with any one in particular. Such an explanation may account for the careful hints of doubt and uncertainty about Jesus' origins in the gospels. See also Introduction, Part XIII A.

Richard H. Gundry, whose important book The Use of the Old Testament in St. Matthew's Gospel is referred to in Part IV of the Introduction, has a different interpretation. Gundry (pp. 97 ff.) thinks that a connection is necessary not only with Nazareth, but also with the humility and lowliness of Jesus in this quotation. He therefore dismisses the connection between Matthew and Jeremiah, which we think to be essential. A short note by Eugenio Zolli ("Nazarenus Vocabitur," ZNW 49 [1958], 135 f.) came to our notice too late to be discussed in detail, but so far as we are aware it is the first article which deals with the Hebrew of Jer 31:6 in connection with the Matthean quotation.

COMMENT

Herod died in 4 B.C. This is a useful dateline in Matthew's gospel, not as elaborate as that given in Luke 3:1–3 (which incidentally has complications unsuspected by the ordinary reader), but one which inevitably puzzles the reader who discovers that Herod's death was "B.C." Unfortunately, the system of dating events in the Christian era which we have inherited was constructed by one Dionysius Exiguus at the beginning of the sixth century. He assumed—wrongly—that the date of Jesus' birth was 753 A.U.C. (ab urbe condita), i.e., 753 years after the founding of the city of Rome. Herod died four years before that, in 749 A.U.C., hence we say he died in 4 B.C. Actually, if we assume the accuracy of the events described in vs. 16 above, then the latest date for the birth of Jesus must be 4 B.C. (the year Herod died), and it may well have been as early as 9 B.C.

Archelaus ruled over Judea from 4 B.C. to A.D. 6, and Herod Antipas over Galilee from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39.

The whole chronology of the early NT period is beset with difficulty, especially in the light of Luke 3:1–3. For the reader wishing to familiarize himself with the problems involved, there is Jack Finegan's Handbook, to which reference has already been made in Part XIII of the Introduction and the third NOTE on 2:2, in which an effort is made to take account of all the available material, biblical and otherwise.

There is interesting, though indirect, evidence for a tradition of the sojourn of Joseph and his family in Egypt. Celsus, an opponent of the early Christian theologian Origen (early third century) was aware of a Jewish tradition that Jesus had worked in Egypt, had there learned the magic arts, and had used them to further a claim to divinity when he returned to Palestine (Origen Contra Celsum i 28, 38).

7. JOHN THE BAPTIST

(3:1–12)[†]

3 ¹In those days John the Baptist came proclaiming this in the Judean desert: ²“Repent—for the kingdom of heaven is fast approaching.” ³This indeed is he who was spoken of by the prophet Isaiah:

“A voice crying: ‘In the desert make ready the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.’ ”

⁴ This John wore a garment of camel’s hair, with a leather belt around his waist. He ate locusts and wild honey. ⁵ To him there went out Jerusalem, all Judea, and all the territory around the Jordan, ⁶ and they were baptized by him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins.

⁷ When, however, he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees coming for baptism, he said to them, “You viper’s brood! Who warned you to flee from the coming wrath? ⁸ Bear fruit that befits repentance, ⁹ and do not presume to say ‘Abraham is our father,’ for I tell you that God is able to raise up children for Abraham from these stones. ¹⁰ Even now, the ax is laid against the root of the trees. Therefore, every tree which does not bear good fruit will be felled and thrown into the fire. ¹¹ I indeed baptize you with water, looking to repentance. There is one coming after me, who is greater than I am, and I am not fit to carry his sandals. He will baptize you with the fire of the Holy Spirit. ¹² His winnowing fork is in his hand; he will clear his threshing floor and gather the wheat into his granary. The chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire.”

NOTES

3:2. Repent. In contemporary Jewish thinking the place of repentance as a necessary preliminary to the Messianic Age is well documented. Cf. Adolf Büchler, Studies in Sin and Atonement in the Rabbinic Literature of the First Century, reprinted New York: Ktav, 1967.

fast approaching. Our translation attempts to capture the urgency of the Gr. éggiken, which is lost in such English translations as the “at hand” of the KJ.

3. the prophet Isaiah. On the “fulfillment” theme, see Part IV of the Introduction.

“A voice crying: ‘In the desert ...’” This is not the customary punctuation of translation from the Hebrew, but it follows Jewish tradition—as pointed out by Dr. Moses Aberbach—and the punctuation has been adopted already by John L. McKenzie in Second Isaiah, AB, vol. 20 (New York: Doubleday, 1968), §3.

4. John wore. The connection between John and Elijah (cf. 17:10–13) is here alluded to only by a description of John’s clothing (cf. 2 Kings 1:8). See also Mal 4:5; Ecclus 48:10.

locusts. A common item of diet among Arabs in the Near and Middle East to this day. The vitamin content of the insect is high. There is no basis for the identification of the word with “carob,” the pods of the carob tree, known sometimes as “St. John’s bread.” Epiphanius (Heresies 30. 13) tells us that the Ebionites of his own time (315?–403) changed the word to “cakes” in the interests of vegetarianism, and Tatian (second century) had earlier changed the word to “milk” in the same interests.

5. The great popularity of John is also recorded by Josephus.

6. were baptized. There seems no question that John took over the practice of baptism, including the emphasis on repentance, from the Essenes, but gave it a far more profound meaning. There is no certain evidence for the Jewish baptism of proselytes until the end of the first century of the Christian era. Even then, the emphasis was not so much on repentance as on acceptance into a religious heritage. Christian baptism, from the evidence of the Pauline letters, was from the first a twofold rite. It incorporated a man or woman into the covenant people of the Messiah, conceived as one with the Israel of the Old Covenant, and at the same time it was a token of repentance and instrument of pardon. It was interpreted by Paul in terms of the work of the Messiah, as a death to the old life of sin, and a new birth, a rising again, to righteousness. J. A. T. Robinson (“The One Baptism,” in TNTS) has argued persuasively that the once-and-for-all character of Christian baptism derives from the once-and-for-all fact of the passion and death of Jesus. Certainly Qumran’s lustrations were regularly repeated as normal ritual, but for the Essenes baptism was a sign of a spiritual state already attained, and there is no indication that they endowed their (self-administered) baptism with sacramental efficacy. John’s baptisms may well have been repeated, and there is no indication in the NT material that his baptism was a once-and-for-all rite. It may here be significant that the one still-existing Gnostic sect which consistently traces its origin back to John the Baptist (i.e., the Mandaean sect of the lower Tigris Valley) does repeat baptism as a continuously efficacious rite with quasi-sacramental intention. (Cf. Lady Drower’s [E. S. Stevens’] Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran, Leiden, 1937 / New York, 1962; and Canonical Prayer Book of the Mandaeans, Berlin, 1959 / New York, 1965.)

7. Pharisees and Sadducees. In Matthew’s account of the ministry, these groups are rather consistently representative of disbelief and opposition to Jesus. It is important for us to be scrupulously fair to these two bodies. (Cf. Introduction, Part IX.) The attitude of this gospel is certainly explained if our suppositions about its authorship are substantially correct.

viper’s brood. Jesus uses the same expression in 12:34 and 23:33. This was evidently an expression in common use, indicating malice (cf. Gen 3:1 ff.).

the coming wrath. It is important not to equate the wrath of God with the emotion of anger. God’s wrath in the Bible denotes the ineluctable condemnation by the all-holy and all-loving God of any sin which defiles his creation and which destroys the dignity of man as part of that creation. The wrath of God therefore always brings judgment in its train, and this is the sense here. Cf. Wisd of Sol 5:20; Enoch xc 18, 91:7; Rom 1:18, 2:5; 1 Thess 1:10.

9. Abraham is our father. John’s denunciation of relying upon the privilege of God’s choice of Israel is fully in line with the OT prophetic tradition (cf. Rom 2:17–29). In Hebrew the words for children (bānîm) and stones (abānîm) are similar and they are here used in a play on words.

10. Cf. Luke 3:7–9. Matthew has the Baptist’s words addressed to Pharisees and Sadducees, Luke to the crowds.

11. Baptism, as administered by John, is here contrasted with the forthcoming baptism by the Messiah. John’s baptism is symbolized “with water,” and “looks to” repentance, is preparatory—i.e., his baptism accepted those who were repentant and desired pardon for their sins.

with the fire of the Holy Spirit. Most English versions translate the Greek as though fire and Holy Spirit were either antithetical or even exclusive of each other. However, the evidence from the Dead Sea literature makes it perfectly clear that this is a hendiadys (cf. Robinson, “The Baptism of John and the Qumran Community,” in TNTS). The imagery is eschatological, looking to the fulfilling of all things in the Messiah. For the Messiah’s gift of the Spirit, the intertestamental writings are important; cf. Enoch xlix 3, lxii 2; Ps Sol 17:42. See also Isa 11:2.

12. This verse emphasizes the role of the Messiah in judgment when he comes with his baptism. Cf. Enoch lxii 2, lxix 27. With these final words quoted from John’s ministry, compare the last recorded words of Jesus’ ministry in 25:46.

There is superficial identity between Matthew’s and Luke’s versions in this account. But there are variations in Matthew at 3:3 (=Luke 3:8), 3:11a (Luke omits looking to repentance), 3:11b (=Luke 3:16b), 3:12 (=Luke 3:17) as compared with the version in Luke, and the variations argue against a common written tradition for both.

COMMENT

This section provides a necessary introduction to the ministry of Jesus. It is an interesting example of the—to us—surprising lack of external biographical interest or detail which we might have hoped to find in the gospels. Luke provides us with a good deal of information about John the Baptist's early life and his background. Matthew, like Mark and John, introduces the Baptist almost without explanation. All interest is centered on the ministry and teaching of Jesus, and the other material is included only when it is connected with, or is directly illustrative of, that ministry.

There would seem to be no reason to doubt that John grew up in Qumran. Luke emphasizes the advanced age of his parents. Qumran was probably not more than a long day's walk from his parents' home, and we know that the Essenes were in the habit of rearing boys in their community. We do not know precisely where the home of John's parents was, but it is stated explicitly in Luke 1:39 to have been "in the hill country ... in a town of Iouda." This is almost certainly the same word as Heb. Yūdāh, name of the tribe, from which the later name of the larger political entity Judaia (Judea) was derived. The long-accepted identification of this Iouda with the town of Yaṭṭa, (not Yuṭṭa, as often spelled) is linguistically impossible and historically improbable, since this place was south of the Edomite capital at Hebron and would, therefore, be in the interior of Idumaea, not in Judea. A late tradition fixes the birthplace of John the Baptist at Ein Kerem, just southwest of Jerusalem. This is quite possible, though there is no early evidence for it.

Far more important, however, is John's choice of words, and the emphasis laid upon an imminent Messianic Kingdom has somehow to be explained. That he learned his Messianism from the Essenes is a thesis advanced and defended by many distinguished scholars, and detailed evidence for this theory may be found in C. H. H. Scobie's John the Baptist (Philadelphia: Fortress Press / London: SCM, 1964). There is no evidence whatever for baptistic types of Jewish sectarian activity before the time of John, and the Essenes are the only sectarians we know who practiced ritual lustration. Later on there were many such baptistic sects, including the Gnostics and the Mandaeans. It is possible that John's preaching and ministry arose from an awareness that what he had learned of messianic expectation among the Essenes was nearer to fulfillment than his teachers and associates believed, and that he left the community partly on that account. To this consideration would have to be added the fact that John's language nowhere reflects the absolute predestinarianism of the Essenes. (Cf. here Daniélou, The Dead Sea Scrolls and Primitive Christianity, pp. 16 ff., and Brownlee, "John the Baptist in the New Light of Ancient Scrolls," in The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. Krister Stendahl.)

There is roughly a generation between chapters 2 and 3, and Luke has a solitary story belonging to those years (Luke 2:41–52). What contact John had with Jesus during those years we cannot know. But here again there are phenomena to be explained, not the least being the vocabulary which John's gospel employs in the discourses of Jesus. There are links with Qumran's sharply contrasting pairs of opposites (e.g., light and darkness, truth and falsehood, etc.), which are not to be explained in terms of later Hermetic writings. Cf. Introduction, Part XIII, Appendix B. Two points of emphasis in Matthew's account should not be overlooked:

(1) This section on John begins with a phrase "Repent—for the kingdom of heaven is fast approaching," which is used to close the whole section at 4:17 with identical words on the lips of Jesus.

(2) The high incidence of the word anachōrein (to withdraw) and its congeners in this gospel suggests an awareness on the part of the evangelist of a "withdrawal" into the desert by Jesus in his early years. See Introduction, Part XIII A.

8. THE BAPTISM OF JESUS

(3:13–17)[†]

3 ¹³ Then Jesus came from Galilee to the Jordan, to John, to be baptized by him. ¹⁴ But John stopped him, saying: “I need to be baptized by you, and do you come to me?” ¹⁵ Jesus, however, answered him: “Permit it for now; for thus it is fitting for us to fulfill all righteousness.” Thereupon he [John] allowed him [to be baptized]. ¹⁶ When Jesus had been baptized he went up immediately out of the water, and—see—the heavens opened and he saw the Spirit of God coming down like a dove and alighting on him. ¹⁷ Then came a voice from heaven saying, “This is my Son, the Beloved One, with whom I am well pleased.”

NOTES

3:13. What is stated in the COMMENT below is emphasized by the Greek construction here. Instead of Mark's and was baptized (Mark 1:9), Matthew uses tou with the infinitive, expressing purpose, this being one of seven such uses of the construction in this gospel. Cf. 4:1 with Mark 1:13.

16. the heavens opened. Cf. Isa 64:1; Ezek 1:1, where the Greek verb of the LXX is used in the same sense as Matthew's verb, of heaven opening to reveal God's purpose.

the Spirit of God. Cf. Isa 42:1. The dove is a symbol of Israel in Hos 7:11, 11:11, and extensively of the bride in the Song of Songs. Rabbi Jose (ca. A.D. 150) on entering one of Jerusalem's ruins to pray recorded that he heard a "divine voice, cooing like a dove" (TB Berakhoth 3a).

17. my Son, the Beloved One. According to Mark's account of this incident, the voice is addressed directly to Jesus (Mark 1:11); in Matthew, the proclamation is public. the Beloved One is not an attributive adjective of my Son, but is a separate title, in apposition. Isaac is so described in Gen 22:2, and the Servant of Isa 42:1 is the Beloved. The first part of the proclamation of sonship appears to be reminiscent of Ps 2:7, speaking of the Messiah. Israel in the OT is described as God's son (cf. Exod 4:22; Hos 11:1). We shall not wholly grasp the full meaning of Matthew's material unless we bear in mind that Jesus in this tradition is at once the chosen, the anointed personal Messiah, and at the same time represents the people of the Old Covenant. On this widespread OT usage, which provided him with the phrase "corporate personality," cf. H. Wheeler Robinson, "The Hebrew Conception of Corporate Personality," in Werden und Wesen des Alten Testaments, ed. J. Hempel, Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die Alttestamentliche Wissenschaft, Berlin, 1936. Paul uses other figures to the same end, variously describing Jesus as the new man and the second Adam (cf. Rom 5:14; 1 Cor 15:45, etc.).

COMMENT

The baptism of Jesus by John frequently gives rise to some misunderstanding, the more so when those who seek to understand or explain the event are looking at the incident against a background of Christian baptism. In this connection the words of John to Jesus in vs. 14 tend to reinforce the difficulty. Actually, the difficulty is more apparent than real. It is not necessary to see in the dialogue of vss. 14–15 an attempt by an embarrassed evangelist, still less an embarrassed Church, to provide explanations for an awkward occurrence. If the Baptist's description of himself and his mission in John 1:19–28 with its insistent "I am not" is historically accurate, then certainly John would be startled to find the Messiah coming to him for baptism.

The key to the understanding of the incident is in Jesus' reply in vs. 15. "Righteousness" must be seen as the whole purpose of God for his people, and not (as is so often the case in homiletics) as a moral quality only. Ps 119 frequently describes the commandments and ordinances of God as "righteous," and the same sense underlies Jesus' reply. "To fulfill all righteousness" must therefore be seen as meaning the fulfillment not only of the demands of God upon his people, but also the fulfillment of those Scriptures in which those demands are set out—law, prophets, writings. In any event, the baptism administered by John was a direct response to the will of God, and so the Messiah must submit to it. With this in mind, we can understand Matthew's interest in preserving the saying—not, as has occasionally been suggested, in inventing it. First, it was wholly fitting that the Messiah should be completely identified with his people, which is a point constantly made in the NT, however separate from sinners the Messiah might be. Secondly, Matthew's interest in fulfillment can be seen in his emphasis (which he shares with Mark) as Jesus "went up out of the water." We have already called attention in the Introduction (Part IV) to the evangelist's interest in the Servant Songs of Isaiah. Here again we have a key passage to be seen in context: "When you pass through the waters I will be with you" (Isa 43:2). The narrative both of John's preaching and Jesus' baptism must be seen against the context of Isa 43. Not only is there considerable ambivalence as to whether the Servant is singular or plural; the privileged position of the Servant is emphasized, as is also his mission and the new event which God is about to inaugurate.

9. THE TEMPTATIONS

(4:1–11)[†]

4 ¹ Then Jesus was led into the desert by the Spirit, to be tempted by the devil, ² and after fasting for forty days and nights he was hungry. ³ On coming to him, the tempter said, “If you are God’s Son, command these stones to become bread.” ⁴ He answered, “It is written:

‘Not by bread alone shall man live, but by every utterance from God’s mouth.’ ”

⁵ Then the devil took him into the holy city and set him on the pinnacle of the temple and said to him: ⁶ “If you are God’s Son, throw yourself down. For it is written:

‘He will give his angels charge of you’
and

‘They will bear you on their arms, lest perchance you strike your foot against a stone.’ ”

⁷ Jesus answered him, “It is also written:

‘You shall not test the Lord your God.’ ”

⁸ Again, the devil took him to a very high mountain and pointed out to him all the kingdoms of the world and their grandeur. ⁹ He said to him, “I will give you all these things if you will prostrate yourself and pay me homage.”

¹⁰ Then Jesus said, “Away, Satan! For it is written:

‘You shall pay homage to the Lord your God, and him alone shall you worship.’ ”

¹¹ Then the devil left him, and angels came and served him.

NOTES

4:1. to be tempted. Matthew's use of the infinitive to express purpose is a common device in this gospel. Cf. NOTE on 3:13.

the devil (Gr. diabolos). There is a shift of meaning in the Bible as to the way in which evil and temptation are treated, and the material is not easily summarized. The Hebrew figure of the sātān appears in the prologue of Job, in chapters 1 and 2, where he is a member of the heavenly court acting as a kind of legal prosecutor. This material may be as early as the seventh century B.C., and is certainly no later than the fifth century. Similarly 1 Chron 21:1 depicts the sātān as a kind of opposing counsel, and it embodies a tradition which is older than its late fifth-century date. Ps 109:6, which is certainly pre-Exilic, depicts sātān as a prosecutor. A very slight change in emphasis appears in Zech 3:1–2; there the figure is more an active adversary than an accuser. This material (late sixth century B.C.) represents a state of affairs in which the prosecutor can easily become a malign figure. (Here it has to be remembered that the contemporary parallels are innumerable, and the prosecutor can easily become an active adversary when the state is unpopular. In the Persian period this was very likely to be the case to a Jewish writer.)

The intertestamental writings, under the influence of Iranian dualism, see a dominion of God and a beneficent providence sharply contrasted with a dominion of evil, and from this there easily emerges the mastema of Jubilees, an active opponent of good. Moreover, in that same literature the sātān figure is wholly evil and is no longer a member of the heavenly court. Precisely how sātān in Hebrew became “the devil” (Gr. diabolos) we cannot say with certainty. But in the NT literature the diabolos figure is head of the dominion of evil, bent on destroying man by tempting him. The Greek diabolē is “a calumny,” and diabolos an accuser, calumniator; the LXX uses the word diabolē mainly in the sense of “calumny,” though occasionally as the equivalent of “enmity.” The LXX does use diabolos for sātān, but rather in the sense of adversary or opponent. Josephus never uses diabolos or indeed any other names for Satan. Care must be taken to distinguish diabolos from daimōn (demon), which can be either good or bad, or even neutral.

Essene theology was developed in direct dependence on Zoroastrianism in some form, and in the Essene system we have a complete dualism which, though ultimately under divine dominion, still placed the good Spirit (i.e., the Holy Spirit) and the evil Spirit (i.e., Satan) in total opposition to each other.

3. The order of events in Luke is different, and there is less verbal agreement with Matthew here. It is reasonable to assume that Matthew and Luke were using independent sources.

On coming to him (Gr. proserchesthai). A favorite expression of Matthew, who uses it fifty-two times in all. Similarly the evangelist often uses plurals—in this case stones—where Mark and Luke use a singular (cf. Matthew's crowds and mysteries at 13:11 with Mark's crowd and mystery, Mark 4:1 and 11). (On the meaning of mystery/mysteries, see the NOTE on 13:11.)

God's Son. Cf. Introduction, Part XII, and also Dalman, Words of Jesus, pp. 274 f. Matthew, in common with John, sees the passion and death of Jesus as bound up with Jesus' relationship with the Father; cf. 27:40, 43; John 5:18, 43, 8:15–59, 10:31–39.

4. The quotation is from Deut 8:3.

5–10. The historic present verbs in these verses are rendered in our translation in the past tense, but they are an interesting feature of Matthew's Greek, though he uses the device less often than Mark.

5. the holy city. As a description of Jerusalem, cf. Dan 9:24; Tob 13:9; Rev 11:2, 21:2, 10, 22:19; Matt 27:53.

6, 7. The quotation in vs. 6 is from Ps 91:11–12, and Jesus' reply in vs. 7 is from the LXX of Deut 6:16. Cf. Matt 26:53 ff.

8. very high mountain. Matthew's account places several significant events in such a setting: the Great Instruction (5:1), the Transfiguration (17:1), and the farewell to the disciples (28:16). For the devil as ruler of a world hostile to God, cf. John 12:31, 16:11; 2 Cor 4:4; 1 John 5:19.

10. Away, Satan! The same abjuration is used to Peter in 16:23 (cf. Mark 8:33) when Peter, like Satan, attempts to dissuade Jesus from courses of action which would inevitably lead to suffering.

The quotation is from the LXX version of Deut 6:13. Authority derives from God; even the devil's dominion is under sufferance.

COMMENT

The temptation narrative aptly illustrates the NOTE on vs. 17 in the preceding chapter (§8). It is possible to see the temptation scene as illustrating the way Jesus thought his ministry would be fulfilled. To some extent Mark's account of the baptism (Mark 1:9–11), with its suggestion that this was when Jesus became fully aware of his vocation, bears this out. Mark tells us that Jesus was “driven” (Gr. ekballei, vs. 12) by the Spirit into the desert, there to face the implications of his vocation. On this view, it is permissible to see in both Matthew and Luke the newly baptized Jesus facing temptation as an individual. The first test would be to see if he would identify his mission with what nowadays would be called “social reform,” working as a popular leader for the eradication of hunger and poverty. The reality of such a temptation is obvious enough, and the identification of the Kingdom with social programs is well detailed in one chapter of Norman Perrin's The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus (London: SCM, 1963), pp. 37–41, 148–55; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963. The second temptation in Matthew (vss. 5–7=the third in Luke 4:9–12) would, in this view, be a temptation to trade upon the Messiah's relationship with God, to achieve a reputation as a wonder-worker and so succeed in securing the attention of men. The third test would be to compromise with evil, recognize the devil's dominion to the point of regarding some men, some situations, as beyond hope of redemption.

The view given above is both simple and, in the light of Jesus' ministry, plausible as an account of the way in which such thoughts might have assailed the mind of Jesus. But popular as this theory has been in the past, particularly in homiletics, it has the fatal flaw of looking back at the narrative from the vantage point of an accomplished ministry and of subsequent Christian history. Once again, the OT quotations give us more reliable indications of the meaning of the narrative. They are not, in their own context, addressed to an individual but to a whole covenant-people. The significance of the quotations in the narrative was recognized by Clarke (in Divine Humanity) forty years ago—and has received significant recent support from Robinson (in TNTS).

It is not an unreasonable supposition that Jesus thought of his sonship in ethnic terms at the beginning. Israel in the OT is the son par excellence (see above, NOTE on 3:17), and Jesus in the Matthean tradition sees his ministry as a reliving of the spiritual experience of Israel, the experience of sonship being narrowed down to him who is the Son, the Beloved. Deut 8:2, with its key words of led, prove (i.e., try, tempt), wilderness, provides the context for the reply to the first temptation, which is Deut 8:3. If Israel had been allowed to hunger, to be humbled, and to be fed with no ordinary food, then ought not he who was repeating that experience also endure the same trials?

Any realization by Jesus that he was alone in his sonship leads inevitably to the second temptation. If the Messiah was the Son (cf. Ps 2:2), then what was his relationship to those who by membership in Israel's heritage addressed God as "Father"? The prophets are witnesses to Israel's constant temptation to presume on sonship, and the nature of Jesus' ministry was such that a temptation to presumption must always have been present. Jesus' reply to the second temptation is from Deut 6:16, with its significant reference to Exod 17:7. To doubt the presence of God with his own people was to put God to the test.

The third temptation also derives from the experience of Israel, and deals with the promise to Israel in Deut 6:10–15. God gives or withholds at his own good pleasure, and Israel's inheritance was no result of her own effort or moral rectitude. But the lands outside—whose were they? (Cf. Deut 34:1–4.) The story of Israel, as J. L. McKenzie points out (The Two-Edged Sword: An Interpretation of the Old Testament, Milwaukee: Bruce, 1956) was a constant struggle between obedience to the claims of the divine imperative and the claims of secular calculation. For Jesus, the Son, the same struggle of conscience had to be met, and the dominion of sin could be broken, and its captives freed, only in submission to the Father's will.

(In addition to the material quoted above, see also J. Dupont, "L'arrière-fond biblique du récit des tentations de Jésus," NTS 3 \(1956–57\), 287–305.

10. THE BEGINNING OF THE MINISTRY

(4:12–17)[†]

4 ¹² When he had heard that John had been arrested, he withdrew into Galilee. ¹³ Leaving Nazareth, he went to live in the territory of Zebulon and Naphtali, in Capernaum by the sea, ¹⁴ so that what was said by the prophet Isaiah might be fulfilled:

¹⁵ “The land of Zebulon and the land of Naphtali, the lake road, across the Jordan,
Galilee of the nations—

¹⁶ the people who sat in darkness have seen a great light; and upon those who sat in the land of the shadow of death light has dawned.”

¹⁷ At that time Jesus began to preach. He said, “Repent, for the Kingdom of God is fast approaching.”

NOTES

4:12. he had heard. Cf. 14:13, another occasion when Jesus' movements were dictated by news of John the Baptist.

14. Is 9:1–2 For the fulfillment formula, and for the quotation in the verse following see Introduction, Part IV.

16. The Greek at this point used to be thought a “composite” text, with elements from three versions of the LXX, but what is important is the total context of the quotation. The evangelist may well be quoting from an Old Palestinian text which we no longer have. (Conflations of different recensions may point to another proto-Lucianic recension, which has not yet been recovered.) Matthew here uses the past tense, indicating that the prophecy has been fulfilled.

17. Some authorities omit Repent. Whether the omission belongs to the original tradition or not, Jesus begins his ministry with substantially the same message as the Baptist.

preach. The verb is kērussein, and we shall have occasion to examine it again in the NOTES on 4:23. Properly, the verb is used to mean the proclamation of important news by means of a herald, whose office and person in classical times were inviolate.

COMMENT

Jesus left the Judean desert (3:1, 4:1) for Galilee, in the district which before the Exile had been the territory of Zebulon and Naphtali, but which was then largely inhabited by Gentiles. Matthew's use of "withdrew" (vs. 12) can hardly be meant as an indication that Jesus was leaving the jurisdiction of Herod Antipas, in which John had been arrested, for Herod held sway over Galilee too. It is possible that Jesus went to Capernaum rather than Nazareth because he wished to be wholly independent of relatives in Nazareth. Moreover, the call of the first disciples argues not a miraculous response to a sudden invitation, but an invitation to those whom Jesus had already met on previous occasions.

11. THE FIRST DISCIPLES

(4:18–22)[†]

4 ¹⁸ While he was walking near the Sea of Galilee he saw two brothers, Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting their nets into the sea—for they were fishermen. ¹⁹ He said to them, “Come, follow me, and I will make fishers of men out of you.” ²⁰ Then and there they left their nets and followed him. ²¹ Going on from there he saw two other brothers, James and his brother John, Zebedee’s sons, in the boat with Zebedee their father, mending their nets. As soon as he called them ²² they left the boat and their father, and followed him.

NOTES

4:18. Simon. The Greek form of the Heb. Shimeon. It is a common name, found in Ecclus 50:1, in Josephus, and the NT.

Andrew is a Greek name, already known as the name of a Jew from an inscription in Olympus of 169 B.C.

19. Come, follow me is a Semitic idiom.

fishers of men. Jesus' phrase is almost certainly a reminiscence of Jer 16:16. The symbolism of fishing for missionary enterprise is found also in 13:47 f.; cf. Luke 5:1–11; John 21:4–8; and also Ezek 47:10.

20. Then and there they left... The gospels constantly emphasize the element of renunciation in the teaching of Jesus, and this element is typified here by the disciples' abandoning their livelihood.

21. mending their nets. If the OT background of fishers in vs. 19 is significant, then there may be some significance here too in the verb used for mending. It occurs five times in the Pauline letters, twice in Hebrews, and once in I Peter, where the sense is "restore," "make perfect." The symbolism of fishing, casting nets, and mending nets may possibly be in the mind of the evangelist as figures of the future ministry of the disciples.

COMMENT

This and the following section introduce the two groups of people who are always sharply distinguished in Matthew: the disciples and the crowds. Both are in mind for the long collection of teaching material which begins in chapter 5, though that teaching is represented as being given to the inner circle.

Whatever traditions there may have been about Jesus' first meeting with any of his disciples, the synoptic gospels in their present form emphasize that the initiative in calling them rested wholly with Jesus. Matthew does not offer any explanations for the disciples' apparently sudden decision to follow Jesus. He does not satisfy our curiosity as to whether their response to this call came as a result of their having known Jesus previously (cf. John 1:19–51).

12. MINISTRY IN GALILEE

(4:23–25)[†]

4 ²³ He went about the whole of Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and proclaiming the Freedom of the Kingdom, healing every sickness and every infirmity among the people. ²⁴ His reputation so spread through all Syria that they brought to him all the sick, those afflicted with various diseases and pains, the demoniacs, the epileptic, and the paralyzed, and he healed them. ²⁵ Great crowds followed him from Galilee, the Ten Towns, Jerusalem, Judah, and the territory beyond the Jordan.

NOTES

4:23. synagogues. The synagogue as a place of public worship and teaching is first clearly attested in Egypt in the latter part of the third century B.C., and in Palestine ca. 200 B.C. (Ecclus 51:23). Its origins, however, are certainly far older even though we are unable to determine them with any precision. The centralization of worship in Jerusalem from 621 B.C. onwards, with many Jews thereby denied a share in temple worship, must inevitably have led to the establishment of non-sacrificial places of assembly. The Aramaic word for “synagogue” is a Babylonian loanword which can scarcely be later than the sixth century B.C. Whatever the history of the institution, prophets had been in the habit of gathering bands of disciples around them, and during the Babylonian Exile (597–540 B.C.) exiles gathered for prayer and instruction wherever and whenever this was possible (Ezek 8:1, 14:1, 33:30 ff.). Cf. John Bright, A History of Israel (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1959), pp. 422 ff.; London: SCM, 1960.

proclaiming. The verb has already been briefly examined, and its meaning is well established. Two things dictated our translation of this verse: (1) The decreasing vitality of the word “gospel” in current English, so much so that it is possible to make any social or political program or idea a “gospel” (cf. “the Marxist gospel”); (2) it was customary for thousands of years, at least from 2300 B.C. and right through the Middle Ages, for sovereigns or rulers on their accession to proclaim amnesties and privileges of various kinds, such as freedom from taxation and/or legal penalty. Paul’s description of the “liberty by which Christ has set us free” (Gal 5:1) exactly describes the meaning which we have tried to indicate here and elsewhere in our version of the more usual “preaching the Gospel.”

the people. The expression is found fourteen times in Matthew, and only twice in Mark. In this gospel it has clear reference in almost every case to Israel, the people of the Old Covenant—i.e., it is an OT usage.

24. the epileptic. In Greek this is a rare word, and late, while “the paralyzed (one)” is a NT word, being found in Matthew and Mark. Luke (5:18, 24) uses another and more usual word.

25. Great crowds. This is another example of Matthew’s predilection for plurals. He uses the expression thirty times, the singular sixteen, while Mark has the plural but once, compared with the singular thirty-seven times.

the Ten Towns. The usual English version, the Decapolis, is a transliteration of the Greek. For the history of the region, see any recent Bible dictionary.

COMMENT

In much the same way that Mark gives us a typical day in the ministry of Jesus (Mark 1:21–34), whether or not the events so described all happened on the same day, so Matthew here gives us in general terms the scope of the ministry of Jesus. Matthew here uses phrases which in Mark are the basis for whole sections of narrative: 4:23=Mark 1:14, 39; 4:24=Mark 1:28; 3:10; 6:55–56; 4:25=Mark 3:7 ff. At this stage the evangelist's interest is in the crowds, and the teaching of the inner circle of the disciples comes later. It is to be noted that the ministry is directed primarily to Jesus' own people, and only later are the crowds from Gentile areas affected by his reputation. The descriptions of the ministry are not to be overlooked: teaching, proclaiming, healing. It was concentration on healing in particular which engendered so much misunderstanding on the part of those who came to Jesus. Healing was a sign, an outward manifestation, of the irruption of the dawning reign of God, and Jesus by injunctions to silence on various occasions sought to guard against mistaking sign for substance.

13. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

(5:1–12)[†]

5 ¹ Seeing the crowds, he went up on the mountain, and when he had sat down his disciples came to him. ² He began to teach them, in these words: ³ “Fortunate are the humble in spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of heaven. ⁴ Fortunate are those who mourn, for they shall be consoled. ⁵ Fortunate are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. ⁶ Fortunate are those who hunger and thirst for righteousness, for they shall be satisfied. ⁷ Fortunate are the merciful, for they shall have mercy shown to them. ⁸ Fortunate are the pure-minded, for they shall see God. ⁹ Fortunate are the peacemakers, for they shall be called children of God. ¹⁰ Fortunate are those who are persecuted on account of righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

¹¹ You are blessed whenever men vilify you, persecute you, and falsely charge you with evil for my sake; ¹² rejoice and be glad, because your reward in heaven is great, for in the same way they persecuted the prophets before you.

NOTES

5:1. crowds ... disciples. The Great Instruction is not a public address. In Matthew it represents a collection of material addressed to the inner circle, the disciples. Cf. Part V of the Introduction.

3. Fortunate. The word in Greek was used in classical times of the state of the gods in contrast to men. The usual English “blessed” has more and more come to have liturgical or ecclesiastical overtones, and we have chosen “fortunate” as being the best translation available to us. The Heb. ashrê originally meant “the good omens of ...” There is increasing evidence that the Hebrew originally had the same meaning as the pagan Greek. (Cf. W. F. Albright, Archaeology and the Religion of Israel [Johns Hopkins Press, 1942], p. 227.) The meaning is both “they are among the fortunate who ...” and “fortunate are the ...” Only the incorrigible pedant can find shades of meaning distinct from each other in e.g. insulae Fortunatae and Fortunatorum Insulae.

humble in spirit. Those living in uprightness, or “perfection.” The phrase occurs in the Qumran material as ʿanîyê rûah. There are two words in Hebrew which would provide us with the background for this saying: ʿanavîm and ʿanîyîm. They are virtually synonymous, and both mean “poor,” “afflicted,” “humble” (cf. F. Brown, S. R. Driver and C. A. Briggs, A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament [Boston: Houghton, 1906; Oxford University Press, 1907, repr. 1953, 1957], ad loc.). The Qumran War Scroll (1QM xiv 7), which is Herodian in date, gives us a saying which closely parallels that of Jesus, and may be translated: “Blessed be the Lord God of Israel ... giving ... vigor to the shoulders of the bowed, and (...) to the lowly spirits; firmness to the melting heart” Unfortunately the script belongs to a period in Hebrew when the letters yod and waw were not sharply distinguished, and it is possible to read either ʿanāv or ʿanî. However, other occurrences of the letters in the column indicate that the reading should be ʿanîyîm rather than ʿanavîm. It is likely that the original editor felt that the Gr. ptōchoi (poor) alone would be misunderstood if left without qualification, and so reproduced the Qumran saying rather than the tradition as it is in Luke (Luke 6:20—“the poor”). The poverty described is that of the man fully conscious of the poverty of all human resource, and knowing his need and desire for God.

for theirs is the Kingdom. The best sense here is “the Kingdom will consist of such as these,” bearing in mind the future tenses which characterize the following verses.

4–5. The order of these verses is uncertain in our oldest manuscripts.

4. those who mourn. As with vs. 3, the favor of God does not rest upon the state of mourning as such, but upon those who lament the sin which mars God’s choice of Israel. Cf. Isa 61:2, referring to those who mourn man’s disobedience to God.

5. the meek. The meaning here is similar to that of the “humble” or “poor” in vs. 3. The verse is a quotation from Ps 37:11, where possessing the earth is parallel to being admitted to the Kingdom in vs. 3. Cf. also “Whosoever humbles himself, the Holy One, blessed be He, raises him up.” (TB Erubin 13b. This reference we owe to the courtesy of Dr. Moses Aberbach.)

6. hunger and thirst. The OT has many examples of fasting as a form of prayer of desire, and those who are here being commended are they who pray for the vindication of God’s purposes for men. Their reward is that they will be filled (cf. Rev 3:20). The Messianic kingdom as a feast is referred to in 8:11. Cf. also Jer 31:25; Isa 55:1; Ps 107:9.

7. Cf. “Whoever has pity on people will obtain pity from heaven” (TB, Shabbath 151b, to which our attention was called by Dr. Moses Aberbach).

8. pure-minded. That is, the spiritual equivalent of being ritually pure (cf. Ps 24:4). The Aramaic word would here be dākhîn, “broken, humble, contrite” (cf. StB, I, ad loc.). The single-mindedness of the consecrated life as a prerequisite for the vision of God is emphasized in Philo (On the Contemplative Life ii 473; On the Life of Moses ii 106), and cf. Rev 22:4. What is here promised is that the sons of the Kingdom will share the vision of God with the Son (cf. 11:27). The theme of purity of heart is well attested in the rabbinic literature; cf. “The Holy One, blessed be He, loves everyone who is pure of heart” (Midrash Rabba on Gen xl 8), or “R. Jose ben Halafta said to R. Ishmael his son, ‘If you seek to see the face of the Shekinah’—i.e., the abiding presence of God—‘in this world, study the Torah in the land of Israel’ ” (Midrash Shokker Tob on Ps cv). (Both references by the kindness of Dr. Aberbach.)

9. peacemakers. Cf. Pirqê Abôth i 12: “Hillel said, ‘Be of the disciples of Aaron, loving peace and pursuing it.’ ” children of. Often the phrase “son of” or “children of” is equivalent to “belonging to ...,” and the “sons of the prophets” in the OT can be held to mean those gathered round a teacher, members of a prophetic guild. Here the expression means “those admitted to fellowship with ...”

The collection of sayings commonly known as the Beatitudes may fittingly be called the spiritual charter of the Kingdom. The form which the individual verses take is well known in the Psalms, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes. In another form, it can easily be seen as an implied grammatical construction of protasis-apodosis (conditional and result clauses): “If you do this, then that will follow.”

What the history of this particular collection may be we cannot know. That the form was well known appears to be certain from an (unpublished) fragment of negative Aramaic beatitudes from Qumran. So far as the difference between Matt 5:3–9 and Luke 6:20–26 is concerned, it is not enough to say that Matthew represents another version with some modifications in phraseology. Both versions may be equally valid as recollections of the original tradition, and each version may try to reproduce some variants of that tradition. There is, for example, nothing inherently spiritual about the state of poverty (Luke 6:20), or hunger and thirst (Luke 6:21) and Matthew’s “humble in spirit” (vs. 3), and “hunger and thirst for righteousness” (vs. 6) at first sight may strike us as an improvement in meaning. However, it is well to call attention to the fact that poverty can save from the often frivolous and frequently ephemeral desiderata of a more affluent state. Jesus himself, and the NT writers, and all the ascetical writers, Christian and non-Christian, are unanimous in their warnings against an overinvolvement in worldly goods. Certainly Christianity is never more false to itself than when its institutions are wealthy. The Scriptures are full of warnings against a preoccupation with wealth and possessions.

The two versions of the spiritual charter in Matthew and Luke may well represent two versions uttered by Jesus on two different occasions. Matthew’s version, on this interpretation, may be an explanatory expansion given in response to questions. Equally, Luke’s version, particularly in the light of the material which follows in Luke 6:24–26, may have been addressed directly to the disciples. What we may have therefore is a direct series of statements to the disciples in Luke and a series of expanded statements in Matthew, though both from Jesus.

10. This statement concludes one group of sayings, for the phrase theirs is the Kingdom of heaven began the series and now ends it. This device (called “inclusio”) is common in Matthew. Cf. J. C. Fenton, “Inclusio and Chiasmus in Matthew,” Studia Evangelica, III, 1964.

11. Cf. TB, Shabbath 88b: “They that are reviled, but who do not revile, they that hear themselves being put to shame but do not answer back—concerning them, Scripture says ‘But they that love him shall be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might’ [Judg 5:31].”

12. reward. It is true that later Jewish theology was a good deal concerned with the theme of rewards and punishments (cf. Wisd Sol 2:22, 5:15), but here the idea is not so much a precise calculation of reward for past conduct. Rather it is a contrast between coming pain and persecution, and future blessedness.

It seems appropriate to add here a short comment on the undeniable prominence in Matthew of what is usually called “rewards and punishments,” which seems to make many people uncomfortable. In chapter 6 (§§22–26) for example, the reward from God for covert good works seems to be an incentive to such works. Sensitive as was contemporary Jewish thought with this kind of consideration, there are ample warnings against overemphasizing it: “Do not be like slaves, who serve their lord in order to receive a reward” (Pirqê Abôth i 3, second century B.C.) is one such. Two things may be said very briefly: (1) The whole NT is quite frank in its lack of disinterestedness. What is being held out to men in the NT writings is the salvation which comes from God alone, and—in the NT—is mediated through membership of the Messianic Kingdom which Jesus proclaimed and which he “bought with his blood.” Obviously, what is being offered is advantageous to man, and there are responses demanded of man in return for the generosity of God’s grace. (2) So far from the reward being “congruent with merit of good works” (to use the mediaeval scholastic expression), the reward is so far beyond anything which men could possibly attain by their own goodness that the very word “reward” has something of irony about it. It would have to be added here that the terms upon which that reward is held to be contingent are in the NT not such as to encourage a light approach to it.

in heaven. It is important not to read into this phrase the notion of “going into heaven,” but rather “with God.” “Heaven” was a normal Jewish synonym for “God,” to save the devout from using even the substitute word Adonai, “(my) Lord.” On this whole question of “heaven” and “God” with respect to the Kingdom, cf. Introduction, Part VII.

COMMENT

Matthew's putting Jesus' instruction to the disciples in one large group of material was most likely done out of a sense of order, and also to make reference easier for those who would be using the material for teaching. As noted in Part IV of the Introduction, the sayings in this gospel are arranged in forms which ensured their easy committal to memory. In spite of what various commentators have said, it is not likely to have been dictated by considerations of a "second Moses" ascending a "second mountain" to bring thence a "new Law." Such commentators tend to forget that the Great Instruction in Matthew was directed to the inner circle of the disciples, and not to the whole people.

It is well here to call attention to the study of the Elijah-Elisha theme in Mark, as set out by Gerhard Hartmann (Der Aufbau des Markusevangeliums, mit einem Anhang: Untersuchungen zur Echtheit des Markusschlusses, Münster: Aschendorff, 1936). Hartmann rightly called attention to the fact that in rabbinic sources Elisha is contrasted with Elijah to the advantage of Elisha, and he thought the same considerations to be at work in Mark's gospel with reference to John the Baptist and Jesus.* We call attention to this work here, since we have seen no good reason to suppose that Matthew sees in Jesus a "new Moses." We do wish, however, to suggest that the evangelist may have had in mind a parallel between Jesus and Joshua—in any event, the identity of name will certainly not have escaped him. If this supposition is correct, then there is a parallel between John the Baptist and Moses: John the Baptist did not live to see the entry into the Promised Land. Moses was held accountable for his lack of faith on one vital occasion (Num 20:12), and there appears to be a rebuke to John the Baptist for a similar lack of faith in Matt 11:2–6.

Heb 3:2–6 also points to the contrast between Jesus and Moses, and the same work has other points of contrast between the work of Moses and that of Jesus (8:5, 6, 12:18–24).

Perhaps most telling of all in this connection is the quotation in Matt 11:10 (found in all the synoptic gospels), which is far nearer in the Greek to the LXX of Exod 23:20, and refers to the entry into the Promised Land. There is evidently here a whole complex of ideas, and we should be mistaken if we sought to find in our NT sources a ready-made system of parallels or "types." All we are justified in doing is attempting to lay bare the various strands of thought which seem to have occupied the attention of the evangelists from their own Hebraic background. Quite plainly, any discussion of the Law by Jesus—and especially the lengthy report by Matthew in chapters 5–7 (our §§ 13–29) must have invited comparison with Moses. But if the evangelist did indeed see Jesus as a "new Moses” it is surprising that he did not introduce specific quotations from the Old Testament to validate the point.

We wish further to add that the significance of Joshua in connection with the Messianic hope in Samaritan sources was continually stressed by the late Abram Spiro in his unfinished studies.

Again it should be pointed out here that nothing is more misleading from the standpoint of Christian history than the assumption that its Founder was engaged in the construction of a new moral code of universal applicability. As suggested in the NOTES above, the Great Instruction is directed to the Messianic Community, first to the disciples, and then to those whom they taught. Any extended application of its provisions to a non-Christian or mixed community, however well-intentioned, is a use of the material which the infant Messianic Community would have found puzzling, to say the least (cf. 1 Cor 5:12).

The whole of chapters 5–7. (§§ 13–29) is variously named the Sermon on the Mount, or the Great Sermon, and it has been taken by some as the basis for a universal code of ethics—so much so that vss. 3–12 of chapter 5 have been quoted by politicians as a kind of platform. Joachim Jeremias’ Ethel M. Wood Lectures for 1961 before the University of London (The Sermon on the Mount,) apply a much-needed corrective to this kind of misinterpretation. What follows here is a very condensed summary of those lectures:

Three main views have been held, or are held, about the Great Instruction, as follows: (1) The Instruction is “perfectionist legalism,” concerned with the absolute demand of God upon all men, and moreover every bit as demanding in its observance as the Law of Moses. Jesus, on this view, is expressing extreme demands, even though he is at the same time aware that no one can completely respond to them. But “he hopes to bring men to the point where they exert themselves seriously in an attempt to attain part of them” (Jeremias, p. 9). (2) The second view [which according to Jeremias is found among some types of Lutheranism] is that the Instruction represents an impossible ideal. Its proponents argue that Jesus made demands which men could never possibly fulfill completely; but that as men realized their impotence compared to God, they would also come to appreciate the saving love of God. (3) The third view, given formulation by Johannes Weiss (in his Die Predigt vom Reichen Gotten, Tübingen, 1892) would have us see the Instruction as an “Interim-Ethik.” Jesus, this view maintains, was not propounding a long-term moral structure for his disciples, but was instead facing men with a last opportunity for heroic moral effort before the inevitable catastrophe of the End-time. All is heroic command, calling for heroic commitment. All other considerations are valueless.

There are elements of truth in all three views. Indeed, any serious view of the ministry of Jesus must be quite misleading if it does not have some element of truth in it. The mistake in all three is that each claims to be final and exclusive as an interpretation. The first view clearly and rightly emphasizes the OT background from which Jesus taught, the background which through the centuries had constantly laid upon Israel the obligation to obey the righteous demands of a righteous God. We ought not to be surprised that so much of the moral teaching of Judaism is to be found reproduced in the Great Instruction. What would or ought to be disturbing would be to find that teaching absent from the sayings of Jesus. Nor is this salvation by Law or by works, as puzzled commentators on Matthew have been known to suggest. From the Greek philosophical revolution of the sixth-to-fourth centuries B.C., all law was seen by those within the influence of Hellenism as a response to universal principles of justice thought to be discernible in the constitution of the universe and the processes of history, and also a safeguarding of the individual and society from the evil impulses of men. To that extent, any attempt to discover a religion without law in Matthew is to pursue a chimera.

The second view is attractive at first sight in that it appears to provide—as the first apparently does not—for the role of Jesus as Mediator, as Redeemer to save man from his own impotence. But this second view, under the influence of the Augustinian interpretations of Paul, wholly fails to do justice to the love and devotion which the Law evoked, and still evokes, for the devout Jew (cf. Ps 119). Whatever impression commentaries on the Law might convey, no informed Jew of the time of Jesus or since would suppose that salvation came through observance of the Law. The OT makes it entirely clear that salvation derives not from human merit but from God. It was precisely Paul's legal training which led him to insist on the importance of the grace of God. We should not lose sight, of course, of his equally great insistence on man's obedient response to the demands made by that grace. Moreover, there is not a single sentence in the Great Instruction itself which for a moment suggests that Jesus was propounding an impossible ideal. On the contrary, he clearly expects from his disciples the most exacting obedience.

The third view certainly emphasizes the element of crisis, of impending decision-making, in the teaching of Jesus. It is certainly true that Jesus constantly spoke of the End, and of impending judgment. But it is exactly this element which is not emphasized in the Great Instruction. "Jesus is no fanatical enthusiast, his ethic is not an expression of anxiety in the face of catastrophe" (Jeremias, p. 15). Any interpretation of the Instruction which sees the teaching as "interim ethics" would have to deny that Jesus envisaged, made provision for, a continuing community. Such a denial runs counter to all we know of contemporary messianism (especially among the Essenes), and it must somehow explain how the infant community so successfully misunderstood Jesus in so brief a time as to provide us with the evidence of Acts 1–4.

What is left, if we reject the three views above as in each case partially if not wholly erroneous? Jeremias declares that what we have is “gospel.” We have indicated already in our commentary on 4:23 our interpretation of that verse as “proclaiming the Freedom.” What is being propounded to the disciples in chapters 5 through 7, as to those who must carry the message of this proclamation, is the charter of that Freedom. It is law, it is the Law of the Old Covenant, with a new dimension: the long-expected reign of God is dawning with the presence of Jesus, and the Covenant-law has therefore a new urgency. Stripped of commentary and explanatory gloss, men of the Kingdom are confronted with the demand of God in its starkest form and bidden to obey. Precisely how that demand is to be met in the circumstances of daily living is not the function of a commentary. That function belongs to moral theology, and the beginnings of it in the Christian Church can be seen in the Pauline letters.

14. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: MARKS OF THE DISCIPLE

(5:13–16)[†]

5 ¹³“You are the earth’s salt. If the salt is of low grade, then how can it be rectified? It is then good for nothing but to be thrown out and trodden underfoot. ¹⁴ You are the light of the world; a city on a hill cannot be hidden. ¹⁵ And men do not light a lamp and hide it under a container, but they put it on a stand and it gives light to all in the house. ¹⁶ In the same way, let your light so shine among men that they may see your good works and give glory to your heavenly Father.

NOTES

5:13. The saying as it stands in our English versions makes virtually no sense at all, in spite of all the efforts of the commentators. Sodium chloride does not lose its taste or savor except by dilution. Furthermore, though salts of various kinds are necessary to the fertility of the soil, oversalination can and does effectively render land infertile—as evidenced by the ancient primitive action of sowing an enemy’s land with salt; cf. the treatment of Carthage by the conquering Romans in the Second Punic War; or the OT references to a place being “sown with salt,” as in Judg 9:45. The Greek word (mōranthē) employed by the evangelist and here translated as “low grade” strictly means “to become foolish, imbecile, etc.” (mōrainō and mōroomai are virtually interchangeable in meaning), and Liddell and Scott (A Greek-English Lexicon, II, ad loc.) can only adduce this verse in favor of the meaning “to become insipid.” We are not entitled to say that Jesus and his disciples knew nothing of the properties of salt, for the saying would hardly have survived unless it had some empirical basis. There is, however, no means of arriving at the choice of this particular Greek verb unless there was something in Aramaic which was misunderstood by an editor or an amanuensis. (The Aram. pkh, “to lose taste, to relax,” etc., does not have the meaning of the Greek, and the Syriac here is therefore purely secondary.) In addition, there is the complicating factor that though Greek does distinguish between present and future meanings of the Hebrew imperfect tense, the older Aramaic did not.

Encyclopaedia Britannica (ed. 1960, XIX, p. 897b) asserts that Matt 5:13 “refers “simply ... to the earthy residuum of such an impure salt after the sodium chloride has been washed out.” Alfred Lucas (Ancient Egyptian Materials and Industries, 3d ed. rev. [London: Longmans, 1948], pp. 304 ff.) mentions impurities such as gypsum (hydrated calcium sulphate), natron, and sodium sulphate.

Our translation is based on the best sense which can be made of the text as we have it. There is no conceivable manner in which salt can be re-salted once it has been diluted. It is the earth itself which is in need of attention. But if salt is of poor quality, of low grade, then the earth itself will suffer loss. This interpretation does have the merit of being far more consonant with the responsibility vested in the disciples. If they are to be light to the world, then they must also accept the equal responsibility of preparing the ground in which the Sower will work.

It is to be noted that the semantic parallel of “low-grade” with imbecile is far closer than might have been expected. Cf. the meanings commonly given to derogatory expressions such as “low-grade citizen,” etc.

14. the light of the world. Cf. “You [are] the lights of Israel” (Testament of Levi 14:3, in The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ed. R. H. Charles, II, p. 312); Philip 2:15. The function of the disciples as light is to be detached from the world, and yet their very existence is such that they cannot but exercise an influence on that world. It is important to beware of using this verse as a kind of proof-text of the often-expressed homiletic concern for “involvement.”

Light and city were combined by Cicero in a description of Rome as a “light to the whole world” (Catiline iv 6).

15. Cf. Luke 8:16, 11:33, 14:34; Mark 4:21.

16. The salt, city, light sayings are united in Matthew, and in combination are eschatological, looking to the end, the purpose and final goal of the disciples’ vocation. Moreover, in their Matthean context they emphasize the sacrificial service which the new Kingdom will demand. In Mark there is a “salt” saying (Mark 9:49–50) following a discourse on the demands of discipleship, and Luke (14:34–35) has the “salt” saying in similar context. The “light” saying in Mark (4:21) and Luke (8:16) follows the parable of the sower, and is joined to a promise that the secrets of the Kingdom will be revealed.

your good works. The emphasis is not on human goodness, but on response to the Father’s will, as is made quite clear by 7:21.

heavenly Father. The expression is prominent in Matthew, and is found only once in Mark and Luke. It is erroneous to assert, as is sometimes done, that addressing God as “Father” was unknown to Judaism. Cf. Wisd Sol 2:16, 14:3; Ecclus 23:1, 4. The later literature (Tobit, Jubilees, III Maccabees) uses the expression “our Father” or “their Father,” and Allen’s ICC St. Matthew commentary (ad loc.) lists frequent occurrences of “our Father” in rabbinic literature. Cf. also Dalman, Words of Jesus, pp. 184 ff.

COMMENT

The preceding verses in Matthew's scheme set the stage for the material which follows. It progresses from a consideration of the dedication which discipleship demands to a detailing of specific instances—"case law" and interpretation. The scheme is orderly, logical, starting with an outline of general principles and going on to statements about the obligations which Jesus laid on his inner circle of disciples. The final part of the scheme deals with particular points of the Law.

15. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW— FULFILLMENT (5:17–20)

5 ¹⁷ “Do not suppose that I came to destroy the Law or the prophets. I did not come to destroy, but to fulfill. ¹⁸ I solemnly tell you that until heaven and earth pass away not a single letter of the Law shall pass away until all has been fulfilled. ¹⁹ Whoever therefore sets aside any prescription of the Law and teaches men accordingly shall be called least in the Kingdom of heaven. But whoever keeps and teaches it shall be called great in the Kingdom of heaven. ²⁰ For I tell you that unless you are more righteous than the scribes of the Pharisees you will certainly not enter the Kingdom of heaven.

NOTES

5:17. destroy ... fulfill. This statement by Jesus seems clear enough, but combined with the following verses it might be taken as meaning that the Law is binding on the followers of Jesus to the end of time. It would in that case express the convictions of orthodox Judaism, both Palestinian and Alexandrian, in the time of Jesus (cf. Philo Life of Moses ii 136). It should be emphasized that those to whom Jesus speaks at this juncture in the ministry were Jews. There is no shred of evidence that Jesus at any point repudiated his obligation to the Law to which both his birth and his circumcision committed him. Moreover, we know from Acts (21:20) that many Jews who embraced the teaching of Jesus nevertheless maintained their adherence to the Law. So far as the Matthean tradition is concerned, Jesus is represented as emphasizing the authority of those to whom the teaching of the Law was committed (cf. 23:2 ff.). It is reasonable to assume that those who followed Paul's footsteps during his journeyings were Jewish Christians from Jerusalem who were concerned that Gentile converts should first embrace the Law. Jewish Christians, both residents and non-resident travelers, would have been influenced by rumors of all kinds about the apostle's intentions toward his Gentile converts and also about his own attitude to the Law. (It must be added here that the late Johannes Munck did not subscribe to this view. Cf. his Paul and the Salvation of Mankind, London: SCM, 1959, and more recently in The Acts of the Apostles, AB, vol. 31, Introduction, Part VIII.)

Much hangs on the meaning of the verb plērōsai (to fulfill), and also on the recorded views of the ex-Pharisee and apostle Paul. With regard to the first, the verb can and frequently does convey the meaning of "to clarify the true meaning of" something. Certainly it can be argued that what Jesus is doing in this legal material of Matt 5–7 is trying to restore the original meaning of the Law where this seemed to be obscured by the accretions of commentary. But it must also be recognized that the same verb is used in a somewhat different sense in other parts of the NT, even in Matthew. We have already called attention (Introduction, Part IV) to Matthew's use of "fulfill" in his OT contexts. We may legitimately ask whether the experience of the New Covenant in Jesus' blood (Matt 26:28) caused some early Jewish Christians to regard the Law as either radically reinterpreted or even abrogated. (Incidentally, this emphasis on the "blood of the Messiah" precisely led to the careful preservation of the tradition. It is quite inconceivable that a devout Jew would have invented the concept of a New Covenant in the blood of the Messiah, while to a Gentile the very idea was monstrous.) Moreover, the verb "to fulfill" in John and some other NT authors certainly can mean "to end, conclude, make complete." Similarly ambiguous is the Pauline phrase calling Jesus the "end" (telos) of the Law (Rom 10:4).

Perhaps the most we are justified in saying is that two attitudes to the Law are discernible in our sources, and this is precisely what we would expect. Only with the spread of the Gospel to the Gentile world would the two attitudes be brought into sharp contrast.

18. On the validity of the Law in Jesus' view, cf. A. M. Honeyman, "Matthew 5.18 and the Validity of the Law" (NTS 1 (1954–55), 141–42. This saying is certainly hyperbolic for purposes of effect. Paraphrased, it would run like this: "The Law of Moses as an expression of the will of God is permanent, and I came to emphasize its true meaning. No smallest part of it may be eroded or explained away until everything has been accomplished. Therefore (vs. 20) your obedience to the demands of God must be a far more abiding obedience than that given by those who teach and interpret that Law."

not a single letter. The Greek words are iota (commonly transliterated by jot in the English versions) and keraiā (given in KJ as tittle, and in RSV as dot). The iota (Heb. yod) was certainly employed in the time of Jesus, but keraiā (small horns attached to some letters to guard against confusion with each other) is another matter. So far as is known at present, the device only came into use in the Herodian phase of Hebrew script in the late first century B.C., and it is not possible to determine what meaning the word might have had at the time of Jesus. We cannot know whether the Gr. keraiā referred to the small horns, with any real certainty.*

COMMENT

General principles having been enunciated, the demands of discipleship clearly laid down, the evangelist begins his collection of material which deals with the Law. It begins with a prefatory statement by Jesus as to his mission as it related to the Law.

16. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: ANGER

(5:21–26)[†]

5 ²¹ “You have heard that it was said to the ancients, ‘You shall not murder, and whoever murders will be liable to judgment.’ ²² But I tell you that everyone who is angry with his brother shall be in danger of (divine) judgment. Whoever insults his brother will answer to the Sanhedrin, while whoever says ‘Rebel! (against God)’ merits a fiery death. ²³ Therefore if you bring your offering to the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, ²⁴ leave your offering there before the altar, and go away. First be reconciled with your brother and then come and offer your gift. ²⁵ Come to terms with your accuser quickly, while you are on the way to court with him, lest he hand you over to the judge, the judge hand you over to the jailer and you are thrown into prison. ²⁶ I assure you that you will never come out until you have paid your last cent.

NOTES

In all that follows, it is important to bear in mind the background of the material as it was discussed in Part IX of the Introduction.

5:21. it was said. Cf. the reference in the Introduction (Part IX) to this rabbinic device. We might have expected “It is written,” but this would not fit in so well with the later “But I tell you.” Furthermore, “said” can refer to scribal interpretation, with quotations from Scripture embodied in the interpretation.

to the ancients. The expression, as referring to men of a past age, is attested in classical Greek. Here it refers to oral tradition in the pre-rabbinic stage, since anything which came after the Torah was by that very fact oral tradition.

You shall not murder. The words as they stand are a quotation and summary of Exod 21:12, and liable to judgment echoes Deut 17:8. The word we have translated liable (Gr. enochos) can also mean “guilty,” and is so used in 26:66. Cf. Rabbi Eliezer (end of first century A.D.): “He who hates his brother belongs to the shedders of blood.”

22. This material is admittedly difficult. The verse states simply that intention as well as act comes under the judgment of God, and in asserting this Jesus is appealing to the foundations of divine justice on which the written Law rested. But then we seem to have an ascending scale of judgments for a descending scale of offenses. Moreover, if the Greek (tē krisei) means a local court, then we have a different meaning for vs. 21 where it plainly means God’s judgment. However, the difficulty may be more imaginary than real. The first case (vs. 21) of the man guilty of murder is simple enough—he will suffer punishment. This verse (22) goes on to deal with an attitude, not an overt act, and here we have kept the meaning of the Gr. tē krisei as judgment, or punishment, by putting “divine” in parentheses. Obviously no court is involved here, for unless there is an overt act only God is fully aware of the motions of a man’s mind. But the man who insults his brother, presumably in the presence of witnesses, may indeed be brought to judgment before the Sanhedrin. The third instance, that of a man who calls another “Rebel!” is again an accusation made without witnesses, and in such a case judgment is in the hands of God and there is no recourse to any court action.

Whoever insults. The word rākā is not Greek but Aramaic; it is a contemptuous mode of address not infrequent in rabbinic writings. It is correctly preserved in the Syriac text, which often transmits the exact Aramaic word used by Jesus. See above, NOTE on 2:23; what is said there of place names applies also to personal names and must often be considered as likely in the case of key words in sayings of Jesus. Cf. James 2:20.

Rebell (against God). Greek mōre normally means “fool” but it may have been confused with the Heb. môrê, “rebel,” in Num 20:10. The epithet is in any case derogatory. It is a value judgment, and as such the man who uses it is attempting to act in the place of God. Legally, the spoken epithet would be a public slander in the presence of witnesses.

fiery death. It is possible that Gehenna (the Greek word here employed) was considered equivalent to hell in NT times, but there is no evidence for this, and the equation Gehenna=hadēs is never made. The Qumran literature is, so far as known, silent on the matter. The deep cosmic “valley” in I Enoch, designed for the punishment of men, cannot be Gehenna, though it may have some prototype in pagan Canaanite literature (the Baal epic). R. H. Charles’s statements (in Eschatology [New York: Schocken, 1963], p. 219 et seq.) are somewhat misleading on this point. The references in the so-called “II Enoch” to the “valley of Gehenna” (liv 1) suggest a “tophet” in a valley, usually southeast of a city, out of the prevailing winds, where trash and garbage were burned, and where human sacrificial victims had been cremated in earlier times (as in Jerusalem and Carthage). Cf. the article in Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, the translation of TWNT by G. W. Bromiley (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1964), I, pp. 657 ff. The material in II Baruch and IV Esdras on Gehenna, like that in the usually quoted rabbinic sources, is late and not relevant here. The references sometimes made at this point to Matt 18:8 are not wholly justified; see NOTE there.

23–24. This is the first application of the preceding statements of principle, and deals with reconciliation before the Day of Atonement. If commentators insist on providing a late date for Matthew’s material, they must somehow explain this saying, which refers to a sacrificial system which lasted only until A.D. 70.

25–26. It is possible that some material has been displaced here. At first glance what we have is an injunction that not only must the brother be reconciled, but the accuser too, on the grounds that murder includes anger, and in this sense the word for accuser (antidokos) is used at Luke 18:3. But if this is so, the following half-verse (25b) and verse (26) have no real meaning—for what is apparently being commanded in the rest of this section is not obedience to the demands of a righteous God, but calculated self-interest. We are told to settle with our accuser because otherwise we will wind up in jail! Interpreting these verses as a metaphor for a supposed final confrontation with God on the day of judgment is no help; in that case, either the accuser falls into the background, or Jesus himself must be cast in that role. This would be entirely different from the case law envisaged in vss. 21–24. Luke (12:58 ff.) has the saying in the context of a crisis in the ministry of the Messiah, and a crisis also in the national life of Israel. In Luke's version, Israel is like an insolvent debtor with one final chance of escaping the legal penalties. (Cf. G. B. Caird, ET 77 [1966], 36 ff.) It is possible that an editor has attached vss. 25b–26 to a saying about an adversary which is now lost to us.

17. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW— ADULTERY

(5:27–30)[†]

5 ²⁷ “You have heard the command ‘Do not commit adultery.’ ²⁸ But I tell you that everyone who looks lustfully at a woman has already committed adultery with her in his heart. ²⁹ If your right eye causes you to sin, take it out and throw it away. It is better for you to lose one of your members than for the whole of your body to be cast into hell. ³⁰ If your right hand causes you to sin, cut it off and throw it away. It is better for you to lose one of your members than for the whole of your body to be cast into hell.

NOTES

5:27. Do not commit adultery. The prohibition also includes lustful thinking, and the statement in the following verse is a sentiment well known in the rabbinic writings. Cf. “If one gazes”—i.e., lustfully—“at the little finger of a woman, it is as if he gazed at her pudenda” (TB, Berakhoth 24a). So also with excuses to talk with a woman with the same lustful intent. Cf. Deut 5:21; Exod 20:17.

29. This verse is an application of the statement on adultery. Sights which are known to stimulate passion must be avoided—i.e., to quote the moral theologians, “known occasions of sin” are to be avoided.

right eye. This presumably takes its meaning from right hand, which is considered to be the more active of the two hands.

30. This is the second application of the principle of vs. 27. Not only must looking be controlled, but also physical contact or occasions which might lead to physical contact Cf. 18:8. Deut 25:11–12 explicitly allows for the punishment of cutting off the hand, significantly in connection with an obscene act by a woman. Rabbinic literature retains expressions denoting that certain acts by the hand deserve the punishment of mutilation (cf. TB, Shabbath 88b; Midrash Niddah ii 1; both references supplied by Dr. Moses Aberbach).

causes you to sin. The Greek expression “to cause to stumble” is used in the later books of the LXX. hell. Cf. NOTE on fiery death in vs. 22 above.

18. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW— MARRIAGE

(5:31–32)[†]

5 ³¹ “It is said, ‘Anyone who divorces his wife must give her a certificate to that effect’ ³² But I tell you that anyone who divorces his wife, except in the case of adultery, makes her an adulteress, and whoever marries a divorced woman commits adultery.

NOTES

5:32. Cf. Deut 24:1, 3; Jer 3:8; Mal 2:14–16. The Greek word porneia quite certainly means adultery here, and generally is used of illicit sexual relations, which the school of Shammai held to be the only ground of divorce (Mishnah Gittin xc 1: “No one shall divorce his wife unless there is found unchastity in her”). A similar expression is found in Matt 19:9, and it is open to debate as to whether the exceptive clause is editorial, or represents an original tradition. Mark (10:11) and Luke (16:18) both represent Jesus as giving a simple prohibition of divorce. Paul’s understanding of the matter (1 Cor 7:10–11) reinforces this: divorce implies that the woman may well marry again, and in Paul’s view (implicitly, too, in Jesus’ view) this leads her to adultery. We are not here concerned with the arguments of the moral theologians, still less with the so-called “Pauline privilege” (1 Cor 7:12–13). What Jesus is emphasizing is the principle, the foundation, of marriage. In principle, the divorced woman is still the wife of her husband, and the man who divorces his wife makes her an adulteress, on the presumption that she will marry again. The man who marries the divorced woman both shares in her adultery and also commits that offense himself, because in principle—though not legally—the divorced woman is still married to her first husband. The clause “Whoever marries ... adultery” is omitted by some manuscripts.

19. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW—OATHS (5:33–37)

5 ³³ “Again, you have heard that it was said to the ancients ‘Do not make vows rashly,’ but ‘Be careful to pay any vows made to the Lord.’ ³⁴ But I tell you—do not swear at all. Not by heaven, for it is God’s throne, ³⁵ nor by earth, for it is his footstool, nor by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the Great King. ³⁶ Do not swear even by your head, for you cannot make one hair black or white. ³⁷ Let your words be ‘Yes’ and ‘No.’ Anything more than this is of evil origin.

NOTES

5:33. In its present form, the text is confused. Vows were always accompanied by an oath, and the usual English translations have unhappily reflected the confusions of the Greek, which reads: “Do not swear falsely, but pay your vows to the Lord.” It is probable that the translators, being unversed in rabbinic law, misunderstood the Aramaic. A reference to Num 30:2 shows that the Law stated simply that binding oneself by a vow demanded the performance of the promise. The emphasis is not on the way in which a man binds himself, but on his obligation to perform his promise. Jesus opposes himself to all distinction in oaths, a distinction which a casuist might interpret as determining the relative solemnity of one promise against another. Cf. Lev 19:12 on oaths in God’s name.

pay any vows made. Cf. Deut 23:21; Ps 50:14; Num 30:2.

34. God’s throne. Cf. Isa 66:1.

35. his footstool. Cf. Isa 66:1; Lam 2:1.

Jerusalem ... city of the Great King. Cf. Ps 47:2\(3H\).

37. Jesus tells his disciples to avoid all strong oaths and to content themselves with “Yes” and “No” in dealings between members of the community. James 5:12 has the statement somewhat differently, and that version may be a reminiscence of Jewish legal opinion (TB, Sanhedrin 36a) that “Yes” and “No” are oaths if repeated twice. Cf. “Let your ‘Yes’ be righteous”—i.e., true—“and let your ‘No’ be righteous” (TB, Baba Mezia 49a).

20. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW— RETALIATION

(5:38–42)[†]

5 ³⁸ “You have heard that it was said ‘An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.’ But I tell you not to resist one who is evil. ³⁹ But if anyone strikes you on the right cheek, turn the other to him as well. ⁴⁰ If anyone wants to sue you and take away your tunic, let him have your cape, too. ⁴¹ If anyone presses you into service to go one mile, go with him two. ⁴² Give to him who asks you for a loan, and do not refuse one who is unable to pay interest.

NOTES

5:38. The lex talionis here referred to (cf. Exod 21:24–25; Lev 24:20; Deut 19:21) is often pointed out by modern critics as an example of the savage ruthlessness of the Law of the Old Covenant, contrasted with the “law of charity” of the New Covenant (cf. John 15:12; 1 Cor 13:1–13). It should be remembered that the law of retaliation here quoted by Jesus acted, in its own time and for many centuries afterwards, as a much needed check on the widely practiced blood feud. Moreover, the Old Covenant Law provided for recourse to the courts; and however brutal we may think the punishment, it was within set limits and had sanctions which the blood feud did not have. The disciple can have no such recourse in the new community—he must endure anyone who is evil. Jesus then proceeds to outline the limits of its application.

39. turn the other. Jesus here speaks of what is still true in the Near East—the most insulting of all physical blows being that of striking the right cheek with the back of the hand. Jeremias (The Sermon on the Mount, p. 27) suggests that the allusion here is to the insult offered to one adjudged to be a heretic. Everywhere in the gospels, the members of the new community are subject to persecution and insult by reason of their attachment to Jesus. The discipleship will bring inevitable suffering and repudiation, and the disciples may not go to law. There appears to be here a reminiscence of Isa 50:6; the disciple is not to expect anything other than what the Servant must endure.

40. An interesting example has been given to us by Dr. Moses Aberbach. TB, Yoma 23a, in discussing (with reference to Lev 19:18) the whole concept of revenge as distinct from bearing a grudge, posits two men, agricultural workers, one of whom asks to borrow a sickle and is refused. The one who refused next day asked the would-be borrower for the loan of an ax. He is refused, on the score that he had himself refused the loan of a sickle. That, concluded the judgment, was retaliation, and the cases are wholly congruous. But if one man who has refused the loan of an ax next day asks the would-be borrower if he may have the loan of a garment, and his request is granted with the words “Here it is. I am not like you, who would not lend me an ax,” then that is bearing a grudge. This is striking, in that a garment is not a likely object to be loaned or borrowed. The example may well go back in tradition to the first century A.D., and suggests a background of ideas common to both Matthew’s tradition and that of the lawyer’s casebook.

41. presses you into service. The verb is Persian in origin, and the noun (aggaros, plural aggaroi) denotes men who carried the royal mail. Josephus (Antiquities XIII. 52) uses the verb for the compulsory carrying of military stores. Adolf Deissmann, Biblical Studies (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1903), pp. 86 f. points out that the word was used in third-century B.C. Egypt of a boat used for postal purposes.

mile (Gr. milion) is found only here in the NT. It is of Latin origin, and occurs in the later Jewish writings.

42. As this verse stands in the Greek and in the standard English versions (cf. RSV, “Give to him who begs from you ...” and NEB, “Give when you are asked to give ...”), Jesus appears to be inviting the disciples to allow themselves to be victimized by the unscrupulous. Our translation reconstructs the verse as an assertion by Jesus against prevailing Jewish legal fictions on behalf of the debtors. (This translation is based on the background of the word danizein, “to lend at interest,” which is translated in RSV by “borrow.”) Because although the injunctions of the Law against usury were firm and clear (cf. Deut 23:19–20, etc.), certain practices had grown up to circumvent these restrictions, and there were many people whom debt had reduced to a pitiful state. Interest rates were extremely high in the ancient world (often 100, sometimes 200 per cent), thanks to the prevailing hazards of drought, insecurity of travel, the unpredictable rapacity of tax collectors, rebellion, banditry, nomad raids, and warfare of all kinds. While the Law prohibited lending at interest between fellow Israelites, it said nothing about lending between Israelites and Gentiles—and so it was understood (explicitly in Deut 23:20) that interest would be permitted in that case.

In addition to this, the situation in the time of Jesus had led to various kinds of legal fiction in order to circumvent, or at least mitigate, the provisions of the Law on usury. Business and allied financial dealings would have been impossible without long-term loans, which on the letter of the Law had to terminate every seven years in the sabbatical year. There had therefore grown up the Jewish practice of the prozbul, which simply demanded a recognition of the indebtedness of the debtor when the debt was legally at an end. Having established that the background of danizein was confirmed by the Heb. sha'al and the Jewish-Aramaic she'al, both of which mean “to borrow,” as well as literally “to ask,” and in the causative “to lend,” on interest, we find that the Syriac similarly translates the Greek of Matthew. It therefore became necessary to look more closely at the Greek of vs. 42. If we can assume that a negative has been dropped before thelonta, so that an amended text would read tone mē thelonta, then the verse fits into its context with complete clarity. The negative ouk with ethelō (mē with a participle, as here) is common in Greek (cf. Liddell and Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon, I, p. 497b; J. H. Thayer, A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament [Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1888], p. 285), and in the NT. Aristotle (History of Animals, 575a 28) makes it clear that the construction ouk ethelō = “unable” and is the equivalent of ou dunamai, being often so used.

21. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW— ENEMIES

(5:43–48)[†]

5 ⁴³ “You have heard that it was said ‘You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy’, ⁴⁴ but I tell you to love your enemies and pray for those who misuse you. ⁴⁵ In this way you will become sons of your heavenly Father, who causes the sun to rise upon both good and evil men, and sends rain to just and unjust alike. ⁴⁶ If you love only those who love you, what reward have you? Do not the taxgatherers do the same? ⁴⁷ And if you greet only your brethren, what extra are you doing? Do not the heathen do the same? ⁴⁸ Be true, just as your heavenly Father is true.

NOTES

5:43. You shall love your neighbor. This is a quotation from Lev 19:18, but the remainder of the verse is oral commentary inferred from the distinction drawn in the post-Exilic period between dealings with Jews on the one hand and dealings with Gentiles on the other. All such distinction is here made impossible for the disciple. All men are neighbors to the man who has assumed the responsibilities of discipleship. Cf. Enoch 14.

45. heavenly Father. See vs. 16.

46. taxgatherers. The word is not used specifically of this particular class of men, but rather in the sense employed in the rabbinic writings—i.e., a class of men normally despised, of whatever occupation.

47. heathen. The Greek is ethnikoi, used in 6:7, 18:17, and 3 John 7 to describe Gentiles.

48. true. A rabbinic commentary (TB, Shabbath 133b), quoting a first-century A.D. authority, paraphrases this as: “Be like him. As he is gracious and merciful, so be you gracious and merciful.” The Greek word teleios in this context does not refer to moral perfection, but “truth, sincerity” (cf. Deut 18:13). In this sense, the Greek word is used in the LXX about Noah (Gen 6:9) and Job (1:1). The Greek word in the LXX is linked with tāmîm, and the meaning of the Canaanite-Hebrew word tām, “true,” is the same in both pagan and biblical literature. There are links in Hebrew between tāmîm and ’emeth (truth), and also in the LXX with the Gr. alēthinos, the “true” man. It does not have here the later Greek meaning of being “totally free of imperfection,” which is the meaning found in both the KJ and RSV. Cf. also NOTE on 10:34, and Appendix to Part IX of Introduction.

22. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: ALMSGIVING (6:1–4)

6 ¹“Take care not to perform righteous deeds in public to be a spectacle to men. If you do, you have no reward from your heavenly Father. ² When it comes to almsgiving, do not trumpet it abroad, as the overscrupulous do in the synagogues and the market places, so that they may be praised by men. In solemn truth, I tell you that they already have their reward. ³ But when giving alms, do not let your left hand know what your right hand is doing, so that your almsgiving is in secret. ⁴ Your Father who sees in secret will reward you (openly).

NOTES

6:1. reward. Cf. NOTE on 5:12.

2. overscrupulous. See the Appendix to Part IX of Introduction for the background of this translation. In face of the evidence nothing can justify the continued use of the word “hypocrite” in our English versions.

3. in secret. Cf. “One who does alms in secret is greater than Moses our teacher” (TB, Baba Bathra 9b).

4. (openly). We have bracketed the word, since it does not occur in all the manuscripts, but the structure of the saying seems to us to require the antithesis for balance (cf. vs. 6).

23. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: PRAYER

(6:5–14)[†]

6 ⁵ “When you pray, do not be like the overscrupulous, who love to stand in synagogues and public places to pray, so that they may be in plain view of all. In solemn truth, I tell you that they already have their reward. ⁶ But you, when you pray, go into your room, shut the door, and pray to your Father in secret. Your Father who sees in secret will reward you (openly). ⁷ In praying, do not heap up empty phrases as the Gentiles do, for they suppose that they will be heard simply on account of their verbosity. ⁸ Do not be like them; your heavenly Father knows what you need before you ask him. ⁹ Pray like this:

‘Our Father in heaven, may your name be held in honor.

¹⁰ Let your Kingdom come,
let your will be done,
as in heaven, so also on earth.

¹¹ Give us today the food we need.

¹² And release us from our debts as we also release our debtors.

¹³ Do not bring us into the final test but save us from the Evil One.’

¹⁴ If you forgive men their offenses, your heavenly Father will forgive you, ¹⁵ but if you do not forgive men, neither will your Father forgive your offenses.

NOTES

6:5. It should be emphasized here that this is no condemnation of praying in a synagogue or public place as such.

6. will reward you. This does not refer to an answer to prayer, but reward for lack of ostentation.

7. Gentiles. See NOTE on 5:47.

verbosity. The Greek word (battalogein) can be used of stammering, and so of constant repetition. Battos (stammerer) and cognate words suggest constant repetition rather than continually interrupted speech.

9–13. Luke has the Lord's prayer in a shorter form, and in a different context (Luke 11:1–4). Matthew presumably included the prayer here on account of its suitability to his material, and not necessarily because it was given in this context. In Luke the strongly eschatological context is in part absent (cf. the omission of let your will be done, as in heaven, so also on earth).

Pray like this. I.e., “in this way,” not “in these words.” The constant repetition of the Lord's prayer in public worship has steadily eroded the eschatological urgency of the words almost to the vanishing point. To compound this misunderstanding, we have also forgotten that the clauses of the prayer are in a very real sense “headlines,” which would have suggested other thoughts, allied considerations. The first three clauses pray for the advent of the Kingdom. When this Kingdom has come, God's name (i.e., his person) will be held in honor, his will performed.

Father in heaven. Cf. third NOTE on 5:16. The first hearers would have been reminded of the other titles used of God in the OT—Lord, King, Husband, etc.

may your name be held in honor. The “Name” of God as here used is a thoroughly OT usage. “Knowing the name” of God was equivalent to “fulfilling the terms of the Covenant obligation,” because ancient Israelite covenants were solemnly sworn by invoking the name of God. This followed the general practice of royal treaties of the second millennium B.C., in which the gods of the interested parties were named as witnesses. To know, understand, the name of a person was to know the person himself—cf. Gen 32:28–29. God's name, his person, suffers outrage in the despoliation of his chosen people, and the restoration of the fortunes of Israel was a sanctifying, an “honoring,” of that name (cf. Ezek 36:23). But Israel's sin, which brings upon her the misfortunes which she suffers at the hands of her enemies, is equally a dishonoring of God's name (cf. Isa 43:25, 48:11; Ezek 36:20–22). The juxtaposition of honoring the name of God together with asserting his reign is a common motif, and in its classical form is expressed in the ancient synagogue prayer known as the Kaddish: “May his great name be exalted and sanctified in the world, which he made according to his will. May his kingdom rule, his redemption spring forth, may he bring near his Messiah and save his people, in your lifetime, in your days, in the lifetime of all the house of Israel, quickly and soon. And you shall say, Amen.” (Cf. also 1 Cor 16:22; Rev 22:20.)

10. so also on earth. The whole tenor of Matthew's gospel (cf. Part X of the Introduction) marks a sharp distinction in his material between “the Kingdom of heaven” and “the Kingdom of God,” even though each phrase could be a surrogate for the other. (“Kingdom of heaven” was used in order to avoid use of any word for “God.”) This petition in the prayer looks both to the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom in the present age (“Kingdom of heaven” in Matthew's use), and also to the final consummation (“Kingdom of God”). The prayer then passes to petitions proper to those who await the coming of the Kingdom.

11. Give us today the food we need. The last two words in our translation are our rendering of an obscure Greek word, epiousios. Jerome tells us that the (now lost) Gospel according to the Hebrews had the clause “bread of tomorrow,” and this would fit the sense on two counts: (a) the Gr. hē epiousa hēmera=“tomorrow,” and (b) it harmonizes well with the eschatological content of the first part of the prayer. The disciples are to pray for tomorrow's bread today, since tomorrow would be the day of the Messiah (cf. Exod 16:22 ff.) on which work would not be possible. But this is awkward, for first it would mean that a Greek word was being coined deliberately, when there were already phrases in constant use for “tomorrow,” and secondly, on the face of it, it would not harmonize well with “today.” The word is found in the papyri in the sense of “ration,” and certainly for those waiting for the coming age this sense is appropriate. It is possible that what we have here is a misunderstanding of an Aramaic original which very early was cast into a Greek mold and rendered sacrosanct by use.

12. release us from our debts. Luke at this point has “sins.” Short of keeping man indentured to him, God could deal with man’s debt to him only by his own gracious act. This remission of debt the NT sees as accomplished by the self-giving of Jesus. The cancellation of the disciples’ indebtedness, in the face of the dawning Kingdom, must be met by a like service to their debtors. There is close parallel between the Greek of this clause and the LXX Greek of Deut 15:2. Cf. NOTE on 5:25–26.

13. the final test. Frequently in all the gospel traditions Jesus warns of the distress and tribulation which will mark the end of the present age and the dawning of the Kingdom. The Greek word (peirasmos) was used as meaning “the birth pangs of the Messiah,” and indicated a sharp and bitter struggle between men and forces of evil. This theme of conflict is constantly emphasized in the NT, and Jesus saw his work of exorcism as part of this conflict. Cf. the important article of K. G. Kuhn, “Peirasmos—hamartia—sarx—im Neuen Testament und die damit zusammenhängenden Vorstellungen,” Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche 49 (1952), 200–22, and also “New Light on Temptation, Sin and Flesh in the New Testament,” in The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. Krister Stendahl, London: SCM, 1958.

from the Evil One. Paul’s letters give frequent warnings of the heightened intensity of the devil’s onslaughts in the time of the Kingdom’s inauguration.

The doxology (“for thine is the Kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever, Amen”), which exists in various forms in different manuscripts, was evidently added by copyists who understood from their own use that such was the customary way to end a prayer. On the Lord’s prayer, cf. especially Raymond E. Brown, “The Paternoster as an Eschatological Prayer,” in New Testament Essays, pp. 217 ff.

14. offenses. The word used here, literally meaning a false step, is found only here and in Mark 11:25–26, in the gospels.

COMMENT

The illustrations noted above are collected here by the evangelist to elucidate the injunctions in 5:20, which is concerned with the obedient response of the disciple to the will of God. The illustrations are from the familiar duties of prayer, fasting, and almsgiving, all three being areas in which ostentation is a constant temptation.

24. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: FASTING (6:16–18)

6 ¹⁶ “Whenever you fast, do not (like the overscrupulous) look dismal, for they disfigure their faces to make it obvious to men that they are fasting. In solemn truth, I tell you that they already have their reward. ¹⁷ But when you fast, anoint your head and wash your face, so that it may not be obvious to men that you are fasting, ¹⁸ but to your Father, and your Father who sees in secret will reward you (openly).

NOTES

6:16. On overscrupulous, see Introduction, Appendix to Part IX.

17. anoint your head. It is possible that this is meant in the sense of, e.g., Ps 23:5, that is, of joy and thanksgiving.

18. The Greek of this verse is impossible as it stands (“so that it may not be obvious to men that you are fasting, but to your Father who is in secret, and your Father who sees in secret will reward you”). As the Gr. tō en tō kruphaiō is plainly dittography, we have omitted the clause in italics. The extant Greek recensions of the verse are all likewise impossible. God may be “hidden”—to use the OT phrase—but it is hard to say how he can be “in secret.”

25. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: WEALTH

(6:19–21)[†]

6 ¹⁹ “Do not accumulate wealth for yourselves on earth, where both moth and rust consume, and where thieves break in and steal; ²⁰ but store away for yourselves heavenly treasure, where moth and rust do not consume, and where thieves do not break in and steal. ²¹ Where your wealth lies, there also will be your heart.

NOTES

6:19–21. Detachment with regard to worldly goods is a constant theme in the NT (cf. last part of third paragraph in second NOTE on 5:9). Cf. the following sayings of King Monobazos of Adiabene (A.D. 46–47), who embraced Judaism and in a time of famine gave away all his inherited wealth: “My fathers stored in a place where the hand can reach, but I have stored in a place where the hand cannot reach. My fathers gathered for this world, but I have gathered for the future world.” (TB, Baba Bathra 11a, Tosefta Peah iv 18, references by courtesy of Dr. Moses Aberbach.)

26. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: DISCIPLESHIP AND DETACHMENT

(6:22–34)[†]

6 ²² “The body’s lamp is the eye, and if your eye is healthy then all your body will be full of light, ²³ but if your eye is evil, then all your body will be dark. If the light which is in you is dark, then how dark it will be! ²⁴ No one can be the slave of two owners, for either he will dislike the one and prefer the other, or alternatively be loyal to one and despise the other. You cannot be a slave of both God and wealth. ²⁵ Therefore I tell you not to be overconcerned about eating and drinking, nor about clothing. Is not your life more than eating and drinking, and your body more than clothing? ²⁶ Think of the birds in the sky: they neither sow nor reap, and they do not store in granaries, yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not much more valuable than they? ²⁷ Which of you, by worrying, can add anything to his span of life? ²⁸ And why be so worried about clothing? Reflect on the anemones and the way they grow, for they neither toil nor spin, ²⁹ yet I tell you that even Solomon in all his magnificence was not clothed like one of them. ³⁰ If God thus cares for the weeds, which—living today—are used as fuel for ovens tomorrow, will he not much more care for you, men of little faith? ³¹ Do not therefore be overconcerned with questions such as ‘What shall we eat?’ ‘What shall we drink?’ or ‘What shall we wear?’ ³² for these are pagan worries, and your heavenly Father knows that you need all these things. ³³ But seek first of all God's Kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things will be provided for you. ³⁴ Do not be overconcerned about tomorrow, for tomorrow will do its own worrying. Today's misfortune is enough for today."

NOTES

6:22–23. To lay hold of treasure in heaven, the disciple must have his “inner eye” healthy. The idea expressed here (cf. Luke 11:34) is that just as the body is illuminated by the eye (as though that organ were a window), so there is a spiritual eye, through which the whole spirit of man is either illuminated or in darkness. The two verses might easily be linked with the preceding vss. 19–21, since the “good eye” as a synonym for generosity is well attested in the OT (cf. Deut 15:9; Prov 22:9, 23:6, 28:22; Ecclus 14:10) and in the Pirqê Abôth (Sayings of the Fathers) 5:15. But it would be a mistake to attribute to vss. 22–23 a preoccupation with wealth and possessions, even though the evangelist uses the word haplous (which we have rendered by “healthy”), and which can be translated as “liberal.” However, the context of its parallel in Luke 11:34–36 makes it clear that what is under discussion is the generosity, the humility, which is characteristic of freedom from entanglement, whether of wealth or of any other human consideration.

24. The two preceding verses are in our judgment explained by vs. 24. Despite possible echoes from immediately preceding centuries in our own history, we have chosen the translation “slave” at this point, and so all through the gospel. The slave was in Imperial Rome, as in the earlier Hellenistic world, the absolute property of his owner, who had rights of life and death over him. Nevertheless, it is important to emphasize here that—unlike later types of slavery among Christians and Muslims—the slave in Roman and Hellenistic society could often be a person of considerable education and therefore of consequence in a household. In those ancient times, slaves were generally prisoners of war, and the institution had no racial overtones. Slavery was often preferred to freedom, and men made contracts of servitude to ensure food and shelter for themselves and their families. Though flight was possible to slaves under desperate circumstances, masters were under constant economic pressure to treat slaves with some consideration. This did not apply to state slaves, who frequently worked in intolerable circumstances. The OT allowed for the institution of slavery, but with very precise safeguards. The apostle Paul could call himself a “slave of Jesus-Messiah” (cf. Rom 1:1) to emphasize the absolute rights of the Risen Lord over him, and none would think the expression inappropriate.

25. Rabbi Eliezer the Great (first century A.D.), who was in touch with Christians, quotes a saying of Jesus which is not otherwise attested: “Whoever has a morsel of bread in a basket and says ‘What shall I eat tomorrow?’ is one of those who have little faith” (TB, Sota 48b).

Therefore. Luke uses this connective in quite different context (Luke 12:22) and we might have expected therefore to introduce some conclusion from vs. 24. It is probable that this word gives us an indication that the saying was very early fixed in oral form, and was so reproduced here in Matthew’s collection of sayings.

26. The slave cannot serve two owners, and the disciple will be called upon to choose between God and human well-being (wealth, “mammon,” vs. 24). If he is single-minded, of “sound eye,” he will choose rightly. And if he should ask how he can be assured of human necessities, vss. 25–26 point to God’s provident care for nature.

27. The saying is difficult, and may have been conflated. Pēchus (cubit) is a measure of space, which we have translated simply by “anything,” while hēlikia can mean either stature or span of life. Possibly there were two sayings: “Who can add a cubit to his land, or a day to his life?” The confusion is further illustrated by Luke’s version (Luke 12:25–26), which adds elastichon, presumably referring to “adding to age, or physical growth,” and tōn loipōn, referring to bodily sustenance and clothing. Whether hēlikia be span of life or stature, it is not easy to see how it is “least” compared with the other two as “the rest” (Luke 12:26).

28. anemones. See IDB, III, s.v. “lily,” fifth paragraph.

30. ovens (Gr. kribanos). An earthen oven, in which dead weeds were used for fuel (cf. Liddell and Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon, ad loc., and Dalman, Orte und Wege Jesu, pp. 169, 232).

men of little faith. The word does not occur in Mark, and in Luke only at 12:28. Its use here and at 8:26, 14:31, and 16:8 calls attention to faith as trust in the overruling providence of God.

33. Unhappily it needs to be said here that all these lessons in detachment are not here summed up by an injunction to assume that discipleship will ipso facto produce the necessities of life. This verse, like its predecessors, calls for a searching examination of the disciples' priorities.

to you. The translation of the NEB ("... all the rest will come to you as well.") at this point is indefensible, resting as it does on an assumption that the prefix in prostethēsetai is to be taken literally—a fault common to the KJ also.

enough. The Greek (arketos) is late, and is found before the second century A.D.—outside the NT—only in Josephus (Jewish War III. 130) and one near-contemporary author.

27. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: DISCIPLESHIP

(7:1–14)[†]

7 ¹ “Do not sit in judgment, lest you yourselves be judged, ² for you will be judged by the same standard which you have used. ³ Why look at the splinter in your brother’s eye, if you do not take notice of the beam in your own? ⁴ How dare you say to your brother, ‘Let me take the splinter out of your eye’, when all the time there is a beam in your own eye? ⁵ Casuist! First remove the beam from your own eye, and then you will see clearly in order to remove the splinter from your brother’s eye. ⁶ Do not give what is sacred to dogs, and do not throw pearls in front of pigs, lest they tread them underfoot, and then turn and attack you.

⁷ “Ask, and it will be given you, seek and you will find, knock and the door will be opened for you. ⁸ For he who asks will receive, he who seeks will find, and the door will be opened to him who knocks. ⁹ Who is there among you who will give his son a stone if he asks for bread? ¹⁰ Or if he asks for fish, will he give him a snake? ¹¹ If, then, you who are sinful know how to give good things to your children, how much more will your heavenly Father give good things to those who ask him? ¹² Whatever therefore you wish men to do to you, do the same to them, for this is the meaning of the Law and the prophets.

¹³ “Go in by the narrow gate, for the wide gate and the easy path lead to destruction, and many go that way.

¹⁴ The narrow gate and the hard way lead to life, and few find it.

NOTES

7:1. Luke 6:37 connects this verse with the saying “Be merciful,” which is a good logical connection of material. Cf. “Whoever accuses his neighbor will himself be judged first” (TB, Rosh ha-Shanah 16b).

2. for you will be judged. Mark adds this at 4:24b, in a different context. The saying was common in Jewish literature. Unjustifiable condemnation will always call down upon it the just condemnation of God.

3–4. Cf. Rabbi Tarphon (end first century A.D.): “If one says, ‘Take the mote from thine eye,’ he answers, ‘Take the beam from thine own eye’ ” (TB, Arachin 16b), and (from a commentary on Ruth 1:1) “It was a generation which judged its judges. If the judge said to a man, ‘Take the splinter from between your teeth’ ”—a variant reading has ‘eyes’—“he would retort, ‘Take the beam from between your eyes’ ” (TB, Baba Bathra 16b).

5. On Casuist!, see Introduction, Appendix to Part IX.

6. This saying is found only in Matthew. Its position in Matthew’s tradition belongs to a series of three prohibitions, 6:19–20, 7:1–5.

dogs ... pigs=alien and heathen people (cf. Philip 3:2; Rev 22:15), and pearls would here stand for religious truth (cf. 13:46). As it stands it is capable of being interpreted as a Jewish-Christian proscription against evangelizing Gentiles, but one early document (Syrian? second half of first century A.D.?—cf. J.-P. Audet, La Didaché, applies it to the Eucharist (Didache ix).

7–13. Whatever their original place in any collection which Matthew may have used, the present position of these commands is appropriate, since they follow warnings against the misuse of discipleship.

7–8. Cf. Luke 11:9–10, with identical wording.

9–10. Cf. Luke 11:11–12.

12. This verse seems to be out of place, for Luke has it in a context which deals with duty to others (Luke 6:31). Possibly vss. 7–11 have been at some stage interpolated, and vs. 12 originally followed vs. 6. In negative form, this saying is associated with Hillel the Elder (TB, Shabbath 31a), shortly before the time of Jesus.

13–14. This is the second command. Cf. Luke 13:24. The “two ways” is an OT theme. Cf. Deut 11:26–29 (interpreted in rabbinical tradition as of the “two ways”) and Jer 21:8. The Lukan version is more emphatically eschatological in context than is the position here. But it is likely that we are to see this verse against the context of vss. 22 ff. In this case, Go in by the narrow gate will be understood as meaning that entrance into the Kingdom—whether the Kingdom of heaven or the Kingdom of God—is through a narrow gate.

many ... few. Cf. 2 Esd 8:3: “Many are created, but few will be saved.”

COMMENT

There is no particular logical connection between 6:34 and 7:1, and the material here appears to be a collection of sayings of a moral and quasi-legal character which may have been in current use.

28. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: FALSE TEACHERS

(7:15–20)[†]

7 ¹⁵ “Beware of false prophets, who come to you disguised as sheep; inwardly they are devouring wolves. ¹⁶ You will recognize them by their fruits. Are grapes gathered from thorn bushes, or figs from thistles? ¹⁷ So, every sound tree bears good fruit, but the decaying tree bears bad fruit. ¹⁸ A sound tree cannot bear bad fruit, and a decaying tree cannot produce good fruit. ¹⁹ Every tree which does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. ²⁰ Thus you will recognize them by their fruits.

NOTES

7:16. Cf. Luke 6:44.

17. Cf. Luke 6:43.

18–20. Something of Matthew's method of arranging his material can be seen here. After the warning against false prophets in vs. 15 there is a saying which deals with recognizing such people, a saying which he uses to close the section in vs. 20. But the saying suggested to him familiar sayings about trees and fruit, which he placed at 16b–19. Cf. a similar procedure of using a parable at 20:1–15 to follow on from 19:30, with a conclusion at 20:16 paralleling 19:30.

29. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: FALSE DISCIPLES

(7:21–29)[†]

7 ²¹ “Not everyone who calls me, ‘Lord, Lord,’ will enter into the Kingdom of heaven, but only the man who does the will of my Father who is in heaven. ²² At that time, many will say to me, ‘Lord, Lord, did we not prophesy in your name, cast out demons in your name, and did we not perform acts of power in your name?’ ²³ Then I will declare to them: ‘I never knew you. Go away from me, you evildoers.’ ²⁴ Therefore everyone who hears these sayings of mine and does them, will be like a wise man who built his house on rock. ²⁵ The rain fell, the river flooded, and the wind blew hard on that house. It did not fall, because it was built on rock. ²⁶ But anyone who hears these sayings of mine and does not follow them will be like a foolish man who built his house on sand. ²⁷ The rain fell, the river flooded, and the wind blew hard on that house. It fell, and its fall was very great.”

²⁸ When Jesus had finished saying these things, the crowds were deeply impressed by his teaching, ²⁹ for he taught authoritatively, and not like their scribes.

NOTES

7:21. Cf. Luke 6:46. Cf. also “... strong as a lion to do the will of thy Father who is in heaven” (Pirqê Abôth v 22). The phrase “to do the will” is common in rabbinic writings.

22. At that time (literally in that day) is an expression looking to the end of the present order, i.e., to the judgment. Cf. Luke 13:26.

23. Cf. Luke 13:27.

24–27. Cf. Luke 6:47–49.

29. for he taught ... On the scribes, see Jewish Encyclopaedia, XI (New York and London: Funk & Wagnalls), p. 123. The origin of the designation “scribe” is far from certain, but what Matthew says here helps to explain the implied criticism. Given any body of law, there will inevitably grow up a whole history of interpretation and reinterpretation of that law in the light of changing circumstances and of a changing social and/or economic climate. Inevitably there will be a corresponding growth in the number of clerks, scribes, and recorders of these interpretations, not necessarily skilled in law, but skilled in recording case-law decisions. Such men, even though not trained lawyers, would exercise considerable influence in forming attitudes to the Law, on account of their known and recognized ability to recall the minutiae of case-law decisions. Even today the influence of “managing clerks” in the United Kingdom in solicitors’ and barristers’ offices is considerable.

Yet another empirical factor leads to an emphasis on the importance of those who record decisions. This is the observable tendency in all ages and societies to interpret law in a restrictive sense at the beginning, followed inevitably by an equally observable tendency to interpret in a permissive sense. The history of Christian monasticism in the first eight centuries of church history is an interesting example of this tendency, and the same process is discernible in the history of rabbinic commentaries on the Law.

Note: A comparison between the treatment of the material of the Great Instruction in Matthew with parallel material in Luke is not to our purpose in this commentary. The reader will find an excellent and detailed account in Allen’s ICC St. Matthew commentary, pp. 70–74.

The reader is referred to two works which deal with the Great Instruction. The first, to which reference was made in our COMMENT on vss. 1–12 (§ 13), is Jeremias’ Sermon on the Mount. The second, more recent—and full-length—work is W. D. Davies, The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount, Cambridge University Press, 1964. (This is now available in an abridged paperback, The Sermon on the Mount [Cambridge], intended more for the general reader.) This book has the advantage of taking note of the available literature on the subject, however peripheral. Generally, Davies’ main arguments may be summarized as follows:

(1) The element of crisis in the teaching of Jesus is emphasized, and for all the careful arrangement of material in Matthew, Davies does not feel that this element has been reduced in the process. Davies, accepting the validity of the “Q” hypothesis, finds his proof in the sayings of that collection. He rightly points out that the nearest, if not the only, parallel to this “crisis” element lies in the sectarian writings of Qumran, though here—as Davies points out—the Essenes withdrew, in response to this sense of crisis, into rigidly defined groups centered on an exact keeping of the Law. The author—following Kurt Schubert (“The Sermon on the Mount and the Qumran Texts,” in The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. K. Stendahl)—finds an anti-Essene element in Jesus’ teaching in Matt 5. Davies’ view that Jesus recalled his disciples to “the essential meaning of the Torah” (p. 432) is substantially our own. He finds Jesus deliberately legislating for the new Messianic age.

(2) Davies, willing to consider the idea that Jesus’ words were memorized and transmitted in something like a rabbinic school, sees two divergent traditions resulting: the one, a tendency to treat the words of Jesus as precise regulations, to be used in rabbinic fashion for further interpretation and elucidation; the other, a tendency to draw out from the sayings a single principle from which codes of behavior could be inferred.

(3) Davies considers that the grouping of Matthew’s material reflects or parallels the activity of the rabbinical schools, especially under the influence of the scholars at Jamnia (Yabneh) after the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70. Davies regards the Great Instruction as a “formulation of the way of the New Israel” at a time when rabbinical scholars were similarly working on such a formulation for the people of the Old Covenant under changed circumstances. This, the author holds, accounts for the anti-Pharisaism of Matthew, the characteristics of the genealogy, and various details in the Great Instruction.

We would disagree with parts of this last point. Certainly Jamnia was for a time a center of study, but it is by no means certain just what did happen there. There was, so far as we can at present judge, nothing approaching a “council” of scholars. Moreover, it is possible to exaggerate the importance of Jamnia, and the kind of formulation to which Davies calls attention plainly had a far longer tradition of legal debate in oral process than would appear from Davies’ book. The widespread and lasting consequences of the Jewish dispersion (the “Diaspora”) were such that the sacrificial cultus of the temple was something which affected the majority of Jews only minimally at best. In a very real sense, it was the destruction of Jewish life in Palestine rather than the destruction of the temple which was decisive for Judaism in A.D. 70.

In addition to Davies’ view that the events of A.D. 70 were of paramount importance for the formulation of rabbinic tradition, there is allied with this his option for the priority of Mark as a documentary source for Matthew. This is an option for which we find as yet no overwhelming evidence in favor of its final acceptance as an assured result of biblical scholarship.

30. HEALINGS

(8:1–18)[†]

8 ¹ When he came down from the mountain, great crowds followed him. ² A leper, on coming to him, prostrated himself with the words, “Sir, if you are willing, you are able to cure me.” ³ Then, stretching out his hand, he said, “I am willing. Be cured.” Immediately he was cured of his leprosy. ⁴ Jesus said to him, “Be sure to say nothing to anyone. But go and show yourself to the priest, and make the offering Moses commanded, for proof to them.”

⁵ As he was entering Capernaum, a centurion came up to him with the words, ⁶ “Sir, my servant is lying at home paralyzed, in terrible suffering.” ⁷ He replied to him, “I will come and heal him.” ⁸ But the centurion replied, “Sir, I am unworthy to have you enter beneath my roof. But simply give the word and my servant will be healed. ⁹ For I too am a man under authority, having soldiers under my command. I say to one ‘Go,’ and he goes, to another ‘Come’ and he comes, and to my slave ‘Do this’ and he does it.” ¹⁰ Jesus was surprised at hearing this, and said to those who followed him, “I declare to you that I have not found such faith, even in Israel. ¹¹ I tell you that many will come from east and west and will take their place with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the Kingdom of heaven, ¹² while the sons of the Kingdom will be thrown into outer darkness. There will be shrieking and grinding of teeth.” ¹³ Jesus said to the centurion, “Go. As you have believed, so let it be.” And his servant was cured at that moment.

¹⁴ When Jesus came into Peter’s house, he saw Peter’s mother-in-law lying sick with a fever; ¹⁵ he touched her hand, the fever left her, and she rose and served him.

¹⁶ That evening they brought to him many who were devil-possessed. He cast out the spirits with a command and healed all those who were sick. ¹⁷ So was fulfilled the saying of the prophet Isaiah:

“He himself took our infirmities and bore our diseases.”

¹⁸ When Jesus saw the crowds around him, he gave orders to go across the lake.

NOTES

8:1. This verse can hardly be anything but a connecting link with 7:28–29, and is not intended to be a chronological note.

2. leper. Various skin ailments were often included under the general term leprosy (Gr. lepra), and it is important not to see here an indication that one of the three types of Hansen's disease is necessarily indicated. The same word would also cover elephantiasis, psoriasis, and vitiligo (depigmentation of skin). Hansen's disease (first isolated in 1871) is certainly the most important, and is the disease to which the term leprosy is now properly applied. (Cf. Encyclopaedia Britannica, 1960 ed., XIII, ad loc.) A type of Hansen's disease may well be indicated here, but the Greek word would obviously give us no help. Whatever the affliction in question here, the prescriptions of the Mosaic Law would hold (cf. Lev 13–14). The Jewish Encyclopaedia, VIII, ad loc., will give details of the Talmudic regulations.

prostrated himself. See NOTE (on proskunēsai) on 2:2.

Sir. The Gr. kurios is ambivalent. See Part XII of the Introduction. It is common in this gospel, and in Luke, as a mode of address to Jesus, but is used only twice in Mark.

to cure. The Greek is a late word, and very infrequent outside the LXX and the NT. It is used once in Josephus (Antiquities XI. 153).

3. At this point Mark's account represents Jesus as "having pity," and in some manuscripts as "being angry" or "deeply stirred." It might be assumed that Matthew, with Mark's account before him, deliberately omitted the phrase in the interests of reverence for the person of Jesus. But Matthew never mentions human emotion with respect to Jesus except four occasions of his "having pity." It is just as likely that Matthew's account, assuming it to be wholly independent of Mark, may well represent a tradition which found itself puzzled by what we would call the human personality of Jesus, and so preferred to maintain silence. The assumption that Matthew, having read Mark, revolted against the idea of an emotional Jesus on grounds of reverence makes little sense when seen in the light of the gospel according to John. For if Matthew is late, and John also (as most critics agree), then what is to be said of John 11:28–44? The fact is that the emotions of characters in narrative literature in the ancient world are hardly ever mentioned. It will be recalled that, apart from anger, there are very few occurrences of human emotion recorded of any character in the OT.

4. for proof to them. In view of this injunction to silence, lest Jesus' ministry be compromised by a reputation as a wonder-worker, it is important to note that the proof referred to here was not proof of a cure. The priests would certainly assure themselves of a cure before allowing an offering to be made. The proof in question was that of Jesus' allegiance to the Law, and this fact may well have dictated Matthew's placing of the incident here (cf. COMMENT following).

5. entering Capernaum. Mark's account of the foregoing incident has the healed man immediately publicizing an account of his cure, embarrassing Jesus to the extent that he was unable to enter any town openly. If Matthew was aware of Mark's account, to have included Mark's ending would have precluded the connection with the next incident. But Luke agrees with Matthew in omitting the man's disobedience and its results. Either (a) Luke shares Matthew's reverential attitude in respect to Jesus and finds disregard of Jesus' command unthinkable, or (b) both Matthew and Luke drew upon a tradition known to both but independent of Mark, or (c) we may see the hand of a copyist or editor at work shaping a future ecclesiastical attitude to the work and ministry of Jesus. If the third option is correct, it is astonishing that Paul should have stumbled so early into this editorial trap (of a reverential attitude to Jesus), even before the tradition was committed to writing. It is well to remind ourselves that (unlike later ages) the evangelists saw no moral or theological question involved in accounts of miracles, and therefore felt entirely free to omit or recount details, to arrange material where it best suited the immediate purpose, or even to omit material altogether. In attempting ingenious guesses as to the motives which led to this, that, or the other item being present or absent in the gospel material, it is well not to try to build a pyramid on its apex.

5–7. The centurion was almost certainly a Gentile, though he may have been a God-fearer, and therefore presumably reluctant to bring the sufferer to one whom he knew only as a Jewish healer. In the synoptic gospels the only occasion on which Jesus himself went to the sick is in the case of Jairus' daughter (Mark 5:23–24, 35–43; Luke 8:41–42, 49–56).

7. I will come. The clause may also be translated as a question: “Shall I come?” Whichever way the translation is made, the essential point is that Jesus is prepared to have dealings with a Gentile, and by implication to enter his house. This was not forbidden by the Mosaic Law, but was certainly not regarded favorably by rabbinic legislation.

8. servant. The Greek can also mean “child,” but it is definitely “servant” in this context.

9–10. faith. Whether the centurion thought that Jesus had effective control over heavenly agencies, and so could heal, is beside the point. For Jesus, the striking thing was the man's faith, the word pistis being used here as it is in most parts of the NT as meaning trust and confidence in the power of God.

11–12. For these verses, cf. Luke 13:28–30. Theologically, the best-known exponent of faith as the one condition by which all men are able to respond to the call of God, and so enter the Kingdom, is Paul in Galatians and Romans. In the synoptic gospels the same concept is embodied in the parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15:11–32). Loyal trust is demanded of the rightful heir (Israel), whereas when the alienated (the Gentiles) demonstrate that faith, that trust, they are given equal place in the Kingdom.

11. will take their place. I.e., “will take their place at table with.” The usual practice at this time was to recline at table, though sitting at table also had an honorable and lengthy history. The Messianic Banquet was a common Jewish theme (cf. Pirqê Abôth iii 20; Parables of Enoch xlii 5) and is found in the NT (cf. 26:29; Luke 14:15–24; Rev 3:20, 19:9).

12. sons of the Kingdom. I.e., the rightful heirs. Cf. 13:38. Similar phrases are found in Jewish literature (cf. TB, Shabbath 153a; Pesachim 8a).

outer darkness. As the just punishment for faithlessness, this expression is found in the intertestamental writings. Cf. Enoch ciii 8; Pss Sol 14:6, xv 11; Sibylline Oracles iv 43. For the rabbinical references, cf. StB, ad loc.

shrieking and grinding of teeth. This is a common expression in Matthew (13:42, 50, 22:13, 24:51, 25:30) and occurs once in Luke (13:28). Cf. also Enoch ciii 8; Parables of Enoch xl 12.

13. at that moment. Healing coincidental with the words of Jesus occurs also at 9:22, 15:28, 17:18.

14–16. Cf. Mark 1:29–34. The details which Mark supplies are understandable on the usual theory of Mark's dependence on Petrine reminiscence. The details in Mark 1:29 (assuming that Matthew knew them) would be out of place here, since Matthew's scheme takes no account of an incident in the Capernaum synagogue which Mark records.

16. command. The Greek is the same as that for word in vs. 8.

17. The series of healings is concluded with the quotation from Isa 53:4. On this, and the whole question of OT quotations in this gospel, cf. Introduction, Part IV. The quotation here is wholly independent of the Greek of the LXX.

took ... bore. The Greek words (lambanein and bastazein) can be understood as Jesus' taking away, carrying away, the afflictions of the person healed, or as taking, carrying vicariously those afflictions. In the total context of Isa 53, the identification of Jesus with the Servant would appear to demand far more than a mere removal of suffering. Indeed, the healings here seem to be a “typical” collection, designed to illustrate the Servant-Messiah theme of the OT quotations. In that case, the omission of details, if the evangelist knew them, would be deliberate, as tending to obscure the empowering act or word of the Servant-Messiah in his bearing of the sufferings of men.

COMMENT

There are three healings in this section; Matthew's habit of arranging material in easily remembered groups is a phenomenon to which attention has already been called (cf. Introduction, Part IV). There is a parallel in Mark to the first incident, but in that gospel the healing of the leper is without any details of place or occasion. So far as Matthew is concerned it may be surmised that the incident of the leper is placed first because it gives an indication of the attitude of Jesus to the Law (vs. 4) and is thus particularly appropriate as following after the Great Instruction.

Any comparison at this point with Mark's order must assume that Matthew had read Mark and had deliberately changed the Markan order. (Cf. 8:1–18 and Mark 1:29–34, 40–45.) Unless that assumption is made, then we must suppose that Matthew's tradition, which had two healings also found in Mark, had those accounts in no particular order.

31. AN INQUIRER

(8:19–22)[†]

8 ¹⁹ A scribe came to him and said, “Teacher, I will follow you wherever you go.” ²⁰ Jesus replied, “The foxes have holes, and the birds in the sky have nests, but The Man has nowhere to lie down.”

²¹ Another, (not one) of the disciples, said to him, “Sir, allow me first to go and bury my father.” ²² But Jesus replied, “Follow me, and let the dying bury their dead.”

NOTES

8:19. Luke's version (9:57) simply has "someone" (Gr. tis), and only Matthew identifies the man as a scribe.

20. The Man. It has become increasingly clear in the past two years that the translation Son of Man, however accurate as a literal rendering of the Gr. huios tou anthrōpou, and however euphonic in English, is inadequate. We have discussed this title more fully in the Introduction, Parts VI and XII, and in the light of a recent work by Fitzmyer (The "Genesis Apocryphon" of Qumran Cave I, especially p. 134), we have used The Man throughout our translation. It carries more weight as emphasizing the representative character of Jesus' ministry as the evangelist sees it, and certainly is more faithful to the original Hebrew/Aramaic. Cf. recently J. Massingberd Ford, "'The Son of Man'—A Euphemism?" JBL 87 (1968), 257–67. This article, if its main contention stands, sheds a good deal of light on the title, not only in the NT but possibly also in the intertestamental literature.

21. Another, (not one). The Lukan version of the incident sets the two inquirers in the context of the journey to Jerusalem (Luke 9:51, 57–62). Moreover, in that narrative it is clear that (as in vs. 19 above) a man comes to Jesus with a question—i.e., he is not a member of the company. The same Lukan narrative also refers to another posing a question about obligations to home and family. Alongside the Lukan narrative, this verse as it stands in the Greek in Matthew is odd. Jesus would by this time have been fully aware of the home circumstances of his disciples, the legal requirement of burial within twenty-four hours would not have posed an intolerable delay in the following of Jesus, and the third inquirer in Luke (9:61) is obviously not of the inner circle of the Twelve. We therefore come to the conclusion that the Greek text in Matthew must be defective, particularly in view of the care taken by the evangelist to confine the word "disciple" to the Twelve. At present, the text reads: heteros de tōn mathētōn eipen autō: "another of the disciples said to him." Now de is a particle which is so frequent in the NT (nearly 400 times, 51 of them in Matthew) that it is difficult to decide on occasion whether it is to be ignored or taken note of. But it is also frequently joined to the negative, as oude (26 times in Matthew out of a total of 137 in the NT). We conclude that the Greek must originally have read heteros oude tōn mathētōn, on grounds of haplography between the final syllable of heteros and the first of oude. The dropping of ou would be relatively easy in times when there were no gaps between words in manuscripts. Our translation as it appears in the text is revised to the extent of putting our suggested amendment in parentheses. We claim that hereby justice is done to the text in three directions: de reads oddly in the present text, and our version renders it explicable; it is more faithful to the Matthean use of "disciple"; and it is incidentally more easily reconcilable with the Lukan account.

22. dying ... dead. This is either a proverbial saying otherwise unknown to us, or—again linking the incident with another inquirer in Luke (9:61–62)—we are to see in this saying a call to sacrificial service (cf. 19:29). It is possible, however, that there is yet another meaning here. The Lukan context (9:51–62) appears to argue the ending of the old dispensation in the face of the new Kingdom proclaimed by Jesus. In that event, if Matthew's narrative here has the same meaning, then the inquirer is being directed to look to the future, to leave a dying cause behind him. Whether this is meant to refer to the Israel of the Old Covenant, or whether the inquirers were formerly adherents of John the Baptist, we are in no position to know. It must be remembered that in several Semitic languages, including Hebrew/Aramaic, the word for dead can also mean dying, and we have so rendered the Greek here.

COMMENT

Three stories of healings are linked with three stories of miracles of power by an interpolated story of two inquirers. The whole cycle—three healings, two inquirers, three miracles of power—would make for easier memorizing of oral tradition.

32. CALMING THE STORM

(8:23–27)[†]

8 ²³ When he got into the boat, his disciples followed him. ²⁴ Then a great storm arose on the sea, so that the boat was being swamped by the waves, but he was asleep. ²⁵ They went and awoke him: “Sir, save us, or we are lost!” ²⁶ He said to them, “Why are you afraid, you men of little faith?” Then he stood up, gave orders to the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm. ²⁷ Men wondered: “What sort of man is he, that the winds and the sea are obedient to him?”

NOTES

In the light of the comments made in the Introduction (Part X) on the subject of the “nature miracles,” there is no call for elaboration here. Both Matthew and Luke appear to be working from a tradition which differs from that of Mark. Matthew (vs. 23) and Luke (8:22) insert a note about embarkation. In Mark (4:35) Jesus is already in the boat, and there is also verbal Greek agreement between Matt 8:25 and Luke 8:24, as also between vs. 27 and Luke 8:25.

Mark’s account is far more vivid, arguing personal reminiscence from Mark’s source (especially in details like the cushion in Mark 4:38, and the anguished cry to Jesus in the same verse).

26. little faith. Cf. second NOTE on 6:30. The phrase is used four times in Matthew. The Markan version is more forceful (Mark 4:40) faith. As has already been pointed out, faith in the gospels means trust, confidence in the providence of God. It is reading too much into the question to see it as necessarily an appeal for loyalty to, or trust in, Jesus himself.

27. Men. In vs. 23 we have his disciples, where Mark 4:36 has they. It is possible to assume, as is commonly done, that Matthew used Mark’s account, softened its harshness (cf. vs. 25=Mark 4:38; vs. 26=Mark 4:40) and then, unable to have the disciples being “greatly afraid” (Mark 4:41) reverted to “men” here. This kind of revision seems somewhat unnecessary, since whatever the reactions of the disciples (and Matthew seldom tells us much in this regard), men who heard of or possibly witnessed the incident from the shore would certainly be amazed and wonder.

Grammatically, there was a tendency in Koine Greek to overdo the generic article, and it is no wonder that translators misunderstood an original Aramaic in which there was no distinction between the definite and the indefinite article.

33. THE GADARENE DEMONIACS

(8:28–9:1)[†]

8 ²⁸ When he came to the other shore, to the country of the Gadarenes, two men who were demon-possessed, on their way out of the tombs, met him, men so fierce that no one could pass on that road. ²⁹ They called out, “What have you to do with us, Son of God? Have you come to torment us before the time?” ³⁰ Now a large herd of pigs was feeding at some distance from them, ³¹ and the demons pleaded, “If you cast us out, allow us to go into the herd of pigs.” ³² He said to them, “Go,” and on coming out they went into the pigs, and all the herd rushed headlong down a steep place into the sea and were drowned in the water. ³³ The herdsmen fled, came into the city, and told everything and what had become of the demon-possessed. ³⁴ All the city came to Jesus, and on seeing him begged him to leave their district.

9 ¹ So getting into the boat he departed and went to his own city.

NOTES

Matthew's account of this incident is far shorter than Mark's (seven verses against twenty), less detailed, and it is possible that the evangelist is also taking account of an incident recorded in Mark 1:21–28 by speaking of two demoniacs instead of one. The same consideration may also account for Matthew's two blind men in 20:30. If the evangelist's tradition was vague where Mark's was detailed, we would expect this kind of combination to occur.

8:28. Gadarenes. There is textual confusion in the Greek here, as there is also in Mark 5:1 (though in that instance "Gerasenes" is probably right). The more important Gerasa was thirty miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee, and in Mark \(5:1\) the adjective Gerasenes is a geographical point of some importance. Matthew has Gadara,* a place only six miles southeast of the lake, and the assumption in this verse is that the incident took place soon after the party landed. Moreover this was Gentile territory (as evidenced by the herd of pigs), and when the meeting took place the herd was at some distance (vs. 30), implying that Jesus had walked some way from the shore.

tombs. Ritually unclean (cf. 23:27), tombs were regarded as fitting homes for demons and the demoniacs.

29. What have you to do with us? Literally in the Greek idiom this is "What is there between us and you?"—i.e., why are you interfering with our proper preserve?

Son of God. The two men, possessed by demons who have spiritual insight, identify Jesus as one possessing healing power, or possibly even using the address as the equivalent of "Messiah."

before the time. According to Enoch xv–xvi, demons have power to torment men until the day of judgment, and the demons ask that they be not cut short before that time.

31. demons (Gr. daimones). It was pointed out in ch. 4 that this word must not be taken as the equivalent of devil (Gr. diabolos). Demons were regarded as good, bad, or even neutral, but they could take possession of men and completely change their personality. Some useful modern material—for those who find the NT view too naïve—may be found in William W. Sargant's Battle for the Mind, New York: Doubleday/London: Heinemann, 1957.

31–32. Demons must have some kind of "base of operations" (cf. 12:43), but though they are given leave by Jesus to find such in the herd of pigs, even this fails them, for the pigs are drowned. Such "panic" behavior in many species of animals is well attested, but we have no means of knowing how such a panic might actually have occurred on the occasion to which this incident refers.

33–34. In Mark's account, the city dwellers come out and see the demoniac restored to health (5:14–17), but here it is Jesus who is the center of attention.

begged him to leave. Cf. 10:14 f.

34. THE QUESTION OF AUTHORITY

(9:2–8)[†]

9 ² They brought to him a paralyzed man lying on his bed, and when Jesus saw their faith he said to the paralytic, “Take courage, my child, your sins are forgiven.” ³ Certain scribes said to one another, “This man is blaspheming.” ⁴ Jesus, however, discerning their thoughts, said to them: “Why are you harboring evil thoughts in your minds? ⁵ Which is easier: to say ‘Your sins are forgiven,’ or to say ‘Get up and walk’? ⁶ But so that you may know that The Man has authority on earth to forgive sin”—he then said to the paralytic—“Rise, take your bed and go home.” ⁷ Whereupon he rose up and went home. ⁸ Seeing this, the crowds were awestruck and glorified God for giving such authority to men.

NOTES

9:2. In several places, Mark (2:1, 3:20, 9:28, 10:10) has indeterminate references to “a house,” which would seem to imply that Jesus had some regular home or lodging in Capernaum. Matthew’s version, in all instances where it parallels Mark, has no such reference.

brought (Gr. prosepheron). A favorite word in Matthew, who uses it, in all, fifteen times.

your sins are forgiven. The breaking of the power of sin and of the dominion of evil is one of the signs of the dawning Kingdom. See COMMENT on 4:1–11 (§9).

faith. Cf. NOTE on 8:9–10.

3. blaspheming. Mark’s version makes the charge of the scribes explicit: “Who can forgive sins, except God?” (Mark 2:7). The synoptists agree with John that the hostility to Jesus centered principally on his enemies’ understanding of what Jesus’ words and deeds implied—cf. John 5:18, 8:48–59.

5. Jesus’ question is not an invitation to watch a demonstration of miraculous power either as a proof of divinity or of his own power to heal. It is a challenge to accept or reject his claim that the reign of God was visibly breaking in. Both healing and forgiveness, even though the former is more dramatically visible, are signs of a restoration of God’s order to the disorder in the world. Cf. Introduction, Part X.

sins. Sickness and disease were commonly regarded both in the OT and in the time of Jesus as being the direct result of the sufferer’s sins, and it is a belief that should not be completely ignored in considering this passage. In this particular instance we have no means of knowing the circumstances of the case. The sufferer’s circumstances may easily have been known to Jesus, for he was by now well known in Capernaum. In addition, our own age has become increasingly aware of the problems posed by psychosomatic conditions.

6. The Man. Cf. NOTE on 8:20. It is difficult to see why some commentators have been at pains to wonder whether either Mark (or Matthew) here misunderstood, or an editor misread, his sources, and rendered The Man (Son of Man) for a simple “men.” What was in dispute was not the obligation of men to forgive each other for wrongs done to each other—every devout Jew was aware of that obligation. What was in question was the authority Jesus claimed from heaven to remit the sins of men (cf. Dalman, Words of Jesus, p. 261).

8. crowds. The contrast is often made in Matthew between the faith, trust, of the disciples and/or the crowds on the one hand, and the unbelief of Jesus’ critics on the other.

to men. The Greek construction allows us to read “on behalf of men.” In this case, the crowds would be awestruck not only by the healing, but also that to Jesus authority had been given for the sake of man’s salvation.

COMMENT

This, the third event in the second group of healings, is of cardinal importance in the Matthean scheme, for it brings clearly into focus the problem of authority which had been briefly raised in 7:29. What had been then a matter of authority in words now passes into a question concerning the authority of the Messiah in action. Whether Matthew's tradition originally had the same details as Mark's, we are in no position to know, but the shorter account which we have here has the effect of emphasizing the rising hostility of the scribes to Jesus. Mark's vivid account to some extent obscures this, for his word picture has the effect of concentrating our attention on the attendant hazards of bringing the paralytic to Jesus and on the faith which overcame those hazards.

There are differences between Mark and Luke also, and agreements between Matthew and Luke against Mark. If these agreements against Mark are to be regarded purely as revision of Mark's work by the other two evangelists, then it is hard to see why Luke should omit the reference to Capernaum (Mark 2:1) by the somewhat clumsy introduction in his own version (Luke 5:17–18). The reason for Matthew's omission of any mention of Capernaum by name (9:1) is obvious enough: he has already established (4:13) that this town was the center of Jesus' activity. It is simpler to suppose that Matthew and Luke were working from sources wholly independent of Mark.

35. THE CALL OF MATTHEW

(9:9–13)[†]

9 ⁹ As he went on from there, Jesus saw a man called Matthew sitting in the tax collectors' office, and said to him, "Follow me." He arose and followed him. ¹⁰ While he was in the house, many tax collectors and non-observant Jews came and sat with Jesus and his disciples. ¹¹ When the Pharisees saw this, they said to his disciples, "Why does your Master eat with tax collectors and non-observant (Jews)?" ¹² However, he heard them and replied, "Those who are well have no need of a physician—only those who are sick. ¹³ Go and learn what this means: 'I desire mercy and not sacrifice.' I did not come to call the righteous, but sinners."

NOTES

9:9. Matthew. Greek Matthaios reflects Hebrew and Aramaic Mattay, a shortened form of Mattathias (Mattatyahu). Greek Matthias represents Hebrew and Aramaic Matyā, another shortened form of the same name.

tax collectors' office. Capernaum was on the side of the lake, and the tax office was presumably on the outskirts of the town.

arose and followed. This idiom is common in the Hebrew of the OT.

10. non-observant (Jews). The more usual “sinners” obscures the issue, here and in vs. 13. The tax collector was regarded by Jews of that time as a sinner not so much because he was the tool of the occupying power, or because he was regarded by the more rigorous as being a servant of the Herodian house, but more because he had to handle currency with pagan inscriptions and pagan iconography. And since many of these tax collectors were corrupt and regularly accepted bribes, the whole profession had come to have a bad reputation.

sat. Those visiting in the circumstances depicted here would sit on rugs or mats on the floor, with legs crossed, while others would stand. It would be possible to accommodate some thirty to forty people in the small house of a tax collector.

11. It is the Pharisees, with their insistence on precise adherence to the letter of the Law as interpreted to cover specific cases, who criticize Jesus. The following verse gives the whole keynote of the NT—later to be given theological treatment in the Pauline letters—that what is demanded of the would-be entrant into the Kingdom is faith, loyal trust. There is no demand for a prior conversion of life and conduct, and entrance into the Kingdom is not a reward for moral rectitude. This emphasis is in marked contrast to the demands of the Essenes, for whom entrance into the community was the result of a righteousness already attained.

13. The quotation of Hos 6:6 in this verse is also found at 12:7, and it is in the words of both the Hebrew and the Greek OT. The reply of Jesus is ironic: it is often those who think they have no need of a physician who really need him most.

to call. The same Greek verb is used of inviting to a feast in 22:3, 4, 8–9. On the Messianic Banquet, cf. NOTE on 8:11.

righteous ... sinners. The contrast is common in the Qumran literature, where the words are ṣaddîq and rāshāʿ, both singular, both generic. Here the Greek word dikaioi (righteous) does not connote the rejection of the righteous in the sense of those devoted to the Law, but rather the rejection of the self-designated righteous (cf. Gal 2:17).

COMMENT

Here the man whose name is associated with the gospel as author is introduced as though to provide an authentication of his right to record the tradition. The name Matthew occurs only once more, at 10:3. Our views on the authorship of this gospel are given in the Introduction, Part XIII.

36. JOHN'S DISCIPLES

(9:14–17)[†]

9 ¹⁴ Then the disciples of John came to him with the words, “Why do we and the Pharisees fast often, while your disciples do not fast?” ¹⁵ Jesus said to them, “Can the wedding guests mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? The time will come when the bridegroom is taken away from them—then they will fast

¹⁶ No one puts a piece of unworn cloth on an old garment, for the patch tears away from the garment and the damage is made worse. ¹⁷ New wine is not put into old wineskins. If it is, then the skins burst, the wine is lost and the skins are destroyed. But new wine is put into new wineskins, and both are preserved.”

NOTES

9:14. Mark's language at this point (Mark 2:18) suggests that the incident took place during one of the statutory periods of fasting.

15. wedding guests (literally "sons of the bridal chamber") is a Semitism.

as long as (Gr. eph' hōson). The Greek indicates that the wedding festivities might last some days.

the bridegroom is with them. Here we might have expected some phrase that would indicate the impossibility of fasting during a wedding celebration. But the bridegroom's presence is emphasized as pointing to a time when he will not be there. It is not necessary to see in this a prophecy after the event, inserted by the early community to explain either the crucifixion or the early Christian custom of fasting. Jesus can hardly have been unaware of the well-nigh inevitable consequences of his proclamation of the reign of God. A violent end could safely be predicted for one making such a proclamation, either at the hands of the Roman authority, or at the hands of a mob (especially a disappointed one).

16–17. Matthew links these two verses with the previous saying by the particle de, but the precise connection of these two verses with the preceding is not very clear. The contrast between old and new is obvious enough, but does the verse in its present position intend to suggest that the proclamation of the reign of God and the Messianic Age will expose the weaknesses of Judaism as Jesus found it—i.e., would the proclamation lay bare the dangers of relying upon that literal observance of the Law so characteristic of pettifogging lawyers? Or is there here some quite different material?

Verse 17 carries on the thought of the preceding verse, but this time from the point of view of Jesus' teaching. On the usual interpretation Jesus asserts that superimposing the nascent Messianic Community on Judaism would result in serious harm to Judaism, and equally, to confine the Community to Judaism would do irreparable harm to both. (Cf. here Pirqê Abôth iv 20: "Do not look at the jar, but at what it contains. Sometimes a new jar is full of old wine, while an old jar may not even have new wine in it.")

16. patch. The patch being unshrunk, will pull away (as it shrinks) from the rest of the garment. The Greek is plērōma, the noun from Matthew's verb "to fulfill" (plēroun). Rom 9–11 is evidence of the great concern felt about the precise relationship of the Messianic Community to Judaism. On the view that vss. 16–17 are to be regarded as Jesus' teaching on the relationship of his Community to Judaism, then the final clause and both are preserved is either editorial comment, or a misplaced saying from another context in an attempt to deal with the question.

But this must be regarded as unsatisfactory. The whole tenor of Jesus' teaching, in all four gospels, makes it hardly possible to suppose that he looked to a continuance of his Messianic Community and Judaism side by side. Certainly, if vss. 16–17 do deal with Judaism, then Luke's tradition is right in calling the material "parable" (Luke 5:36). However, it is far simpler to treat the two verses, coming as they do in a context which deals with the disciples of John the Baptist, as a judgment by Jesus on the position of John's followers, now that Jesus has proclaimed the dawning reign of God. There is no evidence anywhere in the NT that Jesus ever had anything but the highest regard for John, and the synoptic record is witness that the death of John affected Jesus deeply. But loyalty to John on the part of those who had listened to him, embraced his message, and attached themselves to him was one thing; it was quite another to suppose that that loyalty and attachment was such as to refuse allegiance to Jesus. Now that the Messianic Kingdom had been proclaimed, John's part had been fulfilled, and there could be no room for the new Community and a community of John's disciples, existing together in uncomfortable parallel. (On this point, cf. K. Stendahl, in Peake's Commentary on the Bible, eds. Matthew Black and H. H. Rowley [London and New York: Nelson, 1962], p. 782a.)

COMMENT

This section follows on from the last in the sense that it, too, is an implicit discussion of the place of the Law in the dawning Messianic Age. But the assertion that the Messianic Age has already come in the person of Jesus is followed by the warning that the present time of rejoicing is temporary.

37. HEALINGS

(9:18–34)[†]

9 ¹⁸ While he was talking to them, a ruler came to him, knelt before him, and said, “My daughter has just died. But come and lay your hand on her and she will live.” ¹⁹ Jesus rose up with his disciples and followed him. ²⁰ And a woman who had suffered from a hemorrhage for twelve years came up behind him and touched the hem of his himation, ²¹ for she said to herself, “If I can only touch the fringe of his himation I shall be made well.” ²² Jesus turned around, saw her, and said, “Daughter, take courage. Your faith has made you well.” And from that very hour the woman became well. ²³ Jesus came to the ruler’s house, saw the musicians and the crowd making a great noise, and said, ²⁴ “Go away, the girl has not died, but is sleeping.” They derided him, ²⁵ but when the crowd had been put out, he went in, took her by the hand, and the girl arose. ²⁶ The report of this went all through that district.

²⁷ While Jesus was passing on from there, two blind men followed him crying aloud, “Son of David, take pity on us!” ²⁸ When he entered the house, the blind men came to him and Jesus said to them, “Do you believe that I am able to do this?” They answered him, “Yes, sir.” ²⁹ Then he touched their eyes, saying, “According to your faith so let it be done to you.” ³⁰ Their eyes were opened, and Jesus said to them urgently, “See that no one knows of this.” ³¹ But they went away and spread his reputation through all that district. ³² As they were on their way a dumb demoniac was brought to him, ³³ and when the demon had been exorcized the dumb man spoke; the crowds wondered, saying, “Nothing was ever seen like this in Israel.” ³⁴ (But the Pharisees said, “He casts out demons by the Ruler of Demons.”)

NOTES

9:18. In the Markan narrative (5:21 ff.) the first incident takes place when Jesus is surrounded by crowds on the lakeside. Matthew's account has Jesus sitting in a house talking with his disciples. The Matthean account is shorter, and if Matthew's tradition embodied this incident as it is here, set in a series of healings but without detail, then he was free to place the story where he wanted, lacking details which were known (only?) to the Markan tradition.

ruler. Mark (5:22) adds that it was a synagogue official (hāzān=ruler, functionary) but Matthew assumes that his readers are aware of what is meant. He omits the name of the official (Jairus, Heb. Yā'îr, a common name) which Mark supplies.

knelt. Cf. last NOTE on 2:2. Matthew has no equivalent of the details in Mark 5:23, 35–37.

20. himation. This was an outer garment, a cloak, which in 5:40 we translated by cape. In essence it was a coat with a girdle, worn over the shirt (Gr. chitōn, translated by us as tunic at 5:40). In all instances from this point onwards we have left the Greek himation transliterated.

fringe (Gr. kraspeda). Tassels attached to the corners of a garment (cf. Num 15:38; Deut 22:12). Jesus' accusation (23:5) was that the Pharisees made these ornaments overlarge as a demonstration of piety—though Jesus himself is represented as wearing tassels in 14:36.

20–21. The woman's illness would make her ritually unclean (Lev 15:19 ff.), and in consequence all that she touched would also be unclean.

It is important to see this kind of ritual impurity in perspective. In an age which knew nothing of distinctions between a blood-flow which caused infection and one which did not, it was safer to bracket all such cases together. The extension of the tabu of ritual uncleanness arose from a desire to avoid infection or contagion.

23. musicians (Gr. aulētas)=literally, “flute players.” Here Matthew can draw on his knowledge of Jewish custom, which called for “two flutes and one to wail” even for the poorest funerals (cf. B. Chethuboth 46b). Mark (5:38) is far more vague.

24. died ... sleeping. The word “sleep” was used in the OT to denote death (e.g., Dan 12:2), and the use is continued in the NT. We are in no position to determine whether Jesus was saying of the girl that she was dead, and that it was his mission to proclaim that death no longer was to have the tenor of finality, or whether he was asserting that the girl was not dead but in a coma. The evangelist and the witnesses are certainly represented as believing that a miracle of raising the dead had occurred.

Throughout this section the Matthean and Lukan traditions agree in eight instances in Greek verbal detail against Mark.

27. Matthew's account of the healing of the two blind men is of some special interest. There are two healings of blind men in Mark (8:22–26; 10:46–52). The second of these parallels the account here, and it also involves two blind men. In his account of the curing of the leper (8:2–4), Matthew does not record any cautioning by Jesus that the man remain silent about his cure, though Mark does. Here, however, both Matthew and Mark agree that Jesus urges silence on the cured blind men.

from there. I.e., from the ruler's house.

28. the house. I.e., the house in which Jesus was living in Capernaum.

30. said to them urgently. The Greek word is emphatic, and is also used of men expressing themselves heatedly.

31. spread his reputation. The Greek word occurs in Mark 1:45, and Matthew uses it here and again at 28:15.

32–34. A somewhat similar story is given by Matt 12:22–24 in a context where we might have expected Matthew's tradition of Mark 3:19–21. But there is no mention here of the casting out of the demon, or of healing, as there is in a somewhat similar account in Matt 12:22–24. The whole order is odd, for these verses would have suited the context of 12:25–30 far better than is the case here. It is also notable that Luke (11:14–15)—like Matthew—has a tradition of his own in the context of Mark 3:19–21. If we assume that both Matthew and Luke were using Mark, then it is hard to find any reason why at this particular point both evangelists should have deserted the Markan order. On the theory that both Matthew and Luke had access to Mark, then it is necessary to say that Matthew inserted here a story of conflict with the Pharisees which warned the reader that the ministry of Jesus was not met with universal approval. Again, on the same theory, it is necessary to say that when Matthew came to Mark 3:19–21 he substituted 12:22–24 as being a better introduction to the discourse which follows in Mark 3:23. Generally, however, the simplest solutions are preferable, and it is certainly simpler to assume that Matthew and Luke were both independent of Mark, here as elsewhere.

34. Some manuscripts omit this verse, presumably on the grounds that it was thought to be an assimilation to 12:24. However, in its present position it does illustrate a point which Matthew constantly makes—the welcome of the crowds compared with the hostility of some sections of Judaism.

Suggestions have been made that the whole complex 8:1–9:34 contains ten miracles (though 9:18–26 encloses one miracle narrative within another, and so may be counted as one). This, it has been suggested, is in accord with an emphasis on series of ten miracles in Pirqê Abôth (v 5, 8). This is ingenious, but it ignores the fact that ten is certainly not, as a number, confined to miracles. Evidence for the use of the number ten in other areas can be found in Allen's ICC St. Matthew commentary, p. 94. There is, however, a certain arrangement of material in this section just completed, which deserves some mention.

The Greek verb sōzein, “to make well, restore,” and—in large areas of the NT—“to save,” is used three times in 9:21–22. Attention has already been called to the Messianic work of restoring order and unity to God's creation (Part X of the Introduction); the disciples will be called upon to join in this work in 10:7 ff. With this in mind, it is of more than passing significance to read the whole section in the light of Isa 35. There we have exhortations to courage (vss. 3–4; cf. Matt 9:22), assertions of God's visitation in order to save (vs. 4; cf. 9:18, 22), demonstrations of the majesty of God (vs. 2; cf. 9:33), and then there are by means of the miracle narratives specific illustrations of the divine work mentioned in Isa 35. There are men who receive their sight (vs. 5; cf. Matt 9:27–29), dumb who hear and speak again (vs. 6; cf. 9:32–33), and the ritually unclean are restored to the community (vs. 8; cf. 9:20–22). It is difficult to suppose that this parallel in material should not have been present to the mind of the evangelist when he arranged his material, and from our examination of the OT background of Matthew (Part IV of the Introduction) it is probable that Isa 35 was a model for the arrangement of this block of narrative.

COMMENT

If we accept Stendahl's suggestion that vss. 16–17 apply to the relationship between Jesus and the disciples of John, then this description of the three healings, dealing as it does with the blind, the deaf, and the dead, anticipates the questions about Messiahship to come in 11:5.

38. MISSION AND DISCIPLESHIP (9:35–38)

9 ³⁵ Jesus went through all the towns and villages, teaching in their synagogues, proclaiming the Freedom of the Kingdom, and healing every disease and infirmity. ³⁶ When he saw the crowds he felt deeply for them because they were troubled and helpless, like sheep without a shepherd. ³⁷ Then he said to his disciples, “There is an abundant harvest, but there are few workers. ³⁸ Therefore ask the chief harvester to send workers into his harvest.”

NOTES

9:35. Freedom. On this translation, see NOTE on 4:23.

36. felt deeply. The Greek word (splanchnizesthai) is well represented in the synoptic gospels and in the LXX.

troubled. The meaning of the Greek (eskulmenoi) ranges very widely indeed, from being flayed, to being concerned, vexed, bewildered, despondent.

helpless. Literally, “prostrate,” either from drunkenness or from a mortal wound.

sheep without a shepherd. Cf. Num 27:17; 1 Kings 22:17; Ezek 34:5.

38. chief harvester. In Aramaic, the phrase rab ḥeṣādā means the person responsible for hiring and dismissing harvest workers.

Luke (10:2) has the words of vss. 37–38 at the beginning of the mission of the seventy disciples.

COMMENT

This short section provides both a conclusion to chapter 9 and a fitting introduction to chapter 10. The evangelist has summarized the teaching of Jesus, placing it firmly in the context of the Old Covenant (chs. 5–7), and has given examples of how the awaited Messiah went about the work of healing and restoration. Now it is time to introduce the inner circle of disciples as the men who will carry on the Messianic activity.

39. THE MISSION OF THE TWELVE

(10:1–15)[†]

10 ¹ Calling to him his twelve disciples, he gave them authority to cast out evil spirits, and to heal every disease and every infirmity.

² The names of the twelve apostles are: first, Simon, called Peter, and his brother Andrew, James and his brother John, sons of Zebedee, ³ Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew the tax collector, James (son of Alphaeus), Thaddaeus (called Lebbaeus), ⁴ Simon the Zealot, and Judas Iscariot, who was to betray him. ⁵ These twelve Jesus sent on a mission, charging them as follows: “Do not go along the route of the Gentiles, and do not enter a Samaritan town (again). ⁶ Go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and ⁷ as you go, proclaim that the Kingdom of heaven is fast approaching. ⁸ Heal the sick, cure lepers, cast out demons. You received without paying anything—give without payment. ⁹ Do not carry gold, silver, or copper coin in your belts, ¹⁰ no bag for your journey, nor two tunics, nor sandals, nor a staff. The worker deserves his keep. ¹¹ Find out who is suitable in any town or village you enter, and stay there until you leave. ¹² As you enter the house, greet it, and ¹³ if the house is deserving, then let your blessing rest upon it. If it is undeserving, let your blessing return to you. ¹⁴ If anyone will not receive you, or listen to your words, then on your departure from that house or town, shake off the dust from your feet. ¹⁵ I solemnly declare to you that Sodom and Gomorrah will be in happier case on the day of judgment than that town.

NOTES

10:1. authority. Matthew has already spoken of the authority of Jesus (7:28 f., 9:6) in teaching and in work. Here he depicts Jesus transmitting this authority to the disciples. Cf. also 9:8; 28:18.

2. The names of the twelve apostles are.* This phrase has commonly been held to be editorial, which may or may not be correct. It may well also be a parenthetic note introduced by the author. The word apostle occurs only here in Matthew, but the concept of “sending on a mission,” from which the noun derives, is common in this gospel; cf. vs. 5 below as a typical example. If our interpretation of Matthew’s scheme is correct (see COMMENT following this section), then there would be no call to use the word again, and 28:19 gives the commission of the apostles as clearly as does John 20:21.

first. In a list such as we have here, the word is redundant unless it refers to the leadership of the Twelve by Peter.

Simon. See NOTE on 4:18. Note that Matthew arranges all brothers in pairs in this list.

Andrew is a Greek name, like Philip in vs. 3, but this must obviously not be taken to mean that the names indicated that the men were Greeks.

3. Bartholomew. This name is Aramaic Bar-Tolmai (Tolmai is attested in South Arabic and Nabataean as normal transcription of Gr. Ptolemaios)=son of Ptolemy, indicating that his father had a Greek name.

Thomas (=“Twin”) is, in Aramaic, Tōmā.

Matthew is Hebrew (see NOTE on 9:9), and he is identified with the tax collector of 9:9.

Alphaeus is Aram. Ḥalfai (shortened from the common rabbinic name Ḥalafta), while Thaddaeus is Aram. Taddai. It could be a place name, on the basis of quite satisfactory Aramaic etymologies. The manuscript evidence shows that Lebbaeus is sometimes substituted for Thaddaeus, and we may assume that called was added to preserve both traditions. Certainly the names are typical Aramaic shortened forms (hypocoristica). In the list in Luke 6:16, Lebbaeus/Thaddaeus is replaced by Judas=Jude (not Iscariot, John 14:22), but there is no good reason why the list of twelve apostles should always have been limited to the same persons (until after the defection of Judas).

4. Simon the Zealot. For all the discussion in commentaries on the relative merits of the reading kananaïos (Canaanite) and kannaïos or kanaïos (Zealot), the solution certainly lies in the transmission of the Hebrew/Aramaic appellation. In normal transcription the Heb. qof was always k, while the aspirated kaph was always chi. The reading can only be qannāyā, Zealot, which is the appellation in Luke. The introduction of an extra “a” is very simply explained, for two n’s between two a’s would very easily produce an extra a. If the passage was being dictated, then the confusion between Kananaïos and Chananaïos would quickly arise. “Canaanite” seems to us to be a very weak candidate as a description of a disciple of Jesus. It is far more likely that more than one Zealot would have initially been attracted by the teachings of Jesus, and that one of them should have been so identified in this list. Luke (6:15) reads Simōna ton kaloumenon Zēlōtēn, presumably to put the matter beyond doubt (cf. Acts 1:13, Simōn ho Zēlōtēs).

Judas Iscariot. Attempts to deal with the name Iscariot as derived from a place name (“the man from Kerioth”), or as belonging to a leather apron girdle, or bag, or from Judas’ later role as traitor, or from a supposed meaning as “assassin,” must all be abandoned. Judas alone is as useless an identification as would be Muhammed, without a patronymic, in Muslim countries. Harald Ingholt was driven to look for other explanations by the near unanimity in later iconography depicting Judas as red-haired. His technical discussion and full conclusions are to be found in Studia Orientalia Johanni Pedersen (Copenhagen, 1953), pp. 152 ff. He demonstrates, on the basis of Palmyrene inscriptions, that “Iscariot” cannot have been a geographical appellation, and suggests that the word derives from the Aramaic root sqr, which varies in meaning from reddish-brown to ruddy. What we have therefore in this name is a kenning, or nickname.

The unanimity of all four gospels as to the central place of the Twelve (the title is common in John) tends to obscure the fact that we know very little about this inner circle. It is more than possible that their function (cf. Acts 8:1) may have been almost exclusively within the framework of the Jerusalem community. When Jewish Christianity as a controlling influence came to an end ca. A.D. 65–70, the Gentile communities may not even have known the names of the Twelve with any certainty. The number “twelve,” however many there may have been in the inner circle of the disciples, is considered in our gospels to be connected with the twelve tribes of Israel (cf. 19:28; Rev 21:14). Three significant points must be noticed here:

(a) The OT lists of the twelve tribes seldom agree fully as to the specific identification of all “twelve” tribes.

(b) The emphasis on “the Twelve” in the Qumran community (1QS viii 1–10) is of some importance here. Cf. C. S. Mann, “The Organization and Institutions of the Jerusalem Church in Acts,” in Munck, The Acts of the Apostles, Appendix IV.

(c) Whatever the original identification of “apostles” and “the Twelve,” at least for Jerusalem, the term “apostle” seems to have taken on a wider meaning with the conversion of Paul and the resulting Gentile mission. Cf. Johannes Munck, “Paul, the Apostles and the Twelve,” Studia Theologica 3 (Lund: Gleerup, 1949).

There are lists of the Twelve also in Mark 3:16–19; Luke 6:13–16; Acts 1:13–16. The reader is also referred to our discussion in Part XIII of the Introduction, on authorship and chronology.

5. sent on a mission. In Mark’s tradition (6:8–13) this mission is a definite single occasion, and the whole context of the Matthean account supports it.

route of the Gentiles. There were three possible ways in which the disciples could travel to accomplish this mission: (1) along the coastal plain, (2) along the Jordan valley, or (3) along the watershed ridge. It is the first possibility which is being ruled out here. There were few Jewish settlements there at that time, and it would therefore have been extremely difficult for the disciples to obtain ritually clean food (i.e., kosher food). The Gr. hodos can mean a road or a route, or (as in parts of the NT) a way (of life), a journey. The Heb. derek also carries similar meanings.

(again). The present Greek of this injunction is: kai eis polin Samaritōn mē eiselthēte. Our translation obviously depends on the supplying of palin (again) for polin (city) before eis, to restore what we believe to have been the original text. If there was here an absolute prohibition against the evangelization of Samaritans, it is hard to imagine why the disciples, immediately after the death of Stephen, should have regarded with equanimity a mission among the Samaritans (Acts 8:2–25). Moreover, the inhabitants of Samaria would certainly have been regarded as being among the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Jesus is recorded in John 4 as having preached in Samaria and there the surprise of the disciples (vs. 27) is that he was talking with a woman, not that he was talking with a Samaritan. Jesus’ prohibition here may have been due to the fact that the disciples, having a Jewish ethnic and religious background, might antagonize the Samaritans unwittingly.

Our restored Greek text is easily understood: palin eis polin ... It would lend itself with great ease to a very natural haplography. Palin (again) with the negative imperative is found at 2 Cor 2:1; Gal 5:1; Heb 6:1, 4–6. It is used frequently in the gospels for repeated journeys.

6. lost sheep. Cf. NOTE on 3:2.

house of Israel. The contrast sometimes drawn by commentators between the particularism of this verse and the general commission of 28:16–20 is not very instructive. For one thing, the commission here means that those so commissioned are to give absolute priority to those towns or areas where there are already Jewish settlements (cf. vs. 23), as areas where the Messianic message would not be foreign. However, there is the decisive phrase The Man’s coming in vs. 23, and we have given reasons for thinking that this “coming” refers to the passion-resurrection glory of the Messiah (cf. Part VI of the Introduction). In vs. 23, then, there is a simple statement that the disciples will not even have time to complete their mission in the Israelite communities before the time of Jesus’ glorification. This interpretation assumes independent missionary activity on the part of the inner circle, and this we know to have been the case (cf. Luke 9:1–6, 10:1–20—the mission of the seventy; Mark 6:7–31; and cf. also John 4:2). The difficulty of interpretation lies partly in Matthew’s habit of grouping material into discourses, and the references at the head of this chapter make it clear that what the evangelist has collected here are groups of sayings molded into a kind of missionary’s vade mecum. The care taken to preserve all that was known in the oral tradition makes it inevitable that sayings remained which had validity originally in the immediate ministry of Jesus and his disciples. On this subject, cf. Jeremias, Jesus' Promise to the Nations.

7. fast approaching. Cf. NOTE on 3:2.

8. without payment. Cf. TB, Nedarim 37a: "As I taught you free of charge, so you, too, teach free of charge" (Moses to the Israelites); and "You received without pay, give without pay" (Mishnah Aboth i 3). The theme is common in a missionary context, and was emphasized by Paul (cf. 1 Cor 9:14; 2 Cor 11:7; 1 Tim 5:18). Hospitality is a common theme, too, and given place in the NT writings (cf. Rom 12:13; 1 Tim 3:2; Titus 1:8; Heb 13:2; 1 Peter 4:9). The possibility of abuse of the hospitality extended to missionaries did exist, and the first-century Didache (xiii) thought it important enough to establish precise regulations against such abuse.

9–10. The commands embodied in these verses certainly indicate that spirit of detachment which is characteristic of the NT writings. Equally, the injunction may emphasize the extreme urgency of the need to proclaim the Freedom of the Kingdom, and Luke 10:4 seems to demand this sense. The Markan tradition underlines this by prescribing only a staff for such journeys—anything more would make the missionaries appear as men bent on ordinary business.

10. The worker deserves his keep. Luke's version of this statement (Luke 10:7) is quoted in 1 Tim 5:18 as though it were already canonical scripture.

11. The Matthean version here seems to be a combination of two remembered sayings, preserved as separate in Luke in two different contexts. Cf. Luke 9:4; 10:5–7.

suitable (Gr. axios). This word, in its common English translation of "worthy," may suggest moral rectitude to us, but it would not have done so to the evangelist. Rather the word indicates someone willing to receive an apostle. Cf. the English legal title of "His Worship" (i.e., "his worth-ship") for the mayor or chief magistrate of a town.

12–13. The Lukan version (Luke 10:5–6) is manifestly drawing on an independent tradition, and Mark has no parallel to these verses.

blessing. The Heb. shālôm does not have the restrictive sense of absence of conflict which our modern political thinking has imposed on the word peace. Rather it has the meaning of "well-being."

14. Mark (6:11) here has "place," and it is Luke (10:10) and Matthew who use house and town.

15. Sodom. The place is frequently used in the NT as a typical example of the doom reserved for communities that resist the divine will. Cf. 11:23–24; Luke 10:12, 17:29; Rom 9:29; 2 Peter 2:6; Jude vs. 7; and cf. also Jubilees xxxvi 10.

the day of judgment. The definite article is omitted in Greek, but such omission was not uncommon when a technical term was used. The term as used here means the end of the age, or the end of the temporal order, and in that sense cf. Pss Sol 15:12; Jubilees iv 19; Parables of Enoch xxxix 1.

COMMENT

The scheme of Matthew's gospel has brought the evangelist to the point where, having told how Jesus sees his own work, he must show how provision was made for continuing that work in the future community. Nowhere in Matthew does Jesus' eschatological or apocalyptic language automatically exclude the community which came to be called the Church. Indeed, even if we had no evidence from the OT, the Qumran literature is evidence enough that in contemporary Jewish thinking a Messiah without a Messianic Community was unthinkable. With this in mind, the nineteenth-century "liberal" view that there was a "simple" humanitarian gospel of divine Fatherhood and human brotherhood, later corrupted by the apostle Paul into a full-scale ecclesiastical organization, must be dismissed as a chimera of that same liberal thinking. It is possible that many who held such a view were the victims of various translations of Luke 17:21: hē basileia tou theou entos humōn estin: "God's Kingdom is in your very midst," not "within you."

The introduction of the Twelve in this section of the gospel is abrupt, and Matthew has not given us any record of the choosing of the inner circle. The manner of the introduction is explained in part, however, by the designation of the Twelve as "apostles," a title which has reference to their mission in the continuing community after the resurrection. It is also partly explained by Matthew's arrangement of his material. From this point onwards, until the action of the gospel moves to the last week in Jerusalem, all the teaching is concerned with the community and the place of the disciple in it.

40. THE COST OF DISCIPLESHIP: MISSION

(10:16–25)[†]

10 ¹⁶ “See, I send you out like sheep among wolves. Therefore be as prudent as serpents, and as candid as doves. ¹⁷ Beware of men. They will hand you over to courts, flog you in synagogues, ¹⁸ and you will be hauled before rulers and kings on account of me, to witness to them and to Gentiles. ¹⁹ When they hand you over, do not worry about how or what to speak, for at that time what you are to say will be shown to you; and ²⁰ it will not be you speaking, but the Spirit of your Father speaking through you. ²¹ Brother will hand over brother to death, and the father his child; children will denounce parents and have them killed. ²² On account of my name you will be hated by all, but he who endures to the end will be saved. ²³ When they persecute you in one town, flee to the next one, for I tell you truly that you will not have gone through the towns of Israel before The Man’s coming. ²⁴ The disciple is not superior to his teacher, nor a slave to his owner; ²⁵ it is sufficient for the disciple to become like his teacher, and the slave to become like his master. If they have called the head of the house Beelzebul, how much more will they miscall those of his household!

NOTES

10:16. sheep among wolves. The phrase also occurs in Luke 10:3, where it is set in the context of the mission of the seventy. It also follows immediately upon fragments of a saying parallel to Luke 11:32 (=Mark 13:13) in the Gospel of Thomas (xxxix).

The whole previous section (10:1–15), which might be described as ending at vs. 16, illustrates very well the fluid state of the written tradition at the time of the compilation of Matthew, and at the same time the care with which the oral tradition was being preserved. There is a useful parallel here with the careful preservation of the material collected by the schools of Shammai, Hillel, and Yohanan ben Zakkai in rabbinical circles.

The preceding section has much in common with Mark 6:6–11, and Luke 9:1–6 is also parallel to this material. But Matthew and Luke in many instances agree verbally in the Greek against Mark, while at the same time Luke's version of the mission charge to the seventy (Luke 10) has material parallel to Matt 9:37–38, 10:7, 10, 12–13, 15–16a. The resemblances and the differences can be accounted for somewhat as follows: Mark's charge to the Twelve is in a form which can best be described—like so much of his pre-passion material—as “headlines.” Matthew's handling of his material, much fuller and far more systematic, is careful to preserve the distinction between instruction given to the inner circle and that given to a wider audience. Luke is far more concerned, thanks to his emphasis on the results of Paul's conversion, with a wider missionary enterprise than is Matthew. For Luke, “disciple” has a wider meaning than it has in Matthew, and he therefore arranges the missionary charges in his material as addressed to the whole community.

17. Beware of men. The evangelist's method of grouping his material is very much in evidence here. The saying about sheep among wolves, whether Matthew knew Mark or not, persuaded Matthew to include here remarks about the treatment of the disciples after Jesus leaves them. Mark has the material in 13:9–13, set clearly in a context which looks to the future of the community. The Matthean material also looks to that future, but with the difference that there are sayings here (vss. 23–25) which could equally well belong to independent missionary activity during the ministry of Jesus.

18. One of the few indications which suggests that Matthew might have been acquainted with Mark (in some form) comes in this verse. Matthew's version ends at to witness to them and to Gentiles. In Mark, this clause is divided between two verses, 13:9–10: “to witness to them. And the gospel must first be preached to the Gentiles.” The phrase “And the gospel must first be preached” would certainly be inappropriate in this Matthean context of instruction to the inner circle, if indeed Matthew's oral tradition had it.

19–21. It has more than once been said that these verses are vaticinium post eventum (prophecy after the event), reflections added to the sayings of Jesus after the first wave of missionary endeavor. Such a judgment is hard to sustain in the light of what we know of first-century Syria-Palestine, and the subsequent history of Paul dramatically underlines that knowledge:

(a) Social and religious conditions were such that any proclamation of a Messianic Kingdom as an impending, soon-to-be-fulfilled reality would bring sharply into focus, and into conflict, all the loyalties of Jews, both sectarian and orthodox.

(b) Roman authority could not remain indifferent to such stirrings of passion, whatever the status of Judaism as religio licita (lawful religion). Cf. Charles N. Cochrane, Christianity and Classical Culture (Oxford University Press, 1940, rev. ed., 1944), especially pp. 100–3.

(c) The language of this section is wholly in keeping with apocalyptic sayings about the last days: cf. 2 Esdras 5:9; Jubilees xxiii 19; Enoch lvi 7, xcix 5, c 1; Apocalypse of Baruch lxx 3.

22. Cf. II Esdras “Whoever remains, that man will be saved, he will see my salvation, and the end of the age” (6:25); “Everyone who is saved ... will be preserved” (9:7–8).

23. Whether this verse is in context is hard to determine. It is wholly in keeping with the teaching of Jesus that the verse should have come to be applied to missionary work in the post-resurrection period. Application is one thing, deliberate invention quite another. Rudolf Bultmann describes the first part of the verse as a “flight-motif” added by the evangelist as a result of persecution endured in the Church’s missionary work. This seems to ignore the fact that in contemporary Judaism one sign of the End-time was wandering of people from city to city before the appearing of the Son of David (cf. TB, Sota 9.15, Sanhedrin 9a). The attention of the reader is again called to Part VI of the Introduction and to the grounds given there for thinking that what we have here in The Man’s coming is a reference to the exaltation of the Messiah in passion-resurrection. Whatever the length of the public ministry of Jesus, and however extended geographically the independent missions of the Twelve (Matt 10:5–15; Mark 6:7–13) and the Seventy (Luke 10:1–20), the second part of vs. 23 simply states a truth: The Man’s coming will supervene before the mission to Israel has been fulfilled.

24–25. It is clear from these verses that Matthew and Luke were working from independent traditions—cf. vs. 24 and Luke 6:40. Similarly for vs. 25; the Lukan version (6:40) of the saying about teacher and pupil is an illustration of another saying of blind leading blind, of total dependence. Here in Matthew there is a wholly different sense: the treatment accorded to the Master will be the lot of those who carry on his work.

25. Beelzebul. The confusion of the Greek text is reflected in the modern English translations. RSV has Beelzebul, and NEB Beelzebub. The decipherment of the Ugaritic texts, however, makes it clear that the NT form Beelzebul is the original Canaanite form rather than the spelling Beelzebub found in our Hebrew Bible (2 Kings 1:2). The name means “Baal the Prince.” This was the title of the chief god of Ekron (2 Kings 1:2 ff.), but in the Canaanite epic of Baal he was “Zubulu (prince), Lord of the earth.” He later became the chief of demons in early Jewish demonology.

COMMENT

The cost of discipleship to the inner circle is the same as that demanded of the Master. There is, however, a significant difference. Jesus' ministry is addressed to his own people, to Israel of the Old Covenant, as is that of the Twelve initially (cf. vss. 5–6). But while Jesus suffers at the end of his ministry at the hands of those he came to save (cf. John 1:12), the disciples addressed in this part of the charge must face suffering at the hands of Jews and Gentiles alike.

It is easy to see, from vs. 23 onwards, how this section came to be understood as anticipating the End, the final judgment. We noted in the discussion of vs. 23 above that in our view, this was not the original meaning of the charge. However, the position of this Matthean material in the Markan “apocalypse” (Mark 13) does place the emphasis on the final judgment. This is not by any means to deny the validity of such emphasis, though in our view this was not the interpretation given by Jesus. On the contrary, it is the universal applicability of large areas of the teaching of Jesus which opens up horizons far beyond the immediate context of that teaching. At the same time, however, it serves to obscure the fact that much of the instruction in our gospels was given only to a small inner circle. Later on, in a wider audience, there was certainly the possibility of expanded interpretation.

41. THE COST OF DISCIPLESHIP: FEAR

(10:26–31)[†]

10 ²⁶ “But do not fear them, for there is nothing veiled which will not be revealed, no secret which will not become known. ²⁷ Whatever I tell you in the dark, speak out in the light, and whatever you hear in a whisper, proclaim from the housetops. ²⁸ Do not fear those who kill the body, but who cannot kill the soul; rather fear him who can destroy both soul and body in Gehenna. ²⁹ Are not two sparrows sold for a penny? And one of them does not fall to the ground without your Father’s will. ³⁰ Even the hairs of your head are all numbered; ³¹ therefore do not be afraid—you are worth more than many sparrows.

NOTES

10:26. do not fear. This injunction is repeated twice, cf. vss. 28, 31. This is a device referred to in Part IV of the Introduction.

them. i.e., the persecutors.

It is clear that the saying nothing veiled which will not be revealed was a common theme in Jesus' teaching. It finds expression in Mark 4:22; Luke 8:17, 12:2.

27. The application of the saying in vs. 26 differs from that given in Luke. Here there is a plain injunction to make public the instruction now being given in private to the disciples. In Luke, however, 8:17 parallels the present sense, while 12:2 suggests that the proclamation of the Kingdom must not be overlaid by the kind of legal subterfuge characteristic of the Pharisees.

28. Gehenna. Cf. NOTE on fiery death in 5:22.

29. penny (Gr. assarion). This is the Latin as, about 1/16 of a denarius, less than 1/2 cent.

30. hairs of your head. The stress here is on the hairs, i.e., the insignificant, rather than on "your head."

COMMENT

The section vss. 26–33 is paralleled in Luke 12:2–9, but the differences are notable, even though there is some agreement in language. Two different senses are being used by the two evangelists, and a difference in historical setting as between Matthew and Luke would seem to make reliance on a common written source unlikely.

42. THE COST OF DISCIPLESHIP:
ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF THE MESSIAH
(10:32–11:1)[†]

10 ³² “Whoever acknowledges me before men, I will acknowledge before my Father in heaven; ³³ but whoever denies me before men I will deny before my Father in heaven.

³⁴ “Do not think that I have come to impose peace on earth by force; I have come neither to impose peace, nor yet to make war. ³⁵ I have come to divide ...

a man against his father,

a daughter against her mother, and a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law.

³⁶ A man’s enemies will be members of his own household.

³⁷ The man who prefers father or mother to me is unfitted for me, and the man who prefers son or daughter to me is unfitted for me, ³⁸ and he who does not take up his cross and follow me is unfitted for me. ³⁹ One who grasps at self will lose it, but one who rejects self on my account will gain it.

⁴⁰ “Whoever receives you receives me, and in receiving me receives him who sent me. ⁴¹ Whoever receives the Prophet because he is the Prophet will be rewarded by the Prophet, and so he who receives the Righteous One because he is the Righteous One will be rewarded by the Righteous One. ⁴² So, whoever gives to one of the most insignificant of these a mere cup of water because he is my disciple will not, I tell you truly, lose his reward.”

11 ¹ When Jesus had finished instructing his twelve disciples, he went on from there to teach and proclaim in their towns.

NOTES

10:32. acknowledges me. With the preposition en with the dative, the expression occurs only here and at Luke 12:8, but without the preposition the same expression, with the same meaning, occurs at John 9:22 and in several other NT books.

33. Vss. 32–33 have a rough parallel in Mark 8:38. Nowhere is the diverse character of the Kingdom’s advent seen more clearly than in the severance of family loyalties. The section vss. 34–39, whatever the history of its individual parts, is placed here as following naturally from the thought of what the disciple must endure as the cost of his fidelity.

34. Luke 12:51 has a version of this saying which cannot be said to derive from any written source shared with Matthew.

Here, two expectations of Messiahship are alike dismissed, the one of imposing peace at home by force of arms, the other of asserting the Messianic reign by conquest abroad (cf. Isa 63:1). The thought follows logically from vs. 33: Jesus does not come to impose peace by kingly rule. On the contrary, his coming will involve painful decisions. He will not interfere with man’s freedom. The verse has been the subject of so much controversy, both academic and homiletical, that it is well to spend some time here discussing the linguistic evidence which underlies our translation. Basically, the evidence rests on the play on words in the Gr. ballō (Aram. remā), together with the Jewish-Aramaic word which lies behind the Gr. alla.

(a) The original of the saying, we suggest, was lā’atēt le-mirmē shlāmā ’ellā ḥarbā. (The syntax of the Peshitta—de’armī—is specifically Syriac and does not directly reflect earlier Jewish-Aramaic.) There is a very good parallel to the verb in the Aramaic “Genesis Apocryphon” (which dates from shortly before the time of Jesus), in col. 22, line 8, where, speaking of Abraham, it reads, “He fell upon them at night from all four sides,” literally, “he hurled” (his troops) “upon them”—ū-remā ’alēhōn be-lēlyā.... Here is good contemporary evidence, then, for the sense behind Aram. remā, Gr. ballō, for translating impose (war), in contrast to the usual translation of “bring.”

(b) The Gr. allā, usually given as “but” in our English translations, has been inadequately explored by translators. In early post-biblical Hebrew as well as in contemporary Aramaic the construction lō/ā ... we-lō/ā and lō/ā ... ’ellā is common, and there are many examples in (e.g.) the Pirqē Abōth. Since we-lā and ’ellā sounded so much alike, there must often have been some confusion in oral transmission into Greek. Here, in this verse, we have precisely this situation, and the Greek has almost certainly transmitted an oral misunderstanding. What we have, therefore, is not a simple not peace but a sword (in spite of RSV), but a neither ... nor saying, with both parts depending on the meaning impose for the Gr. ballō.

(c) We have translated the Gr. machaira by war. The Greek is without a definite article, and sometimes can—and in context manifestly does—mean war (cf. Jer 15:2). In Hebrew and Aramaic ḥereb/ḥarbā, “sword,” also means “war,” and in Arabic ḥarb, which originally meant “sword,” is the usual word for “war.”

(d) Even when difficulties of translation in vs. 34 have been removed, there is still an awkward transition from this verse to its successor in our versions. Vss. 35–36 speak of division between members of pairs of closely related people. It is hard to know the origin of the common English rendering “set against” as a translation of the Gr. dichazō, which means “divide in two.” In Greek, the only example given in the lexica for set against as a translation of dichazō is our passage in Matthew! The translation “divide against” in Liddell and Scott, with this Matthew passage as sole example, is bad Greek and deplorable English. It is in our view most likely that a simple homoioteleuton has allowed a very vital connecting link between vss. 34 and 35–36 to be dropped. Vs. 34 is a denial of Messianic aspirations of various kinds, while vss. 35–36 are a quotation from Mic 7:6 of the results of a coming in judgment. What we have every right to expect in the context of the saying is a statement of true Messianic purpose, and this we do not have in the present text. Our suggestion is that originally the text ran: “Do not think that I have come to impose peace on earth by force; I have come neither to impose peace, nor yet to make war. But I have come to divide the just from the unjust ... a man against his father ...” There is important parallel material for our suggested addition in Mal

3:18 (in the middle of a description of the coming judgment); John 9:39; Acts 24:15 and 2 Peter 2:9. Outside both OT and NT there is a text (7:12) in 1QH, the Thanksgiving Psalms of the Dead Sea scroll material. It reads: “For all my antagonists thou wilt condemn to judgment, in order to separate on my account between the just and the unjust (translation by W. F. Albright, differing only in wording from that of Dupont-Sommer, 1951, and Mansoor, 1955).

There is a further complication. Not only is there homoioteleuton to cause confusion by the repeated I have come; the verb dichazō simply will not do to govern the Micah (7:6) quotation in vss. 35–36. The Hebrew original and the Greek of the LXX have the son treating the father with contempt—the division has already taken place. Hence, after “unjust” (in our text above), we have left a blank, and rendered the Gr. katá by against (his father). There has obviously been omission here, but we do not know what it was at this stage—presumably the Micah passage was quoted in full.

(e) Enclosing NT material in quotation marks is not unattended by peril. It is, for instance, by no means clear that John 1:34 ought to be enclosed within quotation marks as part of the witness of John the Baptist—that verse may well be the evangelist’s own testimony in response to John the Baptist’s doubts in vss. 31, 33. (Contrast some commentators at this point.) Similarly, it is not clear from the present context in Matthew whether vss. 35–36 are allusive OT commentary (pēsher) on the words of Jesus, in the familiar Matthean fashion, or whether vs. 34 is a saying of Jesus to which Jesus himself gave OT sanction.

35–36. Cf. Mic 7:6. Rabbinic writings also declare that suffering will herald the Messianic Age (cf. TB, Sanhedrin 97a, Sota 49a).

37. In Luke the sentiment of this verse is expressed differently (Luke 14:26–27). There, the word translated “hate” in most English versions was changing its meaning from a prevailingly legal sense to one which denoted “opposition to.” In the Lukan version, it would be best to render the Greek: “Anyone who follows me, who cannot oppose father and mother....

unfitted for. Cf. NOTE on vs. 11, on axios.

38. take up his cross. This saying is found in three forms in the synoptic gospels:

(a) Matt 16:24; Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23, as a positive injunction;

(b) Matt 10:38 in negative form;

(c) Luke 14:27, also in negative form, slightly different.

Both (b) and (c) seem to be derived from a common original. This is the first mention of the cross in Matthew, and from time to time it has been held that the saying is probably not genuine, but more likely another example of prophecy after the event. However, in the climate of the times it is hard to suppose that Jesus did not foresee a violent end to his ministry. It is true that Luke 14:27 could equally well take “yoke” as a symbol of discipleship (cf. Matt 11:29), since the symbol of the “yoke of the Law” is found in rabbinical writings, as was also “the yoke of the Kingdom of heaven” (cf. Pirqê Abôth iiib; TB, Berakhoth 13a). But long before the time of Jesus, impaling or crucifixion had become typical of violent death (cf. Plato Republic ii. 361; Artemidorus, ii. 56, speaks of the condemned man carrying his cross, and Bereshith Rabba, commenting on Gen 22:6, speaks of bearing the cross). Cf. also J. Gwyn Griffiths, “The Disciple’s Cross,” NTS 16 (1970), pp. 358–64.

Here, for the disciples, the thought is of being prepared for death in persecution.

39. This saying, like the preceding, comes in varied form in all four gospels:

(a) Matt 16:25; Mark 8:35; Luke 9:24;

(b) Matt 10:38;

(c) Luke 17:33;

(d) John 12:25.

It would appear that (a) and (c) are independent translations of the same saying. The saying in (a) and (b) is connected with carrying the cross.

self. The Greek psychē is commonly translated either by “life” (RSV) or “soul.” (Here, KJ, NEB, and JB all have “life.”) The first unnecessarily narrows the meaning, and confines the saying to death by persecution, while the second has all the disadvantages of a scholastic concept little understood by many modern readers. Our translation avoids the second, and also renders the sense in a way which does not confine the cost of discipleship to physical death.

The next short section begins with the disciple (vs. 40) and ends with the disciple (vs. 42), the whole revolving around the person and mission of Jesus in vs. 41.

40. Cf. “He who welcomes his fellow-man is considered as though he had welcomed the Shekinah” (i.e., the divine presence)—Mekilta, tractate Amalek, 3.

41. Our translation radically changes the commonly accepted sense of this verse, and makes it a saying about different attitudes to the mission and person of Jesus. It is necessary to examine the linguistic basis upon which our translation rests.

(a) Once it is assumed that there is a connection between this verse and vs. 40, then it becomes necessary to ask “What prophet?” or “What righteous man?” especially as this section reverts in vs. 42 to the links between Jesus and the disciples.

(b) Still unpublished investigation convinces us that the figure of the Righteous One played a decisive part in the evolution of the doctrine of a Messiah among Jews of the NT period. This reaches back into the Dead Sea scrolls and previously known intertestamental writings, with indications of a much earlier OT origin. It also finds expression in the NT, most notably in Acts 7:52.

(c) It is clear that we are dealing in this verse with two titles of Jesus, and at the same time two attitudes to him. These we have clarified by the use of capital letters.

(d) The Greek has no definite article before either Prophet or Righteous One. This by no means invalidates our translation, for in the Jewish-Aramaic of this period it is context alone which determines the presence or absence of the definite article (in this connection, cf. 14:33). We suggest that the translation into Greek at this point was scrupulously faithful, but—once the gospel had passed from a Jewish to a Greek milieu—later capable of misunderstanding.

(e) As translated by us, the verse depicts Jesus giving recognition to two attitudes to himself: there were those who saw him as The Prophet, Herald of the Messianic Age, and those whose wider perceptions saw him as both Herald and Messianic Righteous One.

42. because he is. Here RSV does justice to the Jewish-Aramaic and Syriac (‘al shum and ‘al shem) behind the Gr. eis onoma (literally, “for the name of”).

my disciple. Again, there is no definite article or possessive pronoun in the Greek, but the pronunciation of a disciple and my disciple is the same in the Jewish-Aramaic of this period.

11:1. proclaim. Cf. NOTE on 4:23.

43. JOHN'S QUESTION AND JESUS' TESTIMONY (11:2–19)[†]

11 ² When John had heard in prison about the deeds of Jesus, he sent two of his disciples to ask him, ³ “Are you the Coming One, or are we to look for someone else?”

⁴ Jesus in answer said, “Go on your way and tell John the things you see and hear: ⁵ the blind see, the lame walk, lepers are cured, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and good news is brought to the humble. ⁶ Fortunate is the man who does not find me a stumbling block.”

⁷ When they had gone away, Jesus began to say to the crowds about John: “What did you go into the desert to look at? A reed swayed by the wind? ⁸ But what did you go to see? A man clad in expensive clothing? Well, those who wear expensive clothing are in kings’ houses. ⁹ But why did you go? To see a prophet? Yes, I tell you—and much more than a prophet. ¹⁰ He is the one of whom it is recorded:

‘See, I send my messenger before your face, he shall prepare your way before you.’

¹¹ Truly I tell you that no human being has arisen who is greater than John the Baptist, yet the very least person in the Kingdom of heaven is greater than he.” ¹² From the time of John the Baptist to this moment, the Kingdom of heaven has been under violent attack and violent men despoil it. ¹³ For all the prophets, and the Law, up to John, prophesied. ¹⁴ If you wish to accept it, he is the expected Elijah. ¹⁵ Let him who has understanding listen.

¹⁶ “But to what shall I compare this generation? It is like children sitting in the market place, calling to the rest, ¹⁷ ‘We piped to you, and you did not dance, we wailed and you did not mourn.’ ¹⁸ For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say ‘He has a demon.’ The Man came, both eating and drinking, and they say, ¹⁹ ‘See, a drunkard and a glutton, a friend of tax collectors and non-observant Jews.’ But wisdom is vindicated by her deeds.”

NOTES

11:2. in prison, John's imprisonment has been mentioned already in 4:12. Luke's version coincides with vss. 2a–3.

deeds. Cf. the representative illustrations 8:1–9, 34.

3. the Coming One. Cf. 3:11, and also Ps 118:26; Dan 7:13; see also Part VII of the Introduction.

5. lepers. Cf. NOTE on 8:2, and cf. also 10:8.

dead. In the OT and the Orient generally, the expression “dead” can often mean “dying.” Cf. NOTE on 9:24.

good news is brought. The Greek verb euangelizontai is used only here in Matthew.

6. stumbling block. Literally, an occasion of offense, by misunderstanding Jesus' Messianic work.

7. look at. The Greek word (theasasthai), from which the word “theater” is derived, means to gaze at a show or demonstration. The verb also occurs at 6:1; 22:11; 23:5.

reed swayed by the wind. Either this is ironic (i.e., men did not go out into the desert to look at something perfectly ordinary) or it refers to the hesitations and doubts which assailed John in prison—which is the interpretation we favor.

8. expensive clothing. The desert was no place to look for mere secular show or power. As it was (vs. 9), the reality far exceeded expectation.

10. This quotation, in which Matthew and Luke agree with Mark 1:2 as against the LXX rendering, is from Mal 3:1.

before you. This is apparently assimilated from Exod 23:20 (cf. Part IV of the Introduction on the OT background of Matthew). However, the quotation, evidently in wide use among early Christian communities, may have belonged originally to a series of “testimonies” associated with John the Baptist. For a full discussion of the problem, cf. Robinson, “Elijah, Jesus and John: An Essay in Detection,” in TNTS.

11. Truly (Gr. amēn). A solemn affirmation of validity. It is common, in repetitive form, in John's gospel.

greater than John. To proclaim the Messiah's advent is to make John's ministry and vocation unique. But those who are incorporated into the Messiah's Kingdom will be greater than John, who will not live to see that Kingdom's inauguration.

very least. The suggestion has been made that this expression refers to the difference in age between Jesus and John, and that Jesus here describes himself. This seems to be somewhat forced, and it is better to take the expression as meaning the newest neophyte in the Kingdom.

12–15. It seems to us probable that these verses do not belong to Jesus. Certainly vs. 14, not found elsewhere, appears to betray something of an uncertainty about the role of John—an uncertainty which was foreign to Jesus—and vs. 15 is a theme verse which occurs also at 13:9, 43. (On vss. 12 and 13, cf. Perrin, The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus, pp. 171–74.)

But there is more to be said. Luke's version (16:16) has the Greek verb biazetai in the middle voice, with the plain meaning that men press urgently and even violently into the Kingdom (cf. RSV ad loc.). Certainly the verb biazesthai bears this meaning in Koine Greek. But in Matthew's vs. 12 the subject of the verb biazetai is the Kingdom, and this demands a translation other than Luke's middle voice. (Matthew's verb would seem to demand a translation in passive voice, as we have given.) The evidence seems to suggest that both traditions are edited reminiscences of a saying in which the verb biazesthai would be in place. Luke's 16:16 also indicates that the oral tradition had features which were changed before Luke had access to it. At the same time, the fact that the Lukan tradition in its transposed form makes easier reading both in the Greek and in translation seems to indicate that the original material in the oral tradition was so obscure to both evangelists, and also so important, that both felt compelled to include it, making of it what was possible in each author's arrangement. On the well-known critical principle that there are times when the more difficult reading is to be preferred, we worked almost exclusively on the Matthean version, in the hope that this might yield information which would account for its difficulty. Several points should be considered:

(a) A common written source can be ruled out, as Matthew's heōs (up to, vs. 13) and Luke's mechri (16:16) are good illustrations of independent translations of an original oral tradition. Cf. Introduction, Part III.

(b) Matthew's arti (this moment, vs. 12) is decidedly odd in its present position, and it is not explained by the suggestion that at the time of utterance in present context the disciples and Jesus himself were being persecuted. The interval from the death of John to "this moment" is far too short for this saying to be in context, and if it refers to the time after the passion it is meaningless as applied to Jesus.

(c) Verse 13 is not made easier by Luke's "The Law and the prophets were until John" (16:16). Not only is there a reversal of the traditional order in Matthew (the prophets, and the Law), but the verb prophesied abruptly ends the phrase and makes it almost meaningless.

(d) It is possible, by rearranging the material in vss. 12 and 13, to make more adequate sense and at the same time do justice to Luke's version. We suggest that the original reading was more or less as follows:

Apo de tōn hēmerōn tou nomou parties gar hoi prophētai eprophēteusan ... heōs Ioannou tou Baptistou ... (Ap') arti hē basileia tōn ouranōn biazetai kai biastai harpazousin autēn. (From the time of the Law all the prophets prophesied ... until John the Baptist. From that time the Kingdom of heaven is violently attacked and violent men lay hands on it.)

(e) In such a reconstructed text, it is likely that eprophēteusan was followed by tēn basileian tōn ouranōn, and its loss is quite easily explained in the transmission of a saying which seemed obscure to the copyist.

(f) We are convinced that the Sitz-im-Leben of these verses is explicable only when attention is paid to their present context in Matthew. In the original tradition, the person of John was central to the sayings, as is witnessed by vss. 14 and 15. Moreover, the phrase until John the Baptist would seem to indicate a terminus ad quem for the circle from which the sayings came. We suggest that the sayings came from a circle of John's disciples, and probably belong to the time after his execution. Such a time seems to be demanded by vs. 12b in the present version. The death of John must have seemed to his disciples to be nothing less than an attack on the Kingdom he had proclaimed. If the saying belongs to the same circle, but belongs in time after the crucifixion of Jesus, then the sayings are even more explicable. The number of John's disciples scattered throughout the Mediterranean is attested by the Acts of the Apostles, and news of the death of John, followed soon after by news of a similar fate in the case of Jesus, must have been a profound shock.

That these verses were a small block of material from Baptist circles, already firmly rooted in oral tradition but belonging outside the gospel tradition proper, is the best explanation for the way in which Matthew and Luke felt compelled to include it. Both were obviously at a loss to know how to deal with some of its obscurities, but in different contexts attempted to do justice to the material.

The work of J. A. T. Robinson, to which reference has already been made, has pointed out the very real difficulties we experience when we attempt to extract and examine Baptist fragments in the gospel tradition. A useful summary of what is possible, on the present reading of Matthew, is to be found in Sherman Johnson's commentary on Matthew in The Interpreter's Bible (Nashville; Abingdon, 1951), VII, pp. 382–83.

It is possible to read the Law in the sense of oral law as distinct from the Torah. Equally it is at least possible that we have even in the present order of the words a Baptist sentiment. The discovery of the so-called "Temple scroll" confirms the evidence already available, and held by many Jewish and Christian scholars, that the Essene community was formulating a Torah of its own, providing a canon of recognized scripture. The halakah of the Damascus Covenant was as rigorous as any Pharisaic teaching. (Cf. Yigael Yadin, "The Temple Scroll," BA 30 [1967].) It must be admitted, however, that this order in Matthew, followed by eprophēteusan (prophesied), makes very odd Greek.

14. the expected Elijah. Cf. Mal 4:5. The coming of Elijah to "restore the tribes of Jacob" is found in Ecclus 48:10, and the idea was common in later Judaism. Efforts to introduce here a saying of Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai (B. Edujôth viii 7)—who was active after the fall of Jerusalem—fail to carry conviction in the light of what we now know of the relation between Essene teaching and that of John the Baptist.

15. This saying comes again in 13:9, 43; Mark 4:23; Rev 2:7, 11, 17, 29, 3:6, 13, 22, 13:9. The phrase seems to be a fixed formula, and further complicates the question as to whether vss. 12–15 were ever intended to be understood as being from the lips of Jesus.

16–17. Just as in this allegory children wishing to play weddings or funerals find it impossible to evoke any response to either suggestion from their fellows, so neither the severe asceticism of John (cf. 3:4) nor the more flexible and humane approach of Jesus produces any response. These verses appear to be addressed to the self-conscious rectitude of the Pharisees, and Luke indicates this by his inserted verses in the parallel context (Luke 7:29–30).

The Man. Cf. NOTE on 8:20, on the translation of this term.

19. a drunkard and a glutton. Cf. 9:14 ff. non-observant Jews. Cf. NOTE on 9:10.

wisdom is vindicated by her deeds. This is one of the two versions which the Greek text provides at this point. The other is “children” instead of deeds. Here deeds is the better attested reading, where Luke 7:35 has a better reading of “children.” With these two readings, two interpretations are possible:

(a) Wisdom is the divine wisdom of God (cf. Luke 11:49). If we read deeds, as here in Matthew, then the saying asserts that God is his own interpreter, and the methods of both John and Jesus have place in God’s providence, for all their seeming disparity and seeming failure. This generation of vs. 16 may be wholly unresponsive to the divine call of John and Jesus, but for those who respond, the wisdom of God is justified in their deeds.

(b) By reading “children,” as in Luke, several options are open to us. “Children of wisdom,” as an equivalent term for “children of Israel,” is attested in Prov 8:32 and Ecclus 4:11, with which we may compare “children of the Kingdom” in Matt 8:12 and 13:38. In so reading we can interpret the saying as indicating that the true children will, by their response, vindicate the divine wisdom and its messengers.

By our translation here—deeds—we have attempted to do justice to the aorist tense of vindicated (edikaiōthē). In Matt 11:27 and 28:18 Matthew’s use of the tense indicates a pretemporal ordering of events by divine providence, and here indicates that the wisdom of God is eternally vindicated by the course of history. But cf. the recent article by Robert Maddox, “The Function of the Son of Man according to the Synoptic Gospels,” NTS 15 (1968–69), 65 f., for a most interesting suggestion.

COMMENT

The three sections which make up chapter 11 (our §§43–45) would appear to be an arrangement by the evangelist to summarize Jesus' ministry in relation to three considerations: (a) Jesus' relationship to John the Baptist, (b) the seeming failure of Jesus' ministry, and (c) Jesus' own evaluation of his ministry.

The whole chapter has no parallel in Mark, and the points of similarity with Luke are such that it is very difficult to determine what prompted the arrangement of this material in so divergent a fashion. While it is true that vss. 2–19 are paralleled by Luke 7:18–35, there is very little parallel between vss. 2–3 and Luke's vss. 18–21, even though vss. 4–11 roughly parallel Luke's vss. 22–28. It is at this point—assuming a common source—that the difficulties begin. Here Luke (vss. 29–30), interjects a comment of his own, while Matthew apparently continues with the narrative. The whole tenor of the passage is such, however, that Matthew's vss. 12–15 appear to be derived from another context altogether. Moreover, Matthew's vss. 12–13 are found in Luke's 16:16, where the order is transposed.

Comparison between Matthew and Luke reveals a pastiche of sayings: Matthew 11:16–19=Luke 7:31–35; Matt 11:20 is obviously an introductory comment, without hint of place or time; Matt 11:21–23a agrees fairly well with Luke 10:13–15, where it is found in the injunction to the seventy disciples. Verse 23b has no parallel in Luke, Matt 11:24=Luke 10:12, and then vss. 25–27 are in close accord with Luke 10:21–22 (on the return of the seventy). To round off the whole complex, Matt 11:28–30 has no parallel in Luke.

If the two evangelists were working from a common written source, then the arrangement is very odd. Matthew's vss. 20–30 appear to be isolated sayings grouped together for reasons indicated above. But if this is the case, and the source was already formalized, then why does Luke use some sayings from this source in his account of the mission of the seventy? In addition to this, it is impossible to clarify the nature of the relationship between Matt 11:4–11, 16–19 and Luke 7:22–28, 31–35. Both evangelists connect the two pieces of material, but each with an inserted comment which is of a wholly different character in each case. The difficulty of deciding what is, or is not, direct speech in John 1:15–18 is well known, and we may have the same difficulty in Matthew's vss. 12–15 in this chapter.

What we appear to have is two groups of sayings dealing with John the Baptist, already fixed in oral tradition when Matthew and Luke compiled their gospels. Both evangelists therefore combined the sayings, but each independently of the other, as is demonstrated by the wholly different connecting material. If both had drawn from a common (written?) source in their editing of the Baptist sayings, it would be hard to say why both evangelists should have felt compelled to intrude comments of their own at exactly the same point. It is far more likely that here we have a common oral tradition, already hardened into blocks of material which the evangelists presented entire. The connecting links between the blocks of material may well represent other facets of the tradition which the two evangelists individually considered especially pertinent. (Cf. NOTES on vss. 12–15 above.)

44. DENUNCIATIONS

(11:20–24)[†]

11 ²⁰ Then he began to denounce the cities where most of his acts of power had been done, because they did not repent. ²¹ “Woe to you, Chorazin, woe to you, Bethsaida! For if the acts of power done in you had been performed in Tyre and Sidon they would long ago have repented in sackcloth and ashes. ²² But I tell you that it will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the day of judgment than for you. ²³ And you, Capernaum—will you be lifted up to heaven? You will be brought down to the underworld, because if the acts of power done in you had been done in Sodom, it would have remained to this day. ²⁴ But I tell you that it will be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment than for you.”

NOTES

11:20. Then. This is not a temporal note; it is simply a connective with the preceding section. Luke's gospel has these denunciations in the mission-charge to the seventy disciples.

21. Chorazin. This place is mentioned in the Bible only here and at Luke 10:13. It was the nearest town north of Capernaum, an hour's journey distant. We know nothing of any deeds of healing or exorcism by Jesus in Chorazin. Bethsaida was north of the Sea of Galilee, and on the east bank of the Jordan.

sackcloth and ashes. As signs of penitence or sorrow, cf. Isa 58:5; Jon 3:6; Dan 9:3.

22. Tyre and Sidon. These were prosperous Phoenician cities in OT times, and the prophets had frequently inveighed against their sinfulness.

23. Capernaum. This has already been mentioned as Jesus' temporary home (4:13, 8:5, 9:1). It was a flourishing city, but though men might have been proud of its civic achievements, the city had failed to recognize the dawning reign of God in Jesus' teaching and deeds. In spite of its being a Jewish city, its failure to repent, along with its arrogance and pride, doomed it to the fate of Sodom, a byword in the OT for sinfulness (cf. NOTE on 10:15).

lifted up to heaven. There is an echo here of an oracle of Isaiah (Isa 14:13 ff.), and Capernaum's fate is compared with that of Babylon.

45. THE SON'S PRAYER

(11:25–30)[†]

11 ²⁵ At that time, Jesus said, “I thank you, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that you have hidden these things from the wise and understanding, and revealed them to the childlike, ²⁶ for such indeed, Father, was your gracious will.

²⁷ “Everything has been delivered to me by my Father; no one knows the Son, except the Father, and no one knows the Father, except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son chooses to reveal him.

²⁸ “Come to me, all who labor and are heavily burdened, and I will give you rest. ²⁹ Take my yoke on your shoulders, and learn from me, because I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls, ³⁰ for my yoke is easy and my burden is light.”

NOTES

11:25. I thank you (Gr. exomologoumai). The word is used in the LXX as being equivalent to “give praise.” Cf. 2 Sam 22:50; Ecclus 51:1.

hidden. Cf. Isa 29:14. The veiling of God’s purposes from the self-consciously wise is referred to by Paul in 1 Cor 1:19, who also quotes this verse from Isaiah.

these things. This is a reference to the acts of power which Jesus’ contemporaries could not evaluate as signs of the dawning Kingdom (vss. 21, 23).

wise and understanding. The leaders of Israel, whose election by God demanded that she respond to the manifestations of the divine wisdom, had failed to see the signs of the Kingdom. The children of wisdom, the childlike, had alone seen and understood.

26. your gracious will (literally, “for so it seemed good in your sight”). The phrase is common in later Hebrew/Aramaic as avoiding direct reference to God’s will Cf. TB, Berakhoth 17a, 29b, Taanith 24b.

27. The two preceding verses are found also in Luke 10:21 ff., with very slight differences. This verse has no parallel in the other gospels, and it is this verse which has attracted the most attention from commentators. The difficulty for most writers lies in the implied relationship of Father-Son in this verse, found only here in Matthew, though the relationship is also implied in Luke and is most frequent in John’s gospel. The discussion of the passage by Bultmann in Kittel’s TWNT (p. 713) predictably argues for a later editorial origin, with Gnostic terminology. Bultmann calls attention to the (hardly surprising) fact that Strack and Billerbeck can find no parallel in the rabbinic literature. To list all relevant literature on this verse would be beyond the scope and purpose of this commentary, and our own conclusions can be summarized as follows:

(a) The argument that speaking of the Son in the third person betrays an origin wholly outside the mind of Jesus must be seen against the many occasions on which Jesus speaks of himself as The Man in the third person.

(b) Any discussion of vs. 27 must take into account the high incidence of sayings in which Jesus refers to “my Father” or “the Father,” and such sayings are by no means exclusively Johannine. Moreover, in many such sayings the plain implication is that Jesus is the Son, or his Son.

(c) The term “son” as applied to Israel in general and to the anointed king in particular is well attested in the OT, and we have called attention to this both in Part XII of the Introduction and in the COMMENT on 4:1–11 (§9).

(d) In paying the closest and fullest attention to the Jewish background which was Jesus’ inheritance, we should not think that Jesus brought no new insights to bear upon that inheritance. This is especially true of Jesus’ interpretation of his Messianic vocation. The many and varied facets of Messianic expectation in the time of Jesus are becoming more and more evident, and the complexity of that expectation is now known to us in a way undreamed of thirty years ago. However, the feature of vs. 27 which causes most comment is the implied pre-existence of the Messiah indicated by the Greek aorist tense of has been delivered (Gr. paredothē). But we have no means of knowing how the original Hebrew or Aramaic text was understood, since the same tense would be used for aorist (past definite), imperfect (past continuous), and perfect (present perfect). This stage of transmission is very early, and translation into Greek meant that verbs took on a fixed tense-meaning which helped make systematic theology possible. It remains to be said that the pre-existence of the Messiah certainly seems to be indicated in Enoch xlviii 3, 6.

(e) Whether the words as spoken by Jesus implied a consciousness of pre-existence we cannot know. But the Markan tradition (Mark 13:32), along with the passage under discussion, makes it clear that at a very early stage in the primitive Christian community such pre-existence was taken for granted.

(f) In much NT academic writing it is hard to escape the conclusion that commentators think they have found a neatly ordered stratum of primitive Christian belief, wholly self-consistent and with no awkward salients. Against this supposedly definable background they find it possible to contrast the alleged Hellenisms of Paul, hypothetical early Gnostics, and the theologizings of a supposedly late Johannine vocabulary. This familiar Hegelian pattern then leads directly to the nascent “Catholicism” of the early Church, with elements from the mystery religions introduced to make the usual critical amalgam. This picture, whatever validity it may have been thought to possess thirty or more years ago, has been rendered totally irrelevant by new knowledge from recent manuscript finds in Palestine and Egypt.

28–30. These verses are peculiar to Matthew. Considering the dependence of these verses in the Greek on the LXX of Ecclus 51, the search for a Gnostic motif underlying them seems curiously labored (cf. “The Logion of the Easy Yoke and of Rest,” by Hans Dieter Betz, JBL 86 [1967], 10–24). The references which bear directly on the Greek are as follows:

Matt 11:25 — Ecclus 51:1, 10

11:28 — 51:23, 27

11:29 — 51:26, 27

For the final phrase of vs. 29, cf. Ecclus 6:28; Jer 6:16. The discovery of a first-century B.C. Hebrew text of Ecclesiasticus at Masada should finally put to rest any notions of the supposed dependence of vss. 28–30 on so-called Gnostic sources. Nor is there any evidence for an alleged pre-Christian Gnosticism in any Qumran sources.

29. my yoke. The Law is described as a yoke in Pirqê Abôth iii 6; and cf. also TB, Berakhoth 13a. Pss Sol 7:9 refers to God’s service as “God’s yoke.”

Jesus’ own view of his ministry, in the face of apparent failure, is one which involves a light burden and an easy yoke, for the commitment demanded is that of personal allegiance to himself. An easy yoke and a light burden are offered in exchange for the arbitrary demands of Pharisaic legalism and the uncertainties of ever-proliferating case law.

COMMENT

Every possible and impossible origin has been suggested for this section, from Gnosticism (usually undefined) to pagan Hellenistic mythology (normally unidentified). Generally, vss. 25–26 are accepted with extreme caution as belonging to an early tradition, while vs. 27 is rejected on the a priori grounds that this could not possibly have been uttered by Jesus. Verses 28–30 are accepted as dependent on Ecclus 51:23–27, and probably therefore freely adapted OT themes attributed to Jesus by the evangelist or an editor. Our own comment is given above in the NOTES. We here call attention to the careful analysis of this section by A. Feuillet, “Jesus et la Sagesse divine d’après les Évangiles Synoptiques,” CBQ 30 \(1968\), 573–79. He demonstrates the completely Semitic character and OT background of this section, and his notes and bibliography are excellent.

46. CONTROVERSY OVER THE LAW

(12:1–15A)[†]

12 ¹ At that time Jesus passed through the grain fields on the Sabbath, and his disciples, being hungry, began to pluck ears of grain to eat. ² On seeing this, the Pharisees said to him, “Look, your disciples are committing an unlawful act on the Sabbath.” ³ He replied, “Have you not read what David did, when he and his companions were hungry? ⁴ How he went into God’s house and ate the bread of the Presence, which was not permitted to him or his companions for food, but was reserved for the priests only? ⁵ Or have you not read in the Law that on the Sabbath priests in the temple profane the Sabbath and are without guilt? ⁶ But I tell you that something greater than the temple is here, ⁷ and if you had known what this means: ‘I wish for mercy and not sacrifice,’ you would not have condemned the guiltless, ⁸ since The Man is lord of the Sabbath.”

⁹ Going on from there, he went into their synagogue, ¹⁰ where there was a man with a withered hand. They demanded of him, “Is it permitted to heal on the Sabbath?”—so that they might have grounds to accuse him. ¹¹ But he said to them, “What man is there among you, possessing a single sheep, who will not lay hold of it and haul it out, if it falls into a pit on the Sabbath? ¹² And how much more valuable is a man than a sheep!

Therefore, it is permitted to do good on the Sabbath.”

¹³ He then said to the man, “Put out your hand,” and he held it out, and it was restored, made whole like the other.

¹⁴ The Pharisees, however, consulted about how to destroy him. ^{15a} Jesus, being aware of this, withdrew from the place.

NOTES

12:1. At that time. This is a formula peculiar to Matthew, and most formulae in Matthew appear in close association with each other; cf. “the report of this” (9:26, 31); a Greek formula of arrival and departure (2:1, 13, 19); John came ... Jesus came (3:1, 13); the formula on listening (13:9, 43); similar Greek constructions at 8:23, 28, 9:1, 9, 15:21, 29.

Sabbath. The origin of the Sabbath as a compulsory day of rest is obscure, and in the OT it is linked with the creation as an act of God’s merciful providence (Gen 2:2 ff.). It is inappropriate to this commentary to provide a lengthy excursus on the development of the Sabbath, since by the time of Jesus the manner of its observance had long become fixed, except for minor cases where changing customs seemed to make adjustments necessary. For fuller information on the Sabbath, cf. Kittel’s TWNT, ad loc., and more briefly the appropriate article in A Theological Word Book of the Bible, ed. Alan Richardson, London: SCM, 1950; New York: Macmillan, 1951.

to pluck ears of grain. Cf. TB, Shabbath 73b. This was one of the thirty-nine kinds of work forbidden on the Sabbath by later rabbinic law.

2–5. Jesus counters the criticism of the Pharisees in two ways. First, the disciples are technically breaking the Sabbath, but out of the pressure of hunger, and Jesus quotes an analogous situation (1 Sam 21:1–6). In addition, the charge is based not on the written Law, which permitted plucking grain which was not theirs (Deut 23:25), but on scribal hermeneutics about the Sabbath. Secondly, in this account Jesus cites the example of the temple clergy, who of necessity break the Sabbath law by doing work connected with the offering of sacrifice (Num 28:9, 10). It should be noted that this second justification is hardly appropriate, for the work of the temple clergy is not analogous to what the disciples were doing.

The Markan tradition is even more obscure. Mark 2:27–28, in asserting that the Sabbath was given for man’s benefit, and therefore man may upon necessity work on the Sabbath, adds: “So The Man is Lord of the Sabbath.” But it is the disciples, not Jesus, who are being attacked for Sabbath-breaking. Matthew, if he knew the Markan tradition, places the saying at the end (vs. 8). The formula in Mark (“and he said to them”) may indicate that the saying is out of context. If so, it is yet another indication of the way in which the evangelists preserved all that was known to them of the oral tradition, though this often meant placing sayings out of context where they could best be accommodated. Matthew’s placing of the saying at the end of the incident does not diminish the difficulty, and his repetition of Hos 6:6 (cf. 9:13) reads oddly in the context. Perhaps the best justification for the present position of The Man is lord of the Sabbath lies in the fact that there can be no more appropriate day than the Sabbath on which Jesus can fulfill his Messianic work.

6. something greater than the temple. Just as the law of the Sabbath must give place to the demands of sacrificial worship, by so much more it may be set aside by the Messiah’s activity.

8. since. The Greek connective (gar) is essential to the argument at this point, if the saying is to remain in this context: the Messiah will be answerable for his community.

The Greek verbal agreements of Matthew and Luke against Mark in vss. 1–8, especially in vss. 1–4, are good illustrations of the dependence of these two evangelists on traditions other than Mark.

9. Going on from there. In varying forms, the phrase occurs five times in Matthew.

The Markan version of the incident (Mark 3:1–6) has all the signs of an eyewitness account, presumably derived from Peter.

10. Matthew’s tradition says of the onlookers, They demanded of him, where the Markan tradition has them observing him with hostility.

11. If works of mercy to animals were lawful on the Sabbath, how much more the Messiah’s work of restoration! It is worthy of notice that while Pharisees permitted the rescue of an animal on the Sabbath the Essenes apparently did not.

12. Luke has a similar saying (Luke 14:1–6) in the context of another miracle. This is a typical case of the principle of qal va-ḥomer, arguing by analogy from the less to the greater. This was one of the Greek principles of logical reasoning introduced by Hillel the Elder into Pharisee legal analysis, a generation or two before this episode.

On miracles in general, the reader is referred to Part X of the Introduction, especially the concluding paragraphs.

14. The Pharisees. Mark 3:6 adds the Herodians (adherents of Herod) to the plotters.

15. There is a contrast here, continued into vs. 16, between the vociferous Pharisees and the quiet manner in which Jesus goes about his work.

COMMENT

The first section of this chapter is used by the evangelist to give typical examples of opposition to the Messiah. In the treatment of the first example it is interesting to note that both Matthew and Luke view the incident as a minor and insignificant breach of the Sabbath laws. Mark, less concerned with legal interpretation, almost makes the incident an act of idle destruction. Matthew and Luke alone record that the disciples were plucking ears of grain to eat—that is, on a technicality, they were “harvesting.”

47. HEALINGS, EXORCISMS, CHALLENGES

(12:15b–37)[†]

12 ^{15b} Many followed him, and he healed them all,
¹⁶ ordering them not to make him known. ¹⁷ So was fulfilled what was said by Isaiah the prophet:

¹⁸ “Behold my servant whom I have chosen, my beloved with whom I am delighted;
I will put my Spirit upon him, and he shall proclaim judgment to the Gentiles.

¹⁹ He will neither dispute nor shout aloud, nor will anyone hear his voice in the streets.

²⁰ He will not break a bruised reed, or quench a smoldering wick, until he makes judgment victorious.

²¹ And in his name the Gentiles will hope.”

²² Then a blind and dumb demoniac was brought to him, and he cured him, so that the dumb man spoke and saw.

²³ All the crowds were astonished, and said, “Can this be David’s son?” ²⁴ But when the Pharisees heard it, they declared, “This man casts out demons—but only through the agency of Beelzebul, ruler of demons.” ²⁵ Jesus, knowing the inflamed state of their minds, said to them, “Every kingdom divided against itself falls into ruin, and no city or house divided against itself will stand. ²⁶ If, therefore, Satan exorcizes Satan, he is thereby divided against himself. How then can his kingdom stand? ²⁷ If I exorcize demons through the agency of Beelzebul, through whom do your sons do it? So they must be your judges. ²⁸ But if I exorcize demons through the agency of God's Spirit, then without doubt the Kingdom of God is upon you. ²⁹ How is it possible to enter a strong man's house to plunder his effects, unless one first binds the strong man? Then indeed he may plunder his house.

³⁰ "He who is not with me is against me, and he who does not bring men together scatters them. ³¹ So then I tell you that every sin and blasphemy will be forgiven to men, but blasphemy against the Spirit will not be forgiven. ³² If anyone utters a word against The Man it will be forgiven, but whoever utters a word against the Holy Spirit will not be forgiven, either in this age, or in the age to come.

³³ "Either produce a sound tree, and sound fruit too, or produce a rotten tree and rotten fruit with it, for a tree is known by its fruit. ³⁴ You brood of vipers! Being evil, how can you speak what is good? For it is from the abundance of the heart that the mouth speaks. ³⁵ A good man, out of his store of goodness, produces good things, while an evil man produces evil things out of his store of evil. ³⁶ I tell you that on the day of judgment men will render account for every harmful word they utter, ³⁷ for by your words you will be justified, and by your words you will be condemned."

NOTES

12:17. So was fulfilled. Cf. NOTE on 1:22.

18–21. The quotation is from Isa 42:1–4, but it has little in common with the LXX version. It is clear that what we have here is either a translation of a recension not otherwise attested, but going back to Hellenistic times, or a translation done quite independently for the purpose in hand.

On the place of the quotation in Matthew's scheme, cf. Part IV of the Introduction. The Messiah is the embodiment of Israel's vocation as servant of the Lord.

On the Hebrew background of these verses, cf. John Grindel, "Matthew 12:18–21," CBQ 29 (1967), 110 ff.

18. chosen. (Gr. hēretisa). The verb hairtizein is late, and in 1 Chron 28:6 and Mal 3:17 of the LXX is used the sense of "adopt." On the aorist tense of the verb, cf. NOTE on 11:27. Interestingly, as an example of the methods of copyists, Isa 42:4a, b is omitted, as the copyist's eye (or the translator's) moved in the Hebrew text from one occurrence of mishpāt (judgment) in 42:3c to the next occurrence in 42:4b.

22. Mark has references at this point to a house, and to crowds (3:20), details which Matthew either omits or does not know. Other instances of this sort of omission include 8:4 (Mark 1:45); 8:16 (Mark 1:33–34); 9:1 (Mark 2:2); 12:15 (Mark 3:9).

An examination of the relationship between the synoptic gospels at this point will illustrate the difficulty of attaching too definite a shape to the material commonly known as "Q." At the same time it will indicate the relatively fixed state of the tradition from which the evangelists worked.

Matt 12:22–23	=	Luke 11:14
24–26	=	Mark 3:22–26 = Luke 11:15, 17–18
27–28	=	Luke 11:19–20
29	=	Mark 3:27 = Luke 11:21–22
30	=	Luke 11:23
	=	Mark 3:28–30
31–32b
43–45	=	Luke 11:24–26

Mark's 3:22–30 is omitted where one might have expected it in Luke (6:19 or 8:4), but as the table demonstrates most of it is found later. Luke combines a request for a sign (which is later in Mark) with the accusation of allegiance with demons. Luke's vss. 27–28 have no equivalent in Matthew, and Matthew's vss. 31–37 have no equivalent in Luke 11. Matthew's vss. 39–42=Luke 11:29–32.

The parallels of Matthew and Luke are in verbal agreement in the Greek against Mark, especially in Matthew's vs. 25 (Luke's vs. 17), and Matthew's vs. 26 (Luke's vs. 18). But even in their parallel to Mark 3:27, Matthew's tradition is far closer to Mark than to Luke. In Matthew there are two incidents, the first as reply to an accusation and the other Jesus' reaction to a demand for a sign; in Luke both are combined, but with interposed material at 11:27–28, without any parallel in Matthew.

The parallels are interesting, but cannot without grave difficulty be met by a presumption that Matthew and Luke had access to both Mark and an independent source. Such a presumption, on the evidence before us, calls for an extensive exercise in scissors-and-paste technique. What the situation does appear to demand is fairly rigidly defined blocks of oral tradition, loosely associated with regard to context

23. David's son. On this Messianic title, cf. Part XII of the Introduction.

24. Beelzebul. "Baal The Prince." Cf. NOTE on 10:25.

25. city. This of course included the territory around the city. House can also mean family or clan.

26. Satan. Cf. NOTE on 4:1.

27–28. Jesus, appealing to current Jewish practices of exorcism, throws the challenge back to his critics. On Jewish exorcism, cf. Acts 8:7, 9–24, 19:13, and Josephus Antiquities VIII. 46, 47.

At its best, first-century exorcism was just as effective a form of shock therapy as some experimentally demonstrated methods employed in medical therapy today. At its worst it was no less reliable than some popular forms of contemporary mental therapy.

27. your sons. I.e., “you,” “your own people.”

28. God’s Spirit. Cf. Luke 11:20, which has “finger,” on which cf. Exod 8:19.

Kingdom of God. The term occurs only four times in Matthew (cf. also 19:24, 21:31, 43), and though the phrase is synonymous in Hebrew usage with “Kingdom of heaven,” we have seen reason to find in Matthew a careful differentiation of meaning (cf. Parts VI, VII, and VIII of the Introduction). “Kingdom of God” in the Matthean tradition is applied to the Father’s reign after the judgment of the End, and “Kingdom of heaven” to the continuing community of The Man, lasting up to the time of the judgment. Two possibilities may be adduced for the occurrence of “Kingdom of God” here:

(a) Granted the validity of our examination in the Parts of the Introduction to which we have referred, this example of “Kingdom of God” may have been overlooked by the evangelist—or later by a copyist—in assembling the material.

(b) It is also possible that this saying of Jesus was embedded so firmly in the tradition that the evangelist allowed it to stand in this context.

(c) This is the one occasion on which this gospel speaks of the “Kingdom of God” as having come. But it is to be noted that—whatever the origin of this solitary instance—the saying is set firmly in the context of the future judgment (12:27, 36). Blasphemy against Jesus as The Man may be due to all manner of circumstances—misunderstanding his proclamation, for example—but after the entrance of The Man upon his reign (of which the exorcisms are a proleptic sign) such blasphemy will be against the Spirit who is already manifest in this age.

For all the difficulties inherent in this passage as it stands, we are not persuaded by a recent article (W. O. Walker, Jr., “The Kingdom of the Son of Man and the Kingdom of the Father in Matthew: An Exercise in Redaktionsgeschichte,” CBQ 30 [1968], 573–79) of the invalidity of the distinction which we have found in this gospel between the “Kingdom of God” and the “Kingdom of heaven.” See further C. K. Barrett, The Holy Spirit and the Gospel Tradition, New York: Macmillan/London: SPCK, 1947, a work to which Günter Bornkamm draws attention in his Überlieferung und Auslegung im Matthäusevangelium, Neukirchen, 1960.

is upon you. The Greek verb phthanein occurs only here and in Luke 11:20 in the synoptic gospels; it is a dramatically strong word.

29. strong man’s house. There is here a striking commentary, in terms of the Messiah’s vocation, on Isa 49:24–26. Cf. also Pss Sol 5:4. The very proclamation of the Kingdom was a victory over demonic forces, and the Messiah was gathering the fruits of that victory.

30. If the Messiah was following up an initial victory, then those who opposed him must take sides on what they witnessed. Cf. the reply of Jesus in Luke 9:50; the use of the Messiah’s name implies a certain commitment to him.

31–32. The illustrative material from Qumran, and in particular the Rule of the Community (1QS), has provided invaluable control evidence for the ethical dualism of much NT language. This is not confined to the contrasted pairs of the Johannine literature (truth, falsehood; light, darkness; good, evil; etc.). It also gives us firm ground for interpreting this passage. Prior to the discovery of the material now available to us from Qumran, the difficulties of the commentators at this point were understandable.

To speak against The Man in this age of the Kingdom’s proclamation may be due to all manner of misunderstanding, for The Man has not yet entered upon his reign. But speaking against the Spirit, either in this age of proclamation, or in the age to come (i.e., in the time of the Kingdom’s inauguration) is the ultimate sin. So with the Messianic work in this age: to confuse the Spirit of truth with the spirit of falsehood, to confuse the Messiah’s work with that of Beelzebul, is blasphemy.

The principal difficulty always resided in posing the question as: “It is pardonable to speak against The Man, unpardonable to speak against the Holy Spirit.” Thus stated, it seemed to be asking too much of Jesus’ critics to distinguish between the Messiah acting as such, even though veiled in the humility of mundane circumstance, and the Messiah acting through the power of the Spirit.

32. The Man. Cf. NOTE on 8:20. This saying certainly looks to the future of the Messianic Community in the Matthean tradition, for in Matthew “The Man” belongs to a Kingdom inaugurated and in being.

33–35. This is similar in content to 7:17–20 in the Great Instruction. The Lukan tradition (6:43–45) has more in common with this section than with the similar sayings in ch. 7.

Jesus’ critics are being warned of the alternative: either the results of the exorcisms are wholly good, and hence the work of the Spirit, or the results are evil, and so demonic in origin.

36–37. The Syriac text has “mellā baṭṭālā.” In both Aramaic and later Hebrew, the words from the stem bṭl mean both “lazy” and “hurtful.” Excuses about hasty judgment, speaking on the spur of the moment, cannot be accepted when the subject matter is as serious as good and evil. The sayings look back to the accusation that Jesus was involved in an alliance with Satan.

48. DEMAND FOR A SIGN

(12:38–45)[†]

12 ³⁸ Then some of the scribes and Pharisees asked him, “Teacher, we want to see a sign from you.”

³⁹ But he answered them, “An evil and adulterous generation seeks avidly for a sign, and no sign will be given to it apart from that of the prophet Jonah. ⁴⁰ For just as Jonah was in the monster’s body three days and three nights, so The Man will be in the heart of the earth for three days and three nights. ⁴¹ The men of Nineveh will stand up at the judgment with this generation, and will condemn it, for they repented at the preaching of Jonah. And something more than Jonah is here. ⁴² The queen of the south will rise up in the judgment with this generation and will condemn it, for she came from the boundaries of the earth to listen to the wisdom of Solomon. And something more than Solomon is here.

⁴³ “When an unclean spirit has left a man, he wanders through dry places, looking for a resting place, but finds none. ⁴⁴ Then he says: ‘I will go back to the house that I left,’ and when he returns he finds it vacant, cleaned, and in order. ⁴⁵ He therefore goes and brings with him seven other spirits more evil than himself, and they enter and take up residence. The last state of that man becomes worse than the first.”

NOTES

12:39. adulterous. In contemporary Jewish idiom, this was the equivalent of “idolatrous.” Idolatry, all through the OT and in the time of Jesus, was always identified with sexual excess of all kinds. See W. F. Albright, Archaeology and the Religion of Israel, especially pp. 84–94, and Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan (London: Athlone Press/New York: Doubleday, 1968), especially pp. 115–52.

39–42. sign of ... Jonah. What is common to Jonah, the queen of the south, and Solomon, is the uttering of, and a listening to, the word of God. In the person of Jesus more than Jonah, more than Solomon is among men, for now the sign of the dawning Kingdom of the Messiah is present.

40. For just as Jonah. It is best to describe this verse as editorial, whether from the hands of the evangelist, or from someone puzzled by vs. 39. What is being discussed is the sign of proclamation. There is no indication from the book of Jonah that the Ninevites heard of, and accepted, the prophet’s adventures as a kind of accreditation.

41–42. the judgment. I.e., the last judgment. Matthew generally uses the phrase the day of judgment (cf. 10:15, 11:22, 24, 12:36).

42. queen of the south. I.e., of South Arabia.

43–45. Comment is unnecessary by way of emphasizing the psychological truth embodied in these verses. The reader is referred to Dr. Sargant’s Battle for the Mind.

In the Lukan context, the verses are so placed as to appear to be intended for commentary on the failure of contemporary Jewish exorcism. In Matthew they are commentary on Israel’s failure to repent, and failure to heed the Messiah’s proclamation.

43. dry places. The ancient belief that desert places are the abode of evil spirits can be traced back to ancient Mesopotamia, in Babylonian incantations, and it also finds a place in the OT ritual of the scapegoat on the Day of Atonement (cf. Lev. 16:8 ff.). Cf. Isa 13:21, 34:14; Mark 5:10; Rev. 18:2.

COMMENT

The links between this section and the preceding are clear, and are spelled out verbally in Luke 11:16. Failure to recognize the signs of the dawning Kingdom in the conflict of the Messiah with the forces of evil operating in man was but the obverse side of an attempt to put Jesus to the test.

It is possible to interpret most of this chapter 12 as containing in microcosm the judgment of Jesus on contemporary Israel. The controversy on the Sabbath laws, ending in the synagogue, is concluded at vs. 15 by withdrew from the place. This may be a note of time and circumstance, but in view of the material in the rest of the chapter it may also mark a turning point in the ministry. The Messianic Servant's charter (vss. 18–21) is followed by the Pharisees' accusations of diabolical alliance when the crowd was asking about Jesus' possible Messiahship (vss. 22–24). It is therefore possible to see vss. 25–28 in the section above (§47) as referring to the fatally divided house of Israel: it is the house of Israel which has been seized upon by evil forces (cf. John 8:44). If this interpretation is correct, then Jesus came to lay siege to the strong man's house, to Satan's control of Israel, having first won a decisive victory against the devil in the desert. Those who oppose him are on Satan's side, calling good evil, and so failing to distinguish between the Spirit of truth and the spirit of falsehood (vss. 30–32). The present section then carries on the argument, and lines of separation are being drawn even within Israel.

49. THE MOTHER AND BROTHERS OF JESUS

(12:46–50)[†]

12 ⁴⁶ While he was talking to the crowds, his mother and brothers were outside, wishing to speak to him. ⁴⁷ Someone said to him, “Your mother and your brothers are outside, wishing to speak to you.” ⁴⁸ He answered his informant, “Who is my mother, and who are my brothers?” ⁴⁹ Then gesturing with his hand to his disciples, he said, ⁵⁰ “See—my mother and my brothers. For whoever does the will of my Father in heaven, that person is my brother, sister, and mother.”

NOTES

12:46. While he was talking. There is no indication of place, and his mother and brothers waiting outside might apply equally well to a house or to the fringes of the crowd.

his mother and brothers. Apart from chapters 1 and 2, and the mention of her with Jesus' brothers and sisters in 13:53 ff., this is the only occasion in Matthew where Jesus' mother appears. We know nothing of the brothers of Jesus. How old the tradition is we do not know, but it has been commonly held in both eastern and western Christendom, at least from the fourth century, that the brothers here referred to were either cousins, or children of Joseph by an earlier marriage. Matt 1:25 can be taken to mean that children were born to Mary and Joseph subsequent to the birth of Jesus.

47. This verse is omitted in some manuscripts, and is also omitted in RSV.

49. The disciples are the beginning of the Messianic Community, and so are members of the Messiah's family.

50. Obedience to the Father's will is the foundation of the community. (Cf. here the prayer of Jesus for the community in John 17.)

COMMENT

If we accept the interpretation offered in Section 48, then this apparently unrelated instance follows logically. Mere natural affiliation does not determine membership either of Israel or the Messianic community. The only criterion is obedience to the Father's will—a plea wholly in line with the Israelite prophetic tradition (cf. John the Baptist's strictures in 3:9).

50. PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM

(13:1–52)[†]

13 ¹ On that day, Jesus left the house and sat by the sea. ² Great crowds gathered round him, so much so that he got into a boat and sat there, with the crowds on the beach. ³ He taught them a good deal in parables, as follows: ⁴ “A sower went out sowing, and in the process some seeds fell along the path and the birds came and devoured them. ⁵ Some, however, fell on stony ground where they had not much soil, and they immediately grew upwards because there was no depth to the soil. ⁶ But when the sun rose they were scorched and for lack of roots withered away. ⁷ Other seeds fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up and choked them. ⁸ Yet others fell on good soil and produced grain, some a hundredfold, some sixty, and some thirty. ⁹ Let him who has understanding listen.”

¹⁰ The disciples came to him with the inquiry, “Why do you speak to them in parables?” ¹¹ He replied, “It has been granted to you to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of heaven, while to them it has not been so granted. ¹² For to the man who has, more will be given and he will have abundance, while from the man who has not, even what he has will be taken away. ¹³ Therefore I address them in parables, since for all their looking they do not see, and for all their hearing they neither listen nor understand. ¹⁴ For them is fulfilled the saying of Isaiah the prophet: ‘You will certainly hear, but never understand, and you will certainly see, but never perceive.

¹⁵ For this people's heart has grown dull, their ears sated with hearing,
and they have closed their eyes,
lest they should perceive with their eyes, listen with their ears,
and understand with their mind, and turn for me to heal them.'

¹⁶ But your eyes are fortunate because they see, and your ears, too, for they listen. ¹⁷ I solemnly tell you that many prophets and righteous ones have ardently wished to see the things you see, and have not seen them; to hear the things you hear and have not heard them.

¹⁸ "Listen then to the parable of the Sower. ¹⁹ When anyone hears the word of the Kingdom and does not understand it, the Evil One comes and snatches away what was sown in his heart. This is what was sown along the path. ²⁰ As for what was sown on stony ground, this is the man who hears the word and immediately embraces it with enthusiasm. ²¹ But he has no root in himself, and lasts only for a time, and when trial or persecution arises because of the word, he immediately falls. ²² As for what fell among thorns, this is the man who hears the word, but worldly worries and care for wealth choke the word and it becomes unproductive. ²³ But in the case of what was sown in good soil, this is the man who hears the word and understands it; he certainly produces fruit, making in one case a hundredfold, in another sixty, and in another thirty.”

²⁴ He put to them another parable, in this way: “The Kingdom of heaven may be compared with a man who sowed good seed on his land. ²⁵ While men were sleeping, however, his enemy came and sowed weeds in the wheat, and went away. ²⁶ Thus, when the plants came up and bore grain, the weeds also appeared. ²⁷ The householder’s servants came and said to him, ‘Sir, did you not sow good seed on your land? How then does it happen that it has weeds?’ ²⁸ He answered them, ‘An enemy has done this.’ Thereupon the servants said, ‘Is it your wish, then, that we go and gather them up?’ ²⁹ But he replied, ‘No—lest in gathering the weeds you root up the wheat at the same time. ³⁰ Let both grow together until harvest, and at harvesttime I will give orders to the reapers to gather the weeds first, and bind them in bundles for burning, but to gather the wheat into my granary.’ ”

³¹ He put before them another parable: “The Kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man (took and) sowed on his land. ³² It is the smallest of all seeds, but when it is grown it is the largest of the shrubs and becomes a tree, so that the birds of the air come and make nests in its branches.” ³³ He put before them another parable: “The Kingdom of heaven is like yeast which a woman took and put into three measures of flour until it was all leavened.”

³⁴ Jesus said all this to the crowds in parables, and he said nothing to them without a parable. ³⁵ In this way was fulfilled the saying of the prophet:

“I will speak in parables,
I will declare what has been hidden since the foundation of the world.”

³⁶ Then he left the crowds and went into the house. His disciples followed him, and asked him, “Explain to us the parable of the weeds on the land.” ³⁷ His reply was, “He who sowed the good seed is The Man. ³⁸ The land is the world, and the good seeds are the children of the Kingdom. The weeds are the children of the Evil One, while the enemy who sowed them is the devil; ³⁹ the harvest is the end of the age, and the reapers are angels.

⁴⁰ As, then, the weeds are gathered and burned in the fire, so will it be at the consummation of the natural order.

⁴¹ The Man will send his messengers to gather out of his Kingdom all causes of sin and all evil-doers, and ⁴² they will throw them into the fire; there will be shrieking and grinding of teeth. ⁴³ Then the righteous will shine as the sun in the Kingdom of their Father. Let him who has understanding listen.

⁴⁴ “The Kingdom of heaven is like treasure hidden in a field, which a man discovered and buried, and then in his joy proceeds to sell all that he has to buy that field.

⁴⁵ Again, the Kingdom of heaven is like a merchant searching for fine pearls; ⁴⁶ on finding one very valuable pearl, he proceeded to sell all that he had and bought it.

⁴⁷ Once more, the Kingdom of heaven is like a net cast into the sea, which gathered every kind of fish. ⁴⁸ When it was full, men hauled it ashore, sat down and sorted the usable fish into storage, but threw the unusable away. ⁴⁹ It will be so at the consummation of the natural order. The angels will come out, separate the wicked from among the righteous, ⁵⁰ and throw them into the furnace of fire. There will be shrieking and grinding of teeth. ⁵¹ Have you understood all this?” And they replied “Yes.” ⁵² He then said to them, “Therefore every scribe who has been trained for the Kingdom of heaven may be compared with a householder who produces from his storeroom both old and new things.”

NOTES

13:1–9. Cf. Introduction, Part XI, The Parable Audience.

crowds. Cf. second NOTE on 4:3.

4. sower. It is not clear in this short section (13:1–9) whether Jesus or the Father is represented as the sower. But the present infinitive of the verb to sow would appear to indicate that this was a continuous action—i.e., Jesus is continually adding to the Kingdom.

10. the disciples. Cf. Introduction, Part V.

At this point, Luke (8:9) has the disciples “asking him the meaning of the parable.” Mark’s Greek is decidedly awkward at this point (4:10), and this may be an indication that what follows was fitted in here from a body of oral tradition.

11. Cf. Mark 4:11, which has a scheme which can be detailed like this:

The mystery of the Kingdom Everything is given	is taught to you	to those outside

(directly).	in parables.

mysteries. The Kingdom itself, as a Messianic idea, was not only familiar to the disciples, it was known and awaited with eager expectation by the Jews. What was granted to the disciples, through their discipleship, was access to the innermost secrets of the Father’s providence, in much the same way that the prophets claimed access to God’s heavenly council (sôd). Cf. Introduction, Part XI. This meaning of mystery, as referring to the prior decisions of God, has been put beyond question by the work of Raymond E. Brown, largely based on the Dead Sea scrolls: cf. The Semitic Background of the Term “Mystery” in the New Testament, Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1968.

12. This idea will be repeated again in 25:29 in the parable of the journeying property owner. Cf. Mark 4:25.

The passage is obscure. On the surface the saying deals with spiritual capacity, with the gift of faith, which—it is implied—the disciples have, but not the crowds. Hence real or imagined “case law” is taught to the latter, to enable them to seek the response of faith. However, this is not very satisfactory, for parable teaching would (vs. 12b) only succeed in removing from the crowds even the little they have already. It is far better to interpret the saying as dealing with a spiritual inheritance, and not the capacity for faith. The disciples—Jews, like the members of the crowd—were humble enough to learn from their inheritance as it was expounded by Jesus. To them more would be added, i.e., an inheritance in the Kingdom. To those who had vacated their inheritance by opposition to the proclamation (cf. COMMENT on §48), their reliance on the Old Covenant would be valueless.

14–17. The introduction of this quotation (from the LXX of Isa 6:9 ff.) does not have the familiar Matthean hina plērōthē, “so was fulfilled.” The total context of the passage in Isaiah determines its place and meaning here. Cf. Introduction, Part IV, Parables.

16. But your eyes are fortunate. The Lukan version (10:23–24) puts this saying, in a different form, in the context of the return of the seventy disciples. The your is emphatic here (humōn de), in contrast with them (autois, ekeinois) of vss. 10, 11, 13, 14.

17. many prophets and righteous ones. There may be a distinction drawn here between the two. Attention has already been called to the fact that Righteous One as a Messianic title (cf. Acts 7:52) has a long and still elusive OT and intertestamental background. It is worth noticing here that only Noah is described as the righteous one without qualification in the OT (Gen 6:9, 7:1), while in the intertestamental material only Abraham and Simon the high priest are so designated in addition to Noah (Ecclus 44:17, 19–21; Josephus Antiquities XII. 2, 5). Too much should not be read into the verse here, which may simply be an assertion that it was not only prophets who looked for a future revelation of the hidden divine will. It is equally possible that we have an hendiadys here—i.e., “the righteous prophets.”

18. This verse must be regarded as belonging to a very early stage of the tradition, but not as coming from Jesus himself. In the first place, the titles the parable of the sower, and the similar the parable of the weeds in vs. 36 are the only examples of such titles in the NT. Secondly, even the title here is incorrect, for the parable has more to do with the ground than with the sower. Thirdly, Jesus is rarely recorded as having explained his parables in anything like the detail given here. Fourthly, one must note that the explanation is offered to those (the disciples, vs. 10) who have already been told that they are privy to the prior decisions of God and hence have no need of parable instruction. The very confusion between the synoptic gospels here gives us some indication of what has happened. Mark 4:13 represents Jesus questioning the inability of the disciples to understand; Luke 8:9–10 simply says that Jesus explained the parable. It is possible that what we have here, as also in the explanation of the parable of the weeds (vss. 36–43), is uncertainty at a very early stage of the community's history as to what the "coming" of The Man meant. The first explanation has nothing to say about the harvest in terms of The Man's Kingdom, while the second sounds more like the words of Jesus used to describe the Kingdom on quite another occasion.

So far as the present explanation is concerned, it must have been part of the fixed tradition from an early date. It is otherwise impossible to account for its being attributed to Jesus himself. The care taken in preservation of the oral tradition was such as to allow little room for post-apostolic manipulation. Most likely it belongs to a period very shortly after the expansion of the community, when Christians were puzzled by the failure in consecration on the part of some neophytes.

The uncertainty about the interpretation is demonstrated by the confusion which Mark displays between the seed sown (cf. Mark 4:14, 15) which, being the proclamation of the word, may be presumed to be of divine origin, and the state of the ground into which that seed fell. Cf. also the same confusion in Mark 4:16, 17, extended into 18–19. Luke's version (8:11–15) similarly exhibits confusion between the seed, as word of God, and the ground into which it falls.

It is possible to conclude that there were originally two parables, one concerning seed, and the other about the ground, with a subsequent conflation of content.

24–30. may be compared (Gr. homoiōthē). Matthew has this regular formula, varied by homoia esti, in the customary Jewish manner of introducing any cases which he does not share with the Markan tradition. He has a simpler form at 25:14 (hōsper).

It would appear that Matthew's tradition contained a block of parable sayings (the weeds, the mustard seed, the yeast, the treasure, the pearl, the net) with an ending. The predilection of this gospel for arrangements taken over from the mnemonic devices of oral recitation (in this case two groups of three) would dictate the insertion of a parable explanation at vss. 36–43.

An examination of this block (13:24–50) with Mark 4:26–34, on the usual theory that Matthew used, and then rearranged, the Markan material, cannot adequately explain some oddities. Why did Matthew leave aside Mark at 13:24, then use Mark 4:33–34, and having done so place it after the saying on yeast, rather than leave it where it was in the Markan place after the mustard seed? Moreover, on the usual synoptic theory he omits Mark's 4:21–25 at vs. 31, while the material parallel to the Markan tradition is scattered throughout Matthew. For example, Mark 4:21=Matt 5:15; Mark 4:22=Matt 10:26; Mark 4:23=Matt 11:15; Mark 4:24=Matt 7:2; Mark 4:25=Matt 13:12. Even allowing for the diverse manifestations of the oral tradition, this calls more for access to an independent tradition than for a scissors-and-paste technique with an oral tradition already committed to writing.

30. harvest. Cf. 3:12. There is no parallel in Mark or Luke to this parable, though Mark (4:26 ff.) has words in common with Matthew: "were sleeping," "came up," "wheat," "grain," "harvest." The emphasis in the Markan story is different, but the eschatological interest has the same clarity in both by the use of the word "harvest." To explain this parable of Jesus in terms of the opposition to him, as though there is a direct equation between weeds and the Pharisees, may indicate the viability of parable as a form of instruction, but by virtually identifying the disciples with the good grain it also identifies them with the elect at the harvest—an identification specifically ruled out in chapter 24.

burning. Fire is constantly used in Matthew to describe the judgment (cf. 3:10, 5:22, 7:19, 13:40, 42, 18:8–9, 25:41).

31–33. It is a mistaken interpretation which sees in these sayings an assertion of the silent, gradual growth of the Kingdom. In all of them, the emphasis is on the sheer miracle of the growth of the Kingdom.

32. largest of the shrubs. The mustard shrub commonly grows to a height of ten feet by the Sea of Galilee.

birds of the air. Cf. Dan 4:21, from which this half of the verse is a quotation. Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom gathered vassal nations; the Kingdom of heaven will also gather men from far off.

There are agreements in the saying about the mustard seed between Matthew and Luke as opposed to Mark. Once again, in this saying it is just as plausible to suppose—on the usual synoptic theory—that Luke used Matthew and Mark, as it is to think that Matthew combined Mark with “Q.”

34. It is clear that the above sayings were addressed to the crowds, and not to the disciples.

35. Ps 78:2, from which this quotation is taken, is a rehearsal of Israelite history, in obedience and rebellion, up to the establishment of the Davidic monarchy. Once more, we emphasize that this is no mere OT proof text; cf. Part IV of the Introduction.

36. If we may judge from the confusion in the Markan parallel to vss. 18–23, then we may question whether the explanation that follows is from the lips of Jesus.

37. The Man. As we saw in the Introduction (Parts VI and VII), it is The Man who calls men into his own field, the Kingdom of heaven.

38. children of the Kingdom. The phrase was used in 8:12, but there had the sense of those who had been chosen for the Kingdom, but had failed in their vocation.

40. the consummation of the natural order. This is a constant theme in Jewish apocalyptic literature. Cf. Testament of Levi 10; Apocalypse of Baruch xiii 3, xxvii 15, liv 21, lxxxiii 7; Enoch xvi 1; Dan 12:13; 2 Esdras 7:113. Cf. also Heb 9:26. It is undoubtedly the sense of the Qumran expression gemar haq-qēs, where it means “the end of the present age” (i.e., created order). This phrase is repeated in vs. 49. The Greek phrase can also mean “the end of the present age”—an understanding of the ministry of Jesus characteristic of Pauline thought.

41–43. This illustrates the point made in Part VI of the Introduction: the Kingdom of The Man is coincidental in time and extension with the Messianic Community and is temporary. Membership in that community in no way guarantees inclusion among the righteous in the Kingdom of the Father. Cf. Dan 12:1; Ecclus 50:7.

Let him ... Cf. NOTE on 11:15.

44–46. These sayings may refer to the mission of Jesus seeking men for his Kingdom, with a plain statement of the price which must be paid for that Kingdom's inauguration. Similarly, they may indicate the sacrifice demanded of those who come to the Messianic Kingdom. In the context in which they were first spoken, they may have reference back to vs. 11: the disciples are in present possession of a secret, that of the identity of the Messiah and his impending reign.

Certainly there is a call here for sacrifice and detachment, a steadfast regard for the treasure which the disciples already possess, and alongside which all else is counted for nothing.

hidden in a field. The practice of hiding valuables in the ground, especially in times of crisis and insurrection, was common enough throughout the Middle East, and has by no means been unknown in Europe down to our own times.

pearl. Pearls were in great demand in the ancient world, and ranked with gold as symbols of wealth (cf. 7:6).

There is no parallel to these sayings in Mark or Luke.

47–50. This parable re-emphasizes the theme of the weeds in vss. 24–30, of separation at the end of the Messianic age.

48. usable ... unusable. This may refer to good or bad fish simply, or—symbolically—to ritually “clean” and “unclean” fish (cf. Lev 11:9 ff.). Mark and Luke have no parallel to this saying, though commentators sometimes refer to John 21:11, in which connection it is thought that the ancients found the total number of different varieties of fish to be 153.

51–52. The disciples have heard two kinds of instruction in this chapter: the public part in vss. 1–8 and old and new. This may refer to the Law and the Proclamation, or to the new revelation in Jesus of the prior decisions of God, with a reference back to Ps 78:2.

31–33, and the private explanations and further parables relating to the Kingdom in the remainder of the chapter.

COMMENT

On parables in general, the reader is referred to Part XI of the Introduction.

This section is concerned with the Kingdom which Jesus proclaimed. The presentation of case law to the crowds, followed by the explanations which appear in our present text, altogether makes up an illustration of the way in which parables came to be quoted in various contexts and used to illustrate quite diverse points.

51. UNBELIEF

(13:53–58)[†]

13 ⁵³ When Jesus had finished these parables, he went away from there ⁵⁴ and came into his own native town. He taught them in their synagogue, and they were amazed: “Where did he acquire this power and this wisdom? ⁵⁵ Isn’t this the builder’s son? Isn’t his mother named Mary? And are not his brothers James, Joseph, Simon, and Judas? ⁵⁶ Aren’t his sisters here? Where did he acquire all this?” ⁵⁷ So they were shocked by him. But Jesus said to them, “A prophet is only without honor in his native town and in his own home,” ⁵⁸ and because of their unbelief he was unable to perform many acts of power there.

NOTES

13:53–58. The unbelief with which Jesus was faced in the earlier material of this chapter now finds expression in Jesus’ own home territory, in Galilee.

54. The last mention of teaching in a synagogue is found here (cf. 4:23, 9:35, 12:9), and Matthew would seem deliberately to have qualified the word synagogue with their to express the growing rift between Jesus and official Judaism.

55–56. mother ... sisters. Cf. NOTE on 12:46.

builder’s son. The Markan tradition (6:3) has “builder,” and it also adds “among his own relatives” (Mark 6:4).

It is important in view of the widespread and romantic notion concerning Joseph’s occupation as a “carpenter” that we look at the Greek here. The word tektōn, translated by us as builder, has a wide range of meanings, from a shipbuilder to a sculptor, but it generally indicates a craftsman of considerable skill. The word can even be used of a physician. It seems clear that so far from Joseph being the simple—and poor—village carpenter making ox yokes or simple plows (which any peasant was capable of producing), he was probably a builder of some consequence, traveling over wide areas of country. So seen, the sacrifice involved in the self-renunciation of Jesus (cf. Matt 8:20) is far more radical than it is when seen against a background of village carpenter. It is worth adding here that our present English “architect,” directly derived from the same Greek word, certainly does not mean a man of limited accomplishments.

The Aramaic word naggārā covered both a maker of household furnishings or farm tools and a builder. In those days (as had been true for at least two thousand years, to say nothing of more recent times), master craftsmen were generally itinerants traveling alone or with their families from city to city as work became available. This must have been especially true of a builder. In June 1968, an ossuary was excavated in Jerusalem bearing the Aramaic inscription “Simon—he built the temple.” In the same way Joseph may have spent much of his working life as a builder in Jerusalem. In view of the implied statement (see also Luke 4:22 and John 6:42) that some of the people of Nazareth did not know Jesus by sight when he first appeared after the beginning of his public ministry, though he must have been by that time at least thirty, it is clear that he had never spent much of his time in Nazareth. Nor presumably had his father.

Nazareth was ideally situated for an itinerant builder, since he could settle his family comfortably within a short walk from the main roads which led to such coastal cities as Ptolemais (Acre) and Caesarea, or Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee and Gadara overlooking the Sea of Galilee from the southeast. All these and many other important towns such as Sebaste (Samaria) could be reached by donkey in a single day. Such cities as Caesarea, Samaria, and Tiberias were rebuilt just before or after the Christian Era.

COMMENT

It is noticeable that from this point onwards the narrative part of Matthew is in fairly close accord with the Markan scheme, though this is not true of the teaching material which Matthew incorporates up to chapter 18.

There is, however, one clear difference. Mark's scheme works up to the acknowledgment of Jesus as Messiah by Peter, and from that moment Mark strides on rapidly to the passion narrative. Matthew, however, who has represented the disciples in 13:51–52 as being in possession of the Kingdom's secrets, has yet to deal with their hesitancies and failures. His scheme provides for side glimpses of Jesus' dealings with Gentiles, for the execution of John, and for the continued and growing hostility of the Pharisees.

52. DEATH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST

(14:1–12)[†]

14 ¹At this time, the tetrarch Herod, hearing of the fame of Jesus, ²said to his servants, “This is John the Baptist who has been raised from the dead; that is why these acts of power are working in him.” ³For Herod had seized John and thrown him into prison, over the affair of Herodias, wife of his brother Philip, ⁴because John had said to him, ⁵“It is unlawful for you to have her.” But although he wanted to put him to death, he was afraid of the common people, who regarded him as a prophet. ⁶However, when Herod’s birthday came round, Herodias’ daughter danced before the company and pleased Herod —⁷so much so that he promised (under oath) to give her whatever she might desire. ⁸Prompted by her mother, she said, “Give me here on a platter the head of John the Baptist.” ⁹The king was sorry, but on account of his oaths and his guests, he commanded it to be given, ¹⁰and he sent and had John beheaded in prison. ¹¹His head was brought on a platter to the girl, who gave it to her mother, and ¹²his disciples came, removed the body and buried it, and then came and told Jesus.

NOTES

14:1. At this time. Cf. 11:25, 12:1.

Herod. I.e., Herod Antipas, one of the sons of Herod the Great. He is called tetrarch, which had come to mean “ruler of a subdivision (of a province),” rather than “king,” though vs. 9 in fact uses the title king.

2. acts of power. This is reference to the miracles of Jesus.

3. In the Markan account, it is Herodias who wished for John’s death, and Herod who resisted it out of his regard for John. Matthew lays the blame at Herod’s door. Such variations in the tradition give us a perspective which enhances our respect for the independence of the gospel records. If all accounts tallied on every score, then we would have every right to entertain great suspicion that the whole account had been “rigged” or manipulated in the interests of unanimity.

Some manuscripts omit Philip, presumably because it is probable that Herodias was not the wife of Philip but of another Herod who was half-brother of Antipas. For information on the complex and confusing relationships of the family of Herod, cf. Fritz Otto Busch, The Five Herods, tr. from the German by E. W. Dickes, London: R. Hale, 1958.

6 ff. Josephus (Antiquities XVIII. 5, 2) says that Herod executed John to forestall a possible rebellion, and the same authority bears witness to the enthusiasm for John shown by the common people.

12. his disciples. I.e., the disciples of John.

The mission of the disciples of Jesus was not a factor in Herod’s decision to rid himself of John.

COMMENT

A comparison of the Matthean and Markan traditions is interesting here. Mark introduces the account of John's death by reference to the missionary work of the disciples (Mark 6:12), which brings Jesus' work to the notice of Herod ("his name became well known"). This induces Herod to say that John ("whom I beheaded") had risen from the dead, and by this means Mark goes on to the account of the execution. Matthew, who does not record this mission of the disciples, introduces his narrative with his indeterminate At this time. There is in Matthew's account no explicit explanation of Herod's fear of a John who had come to life again; it is only implied by the unfolding of the story.

53. THE FEEDING

(14:13–21)[†]

14 ¹³ Upon hearing this, Jesus withdrew from there by boat to a lonely place by himself, but when the crowds heard of this they followed him on foot from the town.

¹⁴ As he went ashore he saw a great crowd, took pity on them, and healed their sick. ¹⁵ At evening his disciples came to him with the words: “This is a lonely place, and the day is over. Send the crowds away to go into the villages and buy provisions for themselves.” ¹⁶ But Jesus said, “There is no need for them to go away; give them something to eat yourselves.” ¹⁷ They said to him, “We have here only five loaves and two fishes.” ¹⁸ “Bring them here to me,” he said. ¹⁹ Whereupon, ordering the crowds to sit down on the grass, he took the five loaves and the two fishes, looked up to heaven, gave thanks, broke, and gave the loaves to the disciples, who gave them to the crowd.

²⁰ They all ate and were satisfied; and they took up twelve baskets full of broken pieces which were left over.

²¹ Those who ate were about five thousand men, apart from women and children.

NOTES

14:13. withdrew. Cf. 2:12 and 4:12. This withdrawal is a direct response to the news of John's death.

14. took pity. Cf. 9:36. The pity here springs from the same concern for those lost and shepherdless.

15. the day is over. This can be taken to mean that the time for the usual evening meal is already over.

18–19. The Matthean version is terse in comparison with Mark, and Matthew makes no mention of any questions from Jesus.

On vs. 19, see the COMMENT below.

20–21. If the incident, as we contend, was more in the nature of a prophetic symbol, then we may (in the light of John 6:25–59) see the fragments collected as symbolic language from the evangelists. Jesus, who feeds them now in token of the impending Kingdom and the Messianic Feast, will never fail to feed them. There is enough and to spare.

21. five thousand. I.e., a good round number. To dismiss the historical accuracy of the event because of exaggeration in numbers is a foolish proceeding. The nature of oral tradition is such that minor details, such as the number of a crowd, almost immediately become subject to exaggeration. Josephus is full of such exaggerated numbers (such as his assertion that towns in and around Galilee had a population of 45,000, about ten times too much), but this in no way reduces his credibility in other historical details.

In 1921 a milk-woman from Lifta came to the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem with the news that on the day before, 40,000 Jews had been massacred in Tel Aviv by Arabs. This was the first word of the massacre received by one of the authors; later news reduced the number of deaths to about forty.

By way of conclusion to this material, 2 Baruch 29:8 speaks of an expectation of a repetition of feeding on manna in the Messianic Age.

COMMENT

If this account of the feeding (together with its duplicate in 15:32–39) is simply to be regarded as a miraculous multiplication of bread and fish in order to feed the hungry, then it stands alone in the gospels. Aside from the compassion of Jesus, it is plain from all four gospels that Jesus' works of power were not only signs of the Kingdom's advent, but were also instruments by which it came (cf. Introduction, Part X).

In this particular instance it is John's gospel which provides us with some clues as to the real meaning of the narrative. John 6:15 records that after the feeding, the crowds wished to take Jesus by force and make him king. On the face of it, this might be interpreted as the reaction of a weary crowd to one who had suddenly saved its members from hunger—though even this is rather far-fetched. In the ministry of Jesus there is always in the background the issue of Messiahship, and this is the best sense which can be attributed to John 6:15. It is then necessary to ask what there was about this particular occurrence which brought the issue so decidedly to the front. We suggest that the words of Jesus himself, though not recorded for us, indicated that what was being enacted before the people was not a simple feeding, but a dress rehearsal for the Messianic Feast (cf. NOTE on 7:11). That this was the way in which the NT writers understood the occurrence, and also the way in which Jesus interpreted it, can be demonstrated from the occurrence of the key words “took,” “gave thanks,” “broke,” and “gave” in:

Matt 14:19, 15:35, 26:26

Mark 6:41, 8:6, 14:22

Luke 9:16, 22:19

John 6:11 (except for “broke”)

1 Cor 11:23–24 (except for “gave”).

We are here dealing with a formula of words which was fixed in the tradition at a very early date, as witness their appearance in Paul's account of the Last Supper. If Jesus' “blessing,” or “giving of thanks,” to the Father had reference to the impending inauguration of the Kingdom, or to the new creation (a constant theme in the Pauline writings), then all the material was at hand for a truly explosive situation, a public declaration by the people of Jesus' Messiahship. Some notes have to be added:

(a) The duplication of the tradition in Matthew and Mark indicates the crucial importance of the incident in that tradition;

(b) The link between the passion of Jesus and the inauguration of the Kingdom is clearly delineated in our gospels, particularly in John, and at this stage of the ministry it will have been abundantly clear to Jesus that the time of supreme trial was not far distant;

(c) The connection between the passion, the Kingdom, the New Covenant and the Eucharist is clearly made in Paul's first Corinthian letter, and he cannot have received this other than from an already existing tradition;

(d) It must not be overlooked that John 6 makes this incident the springboard for a discourse on the bread of life;

(e) The Qumran material has provided us with wholly new evidence as to the quasi-sacramental and eschatological character attaching to meals in at least one group in Judaism.

54. THE WALKING ON THE WATER

(14:22–36)[†]

14 ²² Then he made the disciples get into the boat and precede him to the other side, while he dismissed the crowds. ²³ Having dismissed them, he went by himself up into the hills to pray, and when evening came he was there alone. ²⁴ The boat by this time was many furlongs away from the land, being buffeted by the waves, as the wind was contrary. ²⁵ Shortly before dawn he came to them, walking on the sea. ²⁶ But when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were frightened. “It is an apparition!” they said, and cried out in fear. ²⁷ But at once he spoke to them: “Take courage—it is I. Do not be afraid.” ²⁸ Peter replied, “Sir—if that is who you are—tell me to come to you on the water,” ²⁹ and he said “Come.” Peter therefore left the boat, and walking on the water came towards Jesus. ³⁰ But giving attention to the wind, he was afraid, and as he began to sink he cried out, “Sir, save me!” ³¹ Jesus immediately stretched out his hand and caught him, saying to him, “You of little faith—why did you doubt?” ³² When they had got into the boat the wind ceased, ³³ and those in the boat revered him with the words: “Truly you are the Son of God.”

³⁴ When they had crossed over they came to land at Gennesaret. ³⁵ When the men of that district recognized him, they sent word through all that region, and people brought to him all who were sick, ³⁶ desiring that they might only touch the hem of his himation, and as many as did so were made well.

NOTES

The geographical locations are confusing at this point. The hills (in Hebrew the singular har, “hill/mountain,” must often be rendered “hill-country”) of vs. 23 in no help (cf. the hill/mountain of 4:8, 5:1, 8:1, 17:1, 9, 20, 28:16). According to Mark the disciples were sent to Bethsaida, and if the feeding took place at the northeastern part of the lake, then Bethsaida was close by. In addition to this, Mark records only an arrival at Gennesaret (6:53), as does Matthew in vs. 34.

24. buffeted. The verb used (basanizein) is found in 8:6 of a man suffering from paralysis, and in 8:29 by the two demoniacs in their complaint to Jesus.

25. Shortly before dawn (literally, “in the fourth watch of the night”). The night from 6 P.M. to 6 A.M. was divided by the Romans into four equal “watches.”

28–31. The short account of Peter’s meeting with Jesus is not found outside Matthew. The tradition here recorded is of importance (against those who maintain that Matthew’s gospel always casts the disciples in a favorable light, as compared with the supposedly earlier and harsher Markan account). Matthew stresses the primacy of Peter among the disciples (cf. 10:2, 16:18), but there is no hesitation in recording Peter’s weakness under the strain of testing (cf. also 26:29 ff.).

31. little faith. This is a peculiarly Matthean description. Cf. also 6:30, 8:9–10, 26.

33. Son of God. I.e., Messiah. There is no basis whatever in this expression for an assertion that this is a Hellenistic appellation. The phrase is used in the Psalms to describe the anointed king (cf. Ps 2:7).

34–36. The welcome given to Jesus in Gennesaret contrasts sharply with the incidents which follow in ch. 15. On two previous occasions a miracle story in this gospel is followed by examples of the hostility of Jesus’ critics (cf. 9:32 ff., 12:23 ff.), in strong opposition to the enthusiasm of others.

COMMENT

Our position on miracles has been made clear in Part X of the Introduction. This—one of the “nature miracles”—commonly gives rise to much difficulty in the minds of many. Attempts to rationalize the story, or to penetrate behind the gospel account for some natural explanation which will not offend “modern” susceptibilities, are rather pathetic. We can never know precisely what happened on this occasion, but the spiritual import is clear.

55. QUESTIONS ON THE LAW

(15:1–20)[†]

15 ¹ There came to Jesus from Jerusalem scribes and Pharisees asking, ² “Why do your disciples deliberately flout the tradition of the elders. They do not wash their hands when they eat.” ³ He replied to them, “And why do you deliberately flout the commandment of God by your tradition? ⁴ For God said, ‘Give honor to father and mother,’ and ‘Let him who speaks evil of father or mother die.’ ⁵ But you say, ‘If anyone says to his father or mother: Whatever you might have received from me is consecrated to God, ⁶ he does not dishonor father or mother. So by your tradition you have emptied God’s word of meaning. ⁷ Shysters! How well did Isaiah the prophet prophesy of you when he said:

⁸ ‘This people honors me with their lips, but their heart is far from me;

⁹ they worship me frivolously, teaching as divine law what is purely human.’ ”

¹⁰ Turning to the crowds, he said, “Listen and understand this: ¹¹ What defiles a man is not what goes into his mouth, but what comes out of it.” ¹² Then the disciples came to him. “Do you know,” they said, “that the Pharisees were shocked when they heard this saying?”

¹³ He answered, “Every growth which my heavenly Father has not planted will be rooted up. ¹⁴ Let them be. They are blind guides, and if one blind man leads another blind man they will both fall into the ditch.” ¹⁵ But Peter replied, “Explain the parable to us.” ¹⁶ “And are you also without understanding?” he asked. ¹⁷ “Do you not see that what goes into the mouth passes to the stomach, and so passing on is cast out? ¹⁸ But what comes out of the mouth arises from the heart, and this defiles a man. ¹⁹ For from the heart arise evil thoughts, murder, adultery, sexual license, theft, perjury, slander. ²⁰ These are the things which defile a man. To eat with unwashed hands does not defile anyone.”

NOTES

15:2. The charge against the disciples is not that of breaking the Law, but of setting aside the tradition of the elders. No one can deny the hygienic desirability of coming to eat with clean hands; equally no one can deny that such precautions can be carried to extreme lengths.

2–5. Note the parallel framework of the scribes and Pharisees' questions and Jesus' replies in Matthew:

Why do your disciples Why do you flout the tradition? flout the commandment?

... But you say ... God said ...

The emphasis on commandment in distinction from tradition in vs. 3 is very marked.

4. Mark's version (7:10) has, "Moses said, 'Give honor....'" Matthew's version, with "God said ..." makes the antithesis between divine command and human tradition far clearer. It should be noted here that the so-called "Temple scroll" from Qumran also exhibits changes of this character, even altering sayings in the Pentateuch from "God said ..." to "I said...."

5. consecrated to God. Mark uses the technical term korban (Heb. qorbân). The term is attested in Josephus (Against Apion I) and in inscriptions from the middle decades of the first century A.D. Cf. StB, ad loc. By allowing a man to dedicate his property and possessions to the temple, the oral law (the tradition of the elders) had in effect permitted a man to escape the obligations of the fifth commandment (Exod 20:12). In this way an oral tradition could empty God's word of meaning.

7. Shysters! On this translation of hupokritai, cf. Appendix to Part IX in the Introduction. What is being condemned is the legalism which robs an otherwise legitimate gesture of all moral content.

8–9. The quotation (Isa 29:13) is neither from the LXX nor from the Masoretic text. It may derive from the "Old Palestinian" tradition. This source we no longer have, but its existence has been dramatically illustrated by the OT material from Qumran. Cf. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumran, especially pp. 120 ff.

10–11. The preceding incident was a private encounter, as Turning to the crowds demonstrates. Matthew's use of mouth here clarifies the ambiguities of the Markan tradition ("coming out of a man," Mark 7:16), but the clarification renders the explanation in vss. 17–19 unnecessary. Evidently the oral tradition behind our sources included it.

10. crowds. As distinct from the people; cf. NOTE on 4:23. Crowds may have included Gentiles.

12–14. The shocked reaction of the Pharisees was understandable, since Jesus appeared to be setting aside the legal distinction between ritually clean and unclean food. Certainly Mark (from Peter?—cf. Acts 10:1–11:18) thought that this was the case (Mark 7:19), but Matthew's tradition has no such sweeping conclusion. If we may judge from the controversies which plagued the early community (Acts 10, 11, 15; Gal 2:11 ff.) there was no such certainty as that assumed by Mark. Moreover, the controversy with the Pharisees was about a tradition, not about the Law. It is possible that the use of the crowds is of some assistance here. The Matthean tradition uses the word in distinction to the people (as indicated in the previous NOTE), and Jesus may well merely have indicated the inapplicability of the Mosaic Law to those outside the Old Covenant. Only the second part of vs. 14 has a parallel outside Matthew; in Luke 6:39 it comes in the context of the Great Instruction.

14. blind. The same accusation is brought against the Pharisees in 23:16–22, and Paul uses a similar phrase in Rom 2:19. Cf. also John 10:39–41.

15. Peter. The eminent position of Peter is stressed again here. In Mark (7:17) it is the disciples who make the request.

parable. Cf. Part XI of the Introduction. The saying of Jesus in vs. 11 was an example of case law.

18. Cf. 12:34.

19. Mark's list has thirteen forms of evil (7:21 ff.), while Matthew's tradition confines the list to seven, in the order of the Decalogue (cf. Hos 4:2).

20. This verse repeats vs. 11, reversing the order.

COMMENT

The reader is referred to Part IX of the Introduction, on Jesus and the Law. It is important here only to recall our warnings against supposing that Jesus' controversies with the Pharisees and lawyers arose from an intention on the part of Jesus to erect a "new law," or to abrogate the Mosaic Law.

56. THE SYRO-PHOENICIAN WOMAN; FURTHER HEALINGS

(15:21–31)[†]

15 ²¹ Jesus left that place, and went into the district of Tyre and Sidon, ²² and a Phoenician woman from those parts came to him calling out, “Take pity on me, Lord, Son of David, for my daughter is badly demon-possessed.” ²³ Not a word did he answer, and his disciples approached him: “Send her away,” they said, “for she is calling after us.” ²⁴ He replied, “I was not sent, except to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” ²⁵ She, however, came and threw herself before him and said: “Lord, help me.” ²⁶ But he replied: “It is not right to take children’s bread and throw it to dogs.” ²⁷ “Yes, Lord,” she said, “yet even the dogs eat the crumbs which fall from their masters’ tables.” ²⁸ “Woman,” said Jesus in reply to her, “your faith is great. Let it be as you wish.” Her daughter was made well from that time.

²⁹ Departing from there, Jesus went by the Sea of Galilee, and went up into the hills and stayed there.

³⁰ Great crowds came to him, bringing with them lame, blind, maimed, and dumb people and many others besides. They placed them at his feet and he cured them.

³¹ The crowds marveled when they saw the dumb speaking, the maimed restored, the lame walking, the blind seeing, and they praised Israel’s God.

NOTES

15:22. Phoenician (literally, “Canaanite”). The word is clear indication that the woman who came to Jesus was a Phoenician. Otherwise, she would have been called simply a Greek. Phoenician was still spoken, and the native name (kena’nî) of a Phoenician was in the Greek Chananaïos. It is worthy of note that Carthaginian peasants in the time of Augustine (fifth century A.D.) still called themselves Canaanites. Mark’s version has “a Greek, a Syro-Phoenician by race.”

came to him. The Matthean account has the Gentile woman coming to Jesus when he was in her own home territory, in agreement with Mark (7:24–25), which states that Jesus was in a house in Gentile country (Tyre).

23–25. These verses are found only in Matthew. Both the silence of Jesus and the near-desperate cry of the disciples are interesting in the light of commentators’ assertions that this gospel (in contrast with the supposedly earlier Mark) treats Jesus and his disciples with increased reverence.

26. children’s bread. Mark’s account simply has “Let the children be fed first” (7:27), which is ambiguous. Matthew’s version of Jesus’ saying in vs. 24, whether it is in context or not, illuminates this saying about the children—they are Israel.

28. faith. Once again, trust and confidence has compelled Jesus to extend his mission to a Gentile. Cf. 8:5–13.

29. Mark’s geographical details are here more complete, describing as he does a somewhat lengthy journey from Tyre by way of the district of Sidon, in the direction of the Sea of Galilee, then to the territory of the Ten Towns (Decapolis; 7:31). Matthew merely records, after the return, a journey to the hills, with a short summary of works of healing.

31. This verse is a reference to Isa 35:5, and may provide a sidelight on the way in which the tradition was recorded. Mark (7:32 ff.) has an account of the healing of a deaf-stammerer (mogilalōn in Greek, a word which is found in the LXX of Isa 35:6). Matthew simply records the healings in terms of the Isaian passage, where Mark—apparently aware of the same passage—describes a single healing against its background.

COMMENT

The next considerable part of the gospel is marked by a ministry in and around Galilee, and includes teaching by Jesus about his passion and resurrection (15:21–18:35). This corresponds with 7:24–9:50 in Mark, but in Matthew the journeys recorded by Mark are far less detailed (cf. 15:29 and Mark 7:31), while Matthew's record of instruction to the disciples is far more detailed.

The question of clean and unclean having been raised in the previous section, this next encounter naturally follows in sequence, for it deals with the relationship between Jews and Gentiles. Moreover, sayings such as those in 10:5–6 would demand explanation when non-Jews began pressing into the Messianic Community.

57. THE FEEDING

(15:32–39)[†]

15 ³² Jesus called his disciples to him and said, “I am deeply concerned about the crowd, because they have now been with me three days without eating. I am unwilling to send them away hungry, in case they faint on the way.” ³³ “Where,” said the disciples to him, “are we to obtain bread enough in this lonely place to feed such a crowd?” ³⁴ Jesus asked them, “How many loaves do you have?” “Seven,” they answered, “and a few fish.” ³⁵ Commanding the crowd to sit down on the ground, ³⁶ he took the seven loaves and the fish, and having given thanks he broke them and gave them to the disciples, who gave them to the crowds. ³⁷ When they had all eaten and were satisfied, they gathered up seven baskets of the broken pieces left over. ³⁸ Those who thus ate were about four thousand men, besides women and children. ³⁹ Dismissing the crowds, he embarked in the boat, and went to the hills of Magdala.

NOTES

15:32–39. The great importance attached to the account of the feeding is illustrated by its duplication here. The Johannine account of the feeding emphasizes its crucial place in the ministry by the assertion that the crowds wished to make Jesus king. In view of this tradition, and in view of the links suggested between the feeding, the Messianic Feast, the Last Supper and the Eucharist, we are entitled to assume a duplication here.

The assimilation of language in this account to that of chapter 14 reinforces such a view.

39. Magdala. The Greek (Magadan) is obscure. Magdala, where the hills rise sharply from the sea, would fit the Matthean location admirably. The Greek mistake arose very simply—delta, alpha and lambda look alike in uncials (capital letters were used exclusively in the early Greek book hand). The Syriac readings MGDW (LXX Mageddō=Heb. Megiddô), MGDYN, etc., may be better, but they would leave us with a quite unknown location.

58. DEMAND FOR A SIGN

(16:1–12)[†]

16 ¹ The Pharisees and Sadducees came to him, and to test him they asked him to show them a sign from heaven. ² He answered them, “When it is evening, you say ‘It will be fair, because the sky is red,’ ³ and in the morning, ‘Today will be stormy, because the sky is red and threatening.’ You know how to judge the appearance of the sky; why then can you not judge the signs of the times? ⁴ An evil generation seeks a sign, but no sign will be given to it, except the sign of Jonah.” He left them and went away.

⁵ When the disciples reached the other side, they had forgotten to take bread with them. ⁶ Jesus said to them, “Watch—beware of the yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees.” ⁷ Among themselves they discussed this, reasoning, “We brought no bread,” and, ⁸ knowing this, Jesus said, “Why do you discuss among yourselves, you of little faith, the fact that you have no bread? ⁹ Do you not yet understand? Do you not remember the five loaves for the five thousand, and the number of baskets you gathered up? ¹⁰ Or the seven loaves for the four thousand, and the number of baskets you gathered up? ¹¹ How then do you fail to understand that I was not talking to you about bread? Beware of the yeast of the Pharisees and Sadducees.” ¹² Then they understood that he was not telling them to beware of the yeast of bread, but of the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees.

NOTES

So far from suggesting an uncertainty which they are anxious to dissipate, the critics' request for a sign, an authentication of Jesus' ministry, is represented by the evangelist as a temptation.

16:1. Sadducees. This is the only place in the NT where the Sadducees are represented as being outside Judea. Their mention here is odd, unless there was some uneasy partnership between a group of Pharisees and a similar group of Sadducees seeking to trap Jesus. See below on vs. 12.

sign. Cf. 12:38.

2–3. While we have a few verbal agreements in the Greek of Matthew and Luke against Mark in vss. 1–4 of this chapter, these two verses are not well attested in the best manuscripts. NEB relegates to a footnote the whole passage When it is evening ... signs of the times. It is possible that the passage is a composition based on the kind of traditional saying which underlies Luke 12:54–56. We have retained the passage in our translation since it is not possible to make any final determination as to authenticity.

4. sign of Jonah. Cf. 12:39 and Mark 8:12. Some process of assimilation appears to have been at work here.

5–12. In Mark the conversation takes place in the boat. It is not easy to see what is meant by the Markan (8:15) “yeast of the Pharisees and of Herod” unless this refers back to Mark 3:6.

6–8. little faith. Cf. 6:30, 14:31. The disciples ought to have realized that Jesus was not referring to mere absence of provisions. Yeast, in vs. 6, is a symbol of corruption, as it was commonly known also in the rabbinic writers and in the NT (cf. 1 Cor 5:6–8; Gal 5:9).

9–10. The Markan account is fuller, with the disciples answering questions put to them by Jesus, and Matthew here and elsewhere has no tradition (such as that recorded by Mark) of “hardened hearts” on the part of the disciples (cf. Mark 6:52, 8:17).

11. The whole clause that I was not talking to you about bread may be an explanatory note by Matthew. It is not in the Markan account.

12. This explanation is hardly satisfactory. The Markan account, as we have seen, speaks of the “Pharisees and Herod,” a combination so unexpected that it is likely to be authentic. Matthew, knowing the tradition, and puzzled by it, appears to have substituted Sadducees for Herod in vs. 6, and has it also in the odd context of vs. 1. If the Markan tradition is accurate, then the combination of Pharisees and Herod may refer to a common hostility to Jesus, and Matthew's teaching is a harmonizing accommodation.

59. PETER'S CONFESSION

(16:13–20)[†]

16 ¹³ When Jesus came into the district of Caesarea Philippi, he inquired of his disciples, “Who do men say that The Man is?” ¹⁴ They said, “Some say John the Baptist, others Elijah, and yet others Jeremiah, or another of the prophets.” ¹⁵ He said to them, “But who do you say that I am?” ¹⁶ Simon Peter replied: “You are the Messiah, the Son of the living God.” ¹⁷ Jesus answered him, “You are fortunate, Simon son of Jonah, for this was not revealed to you by human agency, but by my Father who is in heaven. ¹⁸ And I in turn say to you that you are Rock, and on this rock I will build my community, and the powers of death shall not overcome it. ¹⁹ I will give to you the keys of the Kingdom of heaven. Whatever you bind on earth will have been bound in heaven, and whatever you release on earth will have been so released in heaven.” ²⁰ Then he gave strict orders to his disciples not to tell anyone that he was the Messiah.

NOTES

The graphically described incident of the healing of the blind man, which prefaces Peter's confession in Mark (Mark 8:22–26), either was not known to Matthew, or he felt that it was included in the general statement of 15:29–30.

16:13. Caesarea Philippi. This was about twenty miles north of the Sea of Galilee.

The Man. Cf. NOTE on 8:20. It is important to notice here the difference of treatment between Matthew and Mark. Mark has “Who do men say that I am?” The Matthean account is, as we saw in Part VII of the Introduction, built around the coming figure of The Man. In Matthew, The Man is a title of triumph, and now that the lines are firmly drawn, opposition to Jesus now overt and hardening, he can ask what the disciples think of The Man-who-is-to-come. The identification with himself is implied, but not explicit until the first question has been answered.

14. The reappearance of dead heroes was a well-known theme in contemporary Jewish thought. On John the Baptist, cf. 14:2. 2 Macc 15:13 ff. speaks of Jeremiah and Onias appearing to Judas Maccabaeus, and 2 Esd 2:18 refers to the coming of Isaiah and Jeremiah. On the coming of Elijah, cf. 11:14.

16. The identification of Jesus with The Man to come is explicit here.

The transliteration of the Gr. Christos by Christ in various English versions is inexcusable, and the RSV perpetuates the KJ transliteration. In its original context the question posed by Jesus and answered by Peter as spokesman demanded commitment to Jesus as Messiah. The fact that the Greek word is most often without the definite article in NT writings after the Acts must not lead to a too-hasty conclusion that the title Messiah became almost immediately a name, Christ. We have already pointed out that the absence of a definite article, in places where we have every reason to suppose an Aramaic background, makes the article conditional upon context (cf. NOTE on 10:41 [d]). The number of occurrences of Christos as a name in the Pauline letters may be far less than some commentators have supposed. There is certainly a definite article here in the Greek of Matt 16:16.

That there was some uncertainty in the primitive Christian community as to the precise nature of Jesus' Messiahship seems certain (cf. Robinson, “The Most Primitive Christology of All?,” in TNTS). In addition to this, there was also sectarian speculation about two messiahs; the insistence in Hebrews on Jesus' royal and priestly Messiahship (e.g., Heb 1:5–14, 4:14–5:10) can best be explained on the basis of a reply to those who had come from such a background.

Son of the living God. Far from this being an explanatory gloss by Matthew, it is perfectly in order in the context of Messiahship (cf. NOTE on 14:33). “God's Messiah” (in Luke 9:20) makes this quite clear. This was certainly not a Hellenistic concept. Among pagan Aramaeans no later than the ninth century B.C. (but with a far longer prehistory), it was important for a king or dynasty to be the “son” of the tutelary deity of city or state. The use of “Bar” in personal names nearly always had a background of such use. In Hellenistic times the use spread beyond royal personages. Cf. Robert E. Hansen, “Theophorous Son Names among the Arameans and Their Neighbors,” doctoral dissertation, Johns Hopkins University, 1948.

There is some verbal agreement in the Greek of Matthew and Luke against Mark in vss. 13–16 of this chapter, and also between Matthew and Mark against Luke and of Mark and Luke against Matthew. Verses 17–19 are peculiar to Matthew.

17. Simon is fortunate, the object of the Father's revelation (cf. 11:25). Cf. also for similar expressions 5:3 ff., 11:6, 13:16, 24:46.

Simon son of Jonah. It is possible that the name of Simon's father was Yohana(n), which might be transcribed Iōna in Greek. “John” was a very common name at this time, while “Jonah” was very rare. However, in view of the Syr. brēh d'Yōnā, it is better to assume our sources to be correct here.

human agency (literally, flesh and blood). This is frequent in the rabbinic literature, e.g., TB, Berakhoth 28b, “a king of flesh and blood” (in contrast with the heavenly King).

18. Rock (Aram. Kēphā). This is not a name, but an appellation and a play on words. There is no evidence of Peter or Kephas as a name before Christian times. On building on a rock, or from a rock, cf. Isa

51:1 ff.; Matt 7:24 f. Peter as Rock will be the foundation of the future community (cf. I will build). Jesus, not quoting the OT, here uses Aramaic, not Hebrew, and so uses the only Aramaic word which would serve his purpose.

In view of the background of vs. 19 (see below), one must dismiss as confessional interpretation any attempt to see this rock as meaning the faith, or the Messianic confession, of Peter. To deny the pre-eminent position of Peter among the disciples or in the early Christian community is a denial of the evidence. Cf. in this gospel 10:2, 14:28–31, 15:15. The interest in Peter's failures and vacillations does not detract from this pre-eminence; rather, it emphasizes it. Had Peter been a lesser figure his behavior would have been of far less consequence (cf. Gal 2:11 ff.).

my community (Gr. ekklēsia). The use of this Greek word in the Pauline letters antedates the final edition of the Greek gospels by some two decades. It is hard to know what kind of thinking, other than confessional presupposition, justifies the tendency of some commentators to dismiss this verse as not authentic. A Messiah without a Messianic Community would have been unthinkable to any Jew, and how precisely one Jewish group (at least) thought of that Community has been brought sharply into focus by the Qumran literature. The LXX used ekklēsia to translate words which denoted an assembly of any character, and it is a word which invariably translated Hebrew equivalents from the stem qhl. The character of the assembly in Hebrew is denoted by possessive genitives (e.g., “of the Lord,” “of the children of Israel,” “of the prophets”).

The word used by Jesus may have been kenishtā, which in the Syriac versions is used for both ekklēsia and synagogē. (In this passage the Syriac uses ‘edtā=Heb. ‘ēdāh, “religious community.”) Cf. on this subject K. L. Schmidt, TWNT, III, p. 525. When the Church moved into a Hellenistic environment, the Greek carried with it the sense of “assembly of freeborn citizens.”

the powers of death (literally, “the gates of Hades”). The community has just been referred to as a building, and here the forces of evil also have a fortress or city, that of Hades, the realm of death. For this concept, cf. Isa 38:10; Job 17:16, 38:17; Pss 9:13, 107:18; Wisd Sol 16:13. The Babylonians had a similar idea about a gatekeeper to the realms of death, and it is the gatekeeper who compels Ishtar to disrobe before entering that realm.

The sense here is that the powers of evil cannot contain or hold in check the new community.

19. Isa 22:15 ff. undoubtedly lies behind this saying. The keys are the symbol of authority, and Roland de Vaux⁷⁶ (Ancient Israel, tr. by John McHugh [New York: McGraw-Hill, 1961], pp. 129 ff.) rightly sees here the same authority as that vested in the vizier, the master of the house, the chamberlain, of the royal household in ancient Israel. Eliakim is described as having the same authority in Isaiah; it was Hilkiyah's position until he was ousted, and Jotham as regent is also described as “over the household” (2 Kings 15:5). Significantly, the first Chaldean governor after the deportation of 586 B.C., Gedaliah, is given the same title on his official seal. It is of considerable importance that in other contexts, when the disciplinary affairs of the community are being discussed (cf. 18:18; John 20:23) the symbol of the keys is absent, since the sayings apply in those instances to a wider circle. In John 20:23 the words are used of pardon, and in that context the Greek words luein and kratein derive from a secondary interpretation of Isaiah's Hebrew.

Kingdom of heaven. The identification of the Community (i.e., the infant Church) with the Kingdom is one which has caused difficulty to some commentators. We hope that Parts VI–VIII of the Introduction will have clarified our position. The Kingdom here is the temporary Kingdom, The Man's Kingdom, as distinct from that of the Father. The objections to the identification of the Kingdom with the Church, with the ekklēsia of this passage, can only rest upon a supposition that the Kingdom, as distinct from the Community, is thought to consist of those professing some kind of unschooled enthusiasm for Jesus, while the Church, the Community, has rules which the Kingdom does not have. Unless we are to suppose, in the fashion of some, that the NT material outside the gospels is a perversion of the proclamation of Jesus, then we are bound to find that at no time was the Community which Jesus founded an antinomian society. On the contrary: at the earliest levels open to our inspection commitment in faith to the Messianic proclamation of Jesus carried with it the obligation to submit to that Community's rules of initiation and to continue in the fellowship of that community of The Man's Kingdom, the Kingdom of heaven.

bind. The role of Peter as steward of the Kingdom is further explained as being the exercise of administrative authority, as was the case of the OT chamberlain who held the “keys.” The clauses on earth, in heaven, have reference to the permanent character of the steward’s work. Peter’s initiative is well illustrated by the admission of a Gentile to the community in Acts 10–11, under the guidance of the Spirit—an event which the historian considered as meriting a great deal of attention in his work.

whatever. The text here has ho ean (whatever), perhaps a scribal error in 16:19 for hosa ean (whatever), as appears in 18:18; the longer reading hosa ean is attested at 16:19 by manuscripts of the Caesarean family. The haplography involved in the corruption of hosa ean to ho ean is obvious, if it was not originally ho ean.

As for the sense of this passage, cf. the gift of the Spirit of truth as counselor, John 14:16 f., 26. The Latin Vulgate also translates as “will have been bound,” “will have been loosed,” exactly corresponding to the Greek. It is the Church on earth carrying out heaven’s decisions, communicated by the Spirit, and not heaven ratifying the Church’s decisions. Periphrastic tenses, though necessary in English, are quite rare in Greek, and therefore the construction at this point must be given its due weight. Cf. the translation and note ad loc. in Charles B. Williams, The New Testament: A Translation in the Language of the People, Chicago: Moody Press, 1949; London: Oliphants, 1950.

20. This is not the so-called “Messianic secret” suggested by some earlier scholars. Unless the ministry of Jesus was to be hopelessly compromised and misunderstood, public proclamations of his Messiahship were out of the question. We have already seen the difficulties publicity had caused him.

COMMENT

There is no passage in the gospels which has been more discussed than this, especially with reference to vss. 17–19. The general sense of the passage is indisputable. Jesus asks his disciples who The Man is in popular estimation, and they reply that some suppose him to be John the Baptist, others Elijah, Jeremiah, or one of the prophets. On being asked who they themselves suppose him to be, Peter answers that he is the Messiah, son of the living God. Jesus calls Peter fortunate, in that this knowledge has not come from human sources, but is a direct revelation from God. He goes on to assure Peter that he (Peter) is the rock on which the new community will be built, and in that community Peter's authority to "bind" or "release" will be a carrying out of decisions made in heaven. His teaching and disciplinary activities will be similarly guided by the Spirit to carry out Heaven's will.

In the Markan account, this acknowledgment of Jesus' Messiahship is central, and it is Peter's confession which prompts Jesus to reinterpret the Messiah's vocation to the disciples in terms of suffering and death. The Matthean tradition has already laid the ground for such reinterpretation by the use of OT quotations from the Servant Songs of Second Isaiah, but Matthew agrees with Mark that it was from this time onward that Jesus spoke openly of his forthcoming passion. There, is, however, a significant difference. Having spoken of the founding of the community, Jesus in the Matthean tradition goes on to an extended treatment of matters concerning the community.

Oscar Cullmann's view, that Matt 16:17–19 should be removed from its present context to an acknowledgment of Jesus by Peter in the Upper Room, has been recently criticized by Robert H. Gundry ("The Narrative Framework of Matthew 16:17–19," [NovT 7 \[1964–65\], 1–9](#)). Cullmann's view is set out in Peter: Disciple-Apostle-Martyr, tr. from the German by Floyd V. Filson, Philadelphia: Westminster/London: SCM, 1962.

60. PASSION PREDICTIONS

(16:21–28)[†]

16 ²¹ From that time on, Jesus began to make it clear to his disciples that he must go to Jerusalem and endure many things from the elders, chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and on the third day be raised. ²² But Peter took him and began to remonstrate with him: “Heaven forbid, Lord! This must not happen to you.” ²³ He, however, turned to Peter and said, “Get behind me, Satan! You are a stumbling block to me. You are not on God’s side, but man’s.” ²⁴ Then Jesus said to his disciples, “If anyone will come with me, then let him deny self, take up his cross and follow me. ²⁵ For one who grasps at self will lose it, but one who lets go of self on my account will gain it. ²⁶ What profit will a man have if he gains the whole world and loses his own self? Or what will a man give in return for his very self? ²⁷ For The Man is to come with his angels in his Father’s glory, and then he will repay every man for his conduct. ²⁸ I solemnly tell you there are men standing here who will not taste death until they see The Man enter upon his reign.”

NOTES

The Galilean mission now being ended, Jesus in this gospel devotes himself to the instruction of his disciples, and this particular emphasis can be seen in his disciples in vs. 21, in contrast with Mark's them. In all our gospels the bewilderment of both disciples and common people, alongside the hostility of official and semiofficial Judaism, is seen as centering upon Jesus' interpretation of his own ministry. In all three synoptic gospels the acknowledgment of Jesus as Messiah is the pivotal point in the ministry, and—again in all three gospels—Jesus speaks with complete candor of the inevitable end of that ministry.

16:21. Jesus. Some manuscripts add Messiah. As we have seen, the Matthean tradition is that the Messiah suffers; The Man is a figure of triumph.

must go (Gr. dei apelthein). The synoptic gospels are agreed on Jesus' statement of the necessity of going to Jerusalem, and also on the fact that for Jesus the Messianic vocation necessarily involved suffering. elders, chief priests, and scribes. This is a very odd order, and its fixed state in the oral tradition is demonstrated by its reproduction in this order in all three synoptic gospels.

third day. So in all the NT writings (Acts 10:40; 1 Cor 15:4; cf. Mark 8:31, 9:31, 10:34), reckoning Friday of the crucifixion as the first day.

be raised. The NT writers always speak of Jesus as “being raised” by the Father, or in the power of the Spirit, never that he raised himself. The NT faith is not that of immortality in the sense of continuing existence on earth (which is the meaning of all pagan sources on immortality), but of resurrection, in the sense of God reversing the apparent verdict of nature.

22–23. Peter spoke for the rest in confessing Jesus as Messiah, and here he is their spokesman in protesting the need for the Messiah to suffer and to die.

23. Get behind me. Cf. 4:10. Standing in opposition to the will of God is to be on the side of Satan, even to be doing his work.

24. In Mark this is a general saying addressed to the crowd and to the disciples. In context, it is far more likely that the Matthean tradition is correct, and that Jesus begins at this point to spell out the consequences to the disciples of their commitment to him. Further, in spite of his confession, it is plain that Peter has not fully realized that the fate of Jesus involves the fate of the disciples too.

deny self. Cf. NOTE on 10:38. To pursue earthly security at this juncture of the ministry is to lose all in the time of The Man's coming. In the light of vss. 27–28, it is important to remember that as originally spoken, this was a plain warning to the inner circle not to become involved in secular calculation, especially in anything which would jeopardize the Messianic vocation. That this warning could be, and certainly was, applied to members of the continuing Messianic Community is evidenced by Mark's the crowd and them for Matthew's his disciples.

25–26. Cf. 10:37–39.

self (Gr. psyche). Cf. NOTE on 10:39.

27. Mark and Luke have a saying (Mark 8:38; Luke 9:26) here, which Matthew has in another context, 10:33.

is to come (Gr. mellein). This verb will perfectly well serve to indicate either the coming of The Man in exaltation, or his coming to render his Kingdom to the Father at the judgment.

his Father's glory. The background of this saying seems to be that of Enoch—cf. 45:3, 61:8, 62:2, 69:27—while the phrase repay every man is reminiscent of Ps 62:12 (13H).

28. solemnly tell you. Cf. NOTE on 9:11.

men standing here. On vss. 27–28, cf. Parts VI–VIII of the Introduction. It has been observed that Matthew and John see the glory and exaltation of the Messiah (or The Man) in terms of the passion and resurrection of Jesus. There is therefore no call to see in these words of Jesus any belief in his mind that his “coming” was in some sense an expected return to earth in glory, however much this may have been the belief of some in the early Church (including Paul at first). The Markan version (9:1) speaks of “God's Kingdom coming with power,” which is completely at one with the Matthean tradition, when allowance has been made for Matthew's distinction between the two Kingdoms (cf. The Man, and God's or the Father's). Cf. 10:23; 24:34. As it stands, the saying is a factual statement that there were those (either by-standers or of the inner circle) who would not die before the Messiah's passion and resurrection.

2 Peter 1:16–18 is not without relevance here. It is quite clear that the writer of the letter sees the transfiguration as the fulfillment of Jesus' saying in this verse. This underlines once more our contention that the "coming" of Jesus was by no means without its puzzles to the writers of the NT. It also serves to underline the intense impact of the baptism and transfiguration of Jesus, as later seen in the light of the resurrection.

taste death. Cf. John 8:52; Heb 2:9.

61. THE TRANSFIGURATION

(17:1–13)[†]

17 ¹ Six days afterwards, Jesus took with him Peter, James, and his brother John, and brought them privately to a high mountain. ² There he changed his appearance in their presence, his face shone like the sun, and his clothing shone as the light ³ Moses and Elijah also appeared to them, talking with him. ⁴ Peter said to Jesus, “Lord, it is well for us to be here; if you wish, I will make three tents, one each for you, Moses, and Elijah.” ⁵ He was still speaking when a bright cloud overshadowed them, and there was a voice from the cloud, “This is my Son, the Beloved One; in him I am well pleased. Listen to him.” ⁶ On hearing it, the disciples fell prostrate and were filled with awe. ⁷ But Jesus came to them and touched them, saying to them, “Get up, and do not be afraid.” ⁸ When they raised their eyes, they saw no one except Jesus. ⁹ As they were coming down the mountain, Jesus ordered them, “Do not speak of the vision to anyone until The Man is raised from the dead.” ¹⁰ The disciples asked him, “Why then do the scribes say that first of all Elijah must come?” ¹¹ He replied, “Indeed Elijah comes and re-establishes everything; ¹² but I tell you that Elijah has come already, and they did not recognize him, but did to him whatever they pleased. So too The Man will suffer at their hands.” ¹³ Then the disciples understood that he was speaking to them about John the Baptist.

NOTES

17:1. Peter, James, and ... John. The emphasis on these three figures as a kind of “core” to the inner circle of the twelve is in striking parallel to a similar phenomenon among the Qumran Essenes (cf. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumran, pp. 174 ff.; C. S. Mann, “The Organization and Institutions of the Jerusalem Church in Acts,” Appendix IV in Munck, The Acts of the Apostles). Cf. 26:37.

2. changed his appearance (Gr. metemorphōthē). The word is ambiguous and capable of being misunderstood. Luke omits it, and his version uses different words. Matthew qualifies the word by the clause following: his face shone like the sun. Cf. Exod 34:29; Parables of Enoch i 5, xix 1; 2 Esd 7:97.

clothing shone as the light. Cf. Enoch xiv 20. Similar expressions occur sixteen times in Revelation to denote heavenly beings, or heavenly things.

3. Moses and Elijah. If this account is taken as a dramatically theologized description of the way in which the disciples were beginning to think of the Messiahship of Jesus, then we may take these two names as being the attestation of the Law and the Prophets. Moses and Elijah were both believed to have been translated to heaven.

On Elijah as the Messianic herald, cf. NOTES on 11:10, above, and on vs. 10 below. Cf. also the promise ascribed to Moses, Deut 18:15, used by the Samaritans as a Messianic prophecy.

4. In Mark the address is “Rabbi,” an address which Matthew puts only on the lips of Judas (26:25, 49). it is well for us to be here. The RSV translation (“it is well that we are here”) is weak, making of Peter’s assertion a remark of surprised accident. Following on the Messianic confession, Peter’s desire is to extend the time, evidently thinking that the Messianic New Age is far nearer than he had supposed.

5. cloud (Heb. ’ānān). In the OT, the cloud appears very often as that brilliant cloud of glory which hides God from the presence of men (cf. G. E. Mendenhall, in the first of the [unpublished] Lovejoy Lectures, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, March 10–13, 1967). As a sign of the presence of God, the cloud is primarily associated with the Exodus of Israel from Egypt, and later with the New Age (cf. 2 Macc 2:8; Exod 40:35).

my Son, the Beloved One. Cf. NOTE on 3:17.

Listen to him. Cf. Deut 18:15; and also Acts 3:22 ff., 7:37.

6. filled with awe. Luke (9:34) describes this fear as belonging to the moment when they entered the cloud—a detail of difference which reinforces our belief in the integrity of the independent traditions.

9. Do not speak. Again, Jesus regards publicity as a hindrance. Cf. NOTE on 16:20.

The Man. Cf. NOTE on 8:20.

is raised. Cf. NOTE on 16:21.

Mark has nothing which corresponds to Matthew’s vss. 6–7, and there are certainly indications of independent sources in the treatment of vss. 1–8 by Matthew and Luke. Both Matthew and Luke express a change in Jesus’ appearance, and though Matthew uses metemorphōthē, he qualifies it where Luke uses other expressions. Both Matthew and Luke record the element of the disciples’ fears, though in different contexts. If we assume that Matthew and Luke had a common narrative in addition to Mark (which is the usual theory), then the divergence of traditions (especially Matt 17:2=Luke 9:29; Matt 17:4=Luke 9:33 with Luke 9:31–32 standing alone) causes considerable difficulty. On the basis of these divergences it is far easier to suppose that Luke had access to Matthew and modified what he found.

10. The question is posed immediately following the passion prediction and the injunction to silence. Whether as it stands it is in context we have no means of determining. It is possible that the disciples’ query about what the scribes said concerning Elijah was placed here because the appearance of Elijah in the vision had caused questioning as to the precise role of Jesus as a suffering Messiah. The editorial comment in vs. 13 would seem to lend support to this view, as also the very obscure comment at Mark 9:12, which would seem to imply that while the advent of Elijah had been prophesied, the same was not true of a suffering Messiah. We suggest that the difficulties in Mark 9:12 can be eliminated if we suppose that the question, “Then how has it been recorded of The Man, that he should suffer greatly and be treated with contempt?” is a second one—from the disciples to Jesus. We have (as yet) no clear evidence from intertestamental sources (including Qumran) to indicate any belief in a suffering Messiah. Jesus interpreted Messiahship in terms of suffering, to be sure, but in the framework of OT prophecies on the Suffering Servant.

Elijah. Cf. Mal 4:5 ff. If everything was prepared for the Messiah—and Peter as their spokesman had acknowledged Jesus as such—then what was the place of Elijah in the scheme of things?

11–12. In other words, the prophecy of Malachi was indeed correct, and so was contemporary expectation of a coming of Elijah, but because he had come, and had not been recognized, so neither would The Man be recognized.

12. Elijah has come already. This expression is, of course, symbolic, and emphatically not some kind of reincarnation!

The Man. In Matthean usage (to which we called attention in the Introduction, Parts VI, VII, and XII) it is the Messiah who suffers, while The Man is a figure of glory. At first sight what we have here is an exception to the Matthean scheme, especially when considered alongside vss. 22–23 later in this chapter. However, an examination of the context of the prediction at 12b raises doubts as to the authenticity of the saying here. Verse 12a followed immediately by vs. 13 makes perfectly good sense, whereas the presence of 12b makes vs. 13 read very oddly indeed. Similarly with vss. 22–23: these two verses fit very badly in the context in which they are placed, particularly in view of what follows in vss. 24 ff., whereas the same prediction in the Markan and Lukan traditions is wholly in place. We must therefore reckon with the possibility, in view of the Matthean tradition on The Man, that in both instances (12b and 22–23) we have an editorial addition to the original. The reasons for the insertions, if such they be, can only be speculative. It is fair to assume that the insertions (which are certainly traditional material) were made by someone who failed to understand Matthew's presentation of his material, and assumed that the passion predictions must be added in the Markan context. The presence of vs. 9 probably dictated the addition, though the editor failed to understand that in Matthew The Man's being raised was his glorification, his coming to the Father.

COMMENT

This account is one of the theophany narratives of the NT (cf. also Acts 9:1–19; Rev 1:10 ff.). In the OT perhaps the best known is the theophany to Moses in Exod 3:1–6. The supposed distinction drawn in Num 12:6–8 between dream and vision is illusory, but there is a clear difference here between “dream/vision” and the actual seeing of Yahweh “mouth to mouth.” Cf. here Albright, Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan, pp. 42 ff. The biblical material is such as to make wholly unnecessary an Iranian background (hvarenah). For John, the wedding at Cana was a theophany (John 2:1–11), and 2 Peter 1:16–18 regards the present incident as crucial. The tradition as stated in all probability goes back to Peter’s own reminiscences. The incident is also linked with the story of Jesus’ baptism by the proclaiming of his dignity by a voice, the proclamation being the same on both occasions: This is my Son, the Beloved One. On both occasions, the veil of the present is stripped away to reveal Jesus as he is by Messianic calling, and as he will be in glory.

It has been pointed out by several scholars that the account of the transfiguration has words and phrases in common with both the resurrection and ascension stories, especially in Luke. (Cf. G. H. Boobyer, St. Mark and the Transfiguration Story, London: T. Clark, 1942; A. M. Ramsey, The Glory of God and the Transfiguration of Christ, London: Longmans, 1949; J. G. Davies, “The Ascension in the Third Gospel,” JTS 6 [1955], 229–33.) This connection of language and motif we also see in the Apocalypse of Peter (cf. M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament [Oxford University Press, 1953], p. 519).

The verbal parallels can be seen from the accompanying table:

	Luke 9	Luke Acts 24
			1 authority and power	1		2, 8 kingdom	2, 11, 27		3
witness(es)	5		8
John and Elijah	7–9, 18–21		5
returning	10		12
looking (to heaven)	16		11
death and resurrection	22		3 reference to “coming”	26		11
mountain	28		12
white (shining) clothing	29	4	10
two men	30	4	10
glory	31	26
cloud	34
			9

Too much modern NT interpretation has been concerned with finding not only contemporary Jewish eschatological motifs in the accounts, but also cultic and mythological elements (e.g., the “going up” in Acts 1:11). In addition, it is sometimes said that what we have in the transfiguration narrative is an attempt to insert a resurrection-appearance into this earlier time of the ministry. The material in the above table is most useful in discussing Luke; but there are certain observations we should make here:

(a) The precision of description in this incident, and the exact detail, make it unlikely that a resurrection-appearance has been placed in this early context.

(b) The crucial place occupied by the account in the tradition of all three evangelists is also evidence that the resurrection-appearance is unlikely. In all three gospels the confession of Peter, with its accompanying predictions of the passion—i.e., the reinterpretation of Messiahship—is followed by this account of the apprehension by three of the disciples of Jesus' glory, their realization of his place in the OT tradition.

(c) If the Lukan account binds together the Messianic Feast, the transfiguration and the glorification of Jesus in a verbal pattern, this ought not to be surprising. Luke as a theologian was dealing with the "glory" of Jesus as men saw it and apprehended it, and a common vocabulary is hardly ground for dismissing the complex as later invention (N.B.: on the ascension, cf. A. M. Ramsey, "What Was the Ascension?" in Historicity and Chronology in the New Testament, London: SPCK, 1965).

(d) In whatever terms we explain the phenomena in this narrative, it has been rightly pointed out by Stendahl (Peake's Commentary on the Bible, p. 788) that the whole background of the incident is that of the feast of Tabernacles, with its emphasis on the new age of the Messiah and the accompanying Messianic "rest." If we allow that the disciples were full of enthusiasm at the open confession of Jesus as Messiah, rather than occupied with rational explanations of that Messiahship, the incident described in the opening verses of this chapter is precisely what we would expect, in whatever terms described.

62. A LESSON ABOUT FAITH

(17:14–21)[†]

17 ¹⁴ When they were approaching the crowd, a man came up to him, and knelt before him, with the words, ¹⁵ “Sir, have pity on my son, for he is an epileptic and suffers terribly, and often falls into the fire or water. ¹⁶ I brought him to your disciples, and they were unable to cure him.” ¹⁷ “Faithless and perverse generation!” Jesus replied. “How long am I to be with you? How long am I to bear with you? Bring him here to me.” ¹⁸ Then Jesus rebuked it (i.e. the demon), the demon left him, and the boy was cured instantly. ¹⁹ Thereupon the disciples came to Jesus privately, to ask, “Why were we unable to exorcise it?” ²⁰ He said to them, “Because of your scanty faith. I solemnly tell you that if you have even the faith of a mustard seed, you will say to this mountain ‘Move from here to there,’ and it will move, and nothing will be impossible for you. [²¹ Nevertheless, this kind does not come out except by prayer and fasting.]”

NOTES

The Markan account of this incident is considerably fuller, but also somewhat obscure (e.g., Who was discussing what? Mark 9:16; and Why was the crowd astounded? 9:15). Luke, like Matthew, is far more terse.

17:15. epileptic. Mark 9:17–18 ascribed the son's condition to demon possession. Cf. NOTES on 4:24, 8:31.

17. For all the brevity of the narrative in the interests of instruction, Matthew notes the saying which suggests the approaching end of Jesus' stay among men. Cf. John 14:9.

Faithless and perverse generation! Cf. Deut 32:5.

20. scanty faith. This expression is characteristically Matthean: cf. 6:30, 8:26, 14:31, 16:8.

The rest of this verse is similar to Luke 17:6 and Mark 11:23. On the mustard seed, cf. 13:31 f.

21. This verse, not found in the best manuscripts, is probably due to later editorial assimilation to Mark 9:29.

63. PASSION PREDICTION

(17:22–23)[†]

17 ²² While they were gathering in Galilee, Jesus said to them, “The Man will be handed over to men, ²³ and they will kill him. On the third day he will be raised.” They were much distressed.

NOTES

The second passion prediction occasions no surprise to the disciples, only distress. See NOTE on vss. 11–12 (in §61) above. It is possible, in view of the confusion surrounding the text in Mark 9:9–13, that vss. 22–23 in this chapter are an editorial addition to the original text, with some of the difficulties removed. In that event, we are left with 16:21 as the first—and so far solitary—passion prediction, a saying which certainly does not imply that it is The Man who suffers.

64. QUESTIONS ABOUT THE TEMPLE TAX (17:24–27)

17 ²⁴ When they came to Capernaum, the collectors of the half-shekel tax came to Peter, asking, “Does not your master pay the tax?” ²⁵ and he replied “Yes.” When he reached home, Jesus asked him first, “How does it appear to you, Simon? From whom do the kings of the earth exact tribute or poll tax? From their citizens, or from the others?” ²⁶ When he replied “From the others,” Jesus said to him, “In that case, the citizens are free. ²⁷ However, lest we should cause offense to them, go to the sea and cast a hook, take the first fish that comes up, and when you open its mouth you will find a coin. Take that, and give it to them for me and for yourself.”

NOTES

17:24. Capernaum. In view of the careful organization which surrounded the collection of the tax, this town would have been a natural center in which tax collectors could meet with travelers.

tax (Gr. ta didrachma). This word, in the plural, merely means “the two-drachma taxes,” and not “half-shekels.” Josephus (Antiquities III. 194) says that the sum paid was to didrachmon, or two Attic drachmas, which corresponds in function to the rabbinic half-shekel temple tax.

25. How does it appear to you. This is a common phrase in the latter part of this gospel; cf. 18:12, 22:17, 42, 26:66.

26. citizens (Gr. huioi). Literally, sons, or children. In the light of Allegro’s article (cited in the COMMENT below), we must assume this to mean Jesus and his disciples.

27. cause offense (Gr. skandalisōmen). Cf. NOTE on 5:30—something which causes others to sin.

coin (Gr. statēra). This coin would presumably be equal to four drachmas, and so was equivalent to the tax for two men. However, the values of these coins were constantly fluctuating. Cf. also the discussion by S. V. McCasland and Sherman Johnson in IB, VII, pp. 96 and 465 f., respectively.

COMMENT

The importance of this narrative to those who were still living within the framework of Judaism, though committed in allegiance to Jesus as Messiah, must have been considerable in the years before A.D. 70. It has been suggested that this passage belongs to the period after A.D. 70, when Vespasian diverted the tax to build the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus and so caused a crisis of conscience for Jewish Christians. It may be doubted how many Jewish Christians there were living in Palestine after A.D. 70, since apart from the movement of Christianity into a Gentile milieu, consistent Church tradition was that large numbers of Jewish Christians fled the country during the first Jewish War of 66–70.

In the latter part of the Persian period (which lasted from 525–325 B.C.), Jews resident in Judea were paying taxes for the support of the autonomous priesthood and for the upkeep of the temple. This tax is not mentioned in the Torah, but its existence is established by the archaeological evidence of coins and jar seals. In the rabbinic period the tax was payable by all who had attained twenty years, but slaves and women were explicitly excluded. Gentiles and Samaritans were not allowed to contribute. Great care was exercised in the collection of the tax, both in Palestine and among Jews of the Dispersion, and under Roman domination the tax was accorded state protection and given safe conduct.

Apart from the exceptions already noted, energetic measures were taken to enforce the collection, and provision was made to seize the goods of those who did not pay (cf. The Mishnah tr. from the Hebrew by Herbert Danby [Oxford University Press, 1933], p. 152). The currency used in payment varied from time to time, but in the time of Jesus it was the Tyrian shekel, and tables were set up in the temple to deal with the money-changing problems. Exchange brokers made, and were allowed to make, a considerable profit on the undertaking.

We alluded in the first paragraph to the view that this narrative was included in order to deal with Christians and/or Jewish Christians being sued for what was after A.D. 70 a purely pagan tax. But Gentiles were excluded from this peculiarly Jewish tax and Jesus' claim of exemption for the freeborn sons can be construed as claiming exemption from all other taxation. We are faced with the alternative: either (a) the story was adapted to the need of Christians—easily confused with Jews by Roman authority—or (b) the saying of Jesus as it stands had a meaning which in its own context has to be discovered. There are two elements in the narrative: first, the conversation with Peter about the tax, and secondly a seemingly miracle story attached to the conversation and apparently in response to it. These elements will be dealt with in reverse order.

The narrative in vs. 27 is so highly condensed that it is more than likely a much-abbreviated summary of an actual catch of a fish with a coin in its mouth (the clarias macracanthus, or “St. Peter’s fish,” common in the Sea of Galilee, is certainly able to accommodate coins in its ample mouth). Alternatively, the narrative may be the remnant of a parable, much on the lines of folk tales found in the rabbinic tradition of the lost-and-found-again variety. In this case, the parable remnant will have been attracted to its present position by the presence of vss. 24–26.

The incident in vss. 24–26 is not so easily analyzed. It might have answered questions as to the validity of the temple tax for Jewish Christians before A.D. 70—lest we should cause offense. But this view gives rise to one serious objection. It casts the non-Jewish Christian in the role of “citizen” or “freeborn,” and the Jewish Christian in that of slave or subject people. This is the precise opposite of the Pauline view (cf. Rom 11:13–36), even though Paul could call non-Christian Jews “enemies of God.” Either Jesus in this narrative is taking sides with the Sadducees (who wanted temple worship maintained by the gifts of individuals) as against a Pharisee interpretation of Exod 30:11–16, or we must find some other explanation. J. M. Allegro (“An Unpublished Fragment of Essene Halakhah—4Q Ordinances,” JSS 6 [1961], 71) seems to indicate that a Qumran fragment suits the present discussion almost exactly. According to Allegro’s text, the Essenes linked the once-for-all atonement tax of Exod 30:11–16 (cf. 38:26) with the valuation tax of Lev 27:1–8. He suggests that this unique understanding by the Essenes of the temple tax as being a once-for-all payment was shared by Jesus, and further suggests that this may account for Jesus’ hostility toward the taxation officials in the temple. J. D. M. Derrett, “Peter’s Penny: Fresh Light on Matthew 17:24–7,” NovT 6 (1963), 1–15, has further suggestions. He asks whether Jesus also was thought to claim exemption on the score that the collectors thought, as did others, that he was a Samaritan. If therefore the tax collectors were claiming from a man not liable, they would sin, on the ground that an inferior sinned if he carried out the unlawful commands of his superior. Jesus’ saying that “the children are free,” not on the ground that he was a Samaritan, but simply because he and the disciples were dependents, living on charity, cf. John 12:6, nevertheless was bound to save the collectors from possible sin. Hence—according to Derrett—the phrase lest we should cause offense. (On this tax, see further Hugh Montefiore, “Jesus and the Temple Tax,” NTS 11 [1964–65], 60–72; L. Finkelstein, The Pharisees: The Sociological Background of Their Faith, 2d ed. rev. [Philadelphia: JPS, 1940], 11, pp. 683 ff.)

65. PRECEDENCE IN THE KINGDOM

(18:1–9)[†]

18 ¹ At that time the disciples came to Jesus asking, “Who is the greatest in the Kingdom of heaven?” ² Calling a child, he put him in the middle of them, ³ and said, “I solemnly tell you that unless you turn and become again like children, you will not enter the Kingdom of heaven. ⁴ Therefore whoever humbles himself like this child is the greatest in the Kingdom of heaven. ⁵ Whoever receives one such child in my name receives me, ⁶ but whoever causes one of the most insignificant believers to sin, then for him it would be better to have a great millstone about his neck, and to be drowned in the ocean depths. ⁷ Alas for a world filled with occasions for sin! Such occasions must necessarily arise, but alas for the man through whom they arise! ⁸ If therefore your hand or your foot causes you to sin, cut it off and throw it away from you; it is better for you to enter life maimed or lame than to be thrown into the fire at the end of the age still having two hands or two feet. ⁹ And if your eye causes you to sin, then take it out and throw it away from you—it is better to enter into life with one eye, rather than with two eyes to be thrown into the fiery death.

NOTES

18:1. At that time. As the following verses stand they seem intended by Matthew to follow on from the preceding incident, and to answer the question: “Why is Peter reckoned as first?” On the formula, cf. NOTE on 12:1.

3. By the question they have asked, the disciples demonstrate their lack of understanding of the nature of the Kingdom. It is only those who know that they cannot possibly earn God’s grace who can fully respond to it—in the same way that children know that they can never earn free gifts.

6. insignificant (literally, “little ones”). Cf. 10:42, and applying here to the apparently unnoticed. The expression is not an indication of any kind of age range. The Markan tradition (9:42), fuller than Matthew’s, makes this point clear. Mark here has two separate sayings about the hand and the foot (9:43, 45) while Matthew, who here has them together, has a saying about the hand in 5:30.

8. fire at the end of the age. (See NOTE on 5:22.) I.e., better to avoid the occasions of sin than to face a future judgment. The Hebrew equivalent of the Greek adjective aiōnion refers to the “(end of) the age” (qēṣ) in which men are living. This we now know from the Essene scrolls, where the word is very common in this sense.

COMMENT

Having spoken of his coming sufferings and death on his way to the final encounter in Jerusalem, Jesus here in the Matthean tradition speaks of problems of concern to his community. How much of the material in 18–20:28 belongs to the same occasion, we do not know, but it would be natural for the evangelist to group material together in this fashion. Now that the acknowledgment of his Messiahship has been made, it is necessary for Jesus to make provision for the Messianic Community which will continue beyond his death and resurrection. There are some firm indications of the manner in which Matthew has collected the sayings in this section, by making comparisons with Mark 9–10.

Mark 9:37–50 consists of a series of sayings broken by a short narrative at vss. 38–40. But the connection of the sayings is plainly artificial, and the succession of them sometimes very awkward: vss. 42–43 are difficult to connect, and the “by fire” of vs. 49 cannot easily be connected with vs. 48. Certainly there are key words and phrases which would remind Mark of similar sayings (e.g., vs. 37, cf. vss. 38–40, 41; vs. 42, cf. vss. 43–48; vs. 49, cf. vs. 50) and the whole section seems to be contrived by association. Matthew, however, has arranged the material in a thoroughly orderly manner, and makes of Mark’s loose association of words and phrases a far more consecutive discourse.

Matt 18:3–4 = Mark 10:15

18:5 = 9:37a

18:6 = 9:42

18:8–9 = 9:43–47

Mark’s 9:37b has already appeared in Matthew’s 10:40, and the intrusive Markan vss. 38–40 find no place in Matthew. Mark’s 9:41 is already in the Matthean tradition at 10:42, while 9:50 has a parallel in Matthew’s 5:13. With Mark 9:48–50 we are not immediately concerned, but those verses with all their attendant difficulties may be fragments of more than two sayings. If Matthew knew them in their present fragmented state, he decided to omit them.

So far as Matthew’s vss. 12–14 (§66) are concerned, they have a parallel in Luke 15:3–7; vs. 6 is in Luke 17:2 in a quite different context, vs. 7 is paralleled by Luke 17:1, while vss. 15 and 21 (§§67 and 68)=Luke 17:3 and 4 respectively.

As with so much which has occasionally been used in an attempt to prove that Matthew depends on Mark, the relationships are such that when the Lukan tradition is taken into account, it is far easier to explain similarities and differences on the basis of three independent approaches to the fixed oral tradition.

66. THE LOST SHEEP

(18:10–14)[†]

18 ¹⁰ “See that you do not treat one of the common people with contempt, for I tell you that in heaven their angels always see the face of my Father who is in heaven, [¹¹ The Man came to save the lost.] ¹² What do you think? If someone has a hundred sheep, and one of them strays, does he not leave the ninety-nine in the desert and go in search of the stray? ¹³ If he finds it, I solemnly tell you that he rejoices more over that one than over the ninety-nine which never strayed. ¹⁴ In the same way, it is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of the common people should perish.

NOTES

18:10. the common people. The Greek expression is the same as in vs. 6, literally “these little ones.”

their angels. In line with the belief which finds expression elsewhere in the Bible (Gen 48:16; Dan 10:11, 20) Jesus asserts that those apt to be despised because of their status have representatives in the heavenly courts, just as nations have such representatives (cf. also Acts 12:15). Such representatives naturally have access to the Father.

11. In view of the meaning which Matthew consistently applies to The Man, this verse (omitted by some of the best manuscripts) must be regarded as an editorial assimilation to Luke 19:10, presumably in the interests of making a transition from vs. 10 to vss. 12–14.

12. It is worth a moment’s time to note that the sheep referred to here and elsewhere are not the fat-tailed, generally lazy sheep often represented in romantic Bible illustrations. Until recently it was supposed by some authorities that the broad-tailed sheep (the Ovis laticaudatus of Linnaeus) had not yet been introduced into Palestine at the time of Jesus. However, see now the study by E. Anati, “Fat-tailed Sheep of Arabia,” in Bibliothèque du Muséon, Vol. 50: Rock-art in Central Arabia, II (Louvain, 1968), especially pp. 1–42. In rock art from Central Arabia, unknown before the Belgian expedition, we have fat-tailed sheep represented frequently in carvings from the pre-epigraphic phase of Arabian history in the early second millennium B.C., going back probably to the end of the third millennium. We now have cuneiform records from about 2000 B.C. which mention fat-tailed sheep as being imported into Babylonia at that time. The Sumerian logogram for fat-tailed sheep was UDU.KUN.GAL., literally “big-tail sheep.” Aside from a well-known reference in Herodotus (III. 113) and a single early Babylonian bowl, there was no other known representation or even mention of this kind of sheep in our ancient sources. Sheep with relatively fat tails were, of course, well known, and their fat tail was already called alyah in the Pentateuch, just as in Arabic. However, it is certain that virtually all sheep in representational art from ancient Egypt and western Asia previously known belong to well-known types of Mediterranean and Eurasian sheep without fat tails. It is thus quite possible that the sheep intended by the gospel references were not of the Arabian fat-tailed type, but perhaps of an intermediate breed with small fat tails. The sheep of that time were probably more active than their modern Palestinian counterparts.

13–14. These verses are important as providing evidence of the way in which Matthew understood the “little ones” of vs. 6. They can hardly be small children, for in that case it is hard to see how they could be guilty of the deliberate sin which the straying of vs. 12 presupposes. Moreover, putting stumbling blocks in the path of the recent convert is the kind of problem faced by Paul in 1 Cor 8 and Rom 14.

As this whole body of teaching in Matthew concerns life in the Messianic Community, it seems far more likely that what is envisaged here is the kind of harm which can be done to the conscience of simple folk. Paul’s first letter to Corinth abounds with examples of unthinking behavior on the part of the pseudo-sophisticates—the “knowing ones.”

67. COMMUNITY DISCIPLINE

(18:15–20)[†]

18 ¹⁵ “If your brother sins [against you], go and remonstrate with him privately. If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. ¹⁶ But if he will not listen, take one or two others with you in order that ‘by the evidence of two or three witnesses every word may be confirmed.’ ¹⁷ If, however, he will not listen to them, tell it to the community, and if then he will not listen to the community, let him be regarded as outside the community. ¹⁸ I solemnly tell you that whatever you bind on earth will have been bound in heaven, and whatever you release on earth will have been released in heaven. ¹⁹ Again, I tell you that if two of you agree on earth about any request you make, it will be done for you by my Father in heaven; ²⁰ for where two or three are gathered in my name I am there in the middle of them.”

NOTES

18:15. gained your brother. Cf. Lev 19:17 ff.; and also Matt 5:43, 19:19, and 22:39. The sayings here concern personal offenses and spring from the same kind of concern as found expression in 5:23–24.

16. But if he will not listen. I.e., if the offender refuses reconciliation.

by the evidence ... confirmed may well have been added from the Mosaic law (Deut 19:15) by an editor as apt, though not for an identical situation. What is envisaged is not a court of law, for the one or two others are not witnesses to the offense, but to the willingness or unwillingness of the offender to be reconciled.

17. community (Gr. ekklēsia). Cf. 16:18. In the context of the two men who are out of charity with each other, it is a local community which is here meant.

outside the community (literally, “as a Gentile and a tax gatherer”). Cf. NOTE on 5:46, where the expression is similar.

18. This is almost exactly what Jesus told Peter after Peter’s confession—cf. final NOTE on 16:19; cf. also 1 Cor 5:3–5; 6:1–8.

19. It is unlikely that this verse is in its original context, for while vs. 18 dealt with conduct on the part of the community’s members, vs. 19 is an exhortation to faithfulness in prayer. Presumably this verse found its way to its present position because of the occurrence of earth and heaven in both verses.

20. Cf. Pirqê Abôth 3:3: “Two that sit together occupied in the Law have the Presence among them.”

68. THE QUESTION OF FORGIVENESS (18:21–35)

18 ²¹ Then Peter came to him with the question: “Lord, how many times may my brother sin against me, and I have to forgive him? Seven times?” ²² Jesus replied, “Not ‘seven times,’ but ‘seventy times seven.’” ²³ For this reason, the Kingdom of heaven may be compared with a king who wished to settle accounts with his slaves. ²⁴ When he had begun the reckoning there was brought to him a man who owed him ten thousand talents, ²⁵ but as he could not pay, his master ordered him to be sold, together with his wife and children and all his possessions, and payment to be made. ²⁶ But the slave threw himself before him, begging him, ‘Be patient with me, and I will pay you everything.’ ²⁷ The master, pitying him, let him go and forgave him the debt. ²⁸ However, on going out that slave found one of his fellow slaves who owed him one hundred pennies. Seizing him by the throat, he said, ‘Pay me the debt.’ ²⁹ But his fellow slave knelt before him and begged him, ‘Have patience with me, and I will repay you.’ ³⁰ He refused, and threw him into prison until he could pay the debt. ³¹ When his fellow slaves saw what had happened, they were deeply distressed, and went and reported to their master all that had happened. ³² His master then summoned him, and said to him, ³³ ‘You wicked slave! I forgave you all that debt because you begged me; and ought you not to have pitied your fellow slave in the same way that I pitied you?’ ³⁴ In anger his master handed him over to the investigators until the debt was paid. ³⁵ So my heavenly Father will deal in the same way with every one of you, if you do not forgive your brother without reservation.”

NOTES

There is some discussion in the Babylonian Talmud as to the precise number of times when forgiveness must be unconditionally rendered, with opinions offered that three times is an acceptable maximum.

18:22. seventy times seven. (It may also be understood as seventy-seven times.) The number merely means an indefinitely great number of times.

24. ten thousand talents. The talent was equivalent to six thousand denarii. Two denarii would provide a man and his family with adequate living for one day, and hence the sum named here is tremendous, in contrast with the small sum owed by the other servant in vs. 28.

The lesson of the parable is clear enough, though it is possible that two parables have been merged here into the present narrative. We have a king in vs. 23 who appears from the sum involved to be dealing with subordinate officials (who could well be slaves), but the later stages of the narrative read more obviously of a landowner dealing with working slaves.

69. QUESTIONS ABOUT THE LAW

(19:1–12)[†]

19 ¹ When Jesus had finished these sayings, he left Galilee and came into that part of Judea beyond the Jordan, ² and large crowds followed him there, and he healed them.

³ Pharisees came to him with a test question: “Is it lawful to divorce one’s wife for any cause?” ⁴ He replied: “Have you not read that the Creator from the beginning ‘made them male and female’ ⁵ and said, ‘for this reason a man will leave his father and mother, be joined to his wife, and the two shall become one’? ⁶ So that they are no longer two persons, but a single body. Therefore what God has joined, let no man separate.” ⁷ They said, “Then why did Moses prescribe ‘to give divorce papers, and be rid of her’?” ⁸ He replied, “Moses allowed you to divorce your wives because of your stubbornness, but it was not so at the beginning. ⁹ I tell you that whoever divorces his wife, except for unchastity, and marries someone else, commits adultery [and he who marries her who has been put away commits adultery].” ¹⁰ The disciples said to him, “If the situation is such between a man and his wife, then it is folly to marry.” ¹¹ “Not all men can accept this,” he answered them, “but only those to whom it is granted; ¹² for there are those incapable of marriage who have been so from birth, others who have been made so by men, and there are yet others who have made themselves so for the sake of the Kingdom of heaven. Let anyone who can, bear this in mind.”

NOTES

19:1. When Jesus had finished. For this formula, cf. 7:28, 11:1, 13:53; 26:1.

3. test question. Divorce was quite legal under Jewish law (cf. Deut 24:1–2), but there was some dispute about the reasons for divorce. The followers of Hillel were more lenient in their views than those of Shammai (the evidence can be found in the Mishnah, Gittin 90a). The school of Shammai permitted divorce only on grounds of unchastity. It is noteworthy that Jesus makes no reference to Mal 2:14–16.

The differences in this account of the test question as compared with that of Mark are perhaps at this stage incapable of final resolution.

(a) The question of divorce had already been raised (5:31 f.) in the main body of discussion as to the validity of the Law.

(b) It hardly seems adequate to say that this is a test question in the sense that similar tests will be posed in chapters 21 and 22, and it is quite possible that vss. 3–9, belonging to another discussion on marriage, were attracted to this context by vss. 11–12.

(c) That the Matthean tradition differs from that of Mark can easily be seen here. In Mark the question poses the legality of divorce, and Jesus' questioners, in no doubt about the position of the Law, would not have entertained any doubts on the issue. But the Pharisees, in the light of Mark 7:14–23, might have expected Jesus to call the Law in question on that very point. Whereas in the Markan tradition Jesus demands that they tell him the prescriptions of the Mosaic Law and when they have done so goes beyond that Law to the very purpose of marriage, the Matthean emphasis is quite different. In Matthew there is first the statement of the purpose of marriage, and then another question from the Pharisees, to which Jesus replies that the Mosaic Law was an accommodation. There are two more instructive differences in Matthew as compared with the Markan tradition: (1) According to Mark (10:12), Jesus explicitly accepts the case of a woman divorcing her husband, a provision not made in Jewish law (cf. here Josephus, Antiquities XV. 259 for an exceptional example). It is possible to read this Markan provision as an assertion by Jesus of the sinfulness of divorce. (2) In the Matthean tradition in this present chapter Jesus appears, by the exceptive clause in vs. 9, to take his stand with the stricter interpretation of Shammai against Hillel, and in so doing would appear to affirm the permanent validity of the Mosaic marriage law.

We are in no position to make categorical statements at this point. It is possible that Matthew's tradition has here been influenced by a Jewish-Christian view of Jesus as a rabbinic commentator on the Law.

4. Cf. Gen 1:27; 5:2.

5. and said. This is ambiguous. It can refer either to Jesus, or—far more likely—to the Creator in the previous verse.

6. a single body. The sense is that God created a single man and a single woman, destined for each other, and that the case of a man and a woman in marriage is precisely similar. That is to say, in the purpose of God they are one body, and as such separation is unthinkable.

8. There may be a deliberate contrast in the wording here, between prescribe in vs. 7 and allowed here. At all events, Jesus describes the Mosaic permission as a departure from the standards presupposed in the creation of a single pair made for each other.

9. Cf. Luke 16:18; 1 Cor 7:10–13. Mark (10:10) here represents the disciples as seeking private instruction about this “in the house.” For the parallel to this saying, cf. 5:32. Mark here has a reference to a woman divorcing her husband—cf. Note c (1) on vs. 3.

except for unchastity. This same exception is found at 5:32, but is not found elsewhere in the NT. Commentators have generally taken the position that these words are not part of the saying as originally uttered, but are a community regulation later inserted into the text. It certainly appears to be inconsistent with vs. 6. The precise meaning of unchastity is uncertain.

[and he who marries her ...]. These words are not to be found in all the best manuscripts, and may have been added in the light of Mark 10:12.

10. situation (Gr. aitia). The same Greek word is found at vs. 3 (our translation, cause). The disciples reason that if unchastity is to be the sole determining factor for divorce, then it is better not to risk marriage.

11. Not all men can accept this. Placed where it is, this reply of Jesus is not at all clear. The Greek for this (literally, this saying) may refer to the following vs. 12, in which case Jesus would seem to be exalting the celibate state as opposed to the married state, in response to the disciples' amazement at the stringency of his pronouncements. Alternatively, this may refer to the teaching given on divorce in vss. 4–9, in which case this saying will refer to those unwilling to accept the stricter marriage law of the Messianic Community, and only those to whom it is granted will refer to those called by God into that Community. This interpretation removes the burden of supposing that Jesus recommended abstention from marriage for the Kingdom's sake, and the gar (for) would support this interpretation better. (It should here be noticed that Paul's advice in 1 Cor 7:6–8 is in a very different—Corinthian—context.) In short, Jesus demands of those who come to the Kingdom a standard of marriage discipline at least as stringent as that which applied to Shammai's followers.

It is also possible that the contents of vss. 11–12 are an independent saying which remains obscure. The gar would then be an editorial connective.

those to whom it is granted. I.e., by divine grace.

12. In the light of what has been said, it is possible that the saying in this verse has been attracted to its present context as being loosely associated with a discussion on marriage. In reality only two classes of men are being described here—those physically incapable of marriage, either from birth or from being rendered so by others, and those who while at one time physically capable of marriage have renounced that state either by self-mutilation or voluntary celibacy.

The eunuch was for many centuries a well-recognized (and for obvious reasons well-trusted) figure in Near and Far Eastern society. The attitude of the Christian Church to self-mutilation was in the early centuries ambivalent, and though one prominent theologian (Origen, third century) was self-castrated, such a state was a permanent barrier to the ministry. The second class of men described in vs. 12—those who have voluntarily renounced marriage—was well-known to Jesus from the example of some of the Essenes who embraced celibacy. This part of the saying—who have made themselves so for the sake of the Kingdom—has been used in Christian history from the earliest times as sanction for the celibate vocation. It is to be noted that the phrase Kingdom of heaven, applying as it does in Matthew to the Messianic Community, clearly states the purpose of that vocation.

Let anyone who can, ... Cf. NOTE on 11:15.

There is quite considerable textual variation and transposition in our manuscripts throughout this section. It is far too technical for discussion in a commentary such as this (vs. 4 is particularly difficult), and the reader who knows some Greek is referred to the note on p. 206 of Allen's ICC St. Matthew commentary.

Some aspects of the question have been dealt with recently by Quentin Quesnell ("Made Themselves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven [Mt 19:12]," CBQ 30 [1968], 335–58).

COMMENTS

Matthew indicates that a final and definitive stage has been reached in the ministry by the first verse of this section. Although the material in this chapter appears to be made up of loosely connected episodes, it serves as summary of all that has preceded it, and at the same time as introduction to the final events and concluding teaching of the ministry.

The evangelist introduced the Galilean ministry with a quotation from Isaiah (cf. 4:12 ff.) indicating Galilee as a place of special revelation. That ministry of revelation has now been completed, and it is fitting that the evangelist should record the departure from Galilee.

70. BLESSING THE CHILDREN

(19:13–15)[†]

19 ¹³ Then children were brought to him so that he might lay his hands upon them and pray, but the disciples rebuked them. ¹⁴ Jesus, however, said to them, “Let the children come to me. Do not hinder them, because the Kingdom of heaven is for such people,” ¹⁵ and he laid his hands upon them and went away.

COMMENT

Here, and in the parallel in Mark, there are indications of the way in which material was collected by the evangelists. There is no immediately obvious connection between this short section and what follows it. The best explanation is that both in Matthew and Mark the incident was placed here because the preceding discussion of marriage suggested this narrative about the children. Luke links the incident to the conclusion of the parable about the Pharisee and the tax collector, as an emphasis on humility. The lesson of the parable is obvious enough—cf. NOTES on 18:1–14.

71. TRUE RICHES

(19:16–30)[†]

19 ¹⁶ Someone came to him with the question, “Teacher, what good thing must I do to have eternal life?” ¹⁷ He answered him, “Why question me about what is good? There is One who is good, and if you wish to enter into the life (of the Kingdom), keep the commandments.” ¹⁸ He said to him, “Which ones?” and Jesus said to him, “You shall not murder, you shall not commit adultery, ¹⁹ not steal, not perjure yourself, honor your father and mother, and love your neighbor as you love yourself.” ²⁰ The young man declared to him, “I have kept all these; in what respect am I still found wanting?” ²¹ “If you wish to be true,” Jesus said to him, “go and sell all your possessions, give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven—and come, follow me.” ²² On hearing this, the young man went sadly away, for he was very wealthy.

²³ To his disciples Jesus said, “I solemnly tell you, it will be hard for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of heaven.

²⁴ Further, I tell you that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter God’s Kingdom.” ²⁵ When the disciples heard this, they were astounded, and said, “Then who can be saved?”

²⁶ Jesus, looking at them, said “For men, this is impossible, but for God all things are possible.” ²⁷ Peter then said to him in reply, “See, we have left everything and followed you. What therefore will become of us?”

²⁸ Jesus said to them, “I solemnly tell you that in the new creation, when The Man sits on his glorious throne, you who have followed me will also sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. ²⁹ And everyone who has left homes, brothers, sisters, father or mother, children or lands, for my name's sake, will receive a hundredfold, and will inherit eternal life. ³⁰ Nevertheless, many who are first will be last, and the last first.

NOTES

Here again we have an example of contextual attraction, in this case the result of a previous saying on conditions for entry into the Kingdom.

19:16. Teacher. Mark's tradition is here common with Luke's; both have the adjective good with Teacher, as also both speak of to inherit eternal life.

17. Occasionally much has been made of a supposed transference by Matthew of good from Teacher to thing, in order (so it is said) to avoid having Jesus make any distinction between himself and the Father. But wherever the adjective occurs, in both traditions Jesus is calling attention to, and calling sharply into question, the presuppositions of his questioner. If Jesus is simply Teacher, then he is calculated to know no more and no less than any other teacher as to what actions are deemed "good for" entrance into the life of the age-to-come. If he is Good Teacher (as in Mark and Luke), then Jesus will not allow the questioner to use word or ascriptions lightly.

One who is good. I.e., it is not a matter of the good thing as if it were some attainable practice or state which, once acquired or accomplished, will guarantee entrance into life. Good is a mark of character, pre-eminently of God. God's goodness to man is shown to us in the commandments, and man's loyal response to those commandments is a test of man's goodness.

keep (Gr. tērein). The verb is used again in 23:3, and there denotes continued action; here it is the urgent aorist imperative.

18. Matthew certainly treats the questioner far less sympathetically than Mark. The question Which ones? makes the man appear somewhat stupid, while the I have kept all these shows the man's pride.

18–19. You shall not murder, ... It should be noted that neither this NT version, nor the Hebrew text of the Decalogue, provides any foundation for pacifism. What is under condemnation is murder, not killing in warfare.

A comparison of the texts of Matthew, Mark, and Luke in these verses discloses considerable variation, and this is to be expected when access to the LXX provided more than one version by which scribes and others could check the quotations from the Law. By NT times there were several divergent recensions of the Decalogue (cf. A. Jepsen, "Beiträge zur Auslegung und Geschichte des Dekalogs," ZAW 79 [1967], 277–304. Mark (10:19) after "Do not perjure yourself" has "Do not defraud," the provenance of which is uncertain, but which may come from Exod 21:10; Deut 24:14; or Ecclus 4:1. Some manuscripts of Mark omit it, as does Matthew. He has, after honor your father and mother, the injunction to love (i.e., be loyal to) one's neighbor, taken from Lev 19:18 (cf. also 22:39=Mark 12:31; Luke 10:27). The first four injunctions are from Exod 20:13–16 or Deut 5:17–20. Matthew's order is that of the Masoretic text of Exodus and Deuteronomy; but Mark in some manuscripts reverses the order of murder and adultery, as does Luke in 18:20, likewise, Philo and one LXX manuscript of Deuteronomy. Matthew incidentally has the imperative future (which is also the Greek of the LXX), literally translating the Hebrew imperfect, which is the negative imperative in Hebrew, where Mark has the subjunctive (which is the aorist prohibitory form).

20. The Markan version of this verse can be read as "Against all these things I have guarded myself."

21. At this point Mark depicts the young man as a lovable character (10:21), but in Matthew, no such attractiveness is to be discerned. We must either conclude with some commentators that Matthew knew the Markan tradition and edited it so as to eliminate all references to human emotion in Jesus, or we must conclude that Matthew's tradition is wholly independent.

true (Gr. teleios). I.e., "true to God, true to the Covenant." Cf. NOTE on 5:48. This word has frequently been translated as "perfect." Such a translation is unfortunate, because it carries implications of moral perfections to an extent which is not true of either the Greek or the Latin, and certainly not true of the Hebrew which lies behind the Greek. Translated as "perfect," the word has Gnostic implications which are wholly foreign to the Gospel. Mark's "You lack one thing" is not found in Matthew, and the reply of Jesus here is wholly in keeping with the man's character as Matthew sees it. There is no promise of entry into the life of the age-to-come, except in so far as this is implied by treasure in heaven. The man who thinks that the life of the age-to-come can be earned by exact calculation is told to abandon all. In so doing he may learn in the community the lessons of humility.

22. Mark here characterizes the young man as being unwilling to obey Jesus' injunction. Luke and Matthew do not use Mark's strong Gr. stugnasas ("being shocked, appalled") which denotes this.

The previous incident leads naturally into the next exchange between Jesus and his disciples.

23. hard for a rich man. For the rich man the difficulty lies in making a choice between caring for his wealth and caring for the things of God. Cf. 7:14; it is not that riches per se are a barrier to salvation, it is simply that they pose peculiar temptations to the rich man's spiritual welfare.

24. Mark's 10:25 is identical, and in the same context.

it is easier ... In spite of the attempts of commentators and preachers to find small gates, or even camel-hair, in this saying, it seems certain that this is simply a proverb cast in hyperbolic form.

God's Kingdom. The expression is fully in line with Matthew's tradition, to which we have called attention before. The rich man may indeed enter the Messianic Community, the Kingdom of heaven, but at the judgment a far stricter account will be demanded of him than of others when the Son's Kingdom is given up to the Father. Whether—since Matthew shares the expression with Mark (10:25) and Luke (18:25)—the evangelist would have changed the terms if the Messianic Community had been under discussion is a matter which is not open to our inspection.

25. Then who can be saved? Presumably the disciples are astounded, and ask who then can enter the Father's Kingdom (cf. 10:23; 24:13, 22), as they had presumed that riches and possessions were signs of God's blessings on a man. This is good OT teaching, from the story of Abraham to that of Job, and is in keeping with the whole empirical approach of ancient Israel. Generally, obedience to law, and diligent work, tend to bring prosperity, and the rich are expected to be generous (though they can often be insensitive to suffering). It is of importance to remember that Jesus' apothegms do not attempt to encompass all reality.

26. Salvation, entrance into God's Kingdom, is the gift of God, and the yardstick of human judgment is inappropriate and misleading. (Cf. Gen 18:14, Job 42:2, for the expression adunaton which Jesus uses.)

27. Peter's question may have reference to the young man: "We have done all that the young man was unwilling to do. What will be our reward?"

28. the new creation (Gr. palingenesia). The word is peculiar in Scripture to Matthew, though it comes twice in Philo to denote the new world after the flood (On the Life of Moses ii 12) and the restored creation after destruction by fire (Creation of the World xv). It is said by some that there is no precise Aramaic equivalent, and that the word must therefore be the evangelist's own. However, it is no more surprising to find here a word common in Stoic circles than it is to find lists of virtues and vices in the Pauline letters which can be paralleled in Stoic material, or to find that the Jewish concept of the Word (probably Mēmṛā, Gr. logos) in the prologue to John's gospel has acquired Greek philosophical overtones. To assume that the occurrence of the word in the mediaeval Corpus Hermeticum indicates a borrowing from magical rites or the mystery religions is to attribute a date to the Corpus Hermeticum which is far too early. The finds at Nag Hammadi (Chenoboskion) have demonstrated that the mediaeval work cannot be earlier than the fifth century A.D. in its extant form.* The assumption also fails to take into account the wholesale dissemination of popular Stoic philosophy as a quasi-religious astral determinism in the centuries preceding our present written gospel.

The Syriac version substitutes for this word 'ālmā ḥadthā, which is archaic in form and might have been used many centuries earlier. In view of the Matthean tradition this is what we would expect. It is more than likely that misunderstanding has arisen about this saying because some commentators have insisted on reading into it the presuppositions of a post-Hellenistic idealist philosophy, presuppositions having to do with the end of the temporal order, rather than seeing in this saying an assertion of the new creation, the new age, to be inaugurated by the exaltation of The Man.

The Man. Cf. NOTE on 8:20.

glorious throne. Cf. Enoch lxii 3, 5. Jesus promises that when the new age of the Messiah is inaugurated in his passion and exaltation, the disciples will share in the administration of the Kingdom.

twelve tribes. As at Qumran, the concern is for the whole assembly of Israel (cf. Rev 7:4), those to whom the Gospel has been proclaimed.

29. Cf. Enoch xl 9. The Markan parallel (10:29–30) lays stress on the new life which the neophyte will enter when he is incorporated into the Messianic Community (cf., e.g., 1 Cor 3:21). The fact that Matthew does not include, or does not know, Mark's "now in this present time" (cf. Luke 18:30) ought not to be taken as an indication that for our evangelist all the blessings belong to an eternity divorced from the temporal order. We have called attention before to the thinking which Matthew has in common with John, and this is a case in point. Matthew's new creation of vs. 28 says no more than is said by John 3:3–8, and the emphasis here is not on the end of the temporal order, but on the eternal life which is the disciple's present inheritance (cf. John 6:35–59). The life of the age-to-come is a common theme in Matthew (cf. 5:5, 21:38, 25:34), but we must beware of reading into the term meanings which belong to later idealistic and existentialist philosophies.

30. The saying in this verse is repeated in reverse order in 20:16, forming a conclusion to the parable and also making a chiasm, a device often employed by Matthew. At the same time, the meaning of the saying here is not wholly clear. The first may refer either to rank or privilege, or to the time at which a man entered the community. It is even possible that in the present context it is a reply to Peter's boast of vs. 27. Luke (13:30) has a somewhat similar saying in quite different connection. The saying as used in 20:16 bears a meaning which does not easily fit this context.

It is worth noting here that Matthew and Luke have some textual agreements against Mark in vss. 16–30, but of a minor character.

72. THE KINGDOM: THE WORKERS IN THE VINEYARD (20:1–16)

20 ¹ “For the Kingdom of heaven is like a householder who set out early in the morning to hire workers for his vineyard, ² and when he had agreed with the workers for one denarius a day, he sent them into his vineyard. ³ Going out about nine o’clock he saw other men standing idle in the market place and said to them, ⁴ ‘You go into my vineyard, too, and I will give you whatever is right,’ and so they went. ⁵ Going out again at midday, and at three o’clock, he did the same. ⁶ About five o’clock he went out and found others standing. He said to them, ‘Why do you stand here all day idle?’ ⁷ They answered him, “Because no one has hired us.” ‘You too go into the vineyard,’ he said. ⁸ When evening came, the owner of the vineyard said to his steward, ‘Call the workers and give them their wages, beginning with the last, and so up to the first.’ ⁹ When those who were hired at five o’clock came, they each received a denarius. ¹⁰ When the first came, they supposed that they would receive more, but they each received a denarius. ¹¹ On receiving it they grumbled to the owner, ¹² ‘The last only worked an hour, but you have made them our equal, and we have borne the burden and heat of the day.’ ¹³ But he answered one of them, ‘My friend, I am not doing you an injustice. Did you not agree with me for a denarius? ¹⁴ Take what is yours and go. I choose to give to the last what I also give to you. ¹⁵ Am I not allowed to do what I wish with my own property? Or is your eye evil, because I am good?’

¹⁶ So the last shall be first, and the first last.”

NOTES

20:1. early. I.e., at sunrise, when work began.

vineyard. Isaiah's parable (Isa 5:1–7) regards God as the owner of the vineyard, and this parallel adds weight to our contention in the COMMENT below. The vine and the vineyard are common OT figures for Israel.

2. denarius. The denarius was the average day's wage, on which an agricultural worker could expect to provide himself and his family with the necessities of life. It was roughly equivalent to the Greek drachma.

3. market place (Gr. agora). This word, like so many Greek and Latin words, had passed into ordinary Jewish usage.

4. In view of the ending of the parable it is to be noted here that only the first group of workers had any fixed monetary agreement.

6. The scene of the parable is set during the vintage season; there would otherwise be no point in hiring workers so late in the day. Depending on location, the vintage season in Palestine is from July through September.

8. owner (Gr. kurios). The Greek word here is the one used frequently for God in the NT.

wages (Gr. misthos). The same word is translated reward in 5:12.

beginning with the last. There is no particular significance in the order of payment, except that the method here employed provides the basis for the dialogue in vss. 11 ff.

12. burden and heat of the day. Those who came first to the Kingdom, whether disciples or Jewish Christians, might think that they had a claim to preferential treatment by God.

13. friend (Gr. hetairos). The word is used here, at 22:12, and 26:50, and in all three instances implies a rebuke.

14–15. Take what is yours. If we assume that the parable as first used was commentary on an imaginary "case" arising from Israel's choice by God (as Isa 5:1–7 certainly is), then the owner (God) grants that Israel's faithfulness has its own just and proper reward. But God may also, of his own free grace, admit latecomers to a life reward. Hence the use of the word choose. There is no appeal against God's use of what is his. Cf. Rom 9:14–15; the whole central argument of the Roman letter is concerned with this very question.

15. evil. The "evil eye" is one which looks with malice or envy on the supposed good fortune of others.

16. a large number of manuscripts add "Many indeed are called but few are chosen," words which have no meaning in this context, but are certainly in place at 22:14.

COMMENT

Here again is an example of the way in which blocks of fixed oral tradition were pieced together to form the larger blocks of teaching material in Matthew. The concluding verse of the last section has dictated the presence of the parable about the field workers. Here, too, is an outstanding example of the great flexibility of the parable as a teaching medium. In its primary application we may safely presume that it had to do with God's calling, of Israel first and later the Gentiles, into the Kingdom. But its proximity to vss. 20–28 of the last chapter is equally a warning against any assumption on the part of the disciples that privilege and reward in the Kingdom belong in higher degree to those first called. (Equality of reward does not mean, however, that there will be no differences of position in the Kingdom, as Jesus points out in 19:28.)

Even when allowance has been made for the attraction of this parable to its present position, the evangelist's own understanding of the parable is by no means clear. Does he interpret the parable as a warning against disputed precedence, or against an attitude of exclusive privilege on the part of those who first entered the Kingdom—i.e., Jews? In the light of our examination of parable in Part XI of the Introduction, we believe that the issue of God's choice of Israel is crucial and primary in most parables, and so we believe it was with this parable in its initial use by Jesus. The parable as it stands certainly points to the role of the householder (God) in the judgment (cf. 18:23, 25:14 ff. for a similar theme).

73. PASSION PREDICTION

(20:17–19)[†]

20 ¹⁷ As Jesus was going up to Jerusalem he took the twelve disciples aside, and while they were journeying said to them, ¹⁸ “See, we are going up to Jerusalem, and The Man will be turned over to the chief priests and the scribes, who will condemn him to death, ¹⁹ and they will turn him over to the Gentiles, to be held up to ridicule, flogged, and crucified. On the third day he will be raised.”

COMMENT

Any way it is seen, this prediction of the passion comes as an interruption of the narrative. The only possible connection with surrounding material—and that by a somewhat far-fetched contextual attraction—would be that Jesus will be last in his passion, and first in his resurrection-exaltation glory. The obvious connection in this part of the chapter is between vss. 1–15 and 20–28, the two parts broken by this passion prediction.

We called attention earlier (cf. NOTES on 17:11–12) to another example of an intruding passion prediction, and the arguments adduced there apply equally well here. The reader is referred to the arguments given there for supposing that this prediction, like its predecessors in 17:11–12, 22–23, is an editorial insertion.

There are verbal agreements in this short section between Matthew and Mark, as well as between Matthew and Luke against Mark, notably the third day as against Mark's "after three days." There may be an indication of the editorial intrusion of this passage in the fact that Matthew does not have "the elders" in addition to chief priests and the scribes (cf. 16:21), thereby indicating that this prediction was inserted in Markan context and partly in the Markan form.

On the prediction of death by crucifixion, found only in Matthew, cf. NOTE on 10:38.

74. PRECEDENCE IN THE KINGDOM

(20:20–28)[†]

20 ²⁰ Then the mother of Zebedee's sons came to him, together with her sons, and knelt before him as a suppliant. ²¹ He said to her, "What do you want?" She replied to him, "Give orders that these two sons of mine may be seated in your Kingdom, one on the right hand, and the other on the left." ²² Jesus answered, "You do not realize what you are asking. Can you drink the cup I am about to drink?" They said to him, "We can." ²³ He said to them, "You will indeed drink my cup, but to sit on my right hand and on my left is not mine to grant, but is for those for whom it is prepared by my Father." ²⁴ The ten, on hearing this, were indignant about the two brothers, ²⁵ but Jesus called them to him and said, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over their subjects, and their great ones exercise authority over them. ²⁶ Among you, however, it will not be so. Let anyone who wishes to be great among you be your servant, ²⁷ while anyone who wishes to be first among you, let him be your slave, ²⁸ in the same way that The Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for the community."

NOTES

20:20. the mother. Mark (10:35) represents the two disciples (James and John) as coming to Jesus directly, a tradition which frequently leads commentators to suggest either that Matthew's historical tradition was at fault or that he manipulated the tradition to cast the disciples in somewhat more favorable light. The suggestion is interesting solely as an example of ignorance of the ways and manners of mothers anxious for their sons. Since Jesus' replies to the request are in plural form directly to the brothers, it is just as likely either that Matthew knew both traditions, or found his oral source to be as it is here, and for all its abrupt change from mother to disciples, allowed it to stand.

21. your Kingdom. Mark has "your glory." The sense is the same.

22. The disciples are not yet aware of the intimate connection between suffering and privilege in the Messianic Community. Cup as a synonym for suffering occurs again in 26:39. In Ugaritic, cup refers to a man's allotted portion or destiny, and is so used in the Psalms (11:6, 16:5, 75:8) and also in the Apocalypse (Rev 14:10, 16:19, 17:4, 18:6). Cf. also Isa 51:17; Lam 4:21.

If Matthew knew the Markan tradition at this point, then his omission of the Markan "baptism" as a synonym for the death of Jesus is very surprising (cf. NOTE on 3:6 and COMMENT on 3:13–17 [§8]).

"We can." Cf. 26:56.

23. drink my cup. The martyr's death of James is recorded in Acts 12:2, but there is no certain historical evidence about John's death.

prepared by my Father. Cf. 25:41.

24. The brothers are not named (cf. also vs. 20) and the evangelist assumes that his readers are well aware of their identity.

25. exercise authority. Outside the Covenant Community, greatness is demonstrable by the use of power. In the Messianic Community greatness on the part of those in authority is recognized only by their willingness to share in the humility of the Community's Lord.

28. The model for all who bear authority and responsibility should be Jesus himself.

ransom (Gr. lutron). The word is used twice in the NT and denotes the price paid for the manumission of a slave, or a price paid in the market place. In both senses the implication is of great cost, a great price constantly emphasized in the NT (cf. Gal 1:4, 2:20; Eph 5:2, 25; Col 1:14; Titus 2:14; Heb 9:12; 1 Peter 1:18 ff.). The saying emphasizes three points:

(a) the voluntary character of the act of self-giving;

(b) the vicarious character of the act, being done for those who ought to have rendered sacrificial obedience, but who could not (cf. Rom 3:24; Gal 3:13; 2 Cor 5:21);

(c) the universal character of the act (see below). It is to be noted that in Rom 3:24 and 1 Peter 1:18 the two ideas of ransom and sacrifice are juxtaposed when dealing with the meaning of redemption. Cf. further, Vincent Taylor, Jesus and His Sacrifice (London: Macmillan, 1937), pp. 99 ff.

Here we have The Man in a context of humility, a concept which is deeply rooted in the Markan tradition, but which we have seen reason to think is not part of Matthew's tradition. While we have compelling evidence in other cases to suppose that the association of suffering with The Man is an editorial addition to Matthew's text, there is no such evidence here. The inclusion of this material by the evangelist here must therefore have been of crucial importance. It is not simply that the saying in vs. 28 is the basis and pattern for those in authority in the Messianic Community, though that is obviously of considerable importance. What is vital to Matthew about this critical vs. 28 is that it is the first time in the ministry of Jesus that the whole ministry and future death of Jesus are given an interpretation, and an interpretation moreover which is linked by the phrase for the community (the "many") with the New Covenant of forgiveness in 26:28 (cf. Jer 31:31 ff.).

We must now give closer attention to the whole complex of ideas bound up with ransom for the community.

The reader of the NT will be aware that the explanatory clause for the community is crucial in the Matthean (26:28) and Markan (14:24) accounts of the Last Supper, both in covenantal context. Generally speaking it seems to be assumed that the community is in some sense a synonym for all, else how explain the Pauline assumption that the sacrificial death of Jesus was of potentially universal efficacy?

So far as our present text is concerned, the phrase lutron anti pollōn (ransom for the community) is most closely paralleled by Isa 53:10–12. The LXX versions offer some varied readings in this context, and the present confused Hebrew text is not easy to reconstruct. What we have at present is:

¹¹“By his knowledge (?) shall the Righteous One vindicate:
my Servant shall (...) the many,
he will bear their sins.”

The first Isaiah scroll from Qumran has the same reading. If the text originally read in second line above: “My Servant shall redeem the many,” the resulting Hebrew scansion would be good.

The same emphasis on “the many” is found in Dan 12:2, 10, a chapter which provides the background for much early Essene literature. Here again in Daniel we have a confused Hebrew text, reflected in the LXX and in the revision by Theodotion of the LXX. Theodotion has: “... and from the righteous ones of the many” (vs. 3). What can be derived with confidence from Dan 12:3 is as follows: “And those who vindicate the many (shall be) like the everlasting stars.” We have come to the conclusion that in Isa 53:10–12 and Dan 12:2, 10 we have the ultimate and the mediate sources of the Essene concentration on “the many” (ha-rabbîm) as background for Matt 20:28, 26:28, and Mark 14:24. Our findings may be summarized as follows:

(a) In our NOTE on 10:41 we called attention to the relatively unexplored significance of the Righteous One as a Messianic title, and to our own continuing investigation of it. In Isa 53:10–12 we have a firm correlation of the Servant with the Righteous One in a redemptive context. The LXX revision by Theodotion which renders the Hebrew as “he shall justify the Righteous One who well serves the many” is incorrect.

(b) “The many” of these various texts of Isaiah and Daniel, later given such emphasis by the Essenes as denoting the elect Essene community, has a long and venerable ancestry as a term for the generality of the Covenant people. In Essene usage it clearly meant the elect community of the Essenes. (Their attitude to non-Essene Israelites is still obscure.) It is possible that Matt 24:31, where membership of the Messianic Community by no means implies inclusion among the elect, represents a conscious rejection by Jesus of this aspect of Essenism.

(c) In the NT, the Righteous One (=the Servant=the Messiah) will vindicate, redeem, Israel, i.e., the community. Herein lies the decisive importance of the interpretation of his death which Jesus offers here (20:28) and in the eucharistic words of 26:28 and Mark 14:24.

(d) The potentially universal applicability of the sacrificial death of the Messiah was assumed by Paul as axiomatic, however much he may have had cause to spell out its implications to his converts. But it is imperative that we notice in this connection that for all the emphasis laid in the NT generally on the adjective new to describe the results of the Messianic work of Jesus, it is never for a moment suggested that there is a “new Israel.” To the contrary: men must for their salvation be incorporated into that Messianic Community which is the heir to, and continuous with, the Israel of the Old Covenant. It is clear that the community in the interpretative liturgical passage of Matthew 26:28 (Mark 14:24) was sufficient explanation of the redemptive sacrifice of the Messiah.

(e) We have as yet very little firm information as to the liturgical practices of the Essenes, but what does seem clear is that the community was a well-established liturgical or quasi-liturgical phrase reaching back to Second Isaiah if not earlier. It was a phrase which had been so hallowed by time that for all the obscurities of the Hebrew text of Second Isaiah, it nevertheless had to be used. Given the Essenes’ insistence that they were Israel, then the equation the community=Israel is seen to have wider implications than our modern English can hope to convey.

It will be observed that the Gr. pollōn has no definite article in the texts under consideration. In a NOTE on 10:41 (d) we called attention to the wide variations of use in regard to the definite article in Koine Greek, and the same considerations operate here. The Dead Sea scrolls material is similarly inconsistent in its use of the definite article before rabbîm: in many cases the word is simply rabbîm, while in many other instances the form is correctly given as ha-rabbîm. We are therefore justified in seeing the pollôn of our Greek texts in the NT as the community, in spite of the fact that grammatically we might have expected tôn pollôn.

(f) It is abundantly clear from the rabbinic writings that ha-rabbîm was understood as meaning the generality of the Covenant people, and the phrase reshût ha-rabbîm, to name but one (=“the public domain,” Mishnah Shabbath xi 1) is of very frequent occurrence. (We are somewhat puzzled that a recent article by Mathias Delcor—“The Courts of the Church” in Paul and Qumran, ed. Jerome Murphy-O’Connor, Chicago: Priory Press, 1968—fails to make any connection between ha-rabbîm and such vital areas as Matt 20:28 and Rom 5:15–17.)

(g) In view of the reference of Matt 20:28, 26:28; and Mark 14:24, back to Isa 53:12 and Dan 12:2–3, 10, it is necessary to look at a passage in the Pirqê Abôth which can be adduced as control evidence for Jesus’ own interpretation of his death as sacrificial. The same passage is also illustrative of the material in Second Isaiah and Daniel. There are variant readings in the Hebrew of Pirqê Abôth v 18 (R. H. Charles’ translation 5. 21). The contrast there between Moses and Jeroboam is quasi-legal. The work of Moses is said in this passage to have involved the community of Israel, and in the same way Jeroboam (cf. 1 Kings 14:16) is said to have involved the community of Israel in his sin. But everything turns on the meaning of the participle mēzakkê. It is commonly assumed by Jewish commentators and their Christian translators that the participle mēzakkê should be rendered by “he made righteous.” But this meaning is at best exceedingly rare, if documented at all. Virtually all occurrences of the verb šdq in the causative, as well as the late Heb. zkh, mean “to declare clear of legal guilt, vindicate” any person on trial. Hence the Pirqê Abôth passage must mean literally: “Everyone who clears the community of guilt, sin does not enter by his instrumentality; but everyone who implicates the community in sin, they cannot perform an act of repentance through him. Moses was free of guilt, and cleared the community of guilt; the freedom of the community from guilt was dependent on it, as it is said: ‘The right judgments of Yahweh he carried out with Israel’ [Deut 33:21]. Jeroboam son of Nebat sinned and implicated the community in sin; the sin of the community was dependent on him, as it is said: ‘The sin of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, by which he brought condemnation on Israel for sin’ [1 Kings 14:16].” There is some valuable material in Büchler, Studies in Sin and Atonement in the Rabbinic Literature of the First Century, pp. 260 ff.

Absent from the above extract (no author-attribution is made, and the presumption is that it is therefore early) is the Pharisee tradition with its sharp distinction between sinner and righteous, guilty and innocent. What we have here is the same uncrystallized point of view with regard to vindication which we saw to be the case in the passages from Second Isaiah and Daniel.

(h) Two important passages in the Dead Sea scroll material must be mentioned here. The first is from the Community Rule (1QS ix 9): “The men of deceit, who did not cleanse their way of guilt, in order to become separated from evil and go in sincerity of way ...” (translation by W. F. Albright), reading lô hizkû. Similarly, the passage in the Thanksgiving Psalms (1QH) (7:12, already mentioned under our discussion of 10:34) provides evidence for the stricture on Jeroboam in the Pirqê Abôth. That king brought condemnation for sin on Israel—it was not that he “caused Israel to sin,” as our English versions commonly have it.

(i) Only in a theology where redemption is centered in a single, Messianic, all-embracing figure do the inchoate motifs of redemption, sin, guilt, repentance, and vindication come sharply into focus as a distinctively Messianic work.

(j) Our examination of passages in Matthew and Mark, with control material from elsewhere, makes it abundantly clear that a critical area of Rom 5 must be examined—and translated—afresh. The “all men” of vs. 12 there is linked with “the many” of vs. 15, and the “trespasses” of vs. 16 are the “trespasses of the many,” and it is “the many” in vs. 19 who will be vindicated.

There are other implications to be drawn from this brief survey of the crucial vs. 28, and they cannot be more than cursorily mentioned here. It has already been said that the ideas expressed in Second Isaiah, Daniel, and later in the Pirqê Abôth are in large measure inchoate, exploratory, and tentative. But the ideas there given tentative expression were later to blossom into the full flowering of mediaeval scholastic theologizing as to the “imputation” of merit, or of righteousness, to God’s people through the redeeming work of Jesus. It is well not to dismiss such ideas too lightly, however much theological speculation sought to reduce them to precise legal patterns. Aware of our common humanity, we realize that human behavior of any kind is not without its universal effects. Paul gave expression to this when he spoke of man being “in Adam,” for all that Augustine later thought to render this more precise by asserting that all men were “in the loins” of the first created man. (N.B. The Heb. ’ādām is both individual and collective, both “mankind” and “a man.”) Paul narrowed this concept of being in “Adam,” or “solid with” Adam, when he spoke of Israel’s relationship with Abraham and then with Moses. The passage in Pirqê Abôth to which we have referred seeks to give expression to this kind of metaphysical relationship when it speaks of the effects of Moses and then Jeroboam on Israel; in both cases, the people were in some sense “solid with” Moses and Jeroboam, bound up with them in their work and accomplishments, and even—in the case of Jeroboam—with a man’s sin. Paul can find no better expression for the relationship between Christ and the members of his community than to speak of Head, Body, Members. The Christian, through baptism, “puts on” the whole redeeming work of the Messiah, is made “solid with” him in a metaphysical union.

There is one final note to be added here. The Pauline dikaion (=to justify, vindicate) has the same kind of overtones as those which we saw to be true of the Heb. mězakkê (and also, incidentally, of the verb hišdiq). It is not that God, through Jesus, makes the member of the Messianic Community righteous by imputing to him moral qualities which he does not possess; but he clears him, vindicates him, justifies him, when all the evidence is apparently against him. With necessary safeguards, there is a sense in which God “imputes” to the Christian—in the Pauline use—a verdict which properly only belongs to Jesus.

After vs. 28 some manuscripts add a version of Luke 14:8–10.

COMMENT

The connecting theme between this section and Section 72, especially vs. 16, is that of choice and responsibility, whether of individuals or a whole people, with the implication that to be first in the Kingdom carries with it the consequence of being last in secular society, and of sharing in the passion of Jesus. Both here and in the exchange between the two disciples and Jesus, as well as in the parable of the workers, the emphasis on the Father's disposition of his own is clearly marked. The Man will judge his own Kingdom, but the final issues are in the Father's hands. In the meantime, those who throw in their lot with Jesus in the Messianic Community must expect to find the values of secular society completely reversed therein.

75. TWO BLIND MEN

(20:29–34)[†]

20 ²⁹ As they were leaving Jericho, a large crowd followed him. ³⁰ Two blind men, sitting by the roadside and hearing that Jesus was passing by, shouted out, “Take pity on us, son of David.” ³¹ The crowd turned on them, demanding that they be silent, but they shouted the more insistently, “Take pity on us, son of David!” ³² Jesus stopped, and called to them: “What do you want me to do for you?” ³³ “Sir, let our eyes be opened.” ³⁴ Moved by pity Jesus touched their eyes; they received sight immediately, and followed him.

NOTES

20:30. Two blind men. Mark (10:46) supplies us with the name of a single blind man, “Bartimaeus, son of Timaeus,” but this is obviously a conflation of the Greek with the Aramaic, and what we have in effect in Mark is “son of Timaeus” repeated. Luke has a single man (Luke 18:35). It is possible that Matthew’s tradition was confused, or that there was indeed a tradition that two men were involved. Matthew also is unaware of the Markan and Lukan “the Nazarene” as an appellation of Jesus (cf. also 28:5=Mark 16:6, but in 26:69=Mark 14:67, Matthew has the Galilean).

33. Sir. Matthew translates the Aram. rabbouni, where Mark preserves it transliterated.

Apart from historical circumstance, the context of this miracle in Matthew may be crucial, as it is in Mark and Luke. The issue of sight and blindness is also crucial in John 9 to the understanding of Jesus’ ministry, and the same issue may underlie the placing of this incident immediately following upon the apparent failure of James and John to see (understand) the nature of their calling in vss. 20–28. Mark (8:22 ff.) has a story of a blind man’s restored sight immediately before Peter’s acknowledgment (“seeing”) of Jesus in 8:27 ff. Standing as the narrative does here before the final act in Jerusalem, it pursues the theme of vs. 28: the disciples will be required to see (cf. 26:64) the glory of Jesus in death and seeming defeat.

76. TRIUMPHAL ENTRY INTO JERUSALEM

(21:1–11)[†]

21 ¹ As they approached Jerusalem, and came to Bethphage by way of the Mount of Olives, Jesus sent two of his disciples with instructions: ² “Go into the village opposite you, and immediately you will find an ass tied, with a colt. Loose them, and bring them to me. ³ If anyone asks what you are doing, then say ‘The Lord needs them,’ and he will send them immediately.” ⁴ This happened in fulfillment of what was said by the prophet:

⁵ “Announce to the daughter of Sion,
Behold, your king is coming to you, humble, mounted on a donkey, on a colt, a donkey’s foal.”

⁶ The disciples went, did as Jesus directed them, ⁷ and bringing the donkey and the colt they put their cloaks on them, and he sat there. ⁸ Most of the crowd spread their own cloaks on the road, while others cut down branches from the trees, and laid them on the road. ⁹ The crowds which went before and after him shouted out the words: “Hosanna! O son of David! Blessed is he who comes in the Lord’s name! (Cry) Hosanna in the heavenly heights!” ¹⁰ As he entered Jerusalem, the whole city was stirred up, saying, “Who is this?” ¹¹ and the crowds replied, “This is the prophet Jesus from Nazareth in Galilee.”

NOTES

21:1. Mount of Olives. Cf. Zech 14:4, where the place is associated with Messianic hope.

with instructions. At first sight, this little incident is full of mystery. This account is one of many in the gospels in which the relevant circumstances were still so well known to the people when the oral tradition became fixed that they were not included. This can be very baffling for the reader in search of exact biographical detail. The high incidence of background information which is assumed or omitted as taken for granted is eloquent proof of the immediacy of the NT material—the transmitters of the oral tradition were not concerned beyond the immediate accuracy of transmission.

3. he will send. The subject of this verb is obscure. Mark seems to imply that it is the Lord who will send the animals back to the owners, whereas the sense in Matthew appears to be that anyone questioning the disciples will send the animals without further ado.

4–5. In fulfillment. Matthew has two “fulfillment” passages here. The second (from Zech 9:9) had the groundwork laid for it in vs. 2—an ass tied, with a colt. The first quotation, Announce to the daughter of Sion, is from Isa 62:11, and the Isaian oracle is cast in a strongly Messianic mold. On fulfillment, cf. Part IV of the Introduction.

5. The last part of the quotation (on a donkey, [and] on a colt, a donkey’s foal) is Hebrew poetic parallelism. The very ancient picture of the Messiah in Zech 9:9, portraying the Righteous One who will save his people, has a long history. The language with regard to the donkey is identical with that used of a donkey offered in sacrifice in the patriarchal city of Haran. The practice is known to us from the Mari texts (eighteenth century B.C.), belonging to the early patriarchal period. It speaks of the donkey sacrifice as ratifying a treaty between the Apiru (=Hebrews) and various local kings. The figure of the donkey, in the same three words as in the Mari text, occurs again in Gen 49:11 as well as in the text of Zech 9:9 under discussion.

Attention is drawn to the fact that in the Zechariah text the Messiah is described as the Righteous One (Heb. ṣaddîq), a title to which we have referred previously as an ancient Jewish Messianic appellation. The whole Messianic context of Zech 9:9–17 is relevant at this point, and not merely the half verse which the evangelist uses as a kind of anchor. The context in Zechariah looks to the restoration of the people by reason of God’s overshadowing providence and of his covenant with the people. The Hebrew parallelism of this verse led a translator to assume that there were two animals involved as he did also in vss. 2 and 3. Mark and Luke know of only one animal.

6. Matthew’s account is here considerably shorter than that of Mark, who gives far more eyewitness detail.

7. The NOTE on vs. 5 is applicable here. Jesus could not ride on two animals at once, and the translator has two animals being adorned with cloaks.

their cloaks (Gr. himatia, cf. NOTE on 9:20). The placing of cloaks on the back of the donkey implied great respect and honor to the rider.

9. “Hosanna!” The word is from Ps 118:25–26, and is a prayer for deliverance (“Save now!”); it is not in any way a cry of praise. The absence of indications of quotation in Greek manuscripts has over the centuries, and even into our own times, led to some curious translations of this verse, translations which completely fail to do justice to the Heb. hôsha’nā. The translation here must either read: “the crowds shouted ... Hosanna! to the son of David,” or (for reasons next stated) in the way in which we have translated the verse. It is now known that the Heb. la, lě often introduced a vocative (cf. Pss 68:4, 32, 33, 35, and also Mitchell Dahood, Psalms I, 1–50, AB, vol. 16 (New York; Doubleday, 1965–66), pp. xxi ff. The meaning of the vocative la was misunderstood quite early, and the Greek translation therefore rendered the vocative O son of David as “to the son of David,” for the Heb. la, lě is also used to indicate “to,” as a dative. What we have here, therefore, is an ancient liturgical text, a cry to the anointed king for deliverance.

son of David. Cf. NOTE on 1:1.

he who comes. I.e., the Coming One. Cf. NOTE on 11:3.

in the heavenly heights. This is a translation of the Hebrew of Ps 148:1 (cf. here the Greek with the LXX of the same psalm verse). The meaning of this liturgical prayer is not easily rendered, and our translation renders the best sense in English.

10. the whole city was stirred up. Cf. 2:3.

11. the prophet. Cf. NOTE on 10:41.

There are seven verbal agreements between Matthew and Luke against Mark in this section, but somewhat more agreements between Matthew and Mark against Luke (nine), and somewhat fewer between Mark and Luke against Matthew (five).

COMMENT

The title given to the section rightly describes Matthew's interpretation of the events. It is the entry of the Messianic king into his own city, the final challenge by Jesus to his own people in his ministry. It is also the supreme act of obedience of the Son to the Father (cf. 16:21).

77. CLEANSING THE TEMPLE

(21:12–17)[†]

21 ¹² Jesus went into the temple, and threw out all who bought and sold in the temple, and overturned the tables of the money-changers and the seats of the pigeon-dealers. ¹³ “It is written,” he said to them, “ ‘My house shall be called a house of prayer,’ but you have made it a robbers’ den.”

¹⁴ The blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and he cured them. ¹⁵ But when the chief priests and the scribes saw the wonders which he did, and the young children shouting in the temple the words, “Hosanna! O son of David!” they were indignant, ¹⁶ and said to him, “Do you hear what they are saying?” Jesus replied, “Yes. Have you never read, ‘Out of the mouths of babes and nurslings you have brought perfect praise’?”

¹⁷ Leaving them, he went out of the city to Bethany and stayed there.

NOTES

21:12. the temple. Some manuscripts add of God.

Matthew used a prophecy of Malachi in connection with John the Baptist (11:10), and the context of that quoted prophecy announces the coming of the Lord to his temple. The whole complex of this entry of Jesus into Jerusalem implies the fulfillment of that prophecy (cf. Mal 3).

money-changers. Two things must be remembered here:

(a) The incident, however dramatic its implied interpretation of the Lord coming to claim his own (cf. My house, vs. 13), probably did not attract much attention apart from its immediate environment. The temple would have been thronged at this time, and Jesus' action, apart from those close to him, may have appeared to be no more than a passing incident.

(b) By acting out this prophetic parable Jesus was attacking a powerful, lucrative, and well-entrenched privilege. All financial transactions in the temple had to be in Tyrian currency, and the money-changers were allowed a substantial discount. The half-shekel was worth two denarii, the denarius being a laborer's wage for a day and two denarii enough for a few days' lodging (cf. Luke 10:35).

pigeon-dealers. Cf. Lev 5:7; 12:8. Pigeons were a legitimate substitute for lambs for sacrificial purposes. On this last, cf. "The 'Herodian Doves' in the Light of Recent Archaeological Discoveries," by Eliezer D. Oren, Palestine Exploration Quarterly, January–June, 1968.

13. My house. Cf. Isa 56:7. Mark's narrative makes explicit what Matthew's abbreviated version implies in the whole context of Isa 56; the time of ingathering of all God's people, Jew and Gentile, is near.

robbers' den. Cf. Jer 7:11. The prophet predicted the destruction of the temple as punishment for sin. The saying of Jesus indicates a similar judgment; it was Israel's responsibility to know the signs of the times (cf. 11:1–24, etc.), to recognize the time of consummation, but failure to do so involved judgment. Jesus' prophecies of the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple are firmly embedded in the gospel tradition (cf. 23:37 ff., 24:2, etc.). All but the most superficial acquaintance with the conditions of the time would have led any thoughtful contemporary observer to the same conclusion.

At this point, we call the reader's attention to the variations in tradition between the evangelists as to the chronology of this week:

	Matthew	Mark	Luke
1st day	Entry. Cleansing of Temple. Return to Bethany	Entry. Return to Bethany	Entry. Cleansing of Temple
2nd day	Cursing & withering of fig tree. Teaching	Cursing of fig tree. Cleansing of Temple	Teaching
3rd day	Teaching	Fig tree withered	Teaching

Matthew and Luke appear to shorten the Markan chronology by one day, on the theory that both evangelists used Mark as basis for their work. But even if we allowed that Matthew put the cursing of the tree, and its subsequent withering, on the same day to heighten the dramatic effect, this supposed dependence on Mark is not very impressive when examined. Luke's two days are not even suggested by the evangelist to be consecutive, and Matthew and Luke agree only in recording that the days were engaged in teaching—the material cannot be regarded as parallel. Matthew, far from being dependent on the Markan account (which records the first day as one of teaching), provides us with a first day of activity (vss. 14–15). If Matthew is dependent on Mark, then there is wholesale transference; cf. Mark 11:17 (“he taught”) and Matt 21:23, together with Mark 11:18 and Matt 22:33.

16. Out of the mouths. The quotation is from the LXX of Ps 8:2. Cf. 11:25. The chief priests and the scribes, who from this point on are very prominent in the narrative, appear here for the first time together since 2:4. They were mentioned in the passion predictions of 16:21 and 20:18—but cf. NOTES on 16:21 (§60).

Luke has a parallel to this dialogue, connected with the entry into Jerusalem (19:39–40).

COMMENT

There is an apparent difference in the relative dating of the cleansing of the temple between the Johannine and the synoptic traditions. We have, of course, no external evidence as to whether the event recorded happened once, twice, or even three times, and at present the whole matter is beyond our investigation. All we have is the internal evidence of the tradition, a tradition which links the event with the Messianic prophecy of Zechariah, whose own tradition goes back to pre-Israelite times.

In the Fourth Gospel the cleansing of the temple takes place at the beginning of the ministry (John 2:13–22), and therefore is not associated (as in the synoptic gospels) with the entry into Jerusalem. There are far too many verbal similarities in the Greek between the Johannine and synoptic accounts to make plausible any suggestion that there were two such events. Whether the Johannine account serves a theological purpose, interpretative of the ministry in its present position, or whether John's chronology of events is to be preferred at this point, are matters which the reader will find discussed at length in Brown, John, i–xii, COMMENT on 2:13–22 (§8).

We begin here the complex series of events which subsequent usage has called “Holy Week.” We must now indicate the problems which are involved.

(a) In broad outline the four evangelists are agreed on the central events of this week from Sunday to Sunday. But there are areas of disagreement in sequence and timing, and it is impossible to determine at this remove which evangelist is factually and chronologically more accurate in his reminiscences. It would cast the gravest doubt on the historical accuracy of the narrative were we to find that there was close and substantial agreement in detail among the four evangelists.

(b) The narratives we have illustrate very well the tenacity of the oral tradition as received by four men, each with his own method of handling that tradition.

(c) It is clear to any intelligent reader of the passion narratives not only that there are discrepancies in the four accounts, but also that the events which immediately lead up to the trial scenes, and the trial scenes themselves, give an impression of haste and confusion. Some of this sense of confusion and haste is fully comprehensible; it is clear that in the final moments of the trial most of the principal eyewitnesses fled. Subsequent reminiscence will certainly have reflected this confusion. Furthermore, the task of determining the precise sequence of events has in recent years been rendered far more difficult, though certainly far more interesting, by discoveries at Qumran. They disclose that at least two sectarian groups used a calendrical system for calculating Passover which was seriously at variance with the official Jerusalem calendar. The Qumran calendar had an older usage historically, and some scholars have insisted that it was this older calendar which Jesus and the disciples used. It is clear that according to this calendar Passover would have fallen on the night of Tuesday–Wednesday, and so would be the night of the Last Supper. This view was first propounded by Mlle. Annie Jaubert in La date de la cène, Paris: Librairie Lecoffre, 1957, and it has often been discussed since then. We cannot enter into such discussion here, and the interested reader is referred to George Ogg, “The Chronology of the Last Supper,” in Historicity and Chronology in the New Testament, for a lucid and convenient summary of the evidence.

(d) It is frequently overlooked that what information we have about Jewish legal procedure, particularly with respect to criminal law as it operated in Roman-occupied Judea, is post-Christian. Our information as to the way in which Roman criminal law operated in the provinces is very limited, but it is known to have been arbitrary and largely discretionary for the non-citizen. We know of no legislation governing the workings of a local prefect or procurator in criminal cases before the second century A.D. (Pliny the Younger). The New Testament, both with respect to the trial of Jesus, and the subsequent trials of Paul and his companions, gives us but one view of the way in which criminal law could and did operate under various Roman officials.

For convenience and for the interest of the reader, we give the sequence of events as the new theory of Mlle. Jaubert explains them:

Official Jewish Calendar			Sectarian (Ancient Priestly) Calendar
Nisan 8	Saturday	Anointing at Bethany	Nisan 11
9	Sunday	Triumphal Entry Return to Bethany	12
10	Monday	Return to Jerusalem Incident of the fig tree	13
11	Tuesday	Preparation for Passover Passover/Last Supper Arrest of Jesus; Examination before Annas; Jesus taken to Caiaphas' house	14
12	Wednesday	Ecclesiastical trial opens	15
13	Thursday	Ecclesiastical trial ends in morning, and Roman trial begins; examination by Herod Antipas	16
14	Friday	Roman trial ends; Crucifixion; official Jewish Passover begins in the evening	17

The merit of this theory is that it accommodates the Johannine tradition, which places the death of Jesus at the time when Passover lambs were being slain in the temple.

Cf. also Finegan, Handbook of Biblical Chronology, pp. 290 ff.

78. QUESTIONS ABOUT AUTHORITY

(21:18–27)[†]

21 ¹⁸ Early in the morning, as he was returning to the city, he was hungry, ¹⁹ and seeing a single fig tree by the roadside he went to it. But finding nothing on it but leaves, he said to it, “May no fruit ever come from you again!” The tree withered at once. ²⁰ When the disciples saw it they were astounded. “How did the fig tree wither at once?” they asked. ²¹ Jesus answered, “I solemnly tell you that if you have faith and never doubt, not only will you do what has been done to the fig tree, but if you say even to this mountain, ‘Be rooted up and thrown into the sea,’ it will happen. ²² Whatever you ask in prayer trusting [God’s will] you will receive.”

²³ When he went into the temple, the chief priests and the elders among the people came to him (as he was teaching), asking: “By what authority are you doing these things? And who gave you this authority?” ²⁴ Jesus answered them, “I too will ask you a question, and if you answer me, then I in turn will tell you by what authority I am doing these things. ²⁵ Whence came John’s baptism—from heaven, or from men?” They argued the question with one another: “If we say ‘From heaven,’ he will say to us, ‘Then why did you not believe him?’ ²⁶ but if we say ‘From men,’ we are afraid of the people, for all regard John as a prophet.” ²⁷ So they answered Jesus, “We do not know.” He in turn said to them, “Neither will I tell you by what authority I am doing these things.”

NOTES

21:18–22. It is impossible to determine precisely what historical background lies behind the narrative in these verses. To describe the fig tree incident as “miracle” would be to demand a re-examination of all other miracles in the gospel narratives. This incident as it is reported to us cannot be regarded as a sign of the Kingdom’s coming, still less as a means by which the Kingdom comes (cf. Part X of the Introduction). The connection of the incident with the visit to the temple, both in Matthew and Mark, indicates very strongly that it was a prophetic parable (cf. Acts 21:11 ff.) looking to an imminent fall of Jerusalem and the destruction of the temple. Some indication that this is the case can be found in Mark, who tells us that the time for fruit to appear had not yet arrived (11:13). Cf. also Matt 3:10 and the parable in Luke 13:6 ff. Jesus had looked for faith in his mission and his person, and had not found it (cf. vs. 43).

The spreading of the incident over two days in Mark, as contrasted with Matthew’s one day, further complicates the issue. It is not clear whether the saying on prayer in vss. 21–22 belongs to the narrative or not. Mark’s version of the saying is considerably expanded (11:23–25) and has material found in three separate contexts in Matthew (6:14–15; 7:7–11; 18:35).

22. trusting. The trust indicated here is the response of love and trust called for by God’s love for Israel in the Covenant. The words in brackets are added by us to make the point clear.

23–27. This is the first in a series of controversies (21:23–22:46) which are conducted in a form well-known in the Talmud. The narrative and the dialogue are alike treated with considerable vigor of expression. The method of question and counter-question may, to our way of thinking, seem like evasion tactics, but it was a common form of debate in Hellenistic and later rabbinic times as well as in Greek practice as early as the fifth century B.C. The form was specifically designed to establish the truth of a matter, and could even involve an opponent in giving an answer which the proponent could not elicit by a direct first question.

23. these things. The question about authority revolves round two considerations: the popular cry “son of David” and “prophet” (vss. 9–11), followed by Jesus’ implicit claim to know God’s will for the temple (vss. 12–13). Jesus’ reply, as indicated above, is no mere evasion. His questioners had never faced the implications of the popular assessment of John the Baptist.

as he was teaching. This is omitted in some Latin and Syriac manuscripts (cf. Luke 20:1), but cf. the reference to teaching in the temple at 26:55.

24. Only those who have submitted to John’s call for repentance and baptism can understand the mission of Jesus.

25. from heaven. I.e., God-given, as contrasted with from men, in the sense of a self-assumed vocation.
believe. I.e., be loyal to, submit to, John’s ministry.

27. “We do not know.” This is a confession of unwillingness to make any commitment either about John or about Jesus.

79. THREE PARABLES

(21:28–46)[†]

21 ²⁸ “But what do you think? A man had two sons, and he went to the first and said, ‘Son, go and work in my vineyard today.’ ²⁹ He replied, ‘I will not,’ but later changed his mind and went. ³⁰ He went to the second and said the same. He replied, ‘Yes, sir,’ and did not go. ³¹ Which of the two did as his father wished?” They said, “The first.” Jesus said to them, “I solemnly tell you that tax collectors and prostitutes enter God’s Kingdom before you. ³² For John came to you in the path of righteousness, and you did not believe him, while the tax collectors and the prostitutes did. Even when you saw that, you did not later change your minds and believe him.

³³ “Listen to another parable. There was a householder who planted a vineyard, fenced it, dug out a wine press in it, built a lookout post, and turning it over to tenant farmers, went to another country. ³⁴ When the vintage season approached, he sent his slaves to the tenant farmers to get his fruit. ³⁵ The tenant farmers took his slaves, beat one, killed another, and threw stones at a third. ³⁶ Again he sent some other slaves, more in number than the first, and they did the same to them. ³⁷ Finally, he sent his son to them, thinking, ‘They will respect my son.’ ³⁸ But when the tenant farmers saw the son, they said to themselves, ‘This is the heir. Let us kill him, and we shall have the inheritance.’ ³⁹ So they took him, threw him out of the vineyard, and killed him. ⁴⁰ When therefore the owner of the vineyard comes, what will he do to those tenant farmers?” ⁴¹ They said to him, “He will put those wicked men to a miserable death, and will let out the vineyard to other tenant farmers, who will render him the harvests in season.” ⁴² Jesus said to them, “Did you never read in the Scriptures:

‘The stone which the builders rejected, that same stone has become the head of the corner.
This was the Lord’s doing, and it is a wonderful thing to us’?

⁴³ Therefore I tell you that the Kingdom of God will be taken from you, and given to a people which will be productive.” [⁴⁴ “Whoever falls over this stone will be injured, but as for the man on whom it falls, it will crush him.”]

⁴⁵ When the chief priests and the Pharisees heard his parables they realized that he was speaking about them, ⁴⁶ but while seeking to arrest him they feared the crowds, because they regarded him as a prophet.

NOTES

There are parallels in this first parable to other sayings of Jesus in quite different contexts—cf. 7:21, 12:50.

21:28–31a. The manuscripts have considerable variation as to which comes first in this saying, the obedient or the disobedient son. We have chosen to follow the reading of Codex Sinaiticus and other early authorities, partly on the grounds explained in the NOTE on vs. 30. The NEB has chosen the other reading.

28. what do you think? This is a typical Matthean introduction. Cf. 17:25.

vineyard. Cf. NOTE on 20:1, and below on vs. 33.

29. changed his mind (Gr. metamelesthai). The word is used only in Matthew in our gospels, and can also mean “repent.”

30. sir (Gr. kurie). Also “Lord”; the connection with 7:21 is apparent. It is the disobedient son who says “Lord, Lord.”

31. tax collectors. Cf. NOTE on 9:10. It signifies a class of people whose allegiance to the Law was at best suspect.

God’s Kingdom. Commentators are occasionally puzzled to know why Matthew, if he was indeed dependent on Mark, did not change this to Kingdom of heaven. We have pointed out in the Introduction that the evangelist makes a clear and careful distinction between the two phrases, and it is important to remember that distinction here. What is at issue is not the entrance of Jesus’ presently unbelieving hearers into the Messianic Community (the Kingdom of heaven). We know from Acts that numbers of people who had not committed themselves to allegiance to Jesus in the time of his ministry did so after the first apostolic preaching. The saying looks beyond the present situation, beyond possible entrance into the Messianic Kingdom, to the ultimate possibility of rejected entrance into the Father’s Kingdom. Matthew’s use here is wholly consistent with what we have observed elsewhere in this gospel. Enter is quite indeterminate (Gr. proagousin): the tax collectors and the prostitutes “enter,” leaving open the question as to whether his hearers do, or do not, enter the final inheritance of the Father’s Kingdom.

33. The imagery in the opening of the parable is from Isa 5:2. The immediate recognition by the hearers of their own place in the allegory is confirmation not only of the persistent use of the imagery of the vine and the vineyard to describe Israel, but also of the “case law” understanding of parable.

tenant farmers. In the first century, many landowners were absentees, letting out their holdings to tenants. The best parallel in our society is the share-cropping system practiced in various parts of the United States.

34. approached. The verb is reminiscent of the words with which Mark opens the ministry of Jesus (1:15); cf. Matt 3:2 and 4:17.

slaves (or servants). The Matthean plural clearly calls for equating the slaves with the prophets, sent as God’s representatives.

fruit. The term is constantly used, in one form or another, in both OT and NT, to denote the duty Israel owes to God (cf. Isa 5:4).

35–36. Luke has three servants, plus a beloved son; Mark has three servants plus “many others” and a beloved son, while Matthew is more indefinite. Attempts by commentators to fix precise details from the OT to correspond to the precise details of the parables (cf. the stoning of Zechariah, 2 Chron 24:20 f. as an example) must be considered useless; the essential meaning of this parable is clear enough.

37. his son. Suggestions occasionally made that this is an ecclesiastical addition to the text are usually vague as to when this post-apostolic manipulation took place, and unless we are to rule out 3:13–17 (cf. Mark 1:9–11; Luke 3:21–22; John 1:29–34) then it is hard to see what the objection is to the authenticity of this passage. Granted a Messianic consciousness on the part of Jesus, the title “son” was a common designation of the anointed king in the OT. Cf. Part VII of the Introduction.

39. Note that Matthew’s tradition here arranges the details in the light of the death of Jesus, who was crucified outside the city. Cf. Mark 12:8; Luke 20:15.

41. They said to him. In Mark (12:9) and Luke (20:15–16) Jesus answers his own question. Matthew has the listeners answer, condemning themselves as they did in vs. 31.

42. The quotation is from Ps 118:22–23, and from the text of the LXX. The whole psalm is a vindication of God’s purpose, declared as through the agency of a chosen servant. Here again (cf. Part IV of the Introduction) it is the context of the whole psalm which must be taken into account in this quotation. The entire drama of this final week is seen in the light of God’s victory snatched from the jaws of defeat, an assertion of the vindication of God’s selection of his own. This choice is narrowed into the person of the Son, and with him the nascent Messianic Community. It is against this background that the whole of the psalm should be read at this point.

43. This verse is not found in Mark or in Luke. It is almost impossible to reject the argument that this verse and the one which follows it are secondary commentary. Kingdom of God, meaning as it does in Matthew (and in 1 Cor 15:24–58) the ingathering of the elect into the Father’s Kingdom, is inappropriate here. Moreover, the parable makes no judgment of the kind suggested in this verse, and the verse itself interrupts the connection between vs. 42 and vss. 44, 45–46.

44. The builders of Israel’s national life, those who might have been expected to welcome the ministry of John and the proclamation of Jesus, had rejected both John and Jesus, and the Messiah would build on another foundation—cf. 16:18—that of allegiance to himself. This verse, which is not found in all manuscripts, carries the thought a stage further. Jesus, as the cornerstone of the new community, gives offense to those who ought to have welcomed him. The verse has some puzzling features. It is found in Luke, but not in Mark. In both Matthew and Luke the Greek has sunthlasthēsetai, (“will be injured”) but in view of its rarity and the extraordinary difficulties of pronouncing this word it perhaps ought to be sumblēthēsetai, “to be smitten or injured” (which we have translated will be injured). Copyists, whether working from a written uncial text, or from dictation, often confused the Greek uncial beta with theta.

But it is the difficulty of context which is paramount. The connection between vss. 42 and 45 is obvious, and we have already called attention to the very awkward interposition of vs. 43. Since, however, the verse under consideration, 44, is found in two synoptic evangelists, it would seem at first sight as though it is being reported as a saying of Jesus. That the saying about the building stone in vs. 42 exercised considerable influence in early Christian exposition is evidenced by 1 Peter 2:4–8. At this point, the close parallel between both passages and similar thoughts in Isa 8:5–9:1 and 28:14 ff. is striking. (Gundry—cf. The Use of the Old Testament in St. Matthew’s Gospel—thinks the vision of the stone in Dan 2 is the background here. This seems to us to be altogether too slender a hypothesis.) Both the Isaian passages are of great significance in determining the place of this saying. In both there is a contrast drawn between the work of God and the attempts of men to deny or frustrate that work. Yet although there is in Isa 28 an opposition described between the attitude of official Jerusalem on the one hand and God’s purposes on the other, it is certain that the background of this verse must be seen in the light of Isa 8. That chapter begins with the refusal of official Israel to put trust and confidence in God’s own act, and refers to the conspiracy (historically the Syro-Ephraimite coalition) which blinds men’s eyes to God’s will.

The “stone of offense,” the “rock of stumbling” in Isa 8:13 ff. is God himself, refuge and sanctuary to those who trust, a snare to the faithless. Most significantly, the prophet refers in vss. 16 ff. to the disciples who have understood and will cherish his teaching, and both he and they will be signs from God who dwells on Mount Zion. All that remains for the faithless is distress and darkness (cf. vss. 21–22 and Matt 23:37, 27:45–51).

It seems clear that this present verse is an allusive commentary by Matthew on the decisive point in the ministry of Jesus which had been reached by his entry into Jerusalem. The public ministry is virtually ended, the disciples have for the most part been instructed, and all that remains is the playing out of the final act in the drama of God’s redemptive act. To pursue the Isaian context into chapter 9 is to be assured that the future is not in doubt, whatever may lie in the days immediately ahead.

Part IV of the Introduction is concerned with Matthew’s use of the OT and Gundry makes much of OT allusions in Matthew. It seems to us that the present vs. 44 is such an allusion. Its present context in both Matthew and Luke provokes questions as to origin and provenance. If it was a saying of Jesus, then it is seriously out of context, and interrupts the flow of the end of this present chapter. If it is a saying of Jesus placed here as commentary on the end of the public ministry of Jesus, then it is yet another piece of evidence for the consuming interest in the prophecies of Isaiah so well known to us from the Qumran discoveries.

One rather tantalizing question remains. The method of OT interpretation which we know to have been commonplace among the Essenes was also Matthew's method, as pointed out first by Stendahl. But it is not that of Luke, who—although having access to hymns which predate the ministry of Jesus—does not use Matthew's allusive commentary methods. We are therefore faced with an intriguing problem of priority in this verse, and the indications would seem to exclude a dependence of Matthew on Luke. Perhaps this kind of text, an allusive reference back to OT material, is the nearest firm indication that we have of a collection of "logia" or sayings of Jesus, from which both Matthew and Luke drew. But it emphatically does not, on the usual documentary hypothesis, explain why this particular verse should have been inserted into the narrative at precisely the same point in Matthew and Luke, and at the same time omitted in Mark.

COMMENT

The three parables (21:28–22:14) all have to do with the place of Israel in the purpose of God, seen against the background of the ministry of Jesus (cf. Part XI of the Introduction). If, as we have seen reason to suppose, the incident of the fig tree was “acted parable,” or prophetic parable, then the whole complex from 21–22:14 is a unity. Everything in this part of the gospel is concerned with summing up the attitude of Jesus’ own people, on the semiofficial level, to his ministry and proclamation. It is evident from 22:15 that to all intents and purposes there is no longer room for argument, and room only for the best way in which Jesus’ enemies can accomplish his removal from the scene.

80. PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM

(22:1–14)[†]

22 ¹ Jesus once more addressed them in parables: ² “The Kingdom of heaven may be compared with a king who gave a wedding feast for his son. ³ He sent his slaves to call those who were invited to the feast, but they would not come. ⁴ Once more he sent other slaves with the message: ‘Tell those who have been invited: See, I have prepared the dinner, my oxen and fat calves have been killed, and everything is ready. Come to the wedding.’ ⁵ But they treated it lightly and went away, one to his own farm, another to his business, ⁶ while the remainder seized his slaves, treated them brutally and killed them. ⁷ The king was angry, sent his soldiers and wiped out those murderers and burned down their city. ⁸ He then said to his slaves, ‘The wedding is indeed ready, but the invited guests were unsuitable. ⁹ So go into the main streets and invite as many as you find to the wedding.’ ¹⁰ The slaves went out into the streets and collected together all whom they found, both bad and good, and the wedding hall was filled with guests. ¹¹ However, when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man without suitable wedding garb, and he said to him, ¹² ‘Friend, how did you get in here without proper wedding garb?’ and he was speechless. ¹³ The king then said to his attendants, ‘Bind him hand and foot, and throw him into outer darkness, where there will be shrieking and grinding of teeth.’ ¹⁴ Many, indeed, are called, but few are chosen.”

NOTES

22:1. once more. This is simply an introduction to the material and not a chronological note.

2. a king. I.e., God (cf. 5:35). In the parable below, which is a separate story (cf. vs. 11) and in 25:34, it is Jesus who is depicted as king.

wedding feast. The theme is used again to describe the Kingdom in 25:10. Cf. Rev. 19:7 ff.

5–6. Compared with the Lukan tradition, it is more than likely that there has been assimilation to the narrative of 21:33 ff. The Lukan parable (14:18–20) makes it clear that the reasons proffered for absence were not frivolous; they were such as to excuse a man from military service under the Mosaic Law.

10. bad and good. This parable deals with the Messianic Kingdom, The Man's Kingdom, and therefore all kinds of people will respond to the invitation.

11. This obviously begins a separate parable. But whatever assimilation may have taken place in vss. 5–7, there seems small justification for saying that it took place when the Church wished to accommodate the parable to the events of the first Jewish War and the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. It is well to remember that the Zealots were founded shortly after A.D. 8. There is no reason to deny to Jesus in the explosive situation of the second quarter of the first century the insights of an Isaiah or a Jeremiah in like circumstances.

wedding garb. The scene depicted is that of the Son judging his own Kingdom. The man in question had attempted to enter that Kingdom without prior repentance. It is fruitless to discuss whether there was a custom demanding that the giver of a wedding feast had an obligation to provide special clothing. No such custom is known to us, and—cf. Yohanan ben Zakkai's parable in COMMENT below—it is probable that only clean clothes were expected.

12. Friend. Cf. NOTE on 20:13.

13. attendants. The Greek word is different from the word for “slaves” in previous verses, and presumably in the interpretation means “angels.” Cf. the distinction in Hebrew between ‘ebed and shammāsh.

Bind him ... Cf. the similar injunctions in 8:12, 13:30, 42, 50, 24:51, 25:30.

14. called. The Greek is derived from the same verb as “invited” in vs. 3. Many are called into the Messianic Kingdom, but few will be finally chosen for the Father's Kingdom at the judgment.

COMMENT

The Lukan reference at the head of this section is not a true parallel, and is given only for the sake of comparison. Both the language and the details are quite different.

There seems to be an attempt to equate this parable to the parable about the tenant farmers (22:33–41), as though underlining the lessons of the rejection of Jesus by official Judaism. There would appear to be traditional material behind this present example. There is attributed to Yohanan ben Zakkai a story of a king who invited some servants to a wedding feast, but (purposely?) omitted to supply any details of time. Those with foresight not only dressed in clothes suitable for the occasion, but also waited at the door of the king's house. The unthinking servants, on the other hand, went on with their work. Without warning, the king announced that the time of the wedding had come, and the servants who had been waiting went in to the feast. The unwise, still wearing working clothes, were made to stand and watch the others eat the feast (TB, Shabbath 153 a).

81. QUESTIONS

(22:15–46)[†]

22 ¹⁵ Then the Pharisees went to discuss how to trap him in discussion, ¹⁶ so they sent to him their disciples, with the Herodians, with the question: “Teacher, we know that you are an honest man, and teach God’s will truly, without worrying what men think, for you pay no attention to external appearance. ¹⁷ Tell us, then, what you think. Is it lawful to pay taxes to Caesar, or not?” ¹⁸ Jesus, aware of their malice, said, “You casuists! Why put me on trial? ¹⁹ Show me the tax money.” They brought him a denarius, ²⁰ and Jesus asked them, “Whose representation and inscription is this?” “Caesar’s,” they said. ²¹ “Then pay to Caesar what belongs to Caesar,” he said, “and pay to God what belongs to God.” ²² When they heard this, they wondered, left him, and went away.

²³ On the same day, Sadducees—who deny the resurrection—came to him with a question. ²⁴ “Teacher,” they said, “Moses said, ‘If a man dies having no children, his brother must marry the widow so that he can produce children for the brother.’ ²⁵ Now there were among us seven brothers; the oldest married, and died without children, leaving his widow to his brother. ²⁶ The same thing happened with the second brother, and then the third, and finally with all seven. ²⁷ Last of all the woman died. ²⁸ Now in the resurrection, of the seven whose wife will she be, for all had married her?” ²⁹ “You are wrong,” Jesus answered them, “because you do not know either the Scriptures or God's power, ³⁰ for in the resurrection they will neither marry nor be given in marriage, but will be as angels are in heaven. ³¹ But as to the resurrection of the dead: have you not read God's word to you—³² 'I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob'? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living."

³³ When the crowds heard this, they were greatly impressed by his teaching.

³⁴ The Pharisees, having heard that he had silenced the Sadducees, came together, and ³⁵ one of them (a lawyer) tried to trap him with a question. ³⁶ "Teacher," he said, "which is the greatest commandment in the Law?" ³⁷ He replied, " 'You must love the Lord your God with your whole heart, your whole self, your whole mind.' ³⁸ This is the first and greatest commandment. ³⁹ The second is like it: 'You must love your neighbor as yourself.' ⁴⁰ The whole Law, and all the Prophets, depend on these two commandments."

⁴¹ While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus put a question to them: ⁴² "What do you think about the Messiah? Whose son is he?" They replied, "David's son."

⁴³ "Why then," Jesus asked, "does David in the Spirit call him 'Lord,' when he says:

⁴⁴ 'The Lord said to my Lord,
Sit here at my right hand,
until I have put your enemies under your feet'?

⁴⁵ If then David called him 'Lord,' in what way is he David's son?" ⁴⁶ No one was able to answer Jesus at all, nor did anyone from that day venture to question him any more.

NOTES

22:16. with the Herodians. The introduction of the Herodian party makes the question a pointed one. The Herodians were supporters of the family of Herod the Great, ruling only by favor of the occupying Roman authority. Anxious to maintain the status quo, the Herodians would certainly have supported the payment of taxes to Rome where the patriotic Pharisees emphatically would not. Disciples of the Pharisees occurs here and at Mark 2:18.

17. Is it lawful ...? The questioners hope to provoke a reply which will identify Jesus either with the Zealots who refused payment, or with those who had accommodated their life to Roman authority.

18. casuists. Cf. Appendix to Part IX of the Introduction.

20. “Whose representation ...?” The denarius of Tiberius (A.D. 14–37) would carry the emperor’s portrait, and also an inscription which accorded him divine honor.

21. pay to God. The Greek here (apodote) is different from the “pay” (didonai) of vs. 17 and has the sense of giving back what is due. The civil rulers therefore receive taxes as a due, not a gift. Similarly, as in 21:33 ff., God must be given what is his due.

Later Christian attempts to reduce Jesus’ statement of principle to exact legislation provided most of the material for the mediaeval conflicts between church and state.

23. Sadducees. Matthew provides his readers with minimal information for background, almost as a reminder. It is clear that he assumes that his readers will be fully aware of the main position of the Sadducees. Like the Samaritans, the Sadducees held to the “canonical” status of the Pentateuch, the five books of Moses (=the Law), and placed the rest of the Hebrew Bible on a far lower level or rejected it entirely. The Sadducees must have developed their own case law, but they rejected the oral law which had grown up around the Pentateuch, or any belief which was not clearly held in the Law.

24. “Moses said ...” Lev 18:16, 20:21 forbid sexual relations with the wife of a brother (referring to adultery); but in some circumstances (Deut 25:5–10) such a marriage with a brother’s widow is imposed on a man as a duty (referring to Levirate marriage).

having no children. This is the LXX version, where the Hebrew has simply “son”—i.e., male children.

28. in the resurrection. The imaginary test case, assuming a resurrection, seeks to prove the absurdity of the idea.

29. “You are wrong ...” Jesus’ reply is based on two premises: (a) The Sadducees are wrong because they are transferring to the resurrection-life considerations which properly belong only to life before death, a mistake which Scripture, for all its imagery, poetic or homespun, never makes. (b) God, who gave the Law, a Law which contains provisions for the regulation of marriage and the raising of children, cannot be unaware of considerations posed by the test case. On the main question of resurrection, the same two premises apply. The power of God is not confined by the mundane considerations adduced by the Sadducees, and in the resurrection-life marriage and birth are irrelevant to the discussion. Moreover, the fact that the Scriptures acknowledged by the Sadducees do not specifically mention resurrection cannot be said to eliminate all idea of it. The argument of vss. 31–32, perhaps not very cogent to us, but certainly impressive in its own time setting, is simply that when God speaks of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to Moses in Exod 3:6 he speaks of them as still living.

The question of the extent of belief in a resurrection-life in first-century Judaism is complicated, as is also the question of the universality or otherwise of resurrection-life among groups who acknowledged such a life. The Samaritans denied a resurrection, along with the Sadducees. The rabbinic writers went so far as to accuse the Samaritans of deleting possible references to resurrection from the Pentateuch, and the same writers appeal to the Pentateuch for support for a doctrine of resurrection.

33. This verse might well be found at any point in the teaching ministry. Mark places it (11:18) after the account of the cleansing of the temple. The suggestion, sometimes made, that Matthew omitted it in the Markan context and then later placed it here in his own narrative, is most unlikely. It not only attaches far too much weight to a single verse, but it also fails to see that a comment of this character may easily be out of context in all three synoptic gospels.

34. The Markan framework of this narrative is so different from the Matthean and Lukan traditions, and is so vivid, that we must assume it to be an eyewitness account, in contrast with the other two. Matthew and Luke have an account of the question and its answer, without regard to context or the person(s) involved. Matthew and Luke agree that the questioner was a lawyer, and we can only surmise that Matthew placed the incident here in order to gather all the hostile questions into one part of his narrative. Neither Matthew nor Luke knows anything of the approbation expressed by Jesus in the Markan narrative. There is another of Matthew's OT allusions here: came together is from the LXX of Ps 2:2, and is used again at 26:3.

37. The first statement is from Deut 6:5, and Matthew's quotation assimilates to the Hebrew text.

39. This quotation is from Lev 19:18, and is also found in Matt 19:19. In negative form a saying similar to it is ascribed to Rabbi Hillel the Elder: "What is hateful to you do not do to your neighbor. That is the whole Law, and all else is commentary" (TB, Shabbath 31a).

41–42. The next question is about Messiahship, and begins with Greek words which reflect Ps 2:2: gathered together (vs. 41) and about the Messiah (vs. 42). We are accustomed to regarding this questioning by Jesus, together with the quotation from Ps 110 in vs. 44, as though it was used by Jesus as proof of his Davidic descent. It is in fact just as easily interpreted as deliberately casting doubt on the whole idea. That the expected Messiah would be of Davidic descent was a commonplace in certain sectors of Judaism and could claim OT support. Among the Essenes, a kingly Messiah and a priestly Messiah were expected. In either case, publicly to court a Messianic title was to invite Roman intervention. In asking this question Jesus compels his critics to question at least one possible assumption—that he was a nationalist seeking to rally popular support. By the time our gospels were committed to writing the events of Holy Week had been overshadowed by the Jewish revolt against Rome, Jewish Christians had either fled or were under pressure to declare for or against the nationalist cause, and the Davidic genealogies of Matthew and Luke were no longer the inflammatory material which they would have been earlier.

42. David's son. Cf. Isa 9:2 ff., 11:1 ff., etc. Cf. NOTE on 1:1.

43. David. The psalms were commonly ascribed to David, though it is now known that much of the Psalter was written both before and after David's time. David was, however, the patron of temple music in Israel, and the musical guilds go back to his time. Cf. Albright, Archaeology and the Religion of Israel, pp. 14 f., 125 ff., etc.

in the Spirit. I.e., by divine inspiration.

44. The quotation is from Ps 110:1, but not in the LXX translation.

45. The answer to the question is implied: that there is far more to Messiahship than Davidic descent.

46. The conclusion provided by Matthew and Mark emphasizes that the opposition to Jesus has now taken on far more sinister forms.

On the whole question of Davidic messiahship in this chapter, cf. now Fitzmyer, "The Son of David Tradition and Mt 22:41–46 and parallels," in Essays on the Semitic Background of the New Testament, pp. 113–27.

COMMENT

Our interpretation of 21:44 is in a very important sense the key to the questions which occupy the remainder of this chapter 22. In no way seeking elucidation of the questions posed (and the first was of crucial importance in the political climate of the times), Jesus' interrogators were simply seeking a pretext for a criminal charge.

82. WARNINGS AGAINST LEGALISM

(23:1–36)[†]

23 ¹ Jesus then spoke to the crowds and to his disciples:
² “The scribes and the Pharisees are the appointed teachers of Moses’ Law, ³ and so you must obey and follow everything they tell you to do, but do not imitate their deeds, for they do not practice what they preach. ⁴ They make up heavy loads and tie them to men’s backs, while they themselves will not lift a finger to help carry the loads. ⁵ They do everything simply so that people will see them. They make large phylacteries, broaden the hem of their garments, ⁶ love the best places at feasts and the principal seats in the synagogues; ⁷ (they love) to be greeted in public places, and to be called ‘Teacher’ by men. ⁸ You must not be called ‘Teacher,’ for you have but one Teacher, and you are all brothers; ⁹ and you must not call anyone on earth ‘Father,’ for you have but one Father—in heaven. ¹⁰ And do not call anyone ‘Leader,’ for your one Leader is the Messiah. ¹¹ The greatest among you must be your servant. ¹² Whoever makes himself great will be humbled, and whoever humbles himself will be raised. ¹³ Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers! You shut the door of the Kingdom of heaven in men’s faces; for you yourselves will not go in, nor will you allow those who are entering to do so.

[¹⁴ “Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers! You rob widows’ houses, and make a show of long prayers. For this, your punishment will be the more severe.]

¹⁵ “Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers! You traverse sea and land to make a single convert, and when you have done it, you make him twice as bad as you are.

¹⁶ “Away with you, you blind guides, you who say, ‘If a man swears by the temple, it is not binding, but if he swears by the gold in the temple, he is liable.’ ¹⁷ Blind fools! Which is greater—the gold, or the temple which makes the gold holy? ¹⁸ Again: ‘If a man swears by the altar, it is not binding, but if he swears by the offering on it, he is liable.’ ¹⁹ Blind men! Which is greater—the offering, or the altar which makes the offering holy?

²⁰ When therefore anyone swears by the altar, he swears by it and by all the offerings on it. ²¹ He who swears by the temple swears by it and by him who dwells there, ²² and a man who swears by heaven swears by the throne of God and by him who sits on it.

²³ “Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers! You give to God a tenth of herbs like mint, dill and cummin, but the important duties of the Law—judgment, mercy, honesty—you have neglected. Yet these you ought to have performed, without neglecting the others. ²⁴ You blind guides! Straining a fly out of your drink, and then swallowing a camel!

²⁵ “Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers! You clean the outside of a cup and a plate, but inside they are filled with (thoughts of) robbery and greed. ²⁶ You blind Pharisee! First clean the inside of the cup and plate, so that its outside may be clean, too.

²⁷ “Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers! You are like whitewashed tombs, which outwardly look beautiful, but inside they are full of dead men’s bones and every kind of ritual defilement. ²⁸ In the same way, you appear outwardly good to men, but inside you are full of casuistry and lawlessness.

²⁹ “Away with you, you pettifogging Pharisee lawyers! You build the tombs of the prophets and decorate the monuments of the righteous ones, saying, ³⁰ ‘If we had been living in the time of our fathers, we would have had no part with them in the killing of the prophets.’ ³¹ In so doing, you witness against yourselves that you are sons of those who murdered the prophets. ³² Make up, then, what is lacking of what your fathers began. ³³ You snakes, you vipers’ brood! How will you escape being sentenced to Gehenna?

³⁴ “See, on this account I send you prophets and wise men and scribes, some of whom you will kill and crucify, some you will beat in your synagogues and harry from town to town, ³⁵ so that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of Abel the righteous to the blood of Zechariah, the son of Barachiah, whom you murdered between the sanctuary and the altar. ³⁶ I solemnly tell you, all this will come upon this generation.”

NOTES

23:2. appointed teachers of Moses' Law. Cf. "Every council of three in Israel is like the council of Moses" (TB, Rosh ha-Shanah 25a). "Moses' seat" (which is the literal translation) is the name given to the seat in the synagogue from which discourses were given.

3. everything they tell you ... do not imitate their deeds. The oral law, and the inferences commonly drawn from the written Law, came under heavy criticism in 15:1–20, and the same considerations apply here. The verb which we have translated they preach carries the implication that the Pharisees did profess to live by the precepts of the Law, but that in effect they made an idol of the Law by often surrounding it with casuistry and cavil, so obscuring real principles (cf. 12:7) and neglecting the very compassion which the Law itself taught (cf. 15:4–5). The minutiae were observed, but God's love, of which the Law was an expression, was easily forgotten.

4. Oral law has a tendency to generate a life of its own, to feed upon itself. The Mosaic Law, given as God's gracious gift to Israel, was more and more obscured by the proliferation of commentary. Experience has shown with what tenacity the traditionalist will defend provisions which have long been irrelevant. In the light of the sayings in 16:19 and 18:18 about "bind" and "release," it is possible that Jesus here castigates the legalism which can impose regulations but cannot or will not give relief to the lawbreaker.

5. This is directed against religious ostentation in a common Jewish form.

phylacteries. This is the only mention of them in the New Testament. They were texts of the Law written on sheepskin, enclosed in small containers, and worn on forehead and forearm while praying. Numbers of these have turned up at Qumran.

hem of their garments. I.e., fringes or tassels which were prescribed for the four corners of the outer garment; cf. Num 15:38 ff.; Deut 22:12.

7–11. to be greeted. For the material which follows in these verses, the reader is referred to the essay by Moses Aberbach, "The Relations between Master and Disciple in the Talmudic Age," in Essays presented to Chief Rabbi Israel Brodie on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday, London, 1965. Here there are examples of the obligation of the disciple to follow a recognized teacher without question, to afford him the highest possible honor; and precise rules were made as to the conduct of a group of disciples when walking with their teacher. (They must never, for example, presume to walk beside their teacher.)

Nothing illustrates better than these five verses (7–11) our contention that what we have in this gospel is a very substantial amount of private teaching addressed to the inner circle of the disciples. These five verses are totally misunderstood if they are interpreted as being addressed to the whole community. Aberbach (ibid., p. 13) adduces examples of the warnings given to disciples never to presume to greet their masters, since this implied a certain equality. It is in this sense, and in this sense alone, that the prohibitions in vss. 8–10 must be understood. The relationship of the inner circle of the disciples to Jesus was such that they could not be greeted (You must not be called 'Teacher') as though they were occupying a place which was Jesus' alone. So too with you must not call anyone on Earth 'Father'; for the inner circle of disciples this would imply the formation of a hierarchy which was not proper during the earthly ministry of Jesus.

12. Cf. Proverbs 29:23.

13–32. This passage is commonly known as the Seven Woes, from the usual translation of the Gr. ouai by "woe." The reader is referred to Part IX of the Introduction, together with its appendix on the word hupokritai/hupokritēs (which has, as we pointed out, drastically changed its meaning). It is not necessary to do more than reiterate our warning against reading moral judgments into these verses. Jesus is here concerned with that casuistry which so easily brings law into disrepute. His charge here is that Pharisee lawyers, by their concern for minute analytical commentary on the Law, and for regulating precisely all human conduct under the Law, had made the Law increasingly burdensome.

13. the door of the Kingdom of heaven. This is certainly the reading in our text, but Luke 11:52 has "you took away the key of knowledge. You yourselves did not enter, and you prevented those who were going in." In view of the precise interpretation given to Kingdom of heaven in this gospel, it may be doubted whether this saying in Matthew is wholly original. In all other areas of this gospel it is The Man who calls men into his Kingdom, and it is not easy to see what is meant by this saying as it stands. It can only be justified as an accusation that men will be dissuaded from throwing in their lot with the new community by supposing that it is simply another manifestation of Pharisaic Judaism. Certainly the Lukan saying is easier, carrying with it the implication that the Pharisee lawyers' attitude of superior wisdom did not foster love of the Law.

14. This verse is not found in the best manuscripts, and in others it stands after vs. 12. It appears to be a later insertion taken either from Mark 12:40 or Luke 20:47.

15. It is well known that there was widespread interest in Judaism on the part of Gentiles in the NT period. Acts speaks often of "God-fearers"—men who attached themselves to synagogues for worship but who had not taken the final step of submitting to Judaism by formal conversion. Hellenistic literature from Jewish authors is witness to the attempts made by Jews of the Dispersion to attract Gentiles to Judaism. But none of this kind of effort would have commended itself to the extreme legalists here castigated by Jesus. When such legalism does succeed in securing a convert, the history of Christianity and Judaism alike is evidence enough for the extremes to which the zeal of the convert for his new faith may drive him.

twice as bad as you are. Literally, "twice as much a child of Gehenna as you are"—i.e., twice as much subject to condemnation.

16–22. This material repeats in more emphatic form the substance of 5:33–37. There is no rabbinic material known which would give us precise evidence for the distinction in oaths which is described here. The purpose of an oath was to bind by something greater than oneself (cf. Heb 6:16 ff.), and as the temple is greater than its treasure, and the altar than its offerings, then oaths taken by the temple or by the altar are binding. However, the same teaching applies as in the material in chapter 5, and distinctions in oaths are to be avoided. Incidentally, the saying in vs. 16 can only have come from a time before A.D. 70, when such oaths as are here described necessarily came to an end with the destruction of the temple.

23. The herbs mentioned were all used in cooking, while dill and cummin were also used for medicinal purposes. On judgment cf. Isa 1:17; Jer 22:3; on mercy cf. 9:13; on honesty cf. Hab 2:4.

24. Cf. Lev 11:41 ff.

25. The judgment of Jesus is not against ordinary cleanliness but against excessive concentration on ritual cleanliness or defilement of eating and drinking vessels.

26. There is here a very obvious difference of tradition between Matthew and Luke (11:40–41). It is not clear how far the two evangelists saw the polemic of Jesus as directed solely against an excessive concern with ritual cleanliness. Matthew's its (literally "its outside," Gr. autou) in this verse would have to be omitted if, as in Luke, the reference were to outward legalism contrasted with impure intention. Luke's "your" (literally "your inside") in 11:39 seems to imply such a contrast, whereas in vs. 41 he appears to return to consideration of ritual purity and impurity. Considering the care with which Matthew has preserved his tradition about Jesus' sayings on the Law, it is possible that by the time Luke set his own material in order, the meaning of the saying had become obscure.

27–28. It is important not to read exclusively moral judgments into these verses—an all too common proceeding. Such moral judgments may be proper in a later context and against a background of later concerns. Here in the present context there is a contrast between the legal rectitude of those whose principal interest or livelihood lies in a proliferating oral law on the one hand, with lack of respect for the Law which such self-conscious rectitude often produces in others. Of course, self-conscious legal rectitude can lead, and often does, to a sinful sense of superiority. Luke's version (11:44) militates against any theory of a common original source at this point.

29–31. It is not necessary to examine the charges made by the prophets against the official custodians of the Law. (Cf. Bruce Vawter, The Conscience of Israel: Pre-Exilic Prophets and Prophecy, New York: Sheed, 1961.) Jesus' charge is that the Pharisee lawyers pay honor to the dead, but this is simply lip service. While condemning their ancestors for persecuting the keepers of Israel's conscience, they nevertheless condemn themselves—they are the sons of "our fathers" (i.e., share their fathers' characteristics).

It should be noted that the parallelism here in Matthew links the prophets with the righteous ones (cf.

13:17), a common association in the Dead Sea scrolls and the intertestamental literature. The reader is referred to our discussion of 10:41, for in that verse there is no question of any hendiadys. Moreover the titles for the Messiah in that verse appear to have been an archaism or were rapidly becoming so even when spoken, and were almost certainly out of use when our NT sources were committed to writing. While there are more references in the NT to the Righteous One as a Messianic title than is commonly recognized, such lack of recognition is hardly surprising, in view of generally accepted translations of 10:41. We shall meet the righteous ones again in the account of the resurrection.

The custom of venerating the prophets by paying honor to their grave sites was certainly well established in the time of Jesus, as was also the custom of adorning the graves of pious men with sepulchral monuments. Many tombs of pious men around Jerusalem from the Herodian period have been excavated in recent years. Cf. Joachim Jeremias, Heiligengräber in Jesu Umwelt, Göttingen, 1958, and also C. C. Torrey, The Lives of the Prophets, JBL Monograph Series, Vol. I, Philadelphia, 1946. (Incidentally, Torrey's contention seems to be wholly correct: that the original was written in Hebrew, and that the place names—irrelevant because abandoned after the fall of Jerusalem—are important evidence for a pre-A.D. 70 date.)

32. The saying is ironical: "Complete what your fathers began."

33. On Gehenna, cf. NOTE on 5:22.

34. Luke 11:49 ascribes this saying to "the Wisdom of God," which may be an editorial addition to denote Jesus. Alternatively, the words may be a quotation by Jesus in the Lukan tradition, in which case they are from an unknown source. There is no suggestion in Matthew that the words are a quotation.

prophets and wise men and scribes. The missionaries of the new Kingdom are described in Jewish terms, and prophets as a function of the early Christian ministry were familiar to Paul. Precise rules were laid down in the (Syrian? second part of the first century) Didache for the treatment of prophets (ibid., xiv, xxii, xxiv, xxvi). Cf. also the article by Massey H. Shepherd, Jr., IDB, III (K–Q), s.v. "Prophet in the NT."

35. It might seem natural to see in Abel and Zechariah the first and the last martyrs of the OT Scriptures (Gen 4 and 2 Chron 24:20 ff.). Not only, however, was this Zechariah not the son of Barachiah (he was the son of Jehoiada), but Baruch (the shortened version of Berachiah) was a very common name in the end of the OT period. The Zechariah of this passage may well refer to a person of whom otherwise we have no knowledge. It is always possible that two patronymics have been confused in the tradition, but rather than assume such a circumstance, it appears more reasonable to us to assume that this Zechariah was a person of whom otherwise we have no knowledge.

36. Cf. 24:34; the "coming" of The Man to the Father will certainly happen in this generation, when The Man is exalted in the glory of his passion-resurrection. The coming sufferings Jesus sees as judgment upon official Judaism for its refusal of him and his ministry.

generation (Gr. genea). This word may certainly mean "lifetime," and not simply "generation" in our sense of the term. Cf. Donald W. Prakken, Studies in Greek Genealogical Chronology, London: Mitre Press, 1944, for the fullest treatment. There is the same fluctuation of meaning in Biblical Heb. dōr and Syr. dārā.

COMMENT

The relationship of the material in this chapter to similar material found in Luke makes it clear that this is Matthew's own ordering, and that Matthew and Luke did not draw upon a common written source. Luke 11:39–52 contains sayings addressed to a Pharisee (cf. 11:37) or Pharisees, or lawyers, all of whom are found here in Matthew without any distinction as to audience. Matthew's language is considerably different from that of the Lukan material.

The material in this section should be read in the light of the examination made in Part IX of the Introduction on Jesus' attitude to the Law. It would be foolish to assume Matthew is entirely responsible for the critical attitude taken towards the Pharisees in this chapter, and that Jesus himself could not possibly have seriously misrepresented the Pharisees or even caricatured them. Certainly it is possible that early Christians, in the interest of polemics, deliberately changed the character of some of Jesus' sayings; and if Matthew is as late as some think (A.D. 80 or even later), then this may have happened. But it does seem clear that Jesus had strong feelings about the "hypocritical" nature of many of the Pharisees. While Jesus does not condemn all Pharisee lawyers out of hand, he does condemn those who made the Law an end in itself. This chapter does not deny at all that there were many—probably most—Pharisees who were devout, God-fearing men, devoted to Israel, its religion, and its Lord. Nevertheless the chapter stands as clear warning that there are varieties of impiety and idolatry which are not confined to those who fashion graven images. The disciple is just as liable to fall into the sins castigated here.

It is clear that Matthew intended this collection of material to be included in the final section of teaching; it moves from the temple and the crowds to final private instruction to the inner circle.

Most recently, an attempt has been made to see some primitive "wisdom" (Gr. sophia) material underlying the "Q" tradition, with the further suggestion that Matthew's use of such material was a crucial factor in primitive Christology. Cf. M. Jack Suggs, Wisdom, Christology and Law in Matthew's Gospel, Harvard University Press, 1970. The book has a very full bibliography, and there is obvious room for further discussion on the suggestions which its author advances.

83. LAMENT OVER JERUSALEM

(23:37–39)[†]

23 ³⁷ “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! You who murder the prophets and stone those who are sent to you! How often did I wish to gather your children together, just as a bird gathers her brood under her wings, but you would not let me! ³⁸ See—your house is forsaken [and desolate]. ³⁹ For I tell you that from this moment you will not see me until you say ‘Blessed is he who comes in the Lord’s name.’ ”

NOTES

23:37–39. It is not possible to make any firm statement as to whether the sayings in these three verses are in context or not. Luke has them in a wholly different context. Possibly they belong historically to an earlier occasion in the ministry, when Jesus was leaving Jerusalem for the last time before his triumphal entry. In that case we must assume a situation similar to that found in John 10:22–39, when some had attempted to stone Jesus. Both mission and message having been alike rejected, Jesus will not visit the temple again (your house is forsaken) and they would not see him again until he was greeted with the words of Ps 118:26.

38. your house is forsaken. Cf. Jer 12:7, 26:6. It is possible that Jesus used these words with deliberate reference to the desolation and destruction so vividly portrayed in Jer 12, particularly in view of the you would not let me of vs. 37.

39. from this moment. The Greek is far stronger than the usual English translations. Cf. also 26:64.

84. THE FUTURE OF THE TEMPLE

(24:1–2)[†]

24 ¹ Jesus left, and was going away from the temple, when the disciples came to him to show him the temple buildings. ² He said to them in reply, “You see all these things? I solemnly tell you that there will not be a single stone standing upon another which will not be thrown down.”

NOTES

During the ministry of Jesus the temple of Herod was still under construction. The upsurge of nationalism after the rise of the Zealot movement in A.D. 8 eventually led to the disastrous Jewish revolt of A.D. 64.

24:2. not be a single stone. Josephus states that the temple was destroyed by fire. So much for the idea of prophecy after the event, or accommodation by apostolic manipulation to fit the event. (See COMMENT [b].)

COMMENT

It is a simple matter to lump together the material in chapters 24 and 25 and label the result “signs of the end,” or “the end of the Age.” Such a procedure is simple, but wholly fails to do justice to the material. Three distinct matters are dealt with in these chapters 24–25:

(a) The destruction of Jerusalem in the near future, seen by Jesus as judgment on the rejection of his vocation and ministry by official Judaism;

(b) The persecution of the infant community by authorities and groups inside and outside Judaism;

(c) The continuing life of the Messianic Community, looking to “the End,” whether the end of the present age or the end of the natural order.

With regard to (b), it cannot be too strongly emphasized that the rise of the fiercely nationalist Zealot movement in Palestine and throughout parts of the Eastern Mediterranean after ca. A.D. 40 came to face Jewish Christians with exceedingly hard choices. Were they to throw in their lot with the nationalists or remain aloof? Whatever decisions were made would certainly evoke hostility from either Roman or Jews, and often both. We have called attention before in this commentary to the increasingly explosive situation in Palestine in the decades before A.D. 64. Jesus’ prophecy of the fall of both city and temple was not an extraordinary feat of prescience, and to write off the saying in vs. 2 as prophecy after the event is wholly unjustified.

The expectation of “the End” is a more difficult matter to cover in a commentary of this size. Not only is there confusion in many commentaries about what Jesus meant when he spoke of the “coming,” of The Man, but the confusion is further compounded by reference to 24:34. It is not likely to further our understanding of the gospels, still less of the milieu in which the words of Jesus were uttered, to examine every clause and sentence of the sayings of chapters 24–25 for precise prediction, and then attempt to match this with known or supposed events after the passion. Certainly Paul in his earlier letters looked for an early consummation of the natural order and a manifestation of the reign of God over both just and unjust, yet in the later letters (especially if Ephesians is included) we see that he was no longer expecting such a cataclysmic happening in the immediate future. J. A. T. Robinson has argued (in Jesus and His Coming) that the expectation of a “return” of Jesus was derived not only from a misunderstanding of Jesus’ own words but also from uncertainty about the precise nature of Jesus’ Messiahship (cf. idem., “The Most Primitive Christology of All?” in TNTS).

A great deal of the prediction-seeking on the part of NT students has come from a lack of understanding of the forms and imagery of Jewish apocalyptic. It is not very clear why precise prediction should be looked for in Matt 24–25 and allied synoptic material, and not, for example, at the same time in 1 Thess 4:13 ff., or some of the more imaginative passages in Revelation. It would demand a library of references to list all that has been written on the subject of apocalyptic. Here we can only refer to those works which contain all the relevant information in easily accessible form: H. H. Rowley, The Relevance of Apocalyptic, 3d ed., London: Lutterworth Press, 1963, New York: Association Press, 1964; D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic, London: SCM / Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1964. The latter, a very important book, takes great care to distinguish between pre- and post-Qumran material, as also does Rowley's work. R. H. Charles's Eschatology (1899) is even today a most useful book; its learned author would certainly have appreciated the immense importance of the Dead Sea discoveries to his subject. It must not be forgotten that crisis of any kind in both political and social circumstances tends to produce a particular kind of thinking, speaking and writing; this was the subject of U. E. Simon's Theology of Crisis, London: SPCK, 1948.

So far as the present chapter is concerned, we must remind the reader that for all its apparently homogeneous character as a block of material, it is in fact a collection of sayings from different occasions, which reflects the three distinct stages of crisis indicated in the opening paragraph above.

The present collected material represents what would be expected in the process of sifting and ordering an oral tradition. Yet comparison with collections of similar or parallel material in Mark and Luke displays the same process at work—i.e., the collecting under one broad heading of all sayings which reflect the various stages of crisis in, or connected with, or following upon, the ministry of Jesus.

In no area has the confusion been more widespread than in the interpretation given to the “coming” of The Man. This is a point which we have emphasized repeatedly, both in the Introduction and in the commentary. We do no more here than remind the reader of this real danger of confusion. It is necessary to add this: When sayings specifically dealing with the “coming” of The Man are seen in what we hold to be their proper context—i.e., The Man's coming to the Father—then the task of interpreting this material is correspondingly far simpler.

There is one matter which must be discussed here, and it concerns the understanding by commentators of the person of Jesus himself. Albert Schweitzer's a priori argument that Jesus expected an imminent cataclysm in which both he and his mission would be vindicated implied, in effect, that Jesus' expectation of “the End” was mistaken and that his hopes were proved wrong by events. On the other hand, there are those who take an ultra-conservative view of the recorded words of Jesus as inerrant, or who force considerations of creedal and conciliar orthodoxy as to the person and/or divinity of Jesus on the NT material. The results have been unhappy. In both cases there has been a failure to do justice to the first-century Jewish milieu in which Jesus spoke, taught, and acted. Allied with this failure has been a tendency to invest each word of the apocalyptic language of Jesus with a precise predictive meaning which would have been alien to orthodox and sectarian Judaism alike. Similarly, both for those committed to a view of verbal inerrancy (in the last analysis depending on the possibility of discovering a “definitive” Greek text), and also for those committed to Nicene and Chalcedonian orthodoxy, there has often been a failure to deal adequately (if at all) with the human nature and human thinking of Jesus. As a result, a good many presuppositions have unconsciously gone into the work of commentators on the material immediately before us.

The work of form-critics distributing all sayings along a line of evolutionary development, from a reconstructed “primitive” preaching, through an assumed “Hellenistic” reordering of the material (on good Hegelian lines), down to the systematic teaching of the Church of the second century A.D., has been very one-sided. The NT writings claim to rest on historical tradition centered on a person.

The history of NT study of the apocalyptic material can be simply stated. From the second half of the nineteenth century onwards it has been generally agreed that the material is composite, gathered from various occasions and contexts. G. R. Beasley-Murray (Jesus and the Future, London: Macmillan / New York: St. Martin’s, 1954; and A Commentary on Mark Thirteen, London: Macmillan, 1956; New York: St. Martin’s, 1957) sums up the accepted theory that the whole discourse in Mark (and therefore, on the usual premises, in Matthew also) is based on a “little apocalypse” of Jewish origin. Vincent Taylor (The Gospel according to St. Mark, London: Macmillan / New York: St. Martin’s, 1952), in our view rightly, argues that the evangelist has grouped together whole series of sayings, not all of which have an apocalyptic content, instead of merely editing a Jewish-Christian apocalypse. It is true that we must somehow account for the widespread belief in the early church in an anticipated early return of Jesus (cf. the third paragraph of this COMMENT). The discovery of an exact, tightly knit, precise body of belief in the primitive Christian community would be most surprising, and it is even more surprising to have writers on the New Testament apparently confident that they have found such a body of belief.

A note of caution must be added here. In order to keep this commentary within reasonable limits it was felt imperative not to place too great a burden upon the general reader. In no case was this more necessary than in the present chapter 24. The highly technical nature of the discussion of this material among NT scholars, and the very considerable body of literature accumulated around it, has ruled out any detailed treatment. That Matt 24:4–36 (=Mark 13:5–37; Luke 21:8–36) is free commentary on Daniel (7:8–27, 8:9–26, 9:24–27, and 11:21–12:13) both in ideas and actual quotations, seems to be generally agreed. Beyond that, there is no large consensus of opinion. The student is recommended to consult Lars Hartman's excellent Prophecy Interpreted, Coniectanea Biblica, New Testament Series, I (Lund: Gleerup, 1966), especially Part II. The book has an exhaustive bibliography.

It is hoped that the reader will see the necessity of placing this COMMENT here when reading the NOTES on the ensuing sections.

85. THE COMING PERSECUTION

(24:3–14)[†]

24 ³ As Jesus sat on the Mount of Olives, the disciples came to him privately. “Tell us,” they said, “when all this will happen, and what will be the sign of your coming and the end of the age.” ⁴ “Watch,” replied Jesus, “and see that no one deceives you. ⁵ Many will come in my name, declaring ‘I am the Messiah,’ and they will deceive many people. ⁶ You are going to hear of wars, and rumors of wars; take care not to be troubled. These things must happen, but the end is not at once. ⁷ For one people will rise against another, one kingdom against another, and in various places there will be famines and earthquakes. ⁸ All these things are only the beginning of sufferings. ⁹ Then men will give you over to punishment and will kill you, and on my account you will be hated by all men. ¹⁰ Many will fall by the way, betray one another, hate each other; ¹¹ many false prophets will arise and lead many astray. ¹² Because lawlessness is increased, the loyalty of many will grow cold, ¹³ but the one who stands firm to the end will be saved. ¹⁴ This proclamation of the Kingdom will be made throughout the world, as a witness to all nations, and then the end will come.

NOTES

24:3. There is a highly significant divergence in Matthew from the parallels in Mark and Luke. Matthew alone has the sign of your coming. Bearing in mind the care which this evangelist takes in ordering his material, this phrase is of considerable importance. It is possible that the disciples' request, especially in view of the Matthean clause, may be in all three gospels a question introduced at this point in the narrative to gather together the apocalyptic and eschatological material. By the time oral tradition began to take fixed form the passion and the resurrection would have been seen in perspective as the pivotal apocalyptic moment of the ministry.

R. H. Fuller (The Message and Achievement of Jesus, Naperville, Ill.: A. R. Allenson / London: SCM, 1954) sums this up in the phrase "the cruciality of the cross." There is a further point to be noted. In the rapidly swelling amount of intertestamental writings we find increasing evidence for conventional formulae to introduce the content and sequence of apocalyptic. Such an example is now before us in the request put on the lips of the disciples. Similar devices are found in Revelation and Thessalonians. The Habakkuk commentary from Qumran (1QHab) (7:1–2, following Habermann's vocalization) supplies us with the following: "And God told Habakkuk to write what things would befall the last period, but the end of the age he did not make known to him." Aside altogether from the fact that Qumran yields the Hebrew background for the end of the age—a phrase which some NT scholars have been reluctant to ascribe to Jesus—this is firm evidence of such an introductory formula from Essene practice. Similar phrases occur in the intertestamental writings (preserved in Greek); cf. "the consummation of the times" (Apocalypse of Baruch xiii 3; cf. also xxvii 15, xxix 8, xxx 3, liv 21, lvi 2, lix 8, lxxxii 2, lxxxvii 7, 23). Enoch xvi 1 speaks of "until the day of the consummation ... in which the age is consummated." The Testament of Levi (x) has "the end of the ages." Cf. also Dan 12:4, 13. Without any question, the Qumran Heb. gemar ha-qeš is the source of the phrase.

The ensuing sections collect together sayings which bear directly on the fall of Jerusalem, the nationalist uprisings in the period after the passion, The Man's coming, and the end of the age.

5–6. The Qumran discoveries have emphasized just how much Messianic expectation was in the air prior to and contemporary with the ministry of Jesus. Acts 5:36 ff. has an account of a Messianic pretender. The position of Jewish Christians, regarded for some time as a sectarian group on the fringes of Judaism, was one of considerable peril. Possible assurances by Zealot and patriotic groups that they were after all acting with Jesus' authority (in my name) cannot have made that position easier.

These things must happen. Cf. Dan 2:28. One need hardly be reminded of the frequency with which war and consequent suffering introduce apocalyptic material in the prophetic writings of the OT. We referred in the preceding COMMENT to the widespread nature of Jewish nationalist uprisings, and it was during this time of rumor, of war and doubt that the oral tradition was fixed and committed to writing. The warning but the end is not at once, from whatever historical context in the teaching ministry of Jesus, must have taken on added urgency in the days of the infant community's growth. Its place in this collected material is therefore natural.

7–8. Cf. Isa 19:2; 2 Chron 15:6. Paul's second Thessalonian letter is eloquent proof of the manner in which some members of the early community concluded that "the end" was imminent and abandoned regular habits of work to await its advent.

beginning of sufferings. Literally, the "beginnings of birth-pains," an almost technical term for the sufferings which would immediately precede a new age. (Cf. 1QH iii, the Hôdayôt, or Thanksgiving Psalms, from Qumran for similar phrases.) The age of the Messiah's reign, seen in the context of the upheavals which surrounded the spread of the community, was certainly ushered in with much suffering. Cf. Frederick C. Grant, Ancient Judaism and the New Testament (Edinburgh and London: Oliver & Boyd, 1960), especially pp. 68–95; TWNT, II, pp. 26–27, 30–31; K. A. Kuhn, "Πειράσμος-ἀμαρτία-σαρξ in Nt." ZTK 49 (1952), pp. 200–22; and John Pryke, "Eschatology in the Dead Sea Scrolls," in The Scrolls and Christianity, ed. Matthew Block, London: SPCK, 1969.

9–14. These verses adequately underline the way in which one tradition collected sayings as compared with another parallel tradition. There are Markan parallels only in Mark 13:9a, 13b, 10, and Matthew has the material of Mark 13:9b–13a (except 10) in his 10:17–21.

10. fall by the way (literally, “be made to stumble”). Cf. 13:21. Those looking for an immediate vindication, an immediate triumph of the Messianic Age, will fall by the way through disappointment.

betray one another. This may refer either to divisions within the community, or—in the circumstances of nationalist unrest—to those outside the community reporting believers as traitors.

11–12. Hopes aroused by the proclamation of the Messianic Age, coupled with the upsurge of nationalism, provided all the ingredients necessary not only for self-appointed prophets (cf. Acts 20:30) but also for disappointed hopes and ambitions (cf. 1 John 2:18). The result in a time of upheaval is a severe strain on faith. Idealistic pictures of the early community need to be balanced by the view recorded in the first three chapters of Revelation.

There are prophecies of apostasy during upheavals and persecution in the intertestamental writings: cf. 2 Esd 5:2; Enoch xci 7. Similarly, the promise of salvation for those who persevere is also found in those writings. Cf. “... whoever remains after all these things ... shall be saved” (2 Esd 6:25, 9:7–8).

14. It is simply not possible to refer this saying to the fall of Jerusalem, as do some writers, who then attempt to make sense of a proclamation ... throughout the world. While it is true that the events of A.D. 70 were of cataclysmic dimensions to Jews and Jewish Christians alike, it is equally true that “the end” (to telos) in vs. 6 cannot easily be reconciled with the view outlined in the first sentence of this NOTE. Disorder, chaos, and persecution did not end with the sack of the city and the destruction of the temple. Moreover, the Pauline use of to telos in 1 Cor 15:24 specifically refers “the end” to the time of the final judgment. That there is a sense in which any disaster is an “end,” and the expectation of it a call to detachment, is clear. Paul’s ethical and moral injunctions in I Corinthians were delivered against the background of a call to detachment, against a call for awareness that the believer’s final politeia (“loyalty,” “citizenship”; cf. Philip 3:20, where politeuma, a synonym, is used) was in heaven. In the same sense 1 Peter 4:7 can speak of “the end” being at hand.

Some commentators have apparently fastened upon A.D. 70 and the preceding war as a fixed historical datum. Then, having concluded that the eschatological and apocalyptic material in our gospels all belongs to a single occasion, they attempt to explain the material in question as best they can. This procedure is in direct opposition to the confident assertions of many of the same commentators that the so-called “Sermon on the Mount” is in fact a miscellany.

86. IMMEDIATE SIGNS

(24:15–28)[†]

24 ¹⁵ “So when you see the abominable sacrilege, of which Daniel the prophet spoke, standing in the holy place” (let the reader take note), ¹⁶ “then those in Judea must go to the mountains, ¹⁷ the one who is on the housetop must not go down to take his household property, ¹⁸ while the man in the field must not return to get his himation. ¹⁹ Alas for those who will be pregnant or nursing children in those days! ²⁰ Pray that your flight is not either in the winter or on a Sabbath, ²¹ for there will be great suffering, such as has not occurred from the foundation of the world to the present—no, nor ever will be. ²² Unless those days are shortened, no human being can be saved; however, for the sake of the chosen, those days will be shortened. ²³ Then, if anyone says to you, ‘Look! Here is the Messiah!’ or ‘There he is!’ do not believe it, ²⁴ for pseudo-messiahs and false prophets will arise and show great signs and wonders, so as to lead astray (if it were possible) even the chosen. ²⁵ See—I have told you beforehand. ²⁶ So if they say to you, ‘He is in the desert,’ do not go out; and if they say, ‘Look in the storehouses!’ do not believe it, ²⁷ For as lightning comes from the east and flashes across to the west, so will be the coming of The Man. ²⁸ Wherever the carcass is, there the vultures will be gathered.

NOTES

This section is composed of sayings which have a direct bearing on the impending fate of Jerusalem, others of a more general character, and one which deals with The Man's coming.

24:15. abominable sacrilege. Matthew's tradition here makes explicit what is only hinted in Mark, who does not mention the prophetic oracle. In addition, Matthew speaks of the holy place and so emphatically refers to the temple. The quotation is from Dan 9:27. Cf. the idol altar of 1 Macc 1:54, 59. With the example of Antiochus Epiphanes in mind, Jesus required neither prescience nor unusual insight to see where the rise of nationalism under Roman occupation would lead. Whether the abominable sacrilege refers to actual idolatry, or to the entrance of Roman imperial-eagle standards into the temple area, is immaterial. It was common practice then and for long centuries before, to assert sovereignty over a nation by dethroning its gods and replacing them by those of the conqueror. In the NT writings idolatry of any kind was a warning of distress and judgment to come. Cf. Rom 1:25; 2 Thess 2:3 ff.; Rev 13:4.

let the reader take note. This is an editorial note and bears the same meaning as a somewhat similar exhortation in Rev 13:18. It may also indicate to the reader that the Messianic Community must now face a challenge similar to that faced by Israel in the time of the Seleucid kings.

16–20. The sayings here were dramatically illustrated in the time of the war of A.D. 66–70 and again in the revolt of 130–135. How many Christians made their escape in the year before A.D. 70 we do not know. The tradition of Eusebius is that many Christians fled to Pella, and we have no reason to doubt the accuracy of the tradition. Archaeological discovery provides ample evidence for the destruction wrought on Jewish towns by Roman punitive expeditions during the war.

21. This saying is an echo of a similar description of distress in Dan 12:1. Cf. also Jer 30:7. Those inclined to dismiss the sayings as exaggerated or hyperbolic would do well to bear in mind that crises of a national or international character have been repeatedly described in terms of doom in our own lifetime. Few commentators on this chapter today can fail to recognize the similarity between the premonitions of Jesus and the preoccupations of our own time.

22. Cf. Enoch lxxx 2: "In the days of sinners the years will be shortened."

23–25. We have more than enough evidence to demonstrate the fever pitch of Messianic expectation for a century and a half before Jesus and in the century following his passion. The crucial test for the disciples, as all the gospels emphasize, is to see the dignity and honor of the Messiah in the circumstances of humiliation and apparent defeat.

26. This saying (which in all probability comes from a quite different historical setting) seems to reject two specific approaches to Messianic expectation. Jesus may be ruling out an Essene view that only in the desert, among their communities, could salvation be found. Similarly he may be rejecting the suggestion that his community make common cause with the Zealots (Look in the storehouses) in making provision for war.

storehouses. This word may imply storehouses of a military character (as excavated in Masada) which would include weapons as well as food.

27. Given the circumstances of a collection of apocalyptic and eschatological material, the presence of this saying is natural. It is natural also, given the present context of the saying, that there was more than a slight possibility of misunderstanding. The Man's coming will be sudden, with few premonitory signs. The suggestion that as lightning comes indicates universal visibility, runs counter to all the warnings in the gospels that men must watch and look for The Man's coming. To what extent primitive liturgical practice shaped common expectations of a "second" coming was nowhere better expressed than by the late Gregory Dix (in The Shape of the Liturgy [London: Dacre, 1944], p. 265): "By cataloguing, as it were, the metahistorical and eternal facts (of the resurrection, ascension, session and judgement) side by side with an historic event in time (the passion) the whole notion of the eschaton is brought in thought entirely within time, and split into two parts, the one in the historic past and the other in the historic future, instead of both in combination being regarded as a single fact of the eternal present. In the primitive conception there is but one eschaton, one ‘coming’, the ‘coming to the Father’ of redeemed mankind, which is the realisation of the Kingdom of God.”

28. In context this saying (which may be proverbial in character and origin) appears to have possible reference to two events—either to the prostrate hopes of Judaism after A.D. 70, or to the apparent defeat of the Messiah in his death. Bearing in mind the composite character of this chapter, either interpretation is possible, though we prefer the former.

87. THE MAN'S COMING

(24:29–44)[†]

24 ²⁹“Immediately after the distress of those days,
‘The sun will be darkened,
the moon will not give its light,
the stars will fall from the sky, and the powers of heaven will be shaken.’

³⁰Then will appear the standard of The Man in heaven, all the tribes of the earth will then mourn, and they will see The Man coming on the clouds of heaven, with power and great honor. ³¹With a loud trumpet he will send out his angels, who will gather his chosen from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. ³²Learn a lesson from the fig tree. When its branches become green, and it produces leaves, you know that summer is near. ³³In the same way, when you see all these things, you will know that he is at the threshold. ³⁴In solemn truth, I tell you that this generation will not pass away until all these things happen. ³⁵Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will not pass away. ³⁶But no one knows that day or that hour—neither the messengers of heaven, nor the Son, but only the Father. ³⁷The appearing of The Man will be like the time of Noah; ³⁸for just as in those days before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah went into the ark, ³⁹and did not know until the flood came and swept them all away, so will be The Man’s coming. ⁴⁰Then, two men will be in the field; one is taken and the other left. ⁴¹ Two women will be grinding at the mill; one is taken and the other left. ⁴² Therefore watch. You do not know on what day your Lord is coming. ⁴³ But realize that if the householder had known at what time of night the thief was coming, he would have watched and would not have allowed his house to be broken into. ⁴⁴ Therefore you also must be ready, for The Man is coming at a time you do not expect.

NOTES

The material in this section illustrates very well the miscellaneous character of the sayings grouped together in this chapter. No less than three separate themes are treated in the first three verses.

24:29. Cf. Isa 13:10 (natural disorders at the fall of Babylon), 34:4 (at the downfall of Edom); Ezek 32:7–8 (signs attending the distress of Egypt). Cf. also Joel 2:31. In the intertestamental literature such natural phenomena are associated with the last times; cf. 2 Esd 5:4; Enoch lxxx 4. It is important to remember that all these natural portents in the apocalyptic literature are signs of God's power and overruling providence; they are a terror only to the faithless. The presence of the following verses, particularly with the prefix then (a favorite Matthean device, but no more than a stylistic device) has naturally led to the supposition that what is being predicted is a period of world disorder, to be followed at once by a return of Jesus in triumph.

The trouble with all rationalizing efforts to arrange the eschatological predictions in Matthew in a "logical" order and to fit them into subsequent world history is that they were delivered at different times and under different circumstances, and are apocalyptic, not necessarily addressed to specific events in the future. For this very reason they apply to many different historical situations and human needs. Millions of people today find them inexpressibly comforting in world crises which often seem to foreshadow a final catastrophe to Homo sapiens sapiens and all his works.

30. It is clear, as we shall see later in 26:64, that men were asked to see The Man's coming, and we reiterate that this was his coming to the Father in the glorious exaltation of passion-resurrection. The test of faith is to see all this in The Man's standard, the cross. Such is also the Johannine understanding; cf. John 3:14, 8:28, 12:32.

The second part of the verse is from Dan 7:13—crucial for all understanding of what Jesus means when he speaks of his "coming."

31. Another theme is introduced in this saying—that of the calling of the chosen. Reminiscent as it is of Isa 27:13 and Zech 9:14, the saying may be (in the light of OT references) interpreted as The Man calling men into his Kingdom. However, the use of such words as his angels and his chosen indicates that this saying refers to the final judgment; cf. Part VII of the Introduction, and also 1 Cor 15:52 and 1 Thess 4:16. For the apocalyptic trumpet cf. Isa 27:13; Ps Sol 11:1–3.

32–35. These sayings may be taken together, though there is no indication of their original context. The lesson from the fig tree bears out the warning of vs. 30: men must be constantly on the alert for The Man's coming. Verse 33 could well be applied as commentary on John 12:34, where Jesus' hearers express doubts both about the "lifting up" and The Man's identity. Only faith alone will recognize the signs of The Man's exaltation by the Father. Seen thus, Matthew's vss. 34–35 are a simple statement of fact. On vs. 34 cf. 16:28 and on vs. 35 cf. 5:18, both of which serve as a warning against treating this chapter as an original unity.

36. Here again is a factual statement, though without indication of its original context. If it is in context at this juncture of the ministry, it is still quite factual. Jesus knew that the testing ground of his ministry had been reached, but the exact timing of its final moments was, of course, unknown to him.

37 ff. Verses 37–41 are paralleled in Luke 17:26–27, 30, 34–35—yet another indication of the varied historical contexts from which the sayings of this chapter came.

The sayings emphasize again the completely unexpected nature of The Man's coming. Men and women pursue their ordinary occupations, wholly unaware that the decisive moment in the Messianic ministry has been reached in passion-exaltation. Verse 42 summons Jesus' immediate circle to watchfulness; in spite of all their protestations of belief, and all their association with him in his ministry, it is possible for them, too, to miss the decisive moment. At Matthew's vs. 42 the Markan tradition (13:33–36) has an exhortation to vigilance together with the simile of an absent householder. The remainder of this chapter has been attracted into its present context by vs. 43. It is hoped that enough was said in the COMMENT and NOTES to the preceding sections to indicate that, properly understood, we need not accuse the evangelist/various later hypothetical editors of free invention. Nor need we ascribe to Jesus hopes, aspirations, and ambitions destined to be shattered. Even if such were known, they could scarcely have survived the sifting process of oral tradition. It is necessary simply to take The Man's "coming" seriously, as identified with the "coming" of The Representative to God in Dan 7:13, as the background for Jesus' sayings.

In this connection, cf. Rev 1:7. The emphasis there is that of the present triumph of the Messiah Jesus, with its consequences for those who failed to recognize his exaltation in his passion. It also looks to a final judgment and triumph when the reign of the Messiah will be finally declared and made open.

88. PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM

(24:45–25:13)[†]

24 ⁴⁵ “Who then is a faithful and intelligent slave, whom his master has appointed over his household, to give them their food at the proper time? ⁴⁶ That slave is fortunate whom the master at his coming finds doing so, ⁴⁷ for I solemnly tell you that he will appoint him over all his goods. ⁴⁸ But if the wicked slave begins to say to himself: ‘My lord is delayed,’ ⁴⁹ and begins to beat his fellow slaves, eats and drinks with drunkards, ⁵⁰ the master of that slave will come on a day when he does not expect him, and at a time which he does not know, ⁵¹ and will punish him. His lot will be with the timeservers, where there will be shrieking and grinding of teeth.”

25 ¹ “Then the Kingdom of heaven may be compared with ten maidens, who took their lamps and went to meet the bridegroom and the bride. ² Five of them were silly and five sensible, ³ for the silly ones took their lamps, but took no oil with them, ⁴ but the sensible ones took flasks of oil with their lamps. ⁵ As the bridegroom was delayed, they all dozed and lay down, ⁶ but in the middle of the night there was a shout: ⁷ ‘The bridegroom! Come out to meet him!’ Then all those maidens got up and trimmed their lamps, ⁸ the silly ones saying to the sensible ones, ‘Give us some of your oil; for our lamps are going out.’ ⁹ But the sensible ones replied, ‘Perhaps there will not be enough for us and you. It would be better to go to the dealers and buy for yourselves.’ ¹⁰ While they went to buy, the bridegroom arrived, and those who were ready went in with him to the wedding feast and the doors were closed. ¹¹ Afterwards the other maidens came too, with the words, ‘Sir, sir, open up for us!’ ¹² But he replied, ‘I solemnly tell you that I do not know you.’ ¹³ Therefore be on your guard. You know neither the day nor the hour.

NOTES

The attraction of the first parable to its present position is explained by vss. 43–44. Such attraction also dictated the presence of the remainder of the final block of parable teaching. The present context of this material is part-cause of a certain ambivalence in Christian belief with respect to the “return,” or “second coming,” of Jesus. The use of phrases such as My lord is delayed (24:48), or the bridegroom was delayed (25:5), and the master (of the slaves) returned (25:19) all illustrate this ambivalence. Cf. in this connection 2 Peter 3:4.

24:45–51. This parable, presumably addressed to the inner circle, is a vivid illustration of the adaptability of this “case law” method of teaching. Warnings against irresponsible use of the disciples’ ministry can easily be adapted to serve the wider circle of the continuing community. Cf. 1 Cor 4:1–5, 12:12–31.

Considering the way in which so many parables are used in Matthew, it is likely that in its original context the story may have been used to illustrate the OT lessons and warnings about Israel’s use and misuse of her calling by God. As it stands, the parable is marked by a wide use of specifically Matthean language (much of it used again in the next parable).

Luke has the parable in a wholly different context (12:41–48), but uses it in practically identical form. This may be an indication that Luke had access to the same Palestinian tradition as Matthew, or even that he knew the parable in Matthew’s written form.

25:1–13. Here again we are faced with a parable which is capable of almost infinite variation in interpretation. Several commentators have said that this parable is one which deals with the Messiah’s return, and this explains why the figure of the bride is missing from many texts. For what bride, it has been said, could the Messiah bring from heaven? In this kind of interpretation, the emphasis is on a triumphant “return” of the Messiah—a concept unknown to subsequent Judaism. The interpretation has only been possible because commentators have been influenced by the present context of the parable. But if we are to be faithful to the OT tradition in which Jesus both lived and taught, then another interpretation is imperative.

The primary meaning of the parable certainly revolves around the figure of the bridegroom. It is a commonplace in the OT to refer to Israel as the bride of Yahweh, a figure used with telling effect by Hosea. A similar figure appears in Revelation to describe the Messianic Community. What is odd in our present text is the presence of attendant maidens (vs. 1). Marriage attendants belong to very ancient Near Eastern custom, but they would always have been attendant on the bride, never the bridegroom. We must therefore conclude that the manuscripts which have and the bride at the end of vs. 1 represent the original text. The function of these bridal attendants was to await the arrival of the groom when he came to take the bride to his own house.

If we pursue the allegory with Israel being considered the bride, then the maidens are those whose function it was to keep watch against the time of God’s visitation, when God comes to claim his own bride, his Israel. There will then be those who have failed to keep trust (vs. 5) when others have maintained vigilance (vs. 4).

Jesus here unequivocally equates his ministry with God’s visit to claim his own; Israel, God’s bride, has been badly served by some of her custodians. It is obvious that this parable serves equally well, (in view of the immediate context) no doubt intended by Jesus, as a warning and exhortation to the custodians of the new Messianic Community.

Parables may be capable of almost unlimited adaptation and interpretation, but any interpretation of this parable which makes the maidens attendant on the bridegroom makes nonsense of any known marriage customs of the time of Jesus, or indeed of any other time known to us. Suggestions that this parable has been influenced by, for example, Rev 19:7 or 21:2 are ingenious and unconvincing. It is not necessary to find the origin of this parable anywhere except in the OT.

There is no parallel in Luke, but cf. Luke 12:35 ff., 13:23 ff.

2. silly ... sensible. Cf. 7:24 ff.

3. oil. This is not only a sign of blessing in the OT, it is also used of repentance in this gospel—cf. 6:17.

12. I do not know you. I.e., I will have nothing to do with you.

13. Cf. 24:36, 42, 44, 50.

89. PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM (concluded)

(25:14–30)[†]

25 ¹⁴ “For it will be like a man going on a journey, who called his personal slaves and handed his property over to them, ¹⁵ giving to one five talents, to another two, and to another one, to each according to his ability, and then went away. ¹⁶ Immediately, the one who had received five talents put them to work and made five more, ¹⁷ as did the one who had two talents—he made two more. ¹⁸ But he who had received one talent dug in the ground and hid his master’s money. ¹⁹ After a long time, the master of the slaves came and settled accounts with them. ²⁰ The one who had received five talents came forward with five other talents. ‘Sir,’ he said, ‘you gave me five talents, and I have made five more talents.’ ²¹ The master said to him: ‘Well done, good and trustworthy slave. As you have been trustworthy in a small matter, I will set you over larger concerns. Share your master’s prosperity.’ ²² There came also the one with two talents. ‘Sir,’ he said, ‘you handed me two talents, and here I have made two more talents.’ ²³ His master said to him, ‘Well done, good and trustworthy slave. You have been trustworthy in a small matter. I will set you over larger concerns. Share your master’s prosperity.’ ²⁴ Then the one who had received one talent came forward. ‘Master,’ he said, ‘knowing you to be a hard man, reaping where you did not sow, and gathering up where you had not winnowed, ²⁵ I was afraid, and went and hid your talent in the ground. See—you have what belongs to you.’²⁶ But his master answered him: ‘You worthless, lazy slave! You know that I reap where I have not sowed, and I gather where I have not winnowed,²⁷ so you ought to have invested my money with bankers, so that when I came again I should have received my own back, with interest.²⁸ Therefore take away from him the one talent, and give it to the man who has ten talents.²⁹ For to everyone who has, more will be given, and he will have plenty, but from the man who has nothing even what he has will be taken away.³⁰ Throw the worthless slave into the darkness outside, where there is shrieking and grinding of teeth.’

NOTES

Here again in the parable of the journeying property owner the emphasis is on the ministry of Jesus as the means by which God called Israel to account. Once more context has determined the customary interpretation, which sees here a parable of a “second coming” or final judgment. In the circumstances of the continuing Messianic Community, an interpretation emphasizing the final judgment seems much more likely than one which sees proof of a “second coming.”

25:15. The talent was originally a measure of weight, and later a monetary unit of the highest denomination (cf. NOTE on 18:24). The word passed into English usage in the Middle Ages as a synonym for abilities and/or natural endowments.

18. Cf. 13:44.

19. After a long time. I.e., in the original meaning of the parable the interval between God’s choice of Israel and his coming to make reckoning in the ministry of Jesus. Similar phraseology in 18:23 would certainly reinforce the feeling in the early Christian community that this parable had to do with the final judgment.

29–30. Cf. 13:12 and also 8:12, 22:13, 24:51.

90. JUDGMENT

(25:31–46)

25 ³¹ “When The Man comes in his glory, and all the angels with him, then he will sit on his glorious throne. ³² In front of him will be gathered together all the peoples; he will separate them from each other, just as a shepherd separates sheep from goats, ³³ and he will place the sheep at his right hand, but the goats on his left. ³⁴ Then the King will say to those at his right hand, ‘Come, you who have been blessed by my Father, inherit the Kingdom which has been prepared for you from the foundation of the world. ³⁵ I was hungry and you fed me, I was thirsty and you gave me drink, I was a stranger and you welcomed me, ³⁶ naked and you clothed me. I was sick and you visited me, in prison and you came to me.’ ³⁷ Then the righteous will answer him, ‘Lord, when did we see you hungry and fed you, or thirsty and gave you drink? ³⁸ And when did we see you as a stranger and took you in, or naked and clothed you? ³⁹ And when did we see you sick, or in prison, and visited you?’ ⁴⁰ ‘I solemnly tell you,’ the King will reply to them, ‘that in so far as you did it for one of the most insignificant of these, who are my brothers, you did it to me.’ ⁴¹ He will then say to those on his left hand, ‘You accursed ones! Go away from me into the eternal fire which is prepared for the devil and his agents. ⁴² For I was hungry and you did not give me food, I was thirsty and you did not give me drink, ⁴³ I was a stranger and you did not welcome me, naked and you did not clothe me, sick and in prison and you did not visit me.’⁴⁴ Then they in turn will answer: ‘Lord, when did we see you hungry, or thirsty, or a stranger, or naked, sick or in prison, and we did not serve you?’⁴⁵ He will answer them, ‘I solemnly tell you, that in so far as you did not do this for one of the most insignificant of these, it was to me that you failed to do it.’⁴⁶ And they will go into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life.”

NOTES

The theme of judgment in the ministry of Jesus which characterized the previous parables has determined the place of this discourse on the final judgment, a parable found only in Matthew.

If the preceding material illustrates the Johannine theme of Jesus' ministry as judgment (cf. John 12:31, cf. John 9:39), it seems to cover another Johannine theme as well—that of the Father committing the task of judgment to the Son (cf. John 5:22, 27). We explored the theme of the Son's judgment in the Introduction, Part VII.

This parable is a fitting climax to patterns of thought which can be traced all through this gospel. This is no indication that this section is public instruction. But if it is instruction to the inner circle, then the climax of a developing series of teaching is striking. For the disciple, covenant-loyalty must far surpass that of the Pharisee lawyers (5:20), a covenant-loyalty which must be manifest in deeds (7:20). The Man would pass judgment on such deeds (16:27), principally upon charity shown or withheld from the insignificant (18:5), with his own ministry as exemplar.

Now that the passion narrative is about to be told, Jesus declares his identification with the suffering.

25:31. The Man. There is a puzzling change in vs. 34 to the King. We have no textual evidence to suggest that a change was made from a lost original, to either The Man or the King. It is permissible to suggest, bearing in mind that The Man's "coming" in all other contexts is bound up with his coming to the Father in passion-exaltation, that there is some confusion here. If vs. 31 stands, and is in context, then there appears to follow immediately a picture of the final judgment, when the Son judges his own Kingdom and gives it to the Father (cf. Introduction, Part VII). Verse 31 seems to present an exaltation-enthronement theme, so we may have an assimilation to 16:27. But it is possible that the change from The Man to the King is not as surprising as may appear.

We begin by restating our position, outlined in Parts VI–VIII of the Introduction, that The Man in Matthew is a figure of glory, and that material which appears to contradict this is in our view later editing.

(a) There is an interesting history behind vs. 31, as a comparison between Matthew (16:27, 19:28, 25:31) and Mark 8:38 and Luke 12:8 demonstrates. Matthew is clear and consistent, and the coming of The Man in exaltation is what we have learned to expect from the evangelist. But in Mark, the emphasis is shifted from a consummation of the ministry to a "second coming." Luke's version seems to hesitate between the two concepts. It is possible to suggest here that if the Markan gospel is Petrine in inspiration, the shift in emphasis is explicable. II Peter—which, judging from the material and vocabulary employed, may possibly have been written by the apostle—betrays an anxiety for a return of Jesus; a return, moreover, which is evidently expected in a Petrine speech in Acts (3:20). Luke not only links Jesus and The Man (me, The Man) in 12:8—which Matthew never does in a context of the ministry—but also seems to be capable of an interpretation of a return of Jesus as The Man in judgment. Was Luke aware of both traditions?

(b) It is often urged that what we have in Matthew is a final stage in a development, from Mark's "glory of his Father with the holy angels" through Luke's 12:8 to Matthew's The Man coming with his angels in his glory. The argument can be turned almost completely around, and we maintain that Matthew is faithful to the Hebrew tradition of Dan 7:13 ff., while Mark tries to reproduce his Petrine reminiscences, and Luke's presentation stands between the two.

(c) Links between the Matthean and Johannine traditions have already been noted. This dramatic picture of vss. 31–46 serves only to emphasize the links. The parables of Jesus in the Matthean tradition are almost totally concerned with the account that Israel must give in the day of God's visitation—a visitation clearly identified by Jesus with his own ministry.

(d) There is some confusion on the part of commentators who see in Matthew a final point in a developing theological theme. Matt 19:28, for example, is said to represent the end of a working over of the tradition, so that Matthew depicts The Man enthroned, whereas in Mark 8:38 and Luke 12:8 f., The Man is advocate before the throne. This misses a vital point. Luke 22:28–30 speaks of a kingdom being assigned to Jesus by the Father, a kingdom in which the disciples will eat and drink with him. It is against all the OT evidence, or any evidence elsewhere in the ancient world, to think of a kingdom in which its heir is not judge of his own dominion. Once more, we are back to the tradition of Dan 7:17 f. Here again Matthew is at one with the Johannine tradition in giving Jesus a judicial role as The Man.

(e) Some critics deny a pre-NT dating for Enoch, but the evidence now available militates against this view (cf., however, Cross, Ancient Library of Qumran, pp. 202–3). Aside from this consideration though, there is good reason to think that the parable material in chapters 24 and 25 is devoted to God’s visitation of Israel, and the background of 25:31 may lie in Zech 14:5. Certainly it is used by Paul as the background of 1 Thess 3:13, though in the context (apparently) of a second coming. Now if the background of 25:31 is Zech 14:5, with overtones of Enoch (cf. Part VII of the Introduction), then what we have here is Christology of a very developed order. Because it is characteristically pre-rabbinic in type, we maintain that so far from being the end of a line of development, it is early, and we suggest that it is Mark and Luke who miss the really incisive nature of their material. To this we may perhaps add, with more hesitation, that the Matthean tradition accurately reproduces the original material.

For some few years we have been working on problems of interrelationships of Messianic ideas in the early Qumran literature and early pseudepigraphical works such as Enoch, and we have reached the firm conclusion (which will be presented elsewhere) that the so-called Discourses of Enoch are roughly contemporary with the Hôdayôt of Qumran (Thanksgiving Psalms—1QH). Cf. Albright and Mann, “Qumran and the Essenes: Geography, Chronology, and Identification of the Sect,” in The Scrolls and Christianity, ed. Matthew Black, p. 25.

For purposes of present discussion it is quite irrelevant that the Enoch material (Mêsalê Hanoch) has hitherto not been found at Qumran—this can be purely accidental. Furthermore, it is simply impossible that Peter’s discourses in I and II Peter were uttered initially in Greek, since Peter was an unlettered fisherman. The Greek adaptation, though in a rather sophisticated literary Koine, is the work of hearers who wished to preserve Peter’s message for its kerygmatic value.

(f) The language of the whole section is Matthean, though there are parallels in the other synoptic writers. But what has apparently been the cause of continuing debate has been the juxtaposition of The Man in vs. 31 with the King in vs. 34. One suggestion is that the explanation is simple, and depends on ignoring the then of vs. 34, as a word used so frequently in Matthew as to constitute no more than a connective. In this case, however, the real meaning of the connective has not been seen.

(g) Our interpretation, as we have said, depends upon the consistent use by the evangelist of material depicting The Man in glory. This is the case in vss. 31–32. We have also seen that in all cases of The Man’s coming in glory, this is to be understood of his exaltation in passion-resurrection.

The scene here, therefore, is The Man’s exaltation—but then, why the gathering of all the peoples (vs. 32)? If we make this a scene of final judgment, we miss the point entirely. Here again there is a link with John (John 12:23, 31, 13:1–20). It is precisely in the consummation of his ministry, in the seal of death, and in resurrection-glory, that men will be separated by the response they make, or do not make, to that central, crucial event. This is the real acid test, for both Jew and Gentile.

(h) Coming now to the then of vs. 34, it is possible to see how important this apparently insignificant connective is. Far from being a link joining together two apparently disparate pictures of a final judgment, this link emphasizes challenge. Later in this gospel men will be confronted by Jesus with the irony that they will see the exaltation of The Man (26:64), in much the same way that in the Johannine tradition Jesus presents his hearers with the reality that they will exalt The Man to his glory (John 12:32). In both traditions the meaning is the same—the exaltation of The Man is to the throne of the cross.

“Then,” the Matthean tradition goes on to say, there is a real and continuing connection between one eschatological moment of The Man’s exaltation, when all peoples are faced with its challenge, judged as to what their response to that challenge will be, and the final eschatological moment of the last judgment. It is almost as though the evangelist on the eve of the passion “rests his case.” One immediate challenge, in which men must see or not see the exaltation of The Man in seeming defeat, and then a final challenge, in which The Man whom they have or have not “seen” in exaltation, will be the King in judgment. The first eschatological moment leads to the other. In the humiliation and apparent disaster of the exaltation-glory, the one who suffers and so goes to his glory is still the Shepherd-figure, still the Judge and the Separator. For the time being that function needs the eye of faith by which to discern it—for how can the horror of torture and death be a judgment on those who merely witness it?

We may with justice admire the superb artistry with which Matthew concludes his story of the ministry, and by his own often-used then connects two major themes in his tradition. We may also pause to ask why this comparatively simple interpretation of the material in vss. 31–46 has not been recognized for what it is—commentary upon, and summary of, ministry, passion, and final judgment.

Whether the juxtaposition of the material is the result of contextual attraction in oral tradition we are in no position to know. But even allowing for the care and precision which we have come to expect from Matthew, the Johannine tradition is surely enough to warn us against any easy assumption that such juxtaposition is necessarily the evangelist's own. From what we can gather about the mind of Jesus from the gospels, especially as that mind is known to us from John, it is probably not too much to say that the juxtaposition of themes was most likely done by Jesus himself. The expectation of “the End” is part of Christian belief, is founded on the gospels, and is enshrined in credal statements. The “here-and-now” character of much modern thinking about eschatology, with its roots in the recall to a study of “realized eschatology” earlier in this century, ought not to blind our eyes to the very real emphasis on “the End” in the ministry of Jesus. We have again and again stressed in this commentary the vital links between Matthew and John on the immediacy of the demand upon men which the ministry and passion of Jesus make. That there is real need for a restatement of traditional eschatology, particularly with regard to the imagery with which it is clothed in our gospels, we do not deny. But to attempt to eliminate from the teaching of Jesus any tension between the elements of “now” and “not yet” would be to erode one vital strand of the kerygmatic ministry. The reader is referred to one modern examination of the problems involved, which does justice both to contemporary attempts at restatement, and also to the biblical imagery: U. E. Simon, The End Is Not Yet, London: Nisbet, 1964.

31. angels ... glorious throne. Cf. 13:41, 49, 16:27, 19:28, and 24:30 f.

32. all the peoples. Cf. 24:14, 28:19.

separate. Cf. 13:49.

33. sheep ... goats. If there is one feature in these opening verses which ought to have cautioned us against seeing here a picture of final judgment, it is the figure of sheep and goats. From remote antiquity sheep and goats have been kept together in Palestine, and the shepherd cares for both. No final disposition is being described here—simply the customary separation by the shepherd at night. What is here described is the separation which inevitably occurs when men are asked to see the cross as a throne of glory.

34. Then. The judgment produced by the passion is in anticipation (prolepsis) of the judgment of the End (eschata). But now the separation is final, and those at his right hand—who may well initially have been “on his left” in the first separation (vs. 33)—are being commended for acting precisely as he demanded within the framework of the Messianic Community. The comparisons in the material which follows bears this out.

inherit the Kingdom. Cf. 5:3, 5.

35–36. Cf. 10:40, 42, 18:5; Mark 9:37, 41; Luke 9:48.

40. Cf. 10:32; Mark 9:41.

41. Cf. 7:23; Enoch lxvii 13.

eternal fire. Cf. 13:40, 42, 50, 18:8.

91. PASSOVER: PLOT TO KILL JESUS

(26:1–5)[†]

26 ¹When Jesus had said all this, he said to his disciples, ²“You know that in two days the Passover is coming, and
The Man will be handed over to be crucified.”

³ Then the chief priests and the elders of the people gathered in the palace of the high priest, named Caiaphas, ⁴and discussed seizing Jesus by treachery and killing him.
⁵ They said, however, “Not during the festival, so that it may not cause unrest among the people.”

NOTES

26:1. When Jesus had said. Cf. the same formula, 7:28, 11:11, 13:53, 19:1.

2. in two days. In spite of Matthew's specific reference to the date here, there has always been disagreement as to exactly when these events happened. Mark 14:12 refers to both "Passover" and "Unleavened Bread," and the latter would be three days later, not two. Luke 22:1 opts for "was drawing near." The connection between the Passover and the impending passion of Jesus is made emphatic—the annual commemoration of the Exodus-deliverance also looked to the deliverance of the last days (cf. Targum on Exod 12:42, on which see NOTE on 26:19).

The Man will be handed over. In Greek the tense is futuristic present passive—"is being delivered," translatable "will be delivered." Whatever may be the case with the bulk of sayings about The Man in the remainder of this gospel, here The Man is emphatically a suffering figure. We have previously seen good reason to think that all descriptions of The Man as suffering were editorial except one—that at 20:25 ff. In that instance the tradition, with its vital theological import, controlled the insertion of a saying otherwise outside the evangelist's scheme. The same thing is true here. The saying is included, not solely because Matthew is guided by the earliest oral tradition (that of the passion narrative), but also because vital links must be established between Jesus as The-Man-in-glory, Jesus as The-Man-here-and-now, even in suffering, and Jesus as The-Man-in-kingly-judgment, and most of all because Passover demands all three interpretations. This we shall hope to see more clearly later in the chapter.

3. chief priests and the elders. Mark does not have this information, but speaks instead of "chief priests and scribes" (14:1), as also does Luke (22:2); but all three, together with John (11:45–53, "chief priests and Pharisees"), speak of secret planning to effect Jesus' removal. Matthew, by emphasizing the place of the meeting—in the palace of the high priest, and also the elders, appears to be underlining a quasi-official meeting of the Sanhedrin.

Caiaphas. He is mentioned by name in Matthew and John, but not in Mark and Luke. He was high priest from A.D. 18–36, according to Josephus.

4. by treachery. If not during the festival in the next verse is a correct rendering, then the plan went astray. Some have therefore seen in this verse a possible meaning of "not in the festival crowd." Cf. 21:46, John 11:53.

COMMENT

We have already observed that the whole subject of the proper dating of the events of this final week of Jesus' life is not only confused by the varying traditions in our gospels, but also, in the traditional pattern of the Last Supper and arrest on Thursday, by almost hopeless overcrowding. We shall not attempt to unravel here the various learned attempts which are currently being made to determine what recent discoveries may do to assist in clarification. This would take us far outside the scope of a general commentary, and would also make this part of the commentary almost as long as the rest of the book. We content ourselves instead by calling attention to two works, easily accessible and in English, in which the reader can see for himself the problems involved: Finegan, Handbook of Biblical Chronology, and Ogg, "The Chronology of the Last Supper," in Historicity and Chronology in the New Testament, pp. 75–96.

The trial narrative will be dealt with in its own place. For our part, we would be prepared to say that the possibility of Jesus and his disciples' following an archaic calendar known to have been used by sectarian groups in the period immediately before the New Testament, greatly simplifies the chronology of this week.

92. PASSOVER: BETHANY

(26:6–13)[†]

26 ⁶ Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, ⁷ a woman came to him with an alabaster jar of very expensive ointment, and she poured it on his head as he sat at table. ⁸ But when the disciples saw it, they became indignant. ⁹ “Why this waste?” they asked. “This ointment could have been sold for a large sum, which might have been given to the poor.” ¹⁰ When Jesus knew of this, he said to them, “Why do you distress the woman? She has done a beautiful thing for me; ¹¹ for you always have the poor with you, but you will not always have me. ¹² She has poured this ointment on my body to prepare me for burial. ¹³ I solemnly tell you, wherever this proclamation is made in the whole world, what she has done will be told as a memorial of her.”

NOTES

Substantially Matthew's position here, with very minor variations, is that of Mark. The point of the narrative is obvious enough: Jesus knows already that he will die, and knows also that he will be buried without the customary anointing. What is not clear is the connection, if any, between this incident, recorded by Matthew and Mark, the account in John 12:1–8, and the account in Luke 7. In the accounts of Matthew and Mark we have the disciples' anger, in John, Judas' reaction, in all three, the anointing at the table, Jesus' sayings about the poor, his burial, and in Matthew and Mark, the connection of the woman's deed with the Proclamation. Beyond this we have Matthew's and Mark's statement that this happened in Simon's house against John's tradition that Jesus was a guest in the house of Lazarus. These are minor details, however, and in all three gospels the connection with Passover is firmly made. The difficulty lies with the account in Luke 7:36 ff., apparently in Galilee, at the house of a Pharisee named Simon. Of some significance is the omission by Luke of any account of an anointing at Bethany. But the language of Luke for the host at the dinner (cf. "one of the Pharisees," Luke 7:36 and 39, with "Simon," 7:43), in spite of the absence of any vital connection with the future burial (and the unwarranted assumption by later commentators that the Mary of Matthew, Mark, and John was Mary of Magdala) make it entirely possible that Luke's researches misplaced the incident.

6. Simon the leper. Cf. NOTE on 8:2.

8. Not only is there indignation on the part of the disciples; it is possible that the evangelist wishes to emphasize that they had overlooked the anointing of kings.

10–11. The woman has made what she can of this opportunity. To see in vs. 11 any blessing of Jesus upon failure to mitigate poverty is outrageous. The NT tradition consistently from the Jerusalem church onwards is emphatic about the obligation to provide for the poor.

12. Mark 16:1 informs us that three women went to the tomb to perform the customary anointing of the body, but found on arrival that Jesus was already risen (cf. Luke 23:55–24:3). Matthew omits the mention of spices (28:1), as does John (20:1).

93. PASSOVER: BETRAYAL

(26:14–16)[†]

26 ¹⁴ Then one of the twelve—the one called Judas Iscariot—went to the chief priests. ¹⁵ “What are you willing to give me,” he asked, “if I hand him over to you?” They agreed to pay him thirty silver pieces, ¹⁶ and from that moment he looked for a chance to betray him.

NOTES

Reasons which may be adduced for the betrayal by Judas are as varied and as numerous as commentaries on the gospel. The last previous mention of Judas in this gospel was in 10:4, where he was numbered with the disciples. It must be remembered that we have the benefit of hindsight; there must have been features in the character of Judas which commended him to Jesus in the first instance. It is possible that John 12:6 gives us a slight indication of one factor which may have led to the betrayal. In what sense was Judas a thief? We are not told that the money was used for personal gain. The explanation which sees Judas as a secret—and disappointed—Zealot, seeking to force Jesus into an immediate and dramatic public declaration of Messiahship by a contrived arrest, is possible. It must, however, be admitted that there is no proof for this and that we are unable to do more than guess at Judas' motives.

15. thirty silver pieces. Cf. Zech 11:12 and its context. This was the traditional purchase price of a slave. The Markan and Lukan traditions speak simply of “money.” However accurate or inaccurate Matthew's tradition is at this point, what is important to the evangelist is the way in which the concluding drama of the ministry passes judgment on the false shepherds of Israel. In the final chapters of Matthew there are five allusions to the prophet Zechariah (21:5 to Zech 9:9; 24:3 to Zech 14:4; 24:30–31 to Zech 2:6; 26:28 to Zech 9:11; and 27:9 to Zech 11:12–13). If all that we can find here is a “proof text,” we fail to understand the use of the OT in the time of Jesus, and certainly its use in this gospel. The accommodation of thirty silver pieces to the Zechariah text is of small importance against the background of the entire context of Zech 11 and 13:7–9.

94. PASSOVER: THE LAST SUPPER

(26:17–29)[†]

26 ¹⁷ On the first day of Unleavened Bread, the disciples came to Jesus, asking, ¹⁸ “Where do you want us to make preparations for you to eat the Passover?” He said, “Go to a certain man in the city, and say to him, ‘The Teacher says: My time is almost here; I will observe the Passover at your house with my disciples.’ ” ¹⁹ The disciples did as Jesus directed them, and made preparations for the Passover. ²⁰ In the evening he sat at table with the twelve disciples, ²¹ and as they were eating, he said, “I solemnly tell you that one of you will betray me.” ²² They were very sad, and began to say to him one after the other, “Lord, is it I?” ²³ He answered, “One who has dipped his hand in the dish with me—he will betray me. ²⁴ The Man indeed goes, just as it has been recorded of him, but alas for that man through whom The Man is being betrayed! It would have been better for that man if he had not been born.” ²⁵ Judas, the traitor, replied, “Is it I, Master?” “The words are yours,” Jesus said to him.

²⁶ As they were eating, Jesus, taking the bread and giving thanks, broke it and gave it to the disciples with the words: “Take and eat it. This is my body.” ²⁷ And taking the cup, and giving thanks, he gave it to them with the words: “All of you drink from this, ²⁸ for this is my blood of the covenant, poured out for many for the forgiveness of sins. ²⁹ I tell you that from now on I will not drink wine again until that day when I drink new wine with you in my Father's Kingdom.”

NOTES

From its beginnings as a domestic festival, the sacrificing of Passover had for many centuries been centralized for orthodox Judaism in Jerusalem. Our new information about sectarian calendars and places of worship is such, however, that the usual picture of a uniform, centralized Passover celebration in Jerusalem may require drastic revision. In any event, the Jewish colony in Elephantine evidently had no qualms about keeping Passover in exile, and the priestly authorities in Jerusalem, at least at one time, acquiesced in the situation (as we know from the famous Passover Papyrus of 419 B.C.). But how far a sectarian Passover was tolerated in Jerusalem itself we have no means of knowing. We shall have occasion to return to this in the following NOTE on vs. 17.

17. On the first day of Unleavened Bread. This would be Nisan 15, the day after the Passover, but Matthew certainly means to indicate that the preparations were being made on the day before Passover. Josephus (Antiquities II. 317) applies the name Unleavened Bread loosely when he speaks of the feast as lasting “for eight days.” (But cf. ibid., III. 249.) Perhaps the expression as we have it here is not as simple as it appears. It is possible to translate the Greek by “With reference to the first day of Unleavened Bread ...”—i.e., the disciples were asking Jesus for guidance as to the procedures to be followed for the next day—or, the term is a generic one for both observances, since both required unleavened bread. The confusion over dating is found also in Mark and Luke. If we are to assume from this notation of time that it was indeed in the afternoon—or even the morning—of the day of the Passover sacrifice, then the interval for preparation seems altogether too short, even allowing for the fact that the man in the city (vs. 18) was partly aware of Jesus’ intention. Mark, indeed, adds “when they were sacrificing the Passover” (Mark 14:12). One of the merits—and that not the least—of Mlle. Jaubert’s suggestion (in La date de la cène) is that the confusion is removed by assuming (a) that Jesus and his disciples followed the old solar calendar, and so kept Passover on a fixed day, Tuesday, and (b) that when the infant Community reverted to the official, orthodox calendar the tradition became confused and remains confused in our sources. John 18:28 has the death of Jesus taking place at the time when the Passover lambs were being sacrificed—i.e., if the proposed new chronology is correct, then John represents the best historical tradition and the synoptic gospels have tried to adapt one chronology to the other.

18. My time is almost here. In Matthew as in John (cf. 10:18), Jesus is always master of events, and here he declares his conviction that the final moments of the ministry are upon him. Mark (14:13–15) has additional details here of a prearranged meeting, and the details serve to emphasize the secrecy with which Jesus surrounded his movements before the Supper. If recent suggestions for the chronology of Holy Week are correct, the desire to hold a secret sectarian Passover observance in Jerusalem is understandable. Nothing at this stage was to be allowed to compromise the moment when Jesus would consecrate himself for his sacrificial death (cf. John 17), nor hinder the inauguration of the New Covenant. (After a lapse of decades, it is still instructive to read Allen’s ICC St. Matthew commentary, pp. 270 ff. Without any of the indications which we now have from external sources, Allen endeavored to do full justice to the chronology.)

the Passover. Before the current debate on chronology was launched and to some extent even now, much discussion has taken place as to whether the occasion of the Last Supper was a Passover meal or not. Attempts to reconcile the Johannine and synoptic chronologies by making the occasion a quasi-religious meal, said to have been observed by small bands of teachers and disciples, are not convincing. (One such attempt provides the supposed meal with the title Qiddûsh, apparently unaware that this was simply the designation of a specific thanksgiving over a meal on particular occasions.)

Any attempt to find in the Last Supper an occasion other than the Passover celebration must accommodate several very awkward realities. Some of the problems are briefly listed here, and will not be argued, since this belongs more properly to a full-scale commentary:

(a) The persistent use of Passover imagery by the Apostle Paul in I Corinthians, together with allusions in other letters, in order to describe the passion of Jesus, is too marked to be overlooked.

(b) The phrase “Lamb of God” in John’s gospel, the Apocalypse and I Peter, must be explained if we are to reject the identification of the Last Supper with the Passover. (C. H. Dodd’s suggestion that “Lamb” when applied to Jesus means the “bell-wether of the flock” encounters too many difficulties: cf. The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel [Cambridge University Press, 1954], pp. 230 ff.) On the whole complex of ideas thought to be associated with “the Lamb,” cf. Brown, John, i–xii, COMMENT on §3, specifically on John 1:29.

(c) The key phrase blood of the (New) Covenant, found in Matt 26:28, Mark 14:24 (Luke 22:20, added in most manuscripts, making “two” cups), and 1 Cor 11:25 (source of the addition in Luke), is not easily explained apart from the dramatic rehearsal of the pre-Christian Haggādā to give it anchor and meaning. The emphasis given to the same phrase in Hebrews (9) links it firmly with Sinai but with no other Covenant.

(d) It is not germane to this commentary to discuss the phrase (1 Cor 11:24–25 and also Luke 22:19–20 by accommodation to the Pauline tradition) “for my memorial” (or, “in remembrance of me”). Nevertheless, unless the Last Supper was linked to a celebration which rehearsed God’s acts in vindicating his people, it is hard to see why the phrase was already fixed in traditional usage by the time Paul wrote to Corinth. (Cf. here, for the most useful summary in English, Max Thurian, The Eucharistic Memorial, tr. by J. G. Davies, Part II, The New Testament, London: Lutterworth Press / Richmond: John Knox Press, 1961.) In this connection it is worth a passing note that the Passover Haggādā clearly states that the annual commemoration was far more than a mental act of remembering: “In every single generation it is a man’s duty to regard himself as if he had gone forth from Egypt...”

(e) R. Le Déant, “De nocte paschali,” Verbum Domini 41 (1963), 189–95, calls attention to a Targum on Exod 12:42 which speaks of the four nights of Passover commemoration: “The night when God appeared in order to create the world, the night when he promised Isaac to Abraham and Sarah, the night when Egypt was destroyed, and the eschatological night when the world will end.” Here again is a link with 1 Cor 11:25, perhaps also with John 13:30, and also a link with Essene views of the Covenant.

(f) Attention will be called below to David Daube’s important contribution on the links of the Passover meal with the scene in Gethsemane.

21. “... betray me.” The treachery of the act is underscored by as they were eating (vs. 21), which is further emphasized in the Markan tradition; cf. Mark 14:18; Ps 41:9; John 13:18. Those who find in Matthew’s OT quotations mere proof texts will do well to ask why the evangelist omitted the striking quotation from the psalm, which John includes.

23. “One who has dipped his hand ...” I.e., one who has dipped his hand into the relish of herbs. At first sight this is not very striking to us, and there would appear to us to be no particular indication of treachery on the part of any one of the twelve. But an article by F. C. Fensham (“Judas’ Hand in the Bowl and Qumran,” Revue de Qumrân 5 [1964–65], 259–61), calls attention to some important information from Qumran. The Rule of the Community (1QS vi 1–8) provides that when food has been prepared, there is to be a hierarchic order in reaching out the hands. Fensham suggests that the definitive with me indicates that Judas, by not waiting his turn, deliberately denied the leadership of Jesus in the community, and so—to Jesus—marked himself as being in rebellion.

24. The Man. Cf. NOTE on 8:20. The passion narrative, it is generally agreed, was the first part of the oral tradition to achieve fixed form, and was in all probability the first part of that tradition to be committed to writing. Mathew is here following that fixed tradition and hence must depict The Man as being in the hands of enemies. Cf. Enoch xxxviii 2.

25. “Is it I, Master?” The words are more emphatic than can easily be rendered in English, and perhaps we could here translate rather more freely by “Surely not I?”

“The words are yours.” The saying is an ambiguous affirmative, throwing back to the interrogator the responsibility of an answer. Cf. 27:11–12, and NOTE on 26:64.

26. On the key words (taking, giving thanks, broke it, gave it) see COMMENT on 14:13–21 (§53).

28. Controversy often centers around the supposed impossibility of rendering the words of Jesus (this is my blood of the covenant) in Aramaic, but some work by J. A. Emerton has suggested new possibilities about what is, or is not, impossible in Aramaic. Jesus, Emerton suggests, used the rare but perfectly permissible “construction of genitive after a noun with a pronominal suffix, because it avoided any ambiguity” (a very common construction in later Syriac). This, he goes on to emphasize, was to avoid any suggestion that the Covenant was of Jesus’ own making; he was but the instrument and the vehicle of its inauguration through his blood—the Covenant was of God’s own making. Cf. J. A. Emerton, JTS 13 (1962), 111–17. The construction is also found in Mishnaic Hebrew—if Jesus said the words in Hebrew rather than Aramaic.

covenant. Some manuscripts add the adjective “new,” but this is probably by assimilation to the text of 1 Cor 11:25. Cf. Isa 42:6, 49:8; Jer 31:31 ff.; and also Oscar Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament, tr. by S. C. Guthrie and C. A. M. Hall (London: SCM, 1957), pp. 64 ff.; Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1959.

poured out for many. On the crucial importance of this clause, cf. NOTE on 20:28. The Last Supper (at which, according to John 17, Jesus consecrated himself for his imminent death at the hand of others) is the one occasion in the synoptic gospels where Jesus gives his death a sacrificial interpretation. It is important at this juncture to choose words with care. The “New Covenant” of Jer 31:31 ff. does not mention sacrificial blood (cf. StB, I, p. 991), and the conjunction of “blood” and “covenant” in the rabbinic writings is concerned with circumcision more often than with anything else—i.e., the blood of initiation into a Covenant already established. Plainly, several OT concepts underlie this apparently simple declaration of Jesus over the cup, and the basic understanding is that of the Servant who pours out his life for “the many,” the community of Israel (cf. Isa 53:10, 12).

We return now to the phrase for many. We have emphasized above that never in our NT sources is Jesus represented as inaugurating a separatist movement, and the Pauline letters, for all their insistence on the word “new” to describe God’s act in Jesus, never describe the Church as “the new Israel.” Jesus, then, voluntarily pours out his life for the community of Israel, and in so doing inaugurates a New Covenant for a Covenant Community already in being. The subsequent admission of Gentiles into the Messianic Community created by this New Covenant was therefore an admission into a community which believed itself to be the true heirs of the promises to Abraham (cf. Rom 9–11).

Bultmann, in his discussion of Mark 10:45, together with the passage now under consideration, dismisses the whole complex as a “Hellenistic-Christian doctrine of salvation” (Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition, p. 154).

29. It is impossible to be certain whether this saying is in context, or whether it has been attracted to its present position by the cup of vs. 27. Mark 14:25 does not have the emphatic from now on of Matthew, though Luke 22:18 preserves it (in a parallel form). Perhaps Luke’s emphatic assertion that the occasion was a Passover meal (Luke 22:15), together with 1 Cor 11:26, provides us with the best meaning which we can achieve at this remove. The words are no solemn farewell, but a looking forward to the perpetual fellowship of the Messianic Age (cf. Enoch lxii 14 and see also Rev 3:21).

There is, however, considerable variation in different traditions. Matthew speaks of my Father’s Kingdom (which for Matthew looks beyond the Messianic Kingdom), where Mark and Luke speak of “the Kingdom of God.” Luke 22:16 speaks of the Passover as being “fulfilled in the Kingdom of God,” and Paul’s 1 Cor 11:26 further complicates matters by speaking of the Lord’s Supper as “proclaiming the Lord’s death until he comes.” With the sources that we presently have, we can make two suggestions: (a) The uncertainty which is reflected in Acts and the earlier Pauline letters about the precise meaning of the “coming” of The Man may be at work in the two sayings as they are recorded in Luke 22:16, 18. The “coming” of the Kingdom, in the exaltation of Jesus by the Father, certainly would mean the fulfillment of Passover. In 1 Cor 11:26 there is a shift from this primary meaning to an expected second coming of Jesus in glory. (b) Matthew’s tradition sees this fulfillment in terms which look beyond the Messianic Kingdom to the Father’s Kingdom, a differentiation which we examined in Part VII of the Introduction. Which of the two traditions is more original, we have no means of determining. One further note must be added: the vine as a symbol of Israel is well known throughout the OT. Behind the sayings as we now have them there may originally have been a saying of Jesus which spoke in terms (later misunderstood) of the fulfillment of Israel in the Kingdom, in much the same way that Paul speaks of that fulfillment in Rom 11.

95. PASSOVER: GETHSEMANE

(26:30–46)[†]

26 ³⁰ Having sung a hymn, they went to the Mount of Olives. ³¹ Jesus then said to them, “All of you will fall away from me tonight. For it is recorded: ‘I will strike the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock will be scattered,’ ³² but after I am raised up, I will go before you into Galilee.” ³³ Peter however answered: “Even though they are all ashamed of you, I will certainly not be ashamed.” ³⁴ “I solemnly tell you,” Jesus said to him, “that this very night, before cockcrow, you will three times deny me.” ³⁵ “Even if I must die with you,” Peter answered him, “I will not deny you,” and all the disciples made similar declarations.

³⁶ Then Jesus went with them to a place called Gethsemane, and he said to his disciples, “Sit here, while I go over there to pray.” ³⁷ Taking with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, he began to be distressed and very troubled, ³⁸ and said to them, “I am troubled with deadly anguish—stay here and watch with me.” ³⁹ He went a little farther, prostrated himself, and prayed: “My Father, if possible, let this cup pass from me; notwithstanding, your will be done, not mine.” ⁴⁰ He went to the disciples, found them sleeping, and said to Peter, “So you could not watch with me for one hour? ⁴¹ Watch, and pray that you do not come into the fiery trial. The spirit is certainly willing, but mere humanity is frail.” ⁴² Going away for the second time, again he prayed: “My Father, if it is impossible for this cup to pass away without my drinking from it, your will be done.”⁴³ On his return, he again found them sleeping, for their eyes were heavy,⁴⁴ and leaving them again, he prayed for the third time in the same way.⁴⁵ Then he went back to the disciples. “Are you still sleeping and resting?” he said to them. “See, the hour is almost here, and The Man is delivered up into men’s hands.⁴⁶ Get up, and let us go. My betrayer is near.”

NOTES

26:30. Having sung a hymn. It is of considerable interest here to take note of a suggestion made by Daube (The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, pp. 186 ff.) that the present division of the Passover Haggādā represents changes which were early made in response to the interpretation of a new deliverance, wrought by Jesus, being made by Jewish Christians. Daube, accepting the commonly held view that the passion narrative was the first part of the tradition in fixed form, suggests that Jewish Christians, maintaining the original order of the Passover meal (ceremonial meal, questions, interpretation of the meal), so emphasized the changed character of the observance that the whole order was later deliberately changed by Orthodox Jews. “By relegating the meal to the end, the Rabbis took the life, or at least any undue vitality, out of it.... The change round was a very clever means of preventing any fundamentally new significance being attached to the meal ...” (pp. 194–95). It is also possible that the emphasis by the Essenes on their understanding of “covenant” may have served to accelerate the change. The hymn referred to here is the Hallel (Pss 113–118); it is still sung at the end of the formal Jewish rite, as it was in the time of Jesus.

they went ... The Passover celebration was not confined to a single location. The meal could be eaten in one place, and the recital of prayers, hymns, etc., could be held in another, always provided that the company remained together.

the Mount of Olives. Cf. 24:3. Jesus quotes from Zechariah 13:7, and the mount is mentioned in Zech 14:4. The concluding part of Zechariah is much concerned with the failure of the shepherds of Israel. In ch. 24 Jesus speaks of such failure, and when he is again depicted as being in the same place, he once more speaks of the failure of the future shepherds of his own community in the face of the passion.

36. Then Jesus went with them. The Passover celebration was still in progress for Jesus and his disciples.

36–37. The presence of Peter, James, and John in intimate association with Jesus at critical moments of the ministry is emphasized in all three synoptic gospels.

38–45. Daube (New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, pp. 333–35) reminds us of the rabbinic provision that if during the Passover celebration members of the company fell into a deep sleep, and could not answer at all, then the celebration was regarded as terminated. Distinctions were drawn between a mere doze and deep sleep, and Mark’s account of the Gethsemane episode, when Jesus returned the second time, bears this out (“they did not know what to answer him”). Matthew preserves the distinction for us in his words for “sleeping” (vss. 40 and 43) and the addition of “and resting” in vs. 45. Luke’s account fails to do justice to this ritual distinction. It was not that Jesus wished merely for companionship in his agony of prayer, but that he did not wish the Passover to be brought to an early close. Only in this light do the repeated visits and inquiries of Jesus make real sense.

39. this cup. The expression was commonly used in the ancient world (from Ugarit on) as destiny or fate, and is so found in the OT. As a symbol of suffering, cf. Isa 51:17, 22; Lam 4:21; Ps 11:6.

45–46. “... the hour is almost here, and The Man is delivered ...” Cf. NOTE on 26:24. Jesus indicates by his “Get up ...” that the Passover celebration is ended.

96. ARREST OF JESUS

(26:47–56)[†]

26 ⁴⁷ While he was still speaking, Judas, who was one of the twelve, came with a great crowd from the chief priests and the elders of the people, (armed) with swords and clubs. ⁴⁸ The betrayer had given a sign, telling them, “The one whom I kiss is the man—take him.” ⁴⁹ Immediately he went up to Jesus and said, “Greetings, master!” and kissed him. ⁵⁰ But Jesus said to him, “Friend, you are here.” Then they came up, laid hands on Jesus, and led him away. ⁵¹ One of those who were with Jesus reached out his hand, drew his sword, and struck the high priest’s slave, cutting off his ear. ⁵² Jesus then said to him, “Put your sword back in its place, for all who take up the sword will die by the sword. ⁵³ Do you think that I cannot appeal to my Father, who would at once send me more than twelve legions of angels? ⁵⁴ But then how would the Scriptures be fulfilled, that it must be so?” ⁵⁵ At the same time, Jesus said to the crowds, “Have you come with swords and clubs to seize me, as you would a bandit? Day after day I sat in the temple teaching, and you did not seize me. ⁵⁶ But all this has happened so that the writings of the prophets may be fulfilled.” Then all the disciples abandoned him and fled.

NOTES

Matthew gives no indication as to when Judas left the group of disciples; John (13:30) tells us that it was during the Supper. The impression given here by the evangelist is of a scene of disorder, almost as if an already existing mob had been utilized by the priestly authorities.

26:48. “The one whom I kiss ...” Moses Aberbach has pointed out (see NOTE on 23:7–11) that in any group of teacher and disciples the disciple was never permitted to greet his teacher first, since this implied equality. Judas’ sign, therefore, was not only a final repudiation of his relationship with Jesus and a signal to the mob, but also a studied insult. We may have an indication in the Johannine account (John 18:4 ff.), which does not mention the kiss, that those who accompanied Judas were taken aback even at that stage by the treachery of a onetime disciple.

49. master. This occasion and that in 26:25 are the only ones in Matthew where the title rabbî is used, and in both instances it is used by Judas.

kissed him. The verb is a compound form of the one used in the previous verse (Mark’s verbs are the same two), and it is possible that it indicates a repeated or emphatic action.

50. “Friend, you are here.” On Friend cf. NOTE on 20:13. The meaning of the phrase in Greek, eph’ ho parei, is not certain. It may be rendered as a question, “Why are you here?” but this translation seems to make very little sense. By emending the Greek to aire, it would be possible to render “Take what you have come to get.” Luke’s tradition is here quite different.

51. One of those ... I.e., a disciple. Mark has “a bystander,” and it is John 18:10 which identifies Simon Peter.

Luke (22:51) adds an account of the healing of the man’s ear. Our sources reflect the confusion of the scene, and complete agreement among all four evangelists would destroy our historical perspective. In order to obtain the truest possible idea of what actually happened, we need independent eyewitness reports—the same is true of early oral tradition.

52–54. This incident is described by all four evangelists, so it obviously made an impression on all who witnessed it. The saying quoted by Jesus in these verses has no parallel elsewhere. An article by Hans Kosmala (NovT 4 [1960], 81–95) provides us with some background to Jesus’ saying. The quotation is from a Jewish Aramaic Targum (paraphrase) of Isa 50:11: “Behold, all you that kindle a fire, that take the sword: go, fall into the fire you have kindled, and fall by the sword you have taken. From my Word (Mēmra) you have this; you shall return to your destruction.” This is, then, not simply a proverbial saying, but a scriptural saying with eschatological meaning. God’s will is being fulfilled and nothing can hinder it.

53. To appeal for deliverance at this time (at once) would deny to authority its hour, and the purpose of God declared in the Scriptures must be accomplished (cf. Zech 13:7). Luke 22:53b preserves a similar meaning—“this is your hour.”

55. Day after day. Cf. the secret decision to arrest Jesus, in 26:4.

56. the prophets. Cf. NOTE on vss. 52–54 above, on Isa 50:11, and also Isa 53:12, which is quoted in John 16:32. Cf. also Zech 13:7.

abandoned him. Perhaps here again there is a reminiscence of Zech 13:17, but in this case the flock is abandoning its shepherd.

97. JESUS BEFORE THE COUNCIL

(26:57–68)[†]

26 ⁵⁷ Those who had seized Jesus led him to Caiaphas, the high priest, where the scribes and elders had assembled. ⁵⁸ Peter, however, followed them at a distance, as far as the high priest's courtyard, and entering, sat with the guards to see the end. ⁵⁹ The high priest and the whole gathering searched for perjured testimony against Jesus, on which basis they might kill him, ⁶⁰ but they did not find anything plausible, even though many perjured witnesses came forward. At last two came forward ⁶¹ and said, "This man said 'I can destroy God's temple and rebuild it in three days.' " ⁶² The high priest, standing up, said to him, "Have you no answer to what these men testify against you?" ⁶³ But Jesus was silent, and the high priest said to him, "I charge you by the living God that you tell us if you are the Messiah, God's Son." ⁶⁴ "The words are yours," Jesus said to him, "but more than that—I tell you that from now on you will see The Man seated at the right hand of power and coming on the clouds of heaven." ⁶⁵ Thereupon, the high priest tore his himation, with the words: "He has blasphemed! What further need have we of witnesses? Now that you have heard the blasphemy, ⁶⁶ how does it appear to you?" They all answered, "He deserves the death penalty."

⁶⁷ They spat in his face, struck him, and some slapped him, ⁶⁸ with the words, "Show us your prophetic power, you Messiah! Who struck you?"

NOTES

26:57. As in vs. 3, Matthew gives the name of the high priest.

58. Peter. However refracted, it is possible that much of the information about the trial before the Sanhedrin came from Peter and the beloved disciple (John 18).

59. testimony. Deut 19:15 demands “the evidence of two or three witnesses” to sustain an accusation.

60–61. Evidently witnesses contradicted each other. Two remember Jesus’ prophecy of the destruction of the temple (cf. 23:38 and 24:2). If we may judge from John 2:21, the witnesses combined one prediction of Jesus with a rumor they may have heard of his passion-resurrection sayings. Matthew’s tradition is not without difficulty here. In Mark 14:57–58 the charge of destroying the temple is dismissed because the witnesses could not agree. But Matthew, by emphasizing two, seems to indicate that this was part, at any rate, of the evidence used in condemnation in the following verse, 62.

63. Jesus is put under solemn oath to answer to a claim of being the Messiah. Whatever views the ruling party might have on the coming of the Messiah, it should be emphasized that the act of claiming to be the Messiah was not one which was in itself blasphemous. We have no evidence of what view was taken in ruling circles about the use of “God’s Son.”

64. The words are yours. This answer appears evasive in English; however, cf. 26:25 and NOTE there. (Mark records unambiguously, “I am!”) If the Sanhedrin was to carry a capital charge to Pilate, it had to be such as to leave no doubt in the mind of the governor. John’s gospel is clear that it was a charge of making himself a king which constituted the principal accusation, though the point is made far more directly than in the synoptic gospels. There were, in any case, so many theological interpretations of Messiahship, that Jesus’ reply does not commit him to one view or another. Cf. for Jesus’ answer the reply of Bar Kappara to questions as to whether Rabbi Judah the Patriarch (late second century A.D. and editor of the Mishnah) was dead or not. Bar Kappara, aware that it had been proclaimed that anyone who announced Rabbi Judah’s death was to be killed, discovered that the patriarch was dead. He said to the crowd, “Angels and mortals took hold of the holy ark. The angels overpowered the mortals and the holy ark has been captured.” To a direct question as to whether that meant that Rabbi Judah was dead, Bar Kappara replied, “You said it; I did not say it.”

Messiahship might mean a number of things to Pharisees, to Essenes, and to Zealots, including the possibility of an armed revolt. To Sadducees it clearly meant a threat to their entrenched position. Jesus throughout his ministry saw Messiahship in terms which he had used only in speaking to the inner circle. He could not now make a simple affirmative without compromising his whole ministry and teaching.

from now on ... The Greek is quite emphatic. Those listening to Jesus are asked to see in the person surrounded by enemies The-Man-in-glory, the cloud rider of Dan 7:13 ff. (cf. also Ps 110:1). In a very real sense this is the climax of all that Matthew’s tradition has so carefully preserved for us in the sayings about The Man. Though Jesus does not say “You will see me,” the identification is plain enough to his hearers.

65. The tearing of one’s clothes on hearing blasphemy was well known in this period. In the OT such a gesture was commonly associated with great grief and distress. However, such a gesture was forbidden to the high priest (cf. Lev 21:10).

He has blasphemed. If Caiaphas was a Sadducee, then aside from Jesus’ unspoken claim to be seen as The-Man-in-glory, which he would regard as blasphemy, the mention of angels together with a report of an implied possible resurrection was certainly heretical to him.

66. “He deserves the death penalty.” There is no suggestion that such a sentence was in fact given by the Sanhedrin, and the scene which follows in vss. 67–68 seems to represent an outburst of angry frustration.

67. Cf. Isa 50:6.

68. Cf. 27:27–31.

COMMENT

It is now necessary to say something for the general, non-technical reader about current debate on the trial of Jesus. The publication by Paul Winter of his On the Trial of Christ, Leiden: Brill, 1961, has in many ways provided the focus for this debate. Broadly speaking, the issues are these:

(a) Was the appearance of Jesus before the responsible leaders of his own people a legally constituted hearing by the Sanhedrin?

(b) Was the Sanhedrin in the time of Jesus legally entitled, under Roman occupation, to pass and carry out the death sentence?

(c) Are the evangelists seeking, for reasons of their own, to exculpate the Roman authorities of any responsibility for the death of Jesus and fasten that responsibility on the Jews?

(d) Are the discrepancies in detail between the gospel narratives such as to cast doubt on the veracity of the whole story?

It is best to dispose of the last question first. If there were solid agreement, item by item and step by step, throughout the whole narrative, then there would be grounds for the gravest suspicion. Luke (who was not a disciple) tells us of the care he took in gathering information (1:1–4). There are items in the traditions of the other evangelists which Luke did not know, while he alone preserved the account of an appearance before Herod (23:6–12). John's version is very widely different, and makes the theological charge the principal burden of accusation. Here again John has details, mainly concerned with Pilate, which the three synoptic gospels do not have or did not even know. What emerges from a reading of all the accounts is an effort by the evangelists to piece together conflicting and puzzling traditions, often preserved in all probability by men who had not close contact with the processes of either Jewish or Roman law, but who clung tenaciously to what they knew or had heard. The atmosphere of noise and confusion, of hurried and secret consultation, is well marked. If this seems to be at variance with the relative calm which we have learned to associate with our own courts, it is well to emphasize not only that few "eyewitnesses" or "special correspondents" can be found to agree in detail even in these days of television reporting, but also that many recent trial scenes have been anything but scenes of calm detachment. In considering the other questions generally raised with regard to Jesus' trial, the reader is referred to an important book, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament, by the distinguished student of Roman law A. N. Sherwin-White, Oxford University Press, 1963. His principal arguments are reproduced here, as they apply to the questions we raised.

(a, b) Certainly the Sanhedrin possessed absolute police control over the temple area, including the power to pass sentence of death on Gentiles (even Roman citizens) who were found guilty of violating the innermost temple court. But this was a special case, and is described as such by Josephus (Jewish War VI. 2. 4), because of the extreme delicacy of the political situation in Jerusalem. If the Sanhedrin really did have powers of capital jurisdiction, then this explicit Roman provision was quite unnecessary. The mere fact of the provision proves that apart from this instance no power of capital sentence resided with the Sanhedrin at this period. It was precisely under this provision that Paul was accused (Acts 21:27–29), but even with this special provision the Sanhedrin could not act on its own and had to bring the case to the procurator. In all our gospels the appearance of Jesus before the Sanhedrin is treated very briefly, and it is clear from the accounts that, however solid-seeming the charge of blasphemy, the Sanhedrin could not impose a capital sentence, no matter how great the pressure. The contradiction in the case of Stephen (Acts 7) is only apparent. Sherwin-White observes that there was no permanent civil service to assist the provincial governor, that even in Jerusalem Paul had a narrow escape, and that the only Roman officials of whom we hear in the gospels and Acts, apart from the prefect or procurator, are three centurions and Claudius Lysias (cf. Acts 21–23—he was military tribune of the cohort in Jerusalem). Essentially, Roman authority in the provinces meant military presence. In the absence of the governor, it was not difficult to evade the law.

(c) John's gospel concentrates all the force of the argument for the condemnation of Jesus on a theological charge, even before Pilate, where Matthew and Mark both emphasize the charge of civil rebellion. Luke's tradition combines both, though with less emphasis on the theological charge before Pilate. Here again Sherwin-White maintains that those who represent the evangelists as seeking to shift responsibility from Roman authority to Jewish mob-violence have missed an essential point. It is that any Roman provincial administrator was entirely free to make his own criminal rules, there being no criminal code for the provinces, and for "trials outside the system" (extra ordinem) he could accept or reject charges as he saw fit. Though most governors tended to follow the code as they knew it in Italy, there was no law—only custom—in the procedure to be followed. This demanded that the governor hold trials in public, seated on the tribunal, and that charges had to be made by the interested parties as prosecutors. The accused had an opportunity to defend himself (cf. Acts 25:16). There was no jury, though the governor usually took the advice of a committee of assessors (consilium). The verdict was given, if the charge was proved, by way of sentence to a particular punishment. These procedures were faithfully followed in the Roman trials of Paul (cf. Acts 21:27– 28, 24:1–2, 25:6–7, 10, 12). Roman officials are seen in Acts as refusing to “take knowledge” (a technical law term) of cases concerned specifically with the Jewish Law (cf. Acts 18:14 ff. and 25:18 ff.).

We wish to state quite clearly that the above comment is only a brief summary of a very considerable subject, and it would be a mistake to assume that the subject is either basically simple or easily settled. Two final notes may be added. First, we are not in possession of nearly enough material evidence to be as confident as Paul Winter seems to be. Sherwin-White holds that Winter (cf. COMMENT above), though himself trained in Roman law, depends on the mistaken views of two authors—Hans Lietzmann and Jean Juster, in 1931 and 1914, respectively—neither of whom was a professional Roman legal historian. Secondly, if the gospels rest (as we hold that they do) upon early fixed oral sources, then there was absolutely no point in attempting to shift responsibility from the procurator to the Sanhedrin, before the Jewish War of 66–73 posed weighty problems of allegiance. (In this respect, cf. Acts 3:17 ff.) We may reasonably entertain the suspicion that much of the debate about the trial of Jesus, as with so much of the debate about the New Testament, really derives from an a priori assumption that all our sources are late and unreliable, where not tendentious or deliberately untruthful.*

John, with the sectarian sympathies of its author, certainly betrays prejudices against orthodox Judaism. The constant reiteration in that gospel of “the Jews” ought to have warned us long ago, but the work of Abram Spiro (cf. Appendix V in Munck, The Acts of the Apostles) has made it very clear that sectarian sympathizers sharply distinguished in this period between “Hebrews” (i.e., the Samaritans) or “Israel” (i.e., the Essenes) and “Jews.” It is worth adding at this point that neither archaeological finds nor the discoveries at Qumran have contributed anything to our knowledge of the processes of Roman or Jewish law in the time of Jesus. At this time, all we are entitled to say is that our gospels clearly place the responsibility for deciding capital criminal cases upon the Roman imperial authority, in Palestine at any rate. Any exercise of jurisdiction in this area by Jewish authorities could apparently only be undertaken in an interregnum. Mob violence, rather than judicial process, seems to have been at work in the death of Stephen (Acts 7:54–60).

98. PETER'S DENIAL

(26:69–75)[†]

26 ⁶⁹ Peter sat outside in the courtyard and a girl came up to him, asserting, “You were also with Jesus the Galilean.” ⁷⁰ But before them all he denied it: “I do not know what you mean,” he said. ⁷¹ Then when he went out to the porch another girl saw him, and said to the bystanders, “This fellow was with Jesus of Nazareth.” ⁷² Again he denied it with an oath: “I do not know the man.” ⁷³ A short time later the bystanders came up and said to Peter, “Certainly you are one of them, for your accent gives you away.” ⁷⁴ He then began to call down a curse on himself, and to swear, “I do not know the man.” Immediately the cock crowed. ⁷⁵ Peter remembered Jesus’ words, “Before cockcrow you will deny me three times.” And he went out and wept bitterly.

NOTES

Unless the figure of Peter overshadowed the early Community to the extent depicted for us in the early chapters of Acts, it is difficult to see why this account of his denial of Jesus should be given so prominent a place in such a comparatively extended form in all the gospels. The differences between the various accounts are minor.

26:70. before them all. This is perhaps a reference back to 10:33.

74. This probably points to the standard oath formula: "May God dispose of me as he will, if I am not telling the truth." Cf. 1 Kings 19:2.

75. Cf. vs. 34.

wept bitterly. Cf. 2 Cor 7:10 for the difference between two kinds of sorrow. Peter's led to repentance, that of Judas led to suicide.

99. JESUS TAKEN TO PILATE

(27:1–2)[†]

27 ¹When day came, all the chief priests and the elders of the people made plans against Jesus to kill him, ²and putting him in chains they took him and handed him over to Pilate the governor.

NOTES

Whether or not the Sanhedrin had the power to pass and carry out the death sentence, its members evidently decided to rely on the discretionary powers of the Roman authority to “take knowledge” of any particular case, and so took Jesus as prisoner to Pilate. The death of Jesus was to be encompassed by some means, and the varying statements of John and the synoptic writers as to the precise charges before Pilate certainly add up to a determination to have the matter dealt with by the occupying power. The governor had discretion in dealing with matters which concerned Jewish internal polity; he also (like Gallio in a later instance) had power to dismiss such things as being peripheral. One difference must be noticed. Gallio (pro-consul of Achaia A.D. 53–?64—cf. Acts 18:12–17) could afford to dismiss such issues as seemed to arise from internal dissension within Judaism, for he was dealing with a minority group in a largely Hellenistic environment. No such option was open to Pilate. However conflicting the testimony may appear to us as between the synoptic gospels and John, Pilate could not, dared not, ignore an issue which threatened the security of Jerusalem during the tense circumstances of a Passover celebration.

27:2. Pilate the governor (Gr. hēgemōn). This is the first mention of Pilate in Matthew. He was procurator of Judea from A.D. 26–36. According to Josephus (Antiquities XVIII. 4.1 f.), he was recalled because of his cruelty. Contrary to some writers, nothing is proved by the supposed conflict between the description of Pilate as “procurator” in this gospel and the evidence from a recently discovered inscription of Pilate (in Caesarea, which was his capital) as “prefect.” This was his own official title, prefectus judeae, and we may suppose that the title “procurator” was a later promotion in dignity. In both cases, the powers reserved to the local representative of Rome were the same. Tacitus (Annals XV. 44) describes Pilate as “procurator in the reign of Tiberius.” It is also possible that the designation was loosely applied; cf. R. M. Grant, IDB, III (K–Q), s.v. “Procurator.”

100. DEATH OF JUDAS

(27:3–10)[†]

27 ³ Then Judas the traitor, seeing that Jesus had been condemned, repented and took the thirty silver pieces to the chief priests and elders of the people. ⁴ “I have sinned by betraying an innocent man!” he said. ⁵ But they replied, “How does that concern us? That is your affair.” Throwing down the silver pieces toward the Most Holy Place, he withdrew and went away and hanged himself. ⁶ Picking up the silver pieces, the chief priests said, “It is unlawful to put this into the treasury, for it is blood money.” ⁷ Therefore, after coming to an agreement about it, they used the money to buy Potter’s Field as a burying place for foreigners, ⁸ and to this day that field is known as “The Field of Blood.” ⁹ Then there was fulfilled the saying of the prophet Jeremiah:
“And they took the thirty silver pieces,
the amount the people of Israel had agreed to pay for him, ¹⁰ and used them to buy Potter’s Field, as the Lord commanded me.”

NOTES

The incident here recorded by Matthew is not paralleled in the other gospels. The account agrees only in part with Luke's tradition in Acts 1:18 f. We can merely surmise that there were varying traditions about Judas' death. Matthew's purpose is not to provide information for the sensation monger, but once again to call attention to "fulfillment." The context in Zech 11:13, from which the quotation in vss. 9–10 comes, is important, as are all the contexts in which Matthew's quotations are set. The Shepherd of Israel has been valued at a paltry sum by the rulers, and hence that derisory sum should be cast away.

27:5. toward the Most Holy Place. The Greek word here used (naos) is that used to denote the Holy of Holies, the innermost shrine of the temple—pagan temples as well as the temple in Jerusalem.

6. treasury (Gr. korbanas). The word is Hebrew/Aramaic, and is found in Josephus (Jewish War II. 175) for the money kept in the temple; it also appears in an Aramaic inscription from Jerusalem from before A.D. 70, though the exact sense is disputed. In place of yôṣēr, "potter," in Zech 11:13, the Syriac translates "treasury of the Lord's house," rendering Heb. 'ôṣār; this reading has been accepted by many modern scholars.

9. Jeremiah. The quotation is from Zechariah (11:12–13). The Greek is not that of the LXX, and is a loose translation. We are in no position to determine whether the evangelist's original had Zechariah or Jeremiah. If Allen's suggestion (in his St. Matthew commentary, p. 288) is correct, then the confusion may have been introduced by the recollection that Jeremiah purchased a field and also visited a potter (Jer 18:2 ff. and 32:6–15).

101. JESUS QUESTIONED BY PILATE

(27:11–14)[†]

27 ¹¹ Jesus stood before the governor, who questioned him, asking, “Are you the king of the Jews?” ¹² Jesus replied, “The words are yours,” but when he was accused by the chief priests and the elders he made no reply. ¹³ Then Pilate said to him, “Do you not hear all the accusations they bring against you?” ¹⁴ But he did not answer, even with a single word, so that the governor was astounded.

NOTES

27:11. “Are you the king of the Jews?” The Sanhedrin had demanded an acknowledgment of Messiahship, and in spite of Jesus’ reply seized on this issue as a means to bring the case to the governor. It was a simple matter to explain the term “Messiah” as “king.” Pilate was therefore confronted, not only with a possible charge of treason against the Roman imperial authority, but also with a possible claimant to the throne of Herod. Cf. Luke 23:2.

12–13. Cf. 26:62. Presumably the accusers were making charges of treason, and it is in this sense that John’s gospel reports the matter (John 18–19).

102. JESUS SENTENCED TO DEATH

(27:15–26)[†]

27 ¹⁵ At the time of the festival the governor was accustomed to release for the crowd any prisoner whom they wished, ¹⁶ and they held then a notorious prisoner called [Jesus] Barabbas. ¹⁷ Therefore when they had gathered together, Pilate asked them, “Whom do you wish me to release for you—[Jesus] Barabbas, or Jesus known as Messiah?” ¹⁸ (for he recognized that they had handed him over out of spite). ¹⁹ While he was sitting on the judgment seat, his wife sent to him the message, “Have nothing to do with that Righteous One, for I have suffered a good deal in a dream about him.” ²⁰ But the chief priests and the elders had persuaded the people to ask for Barabbas and destroy Jesus. ²¹ The governor again said to them, “Which of the two do you want released to you?” They replied, “Barabbas.” ²² “What then,” Pilate returned, “shall I do with Jesus who is called Messiah?” They all said, “Let him be crucified!” ²³ But he said, “Why? What evil has he committed?” But they shouted all the more “Let him be crucified!” ²⁴ Pilate, recognizing that he could do nothing, but rather that a riot was in the making, took water and washed his hands in the sight of the crowd, with the words: “I am innocent of this man’s death; see to it yourselves.” ²⁵ To this all the people answered, “Let the guilt rest upon us and upon our children!” ²⁶ He then released Barabbas, and having flogged Jesus handed him over to be crucified.

NOTES

We know nothing from external sources of the custom described for us by Matthew, Mark, and John, and this account of a (local?) custom has from time to time been used to discredit the whole narrative of the trial of Jesus. Apart altogether from the agreement of three evangelists on this point, it is necessary to emphasize once again how meager and fragmentary is our information on the operation of Roman administration in provincial jurisdictions. Luke speaks of the savage punishment visited by Pilate on some Galileans. It is possible that this was a suppression of Zealots or other insurgents. Such insurgent activity must always have posed a problem for any Roman administrator in Palestine, and Mark 15:7 may give us a hint of what lay behind this reported custom of Pilate. It is at least likely that in the explosive and turbulent conditions of the Passover celebration in Jerusalem, the governor thought to assuage the emotions of the crowd by an annual display of clemency to one of their imprisoned countrymen.

27:16. We have preferred the reading Jesus Barabbas on the grounds that the dropping of the name “Jesus” by a later editor (or scribe) is far more likely than the addition of that name. It is Mark who gives us the information that Barabbas had been involved in insurrection.

17. Mark depicts the governor as asking whether the crowd wishes him to release the king of the Jews. This scornful attempted dismissal of the issue accords well with vs. 18. Matthew has called attention before to the spite of the native leaders—cf. 21:15 f. and 45.

19. This incident, reported only by Matthew, has one interesting feature. It is the use by Pilate’s wife of that Righteous One. We have called attention elsewhere to this old Messianic title, which was becoming archaic by NT times, but we have no means of determining why Pilate’s wife is here said to have used the designation. In Acts 7:52 we have the title used by one who may have been a Jewish sectarian, and its use elsewhere (e.g., in the Johannine letters, 1 John 2:1) may indicate a sectarian background for the author of at least one of the Johannine letters.

20. Mark simply records the demand of the crowd to have Barabbas released. Only Matthew has the added detail of the elders.

22–23. The Lukan tradition represents Pilate as having sent Jesus to Herod, and with the result of that abortive examination before him, declares his intention of releasing Jesus. John’s gospel tells of the crowd confronting Pilate with twin charges against Jesus of blasphemy and potential rebellion, implying that the release of Jesus would seriously compromise the governor’s loyalty to Rome.

We must emphasize again that we are dealing here not with the studied calm of a dispassionate legal examination, but with a mob scene outside the crowded city of Jerusalem at Passover. The recollected traditions preserved in all three synoptic evangelists, as well as in John, must therefore be seen against a confused scene of mounting disorder, in which no single person present could hope to preserve all details.

Let him be crucified! It is difficult to see why the Matthean tradition of the verb (cf. Mark’s “Crucify him!”) should be thought to place responsibility for the death of Jesus on the mob rather than on Pilate.

24. The possibility of riot in an overcrowded Jerusalem was always present. In such circumstances the governor might all the more readily bow to the demands of the crowd. From his point of view the death of one man was the lesser evil.

washed his hands. The incident is recorded by Matthew alone.

this man’s death. Many manuscripts have “I am innocent of the blood of this Righteous One.” Cf. NOTE on vs. 19.

25. Let the guilt... It is almost certain that this cry was remembered and preserved by tradition because of the events of A.D. 66–70. It was emphatically not remembered as a condemnation of generations unborn, and ought never so to be used. Cf. J. A. Fitzmyer, “Antisemitism and the Cry of ‘All the People’ (Matt 27:25),” TS 26 (1965), 667–71.

103. THE MOCKING

(27:27–31)[†]

27 ²⁷ Then the governor's troops took Jesus into the praetorium, and the whole battalion paraded together before him; ²⁸ they stripped him, put a scarlet robe on him, ²⁹ and plaiting a circlet of thorns they put it on his head, and placed a reed in his right hand. Kneeling before him, they mocked him with the words "Hail, King of the Jews!" ³⁰ They spat on him, took the reed and hit him on the head. ³¹ When they had made a mockery of him, they stripped him of the robe, and put his own clothes on him, and led him away to crucify him.

NOTES

There are some minor differences in this account from the tradition as recorded by Mark. Luke's account (23:11 f.) has a tradition of mock-homage by Herod's men.

27:27. praetorium. The official residence of the governor.

the whole battalion. I.e., a cohort, about six hundred men, and the tenth part of one legion.

28. stripped him. Some manuscripts have the word endusantes (clothed him). Jesus would have been stripped already for the flogging.

scarlet robe (Gr. chlamuda kokkinē). The robe here referred to, the chlamus, was usually a military cloak. The word used for "scarlet" does not mean "royal purple," i.e., "deep red," but suggests that a cheaper red cloak may have been substituted for the expensive robe of deep red.

29. It is possible that the circlet of thorns was meant as a cheap (and painful) imitation of the radiant circlet depicted on the coins of Tiberius Caesar. The reed would similarly correspond to the scepter, which the same coins depict in the emperor's hand.

"Hail, King of the Jews!" Cf. the common contemporary greeting of the emperor, "Ave Caesar!"

104. THE CRUCIFIXION

(27:32–44)[†]

27 ³² As they were going out they found a Cyrenian named Simon, and they compelled this man to carry his cross. ³³ When they came to a place called Golgotha, which means the Place of a Skull, ³⁴ they offered him wine to drink, mingled with gall, but when he tasted it he would not drink it. ³⁵ When they had crucified him, they divided his clothes, casting lots, ³⁶ and then sat down there and watched him. ³⁷ Over his head they placed the charge against him, which read: “This is Jesus, the King of the Jews.” ³⁸ Then two bandits were crucified with him, one on his right hand, and the other on the left. ³⁹ The passers-by derided him, shaking their heads: ⁴⁰ “You who would destroy the temple and build it in three days,” they said, “save yourself! If you are God’s son, come down from the cross!” ⁴¹ In similar fashion the chief priests, with the scribes and elders, mocked him with the words: ⁴² “He saved others, but he cannot save himself. If he is the king of Israel, then let him come down from the cross, and we will believe in him. ⁴³ Does he trust in God? Then let him deliver him now, if he wants him, for he said, ‘I am God’s son.’ ” ⁴⁴ The bandits who were crucified with him also heaped scorn on him.

NOTES

27:32. As they were going out. This is an allusion to the parable in 21:39. The position of the traditional site of the crucifixion inside the present city is deceptive, since the present northern city limits are outside those of the city in the time of Jesus.

a Cyrenian named Simon. To this detail of the man's name, Mark (15:21) is able to add information about his family, presumably because he was known to some Christians and may have become a convert himself.

compelled. The Greek means "pressed into service." The same sense applies as in 5:41.

Golgotha. The name may have been given to the place from its resemblance to a skull, or it may have been so named as a regular place of execution.

34. wine to drink mingled with gall. The latter was a stupefying drug (cf. Ps 69:21).

35. divided his clothes. The soldiers who carried out the sentence had a right to the clothes of the criminal. Cf. Ps 22:18 and below on vs. 46.

36. Mark at this point adds the detail that it was about 9 A.M. Matthew's watched him, when taken in combination with vss. 62–66, and 28:4, 11–15, may be intended to emphasize that Jesus truly suffered physical death and burial. We know from the Johannine letters how early the Docetic belief was propagated that Jesus only appeared to be in the flesh.

37. It was usual for the charge against the criminal to be publicly displayed.

38. Bandits are attested in all the gospels. The fact that the execution of Jesus was but one of three underlines the confusion attending the pre-crucifixion scene and the execution itself. Luke's tradition (23:39 ff.) is that one bandit repented.

39. the passers-by. Cf. Lam 2:15; Ps 22:7.

40. Much of the material here is broadly reminiscent of Wisd Sol 2. Cf. 26:61.

"If you are God's son," Cf. 4:3, 6.

41. Once again Matthew adds the detail of the elders.

43. Although this verse as it stands appears to be part of the crowd's mockery, it is composed of allusions to Ps 22:8 and Wisd Sol 2:18. It is possible that it reflects the evangelist's meditations rather than the taunts of the crowd.

105. DEATH OF JESUS

(27:45–56)[†]

27 ⁴⁵ From noon there was darkness over all the land until three o'clock, ⁴⁶ and around three o'clock Jesus called in a loud voice, "Eli, Eli, lema sabachthani," which means "My God, my God, why have you abandoned me?" ⁴⁷ Some of the bystanders, when they heard this, said, "This man is calling for Elijah." ⁴⁸ At once one of them ran, took a sponge, filled it with sour wine, and putting it on a reed, gave it to him to drink, ⁴⁹ but the rest said, "Let things take their course; let us see whether Elijah will come to save him." ⁵⁰ Jesus again gave a loud cry, and yielded up the spirit. ⁵¹ Then the curtain of the Most Holy Place was torn in two, from top to bottom, the earth shook, rocks were shattered, ⁵² the tombs were opened as well, and many bodies of the saints who had died were raised, ⁵³ and coming out of the tombs at the time of his resurrection they went into the holy city and appeared to many people. ⁵⁴ When the centurion and his companions who were keeping watch over Jesus saw the earthquake and what happened, they were awestruck, and said, "Truly this was God's son." ⁵⁵ There were also many women, looking on from a distance, who had followed Jesus from Galilee and looked after him. ⁵⁶ Among them were Mary of Magdala, Mary the mother of James and Joseph, and the mother of Zebedee's sons.

NOTES

45. darkness over all the land. Matthew's narrative is here closer in the Greek to Exod 10:22 than is that of Mark. Cf. below in COMMENT.

46. The Greek manuscripts of both Matthew and Mark vary in this verse. It is possible that Mark had Eloi, which may be an old Hebrew form still used at that time for "my God." In later times the vocalized Hebrew form was Elohai, literally "my Gods," used as a plural of majesty, where Matthew has Eli, closer to the Hebrew of Ps 22:1 (2H). It may also be an unusually early case of Aramaic "obscuration" of ā to ō in normal late Western Aramaic. There are other allusions to Ps 22 in vss. 35, 39, and 43. This is the only utterance of Jesus recorded by Matthew and Mark during the crucifixion. The fact that it was in Aramaic may suggest that Jesus knew and remembered the Psalms in Aramaic.

47. Elijah. According to the OT, Elijah did not die but was translated, and the common belief was that the prophet would come to the aid of the distressed. The onlookers misheard Jesus' cry, which in the circumstances is hardly surprising.

48. Matthew's narrative agrees with Mark's against Luke's, which is here obscure: it was one of the onlookers, not a soldier, who ran to Jesus' help.

49. Mark makes it appear that it was the helper who wished to wait and see what would happen.

50. yielded up the spirit. This is a very different expression from Mark's "expired," or "breathed his last." In the light of what will be said in the COMMENT, it is important to attempt to penetrate the evangelist's meaning more fully. In the first instance, the only examples in classical Greek for "give up the ghost" in the sense of "to die" and using the formula employed here, seem to be in Euripides and Aeschylus. In those instances there is no definite article before the Gr. pneuma. The real background of this expression in Matthew would seem to be Gen 35:18 (LXX), though there the word is not pneuma but psychē. It is clear, however, that the interest of the Genesis account is wholly focused on the fact of a new birth at the time of Rachel's death. Two other OT contexts are also significant—Ps 104:30 and Ezek 37, though Ps 104:30 (LXX 103:30) has the verb exapostelēs and not as in Matthew, aphēken. Ezek 37, as is well known, speaks of the renewal of Israel through the "spirit" (or, "breath," Gr. pneuma).

Secondly, the NT understanding of God's act in and through Jesus is that those in the Messianic Community are "born through the Spirit," that it is the Spirit who is the "life-giver" in the Kingdom, and who "dwells in" the members of the Community, and who is also the source of truth to the Community.

Without going into details of exegesis, it is vital to call attention to John 19:30 (Gr. paredōken to pneuma), which can be—and perhaps ought to be—translated "he handed on the Spirit" or "gave over the Spirit."

Only Luke provides us with an account of both an exaltation (Acts 1:1–12; cf. Luke 24:50–52) and a gift of the Spirit (Acts 2:1–36; cf. Luke 24:49). Certainly Luke 24:49 is in complete agreement with John in speaking of the Spirit as the Father's promise, but it is impossible historically to reconcile the Acts account with the tradition of the gift of the Spirit in John (cf. John 20:22). This is not the end of our difficulties, for John has Jesus speaking of his "ascension" to the Father at his resurrection (cf. John 20:17). Cf. C. S. Mann, "The New Testament and the Lord's Ascension," Church Quarterly Review 158 (1957), 452–65. The exaltation of Jesus is regarded by Matthew and John as being bound up with the cross and resurrection, and in the light of all NT writings (apart from Luke), it is certain that Luke has "theologized" the last appearance of Jesus to his disciples. Moreover, long Christian liturgical usage has not only given the Pentecost narrative of Acts 2 a wholly misleading interpretation as the "birthday" of the Community, obscuring the salient fact that the community of the New Covenant was born in the cross and resurrection, it has also given to that local Jerusalem manifestation a universal application which it did not at first possess.

We conclude that Matthew's aphēken to pneuma is completely in agreement with the Johannine tradition—i.e., the gift of the Spirit is bound up with the passion and the resurrection. Cf. C. S. Mann, "Pentecost, the Spirit, and John," in Theology 62 (1959), 188 ff.

51–53. It is certainly no service to scholarship to find in these verses an imaginative piece of fiction on the part of the evangelist, or simply an attempt to garnish the account of the passion with improbable details. Enough has surely become known in the course of the past fifty years about the language and forms of apocalyptic to evaluate this material seriously. W. G. Essame (“Matthew 27:51–54 and John 5:25–29,” ET 76 [1964–65], 103) is certainly correct in seeing here a dramatization of a saying preserved in the Johannine tradition. It is worth noting that Essame is following the lead of a much underrated NT scholar, W. K. Lowther-Clarke, who saw the verses as a triumphant assertion in OT language that the resurrection of Jesus was a divine act. The whole complex of these verses is reminiscent of the triumph of the saints described in Dan 7:18, 21, 22, 25, and 27. We call attention here to the NOTE on vs. 50. At the time of the death of Jesus a new community was born.

51. the curtain of the Most Holy Place. Matthew and Mark report this detail. In the absence of any firm dating for the crucifixion from external sources, coupled with a lack of historical evidence for an earthquake coincidental to the crucifixion, it is not possible to say whether this detail was intended to be read as history, or whether by this means the evangelists are further pursuing symbolism. Eph 2:14 is the Pauline assertion that in the community of the New Covenant Israel now embraces both Jew and Gentile, while Heb 9:8 ff. expresses the way “opened by the sacrifice of the cross.” The position of the saying in Matthew certainly seems to indicate a symbolic meaning. Josephus (Jewish War VI. 299) has an account of an earthquake before the fall of Jerusalem, while a letter of Jerome (120.8) recalls that the now lost Gospel according to the Hebrews speaks of a cleavage in the masonry of the temple porch, which might have left the Most Holy Place open to view. The Talmud (TB, Yoma 39b) has an interesting story concerned with Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai, which reports that the doors of the temple opened of their own accord forty years (sic) before the fall of Jerusalem, so portending the end of the temple.

54. “Truly this was God’s Son.” Matthew and Mark both report this saying. Luke 23:47 has a saying which may reflect an assertion that Jesus was indeed “the Righteous One,” although the Greek is capable of meaning “acquitted.” Dr. Garry Wills of the Johns Hopkins University informs us that dikaïos in classical Greek can only with the greatest difficulty be rendered “innocent.” There is a whole new area of exegesis to be carried out in the Pauline letters with respect to this enigmatic word, and it may well be that investigation will prove that the apostle was more concerned with the incorporation of the individual Christian into the community of the Righteous One than he was with the forensic meanings which have often been fathered on it. In the case of the two synoptic traditions, the saying in this verse is not particularly surprising. The centurion would certainly have learned enough from bystanders, both friendly and hostile, to be aware of what had been said about Jesus as the Righteous One, and to have attempted to render this in his own idiom.

55. many women. It is John who provides us with most of our information as to what happened immediately before and after the death of Jesus. But all the gospels agree in the tradition that it was the women who had followed from Galilee who also watched to the end. Of the disciples, only the “disciple whom Jesus loved” is mentioned after Peter’s denial, and he only in John’s gospel.

looking on from a distance. Cf. Ps 38:11. It is Luke (23:49) who makes the allusion to the psalm much clearer in the Greek.

56. The women are mentioned again in 27:61 and 28:1.

Mary the mother of James and Joseph. Mark has “the mother of James the younger and of Joses” (15:40), the “mother of Joses” at 15:47, and “mother of James” at 16:1. Though Matthew informs us in 13:55 that two of Jesus’ brothers were named James and Joseph, it is quite impossible to determine whether Matthew’s second Mary is meant to imply the mother of Jesus.

mother of Zebedee’s sons. Cf. 20:20. Mark supplies the detail that her name was Salome.

COMMENT

The evangelists say almost nothing of the physical sufferings of Jesus. Their interests are wholly centered on the way in which this physical act of crucifixion was used by God to inaugurate the Kingdom and the New Covenant. The allusions to the Old Testament in the passion narrative underline the emphasis which is laid all through the gospels on God's act. Medieval and post-medieval concentration on the physical agony of the crucifixion steadily obscured the early Christian proclamation of the cross as a "trophy" and sign of victory. The harm done by such concentration is still with us. The cry of triumph which John (19:30) records Jesus as uttering (tetelestai—"it is completed") is unhappily still misunderstood by some as an utterance of patient resignation.

Matthew's quotations from, and allusions to, Pss 22 and 69, are calls to understand the passion as Jesus' obedient response to the Father's will, not the bewildered musings of one caught up in circumstances beyond his control. The cry from the cross in vs. 46 must be seen in the context of the whole psalm. Ps 22, for all its meditation upon immediate suffering, is a triumphant vindication of the ways of God to a "people yet unborn." (Cf. NOTE on vs. 50.)

There are also allusions to OT expectations in the gospel accounts of the crucifixion. The darkness from noon to 3 P.M. may be a reference to the darkness over Egypt before the first Passover, or perhaps a reference to Amos 8:9. In either case, whatever the historical background of the narrative, the emphasis both with reference to the darkness of Egypt and to the darkness in Amos is to God's act. In both cases "the day" belongs to God and not to the forces of evil.

106. BURIAL OF JESUS

(27:57–66)[†]

27 ⁵⁷ At evening there came a rich man from Arimathea, named Joseph, who was attached to Jesus, ⁵⁸ and he went in to Pilate and asked for the body of Jesus, and Pilate ordered it to be given to him. ⁵⁹ Joseph took the body, wrapped it in clean linen, ⁶⁰ laid it in a new tomb of his own which he had dug out of the rock, rolled a great stone to the door of the tomb, and went away. ⁶¹ Mary of Magdala and the other Mary were there, sitting opposite the tomb.

⁶² On the next day, that is, after the day of Preparation, the chief priests and the Pharisees went to Pilate with the request: ⁶³ “Sir, we recall that that impostor, while still living, said, ‘After three days I will rise again.’ ⁶⁴ Therefore order the tomb secured until the third day, in case his disciples go and steal him away and tell the people ‘He has arisen from the dead,’ and the last imposture will be worse than the first.” ⁶⁵ “You have a guard of soldiers,” said Pilate, “go and make it as secure as you can.” ⁶⁶ So they went and made the tomb secure by sealing the stone and setting a guard.

NOTES

27:57. Arimathea (Gr. Arimathaia). The name of this town appears as Rāmethā in the Syriac version (probably the Ramathaim-sophim of Samuel, where the family of the latter lived). The Greek form of the name may stand for an Aramaic Rāmēthayyā, “The (Two) Heights,” also called simply Rāmēthā (if correctly vocalized) as in the Peshitta. Later the name was partly Hellenized as Remtis (following a common practice; cf. Emmaus for Ḥammātā) in the Syro-Palestinian recension based substantially on the Peshitta. Hence modern Arabic Rentīs. (The native name at the time of Christ may have been Hārematay(in), an aramaized Hebrew form.)

Joseph. All our gospels give us an account of this man who had attached himself to Jesus. John 19:38 provides the additional information that Joseph’s attachment to Jesus was secret. Similarly, it is John who tells us that in his work of piety he was joined by Nicodemus. Mark 15:43 asserts that Joseph was a member of the Council, while to this information Luke adds that Joseph had not consented to Jesus’ death (23:50–51). Mark also adds the information that it was “the Preparation,” i.e., Friday. Matthew’s at evening means before sunset, before the Sabbath began. John 19:14 identifies this Friday with the eve of the (orthodox) Passover. Josephus (Jewish War IV. 5.2) informs us that the bodies of crucified criminals were taken down and buried before evening, mentioning this as an example of the care taken by Jews to obey the Law. Cf. Deut 21:22–23. It is worth noting here that the incident reported in John 19:31–33 precisely fulfills the legal requirements of one executed on the eve of the Sabbath. Care was taken that the criminal being executed could not be secretly rescued during the Sabbath period. It was not unknown for those crucified to survive in agony for days. Hence in order to hasten the death of a criminal suffering execution who might still be living, such criminals’ legs were broken.

58. Mark adds that the request to Pilate called for courage on the part of Joseph. Pilate is said to be surprised that Jesus is reported as already dead. See NOTE above, and cf. Mark 15:44 ff.

59–60. We are indebted to Matthew alone for the information that the tomb was new, that it was his own, and that a great stone was required to seal the entrance. The last decades of the second temple have provided archaeology with contemporary examples of tombs with a large circular stone rolled in a trough to seal the entrance (notably the tomb of Helen the queen mother from the land of Adiabene, a convert to Judaism). John 19:40 ff. gives additional details about the burial, implying (cf. Luke 24:1) the urgency of burying the body before the Feast.

61. Matthew’s detail about the women, like that on the guards in the ensuing paragraph, is included to emphasize the identity of the person who died, was buried, and vanished from the tomb.

62–66. There is no parallel to this incident in the other gospels. Matthew has mentioned the Roman soldiers watching Jesus in vss. 36 and 54, the women at the tomb in vs. 61, and now goes even further to make it clear that no deception was possible.

62. On the next day ... Preparation. This is a confusing note of time, since Matthew could very easily have said “on the Sabbath” or have omitted after the day of Preparation. It is possible that we have here an example of the fidelity of the evangelist to his sources. Matthew may well have thought that taking all these precautions on the Sabbath was unlikely but felt that, however unlikely, the tradition must be recorded. Mark 15:42 refers to “the day of Preparation” which Matthew does not have. There is also another possibility with which to reckon, that Matthew’s tradition here represents a subsisting uncertainty as to whether Jesus and the disciples did or did not observe the orthodox Jerusalem calendar.

63. impostor. The Greek word is from the same root as imposture in vs. 64.

65. You have a guard. I.e., take a guard—the soldiers would be Roman, not Jewish.

107. THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS

(28:1–15)[†]

28 ¹ After the sabbath, and towards dawn on the first day of the week, Mary of Magdala and the other Mary went to see the tomb. ² There was a great earthquake, for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, came and rolled back the stone, and sat on it. ³ His appearance was like lightning, and his clothing was as white as snow; ⁴ for fear of him the guards were paralyzed with fright. ⁵ To the women, however, the angel said: “Do not be afraid, ⁶ for I know that you are looking for Jesus, who was crucified. But he is not here. He is risen, as he said. Come and see the place where he lay. ⁷ Go quickly, and tell his disciples, ‘He is risen from the dead,’ and ‘He is going before you into Galilee, and you will see him there.’ See, I have told you.” ⁸ They therefore left the tomb quickly, with awe and great joy, and ran to tell his disciples. ⁹ And Jesus met them: “Hail!” he said. They came up, took hold of his feet and worshiped him. ¹⁰ Then Jesus said to them, “Do not be afraid; go and tell my brethren to go to Galilee, and they will see me there.”

¹¹ While they were on their way some of the guard came into the city to tell the chief priests all that had happened. ¹² When they had assembled with the elders and discussed it, they gave money to the soldiers. ¹³ “Tell people,” they said, “ ‘His disciples came by night and stole him away while we were asleep.’ ¹⁴ If this reaches the governor’s ears, we will satisfy him and keep you out of trouble.”

¹⁵ They took the money and did as they were told, and this story is told among Jews to this day.

NOTES

28:1. After the sabbath (Gr. opse de sabbatōn). We must remember that the sabbath ended at sunset on Saturday. This phrase appears to be parallel to Mark's diagenomenou tou sabbatou (the Sabbath having passed), but Mark then goes on to describe something which happened on the evening after the sabbath (Mark 16:1) which Matthew does not record. It is hard to understand the opening phrase in this verse as meaning other than "as the sabbath ended," or "when it had ended." In context Matthew goes on to describe events which belong in all the traditions to Sunday morning. Thus, the next clause towards dawn must be understood as meaning "when the sabbath had already passed into the next day."

The proliferation of recent studies on the calendar, both sectarian and orthodox, prompts us to add a note of caution here. The Greek phrase which we have translated the first day of the week and which is found in all four gospels (mia sabbatou or mia tōn sabbatōn) is not as obvious an indication of a particular "day" of a "week" as the English suggests. By the time we reach the Didache the plural sabbata certainly meant "week," and the enumeration of the days certainly makes Sunday the "first day" of the week; cf. Didache vi. But the notes of time in our gospels concerning the resurrection, together with the confused chronology of Holy Week, make it hazardous to say with any confidence whether the evangelists wished us to understand Saturday or Sunday at this point.

to see the tomb. Mark, having no tradition of a sealed and guarded tomb, says that the women went "to anoint him."

2–4 Matthew's tradition is radically different from Mark's here. Mark records the women as questioning how the stone over the tomb is to be moved. Matthew and Luke record the women finding the tomb open, while John attributes a similar experience to Mary Magdalene.

2–3. earthquake. Cf. NOTE on 27:51–53. It is not possible to say whether the evangelists held these three verses as historical, or whether the earthquake and the appearance of the angel as lightning are meant as symbolic dramatizations of God's act in raising Jesus.

4. paralyzed with fright. The expression indicates faces waxen and immobile with fear. Matthew's account of the resurrection appearances is brief compared with those of Luke and John, and his tradition is at variance with that of Mark. Cf. vss. 1–2 and Mark 16:3. There is no mention of Peter—surprising, in view of the prominence which that disciple otherwise has in this gospel (cf. Mark 16:7; John 20:1–10). In Matthew the women obey the angelic injunction, whereas in Mark they are bewildered and afraid.

7. Galilee. B. H. Streeter, followed later by L. E. Elliott-Binns (Galilean Christianity, Naperville, Ill.: A. R. Allenson, 1956; London: SCM, 1957), argues that the varying emphases in the gospel accounts of the appearances of Jesus in Jerusalem and Galilee provide a key to the later tensions among Jewish Christians. Briefly, the suggestion is that the earlier followers of Jesus in Galilee, including some of the inner circle, were more open and outward-looking than the rather narrower Judaistic Christians centered in Jerusalem around James. Elliott-Binns finds this reflected in the varying traditions of the resurrection appearances, and even in the earlier gospel narratives. He finds contrasts in both earlier narratives and the resurrection narratives as between Mark and material peculiar to Matthew, on the one hand, and John, some parts of Luke, and the early chapters of Acts on the other. If all this is a welcome change from the familiar Hegelian dialectic of the Tübingen school, with its conflict between Paul and the Twelve (especially Peter), it is no freer from arbitrary reconstruction. Streeter, for example, finds some material in Matthew a "later Judaistic reaction against the Petro-Pauline liberalism" (The Four Gospels: A Study of Origins, Treating of the Manuscript Tradition, Sources, Authorship, and Dates [London: Macmillan, 1924], p. 512). However, once explain John's polemic against "the Jews" throughout his gospel as perhaps indicating that John had been strongly influenced by Jewish sectarianism, then the related theses of Streeter and Elliott-Binns cease to be persuasive. That there were tensions in the primitive community only the singularly uncritical will deny, and there may well have been much tension between Galileans and Judeans. But in the light of our present knowledge of Judaism in the time of Jesus, it is as well to beware of underestimating the divisions within Judaism, which has become so characteristic of much NT criticism.

9–10. Apart from the final commission in vss. 16–20 (§108), this is Jesus’ only resurrection appearance to the disciples in this gospel.

11–13. This tradition is found only in Matthew. The chief priests and the elders used the deception which they expected of the disciples; cf. 27:64.

11. chief priests. The soldiers (a Roman guard, cf. 27:65) presumably reported the matter to the chief priests, because they were aware that this was a matter of some concern to the Jewish authorities.

On the surface, the story appears to be directed against those who did not believe in the reality of the resurrection. But it is equally possible that the tradition in question served only to emphasize the one point on which both believers and non-believers were agreed—that the tomb was empty. Cf. Justin Martyr Dialogue with Trypho CVIII.

COMMENT

We are not concerned with theology in this commentary except as required to convey the plain meaning of the words used by the evangelists. This is particularly true when we deal with the resurrection of Jesus. For all the confusing chronology, for the manifest variations in tradition, the one thing upon which all four evangelists are agreed is that the tomb of Jesus was empty. Only Luke and John attempt to explain how the body of Jesus, in his appearances to his disciples, differed from that body as they had known it in the days of the ministry. We are not here immediately concerned with the differences in tradition, but we must use this opportunity to say once more that complete agreement by the evangelists on details and chronology of the story would put the whole NT record under grave suspicion of collusion on the part of eyewitnesses and recorders of tradition or possibly editors of the gospels.

We confine ourselves to the single assertion that the Messianic Community for which Jesus had made provision during his ministry, and for which he was the instrument of a New Covenant, believed not only that the tomb was empty but that God had raised Jesus from the dead. Apart from that faith, there is no understanding of the New Testament.

108. JESUS' FINAL COMMISSION

(28:16–20)[†]

28 ¹⁶ The eleven disciples went to Galilee, to the mountain to which Jesus had directed them, ¹⁷ and seeing him they worshiped him, though some were doubtful. ¹⁸ Coming to them, Jesus said, “All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. ¹⁹ Therefore go and make disciples of all peoples, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, ²⁰ teaching them to observe everything I have commanded you; and I am with you always, to the end of the age.”

NOTES

Matthew is the only gospel which has anything that can properly be called an ending. The ending of Mark is still a matter of dispute; Luke's gospel looks to its completion in the second part of the author's work, while the ending of John may originally have been at 20:31 (see Raymond E. Brown, The Gospel according to John, xiii–xxi, AB, vol. 29A [New York: Doubleday, 1970], COMMENT on §70 [20:30–31]). This final paragraph of Matthew's gospel looks forward to the continuing work of the Messianic Community, making explicit what has already been hinted elsewhere about a mission to those outside the Old Covenant community of Israel.

28:16. Galilee. Cf. the NOTE on vs. 7 (§107). In the light of 4:15 f. it is likely that Galilee here represents all peoples in vs. 19; cf. “Galilee of the nations” in Isa 9:1.

the mountain. In spite of various later traditions, the mountain is not identified.

17. some were doubtful. Matthew is apparently aware of the tradition recorded by Luke (24:22 ff. and 36 ff.) and John (20:8 ff., 11 ff., 24 ff.). Apart from such awareness of other traditions, it is not possible to find any good reason for this assertion, especially in the light of 28:8.

18–19. Cf. 26:64. Here again Jesus expresses himself in the words of Daniel (cf. Dan 7:14). The mission which had been limited to Israel in the days of his ministry (cf. 15:24) is now extended to all peoples.

19. baptizing them. In the New Testament baptizein (to “baptize,” literally used for dyeing of cloth) is the verb used to describe the act of initiation into the Messianic Community. But the verb—and the derived noun “baptism”—includes considerations which are always presupposed in the New Testament. This lustration with or in water assumed (a) repentance on the part of the person being baptized, the baptism itself conveying or implying forgiveness (cf. Acts 2:38); (b) faith in Jesus as Messiah and Lord.

There are two kinds of formal statements about baptismal status in the New Testament, one speaking of baptism “in the name of” and the other “into the name of” the Messiah. Without setting hard and definite limits, we may understand the first formula (“in the name of”) as including both the neophytes’ expressed faith in Jesus as Lord, and also the ceremonial action which accepted this profession of faith—i.e., the baptismal rite. “Into the name of,” however, seems in its various contexts to demand an interpretation which calls attention to the results of the baptismal rite. The neophyte baptized into the name of the Messiah thus not only pledges allegiance to Jesus as Messiah and Lord, but is also incorporated into fellowship with him. Hence the expression used in this verse describes an entrance into fellowship with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

Father, ... Son, ... Holy Spirit. If we approach this verse with a fully developed post-Nicene orthodoxy in our minds, we shall be just as unsympathetic to our sources as are those who find in this verse a highly sophisticated and much later stage of doctrinal formulation retrojected into the text. For all we know, such a saying may have stood in the now-lost ending of Mark. Even apart from such speculation, the concept of God as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit is clearly as old as the Messianic Community as it is known to us in the New Testament. Cf., for example, 1 Cor 12:4–6; 2 Cor 13:14; 1 Peter 1:2; 1 John 3:23–24. In Mark we have “Father” and “Son” so obviously antithetical that—allowing for Jewish beliefs about “the Spirit”—it plainly opened the way to trinitarian belief. The antithesis Father-Son is found in Matt 16:27 and is very common in John. But what is also common in John is the emphasis on the Paraclete, clearly represented as being neither Father nor Son.

It seems plain from the early material in Acts that baptism was performed “in the name of” and also “into the name of” Jesus as Lord and Messiah. The mistake of so many writers on the New Testament lies in treating this saying as a liturgical formula (which it later became), and not as a description of what baptism accomplished. The evangelist, whom we must at least allow to have been familiar with the baptismal customs of the early Messianic Community, may well have added to baptizing them his own summary of what baptism accomplished.

It is as well to remember that the Didache also has this summary of baptism (Didache vii) and its reference to “running water” reflects an earlier Essene preoccupation.

20. teaching them. Elsewhere in this gospel Jesus commands the inner circle to heal (10:1, 8) and to proclaim (10:7). Now that Jesus' ministry is over, the command to teach is given.

I am with you always. Cf. 1:23 and 18:20.

to the end of the age. Cf. 13:39 f. and 49, and 24:3. The presence of this old sectarian formula at the end of this passage is additional evidence that the passage belongs to the earliest stages of the tradition.

¹Cf. recently U. E. Simon, "The Problem of the Biblical Narrative," Theology 72 (1969), 588 ff.

NEB The New English Bible, 1961, 1970

²For a thorough examination of the place of oral tradition in the early Christian community, the reader is referred to the following invaluable works by Birger Gerhardsson: Memory and Manuscript, Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, XXII, 1961, and Tradition and Transmission in Early Christianity, Coniectanea Neotestamentica, XX, 1964. (Both are published by Gleerup, Lund, and Munksgaard, Copenhagen.) The author's work perhaps makes oral transmission too rigid, but it is a very valuable corrective to the view that the gospel material was almost a free compilation of the early community.

³On the so-called "testimonies" from Qumran see: J. M. Allegro, "Further Messianic References in Qumran Literature," JBL 75 (1956), 174–87; idem, "Fragments of a Qumran Scroll of Eschatological Midrāšîm," JBL 77 (1958), 350–54; idem, "A Recently Discovered Fragment of a Commentary on Hosea from Qumran's Fourth Cave," JBL 78 (1959), 142–47; William R. Lane, "A New Commentary Structure in 4Q Florilegium," JBL 78 (1959), 343–46; Joseph A. Fitzmyer, "'4Q Testimonia' and the New Testament," TS 18 (1957), 513–37.

Gr. Greek

TS Theological Studies

Gr. Greek

⁴A recent article—"The Oral Tradition that Never Existed," by Howard M. Teeple, JBL 89 (1970), 56–68—is useful as a summary of views which are, or have been, propounded on oral tradition in the gospels. Unhappily, the author makes no mention at all of Rabbinic oral tradition. Enough is now known to make such an omission a fatal flaw in his argumentation.

⁵On "John the Elder" see C. Stewart Petrie, "The Authorship of 'The Gospel according to Matthew': A Reconsideration of his External Evidence," NTS 14 (1967), 15–32, and our view, below, Part XIII, Appendix A.

⁶Cf. E. P. Sanders, "The Argument from Order and the Relationship between Matthew and Luke," NTS 15 (1968–69), 249–61.

⁷The reader who is interested in pursuing this matter of synoptic relationships further must not expect to arrive at any easy conclusions. Some recent articles only serve to demonstrate how complicated the discussion is at present. Not even the most elaborate of modern statistical methods does more than underline the uncertainty of arriving at firm conclusions simply on the basis of documentary evidence. Cf. in this connection A. M. Honoré, "A Statistical Study of the Synoptic Problem," NovT 10 (1968), 95–147. Similarly, attempts to arrive at new solutions of the relationship between Matthew and Luke only serve to emphasize the relative poverty of the "Q" hypothesis: cf. R. T. Simpson, "The Major Agreements of Matthew and Luke against Mark," NTS 12 (1965–66), 273–84.

⁸In Part XIII below it will be shown that the Aramaic personal and place names preserved in the Greek gospel tradition were in virtually every instance correctly transmitted by the Syriac recensions, dating in their extant text to the second-fifth centuries A.D. Where there is a marked divergence in form, the Syriac is nearly always to be preferred.

⁹Unimpressive attempts have been made to find some kind of OT numerology in Matthew, as though a common formula ending each of five sections (7:28, 11:1, 13:53, 19:1, 26:1) automatically provides us with a NT Pentateuch. This, the suggestion of B. W. Bacon (Studies in Matthew, London: Constable / New York: Holt, 1930), is unlikely because of the difficulty of finding any parallel to Leviticus. Austin M. Farrer's St. Matthew and St. Mark (London: A. & C. Black, 1954) goes so far as to propose a Matthean Hexateuch, apparently forgetting that this combination of OT books was purely a nineteenth-century invention. There is no limit to similar possibilities. Why not a "Genesis" in ch. 1, an "Exodus" in ch. 2, a "Numbers" in chs. 3 and 4, and so on? Most artificial numerology is obviously ludicrous.

¹⁰ See NOTE ad loc. In the kind of scheme here under discussion the change to The Man as suffering is important. However, our own view of the framework of Matthew does not depend on such a change. Cf. NOTES on 17:12, 23, 20:17–19, 28.

¹¹This is emphatically not numerology, but a familiar and successful pedagogical device.

ICC International Critical Commentary

BA Biblical Archaeologist

LXX The Septuagint

MT Masoretic Text

¹²A full discussion of these Middôth of Hillel can be found in Hermann L. Strack, Introduction to the Talmud and Midrash (Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1959), especially pp. 93 ff.

¹³ On the characteristics of pēsher commentary method see the list drawn up by Brownlee (BA 14 [1951], 54–76), as well as Stendahl, School of St. Matthew, pp. 183 ff.

¹⁴"Proof texts": the practice of attempting to establish theological teaching by reference to often arbitrarily selected texts.

TNTS Twelve New Testament Studies, by John A. T. Robinson, London: SCM, 1962

¹⁵Cf. The Acts of the Apostles, AB, vol. 31 (New York: Doubleday, 1967), Appendices VII and VIII.

Heb. Hebrew

KJ The King James, or Authorized Version of 1611

¹⁶This material we believe to be later editorial intrusions, which we shall examine in proper context (cf. commentary on 17:12, 22 ff.).

TWNT Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, eds. Gerhard Kittel et al., Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–

NTS New Testament Studies

1QS Qumran Manual of Discipline

LXX The Septuagint

17

On any showing, Dan 7:13 is of outstanding importance for the concept of The Man as it appears in the gospels and Acts. But recent study has convinced us that the existing translations of that crucial passage are wholly misleading. In contrast with the designation of the prophet in Ezekiel as “The Man”—i.e., a figure of authority in his relationship with Yahweh and his people—translations of Dan 7:13 have customarily rendered the phrase as “one like a son of man.” This translation is generally seen as an attempt to do justice to the Aramaic but with a misunderstanding of the Greek. Whether it can stand must now be questioned.

To begin with, the hōs of LXX had, of course, no accent mark, and a choice had therefore to be made between the word as adverb of manner and as a supposed relative or demonstrative. Our present translations all opt for the latter dubious usage. Professor James H. Oliver of Johns Hopkins University, who has an extremely wide and exact knowledge of Greek usage in all periods, has examined the passage carefully and states unequivocally that the ordinary English translation is not acceptable Greek of any known type. We therefore propose that the English translation read: “And behold on the clouds of heaven how The Man was coming!” This does full Justice to the Greek and also to the Aramaic if we assume that there was haplography of two letters before the k following the word “heaven.” The yodh and aleph at the end of “heaven” should have been followed by aleph, yodh, and the kaph which still stands, but the second yodh and aleph were accidentally dropped. The Aramaic word ’eyk is common also in Ugaritic and Hebrew; note several occurrences in Lamentations, e.g., 1:1, “How lonely sits the city that was full of people!” (RSV).

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

Heb. Hebrew

¹⁸ See W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism (London: SPCK, 1948), especially p. 66; cf. Acts, AB, vol. 31, Appendix VIII.

StB H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 6 vols., Munich: Beck, 1922–61

KJ The King James, or Authorized Version of 1611

Gr. Greek

TWNT Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, eds. Gerhard Kittel et al., Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–

Gr. Greek

LXX The Septuagint

NEB The New English Bible, 1961, 1970

Heb. Hebrew

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

AB The Anchor Bible, 1964–

1QS Qumran Manual of Discipline

Syr. Syriac

¹⁹ Cf. especially H. Montefiore, “A Comparison of the Parables According to Thomas and the Synoptic Gospels,” NTS 7 (1960–61), 220 ff.

²⁰ For a reasoned critique of the operation of Hegelian dialectic in F. C. Baur and his successors down to the present, see Johannes Munck, The Acts of the Apostles, pp. xxx ff.; cf. also W. F. Albright, History, Archaeology and Christian Humanism (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1964), pp. 272–84, for an analysis of Bultmann’s philosophical presuppositions.

StEv Studia Evangelica. Papers from the Oxford International Congresses of NT Studies, published at Berlin, Akademie-Verlag

²¹ Matthew uses the phrase “Kingdom of God” only once (at 12:13), for which see commentary, ad loc.

JBL Journal of Biblical Literature

Gr. Greek

Heb. Hebrew

* Cf. now the important recent article: F. Charles Fensham, “Father and Son as Terminology for Treaty and Covenant,” in Near Eastern Studies in Honor of William Foxwell Albright, ed. Hans Goedicke (Johns Hopkins Press, 1971), pp. 121–35.

NovT Novum Testamentum

NTS New Testament Studies

TNTS Twelve New Testament Studies, by John A. T. Robinson, London: SCM, 1962

²² W. F. Albright and C. S. Mann, “Two Texts in 1 Corinthians,” NTS 16 (1970), 271–76.

RB Revue Biblique

²³ Instead of the obviously haplographic dei oun of the present text.

²⁴ See against this common assumption Kurt Aland, in The Bible in Modern Scholarship, ed. J. Philip Hyatt (Nashville: Abingdon, 1965), pp. 334 ff.

CBQ Catholic Biblical Quarterly

NTS New Testament Studies

ZNW Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche

Gr. Greek

TWNT Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, eds. Gerhard Kittel et al., Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–

LXX The Septuagint

Aram. Aramaic

StB H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 6 vols., Munich: Beck, 1922–61

CBQ Catholic Biblical Quarterly

StEv Studia Evangelica. Papers from the Oxford International Congresses of NT Studies, published at

Berlin, Akademie-Verlag

ZNW Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche

NTS New Testament Studies

ET Expository Times

Matt 1:1–17 || Luke 3:23–38.

LXX The Septuagint

Gr. Greek

Aram. Aramaic

Matt 1:18–25 || Luke 2:1–7.

Gk. Greek

TB Talmud Babli

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

NEB The New English Bible, 1961, 1970

AB The Anchor Bible, 1964–

* Cf. Joseph Bidez and Franz Cumont, Les Mages hellénisés: Zoroastre, Ostanés et Hystapes d'après la tradition grecque, Paris, 1938, and Franz Cumont, L'Égypte des Astrologues, Brussels, 1937.

JBL Journal of Biblical Literature

Heb. Hebrew

Matt 3:1–12 || Mark 1:1–8, Luke 3:1–9, 15–17, John 1:19–28.

Gr. Greek

KJ The King James, or Authorized Version of 1611

AB The Anchor Bible, 1964–

TNTS Twelve New Testament Studies, by John A. T. Robinson, London: SCM, 1962

Heb. Hebrew

Matt 3:13–17 || Mark 1:9–11, Luke 3:21–22, John 1:29–34.

LXX The Septuagint

TB Talmud Babli

Matt 4:1–11 || Mark 1:12–13, Luke 4:1–13.

NTS New Testament Studies

 Matt 4:12–17 || Mark 1:14–15, Luke 4:14–15.

 Matt 4:18–22 || Mark 1:16–20, Luke 5:1–11.

 Matt 4:23–25 || Luke 5:17–19.

 Matt 5:3–12 || Luke 6:20–23.

StB H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 6 vols., Munich: Beck, 1922–61

* Our own interest in this theme was renewed by a recent lecture delivered by Raymond E. Brown to a meeting of the Catholic Biblical Association.

 Matt 5:13–16 || Mark 9:50, Luke 14:34–35.

Aram. Aramaic

ICC International Critical Commentary

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

* Cf. Jehoshua M. Grintz, “Hebrew as the Spoken and Written Language in the Last Days of the Second Temple,” JBL 79 (1960), 32–47.

 Matt 5:25–26 || Luke 12:57–59.

TWNT Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, eds. Gerhard Kittel et al., Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–

ET Expository Times

 Matt 5:29–30 || Mark 9:43–48, Matt 18:8–9.

 Matt 5:31–32 || Matt 19:9, Mark 10:11–12, Luke 16:18.

TB Talmud Babli

 Matt 5:38–42 || Luke 6:29–30.

Gr. Greek

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

NEB The New English Bible, 1961, 1970

Heb. Hebrew

†
— Matt 5:43–48 || Luke 6:27–28, 32–36.

LXX The Septuagint

KJ The King James, or Authorized Version of 1611

†
— Matt 6:5–14 || Luke 11:2–4.

†
— Matt 6:19–21 || Luke 12:33–34.

†
— Matt 6:22–23 || Luke 11:34–36; 24 || Luke 16:13; 25–34 || Luke 12:22–34.

IDB The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 4 vols., New York and Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1962

†
— Matt 7:1–6 || Luke 6:37–38, 41–42; 7–12 || Luke 11:9–13; 13–14 || Luke 13:24.

†
— Matt 7:15–20 || Luke 6:43–44.

†
— Matt 7:21–23 || Luke 13:25–27; 24–29 || Luke 6:47–49.

ICC International Critical Commentary

†
— Matt 8:1–4 || Mark 1:40–45, Luke 5:12–16; 5–13 || Luke 7:1–10, John 4:43–54; 14–18 || Mark 1:29–34, Luke 4:38–41.

StB H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 6 vols., Munich: Beck, 1922–61

†
— Matt 8:19–22 || Luke 9:57–62.

JBL Journal of Biblical Literature

†
— Matt 8:23–27 || Mark 4:35–41, Luke 8:22–25.

†
— Matt 8:28–9:1 || Mark 5:1–20, Luke 8:26–39.

* On this, and other place names, cf. Part XIII of the Introduction.

†
— Matt 9:2–8 || Mark 2:1–12, Luke 5:17–26.

†
— Matt 9:9–13 || Mark 2:13–17, Luke 5:27–32.

†
— Matt 9:14–17 || Mark 2:18–22, Luke 5:33–39.

Gr. Greek

— Matt 9:18–34 || Mark 5:21–34, Luke 8:40–56.

Heb. Hebrew

ICC International Critical Commentary

LXX The Septuagint

— Matt 10:1–4 || Mark 3:16–19, Luke 6:12–16; 5–15 || Mark 6:7–13, Luke 9:1–6.

* On the names of some of the apostles, cf. Part XIII of the Introduction.

Aram. Aramaic

1QS Qumran Manual of Discipline

TB Talmud Babli

— Matt 10:16–25 || Mark 13:9–13, Luke 21:12–17.

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

NEB The New English Bible, 1961, 1970

— Matt 10:26–31 || Luke 12:2–7.

— Matt 10:32–34 || Luke 12:8–9; 34–39 || Luke 12:51–53, 14:26–27; 40 || Mark 9:41.

1QH Qumran Hymns of Thanksgiving

NTS New Testament Studies

KJ The King James, or Authorized Version of 1611

— Matt 11:2–19 || Luke 7:18–35.

TNTS Twelve New Testament Studies, by John A. T. Robinson, London: SCM, 1962

BA Biblical Archaeologist

NTS New Testament Studies

— Matt 11:20–24 || Luke 10:13–15.

— Matt 11:25–27 || Luke 10:21–22.

Gr. Greek

LXX The Septuagint

TB Talmud Babli

TWNT Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, eds. Gerhard Kittel et al., Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–

JBL Journal of Biblical Literature

CBQ Catholic Biblical Quarterly

Matt 12:1–8 || Mark 2:23–28, Luke 6:1–5; 9–14 || Mark 3:1–6, Luke 6:6–11.

Matt 12:22–32 || Mark 3:20–30, Luke 11:14–23, 12:10; 33–37 || Luke 6:43–45.

1QS Qumran Manual of Discipline

Matt 12:38–39 || Mark 8:11–12; 38–42 || Luke 11:29–32; 43–45 || Luke 11:24–26.

Matt 12:46–50 || Mark 3:31–35, Luke 8:19–21.

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

Matt 13:1–9 || Mark 4:1–9, Luke 8:4–8; 10–12 || Mark 4:10–12, Luke 8:9–10; 18–24 || Mark 4:13–20, Luke 8:11–15; 31–33 || Mark 4:30–32, Luke 13:18–21; 34 || Mark 4:33–34.

Matt 13:53–58 || Mark 6:1–6, Luke 4:16–30.

Matt 14:1–12 || Mark 6:14–29, Luke 9:7–9.

Matt 14:13–21 || Mark 6:30–44, Luke 9:10–17, John 6:1–14.

Matt 14:22–27 || Mark 6:45–52, John 6:15–21; 34–35 || Mark 6:53–56.

Matt 15:1–20 || Mark 7:1–23.

Heb. Hebrew

StB H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 6 vols., Munich: Beck, 1922–61

LXX The Septuagint

Matt 15:21–28 || Mark 7:24–30.

Matt 15:32–39 || Mark 8:1–10.

†
— Matt 16:1–4 || Mark 8:11–13, Luke 12:54–56; 5–12 || Mark 8:14–21.

NEB The New English Bible, 1961, 1970

†
— Matt 16:13–20 || Mark 8:27–30, Luke 9:18–21.

Gr. Greek

RSV The Revised Standard Version, 1946, 1952

KJ The King James, or Authorized Version of 1611

TNTS Twelve New Testament Studies, by John A. T. Robinson, London: SCM, 1962

Syr. Syriac

TB Talmud Babli

Aram Aramaic

TWNT Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, eds. Gerhard Kittel et al., Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–

NovT Novum Testamentum

†
— Matt 16:21–28 || Mark 8:31–9:1, Luke 9:22–27.

†
— Matt 17:1–13 || Mark 9:2–13, Luke 9:28–36.

†
— Matt 17:14–21 || Mark 9:14–29, Luke 9:37–43a.

†
— Matt 17:22–23 || Mark 9:30–32, Luke 9:43b–45.

IB The Interpreter's Bible, 12 vols., New York and Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1951–57

NTS New Testament Studies

†
— Matt 18:1–5 || Mark 9:33–37, Luke 9:46–48; 6–9 || Mark 9:42–48, Luke 17:1–2.

†
— Matt 18:10–14 || Luke 15:3–7.

†
— Matt 18:15 || Luke 17:3.

Gr. Greek

†
— Matt 19:1–12 || Mark 10:1–12.

ICC International Critical Commentary

CBQ Catholic Biblical Quarterly

Matt 19:13–15 || Mark 10:13–16, Luke 18:15–17.

Matt 19:16–30 || Mark 10:17–31, Luke 18:18–30.

LXX The Septuagint

* See Introduction, Part XIII, Appendix B.

Matt 20:17–19 || Mark 10:32–34, Luke 18:31–34.

Matt 20:20–28 || Mark 10:35–45.

Heb. Hebrew

1QS Qumran Manual of Discipline

1QH Qumran Hymns of Thanksgiving

Matt 20:29–34 || Mark 10:46–52, Luke 18:35–43.

Aram. Aramaic

Matt 21:1–11 || Mark 11:1–11, Luke 19:28–38, John 12:12–19.

Heb. Hebrew

AB The Anchor Bible, 1964–

LXX The Septuagint

Matt 21:12–17 || Mark 11:15–19, Luke 19:45–48, John 2:13–22.

Matt 21:18–22 || Mark 11:12–14, 20–24; 23–27 || Mark 11:27–33, Luke 20:1–8.

Matt 21:33–46 || Mark 12:1–12, Luke 20:9–19.

NEB The New English Bible, 1961, 1970

Gr. Greek

Matt 22:1–14 || Luke 14:15–24.

TB Talmud Babli

Matt 22:15–22 || Mark 12:13–17, Luke 20:20–26; 23–33 || Mark 12:18–27, Luke 20:27–40; 34–40 || Mark 12:28–34, Luke 10:25–28; 41–46 || Mark 12:35–37, Luke 20:41–44.

†
— Matt 23:1–5 || Mark 12:38–40, Luke 20:46–47; 11 || Mark 9:35, 10:43, Luke 9:48, 22:26; 12 || Luke 14:11, 18:14; 13 || Luke 11:52; 23–24 || Luke 11:42; 25–26 || Mark 7:4, Luke 11:39–41; 27–28 || Luke 11:44; 29–32 || Luke 11:47–48; 33 || Luke 3:7; 34–36 || Luke 11:49–51.

JBL Journal of Biblical Literature

IDB The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 4 vols., New York and Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1962

Syr. Syriac

†
— Matt 23:37–39 || Luke 13:34–35.

†
— Matt 24:1–2 || Mark 13:1–2, Luke 21:5–6.

TNTS Twelve New Testament Studies, by John A. T. Robinson, London: SCM, 1962

†
— Matt 24:3–14 || Mark 13:3–13, Luke 21:7–19.

1QH Qumran Hymns of Thanksgiving

TWNT Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, eds. Gerhard Kittel et al., Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1933–

†
— Matt 24:15–28 || Mark 13:14–23, Luke 21:20–24.

†
— Matt 24:29–31 || Mark 13:24–27, Luke 21:25–28; 32–35 || Mark 13:28–31, Luke 21:29–33; 36–44 || Mark 13:32–37, Luke 17:26–30, 34–36.

†
— Matt 24:45–25:13 || Luke 12:41–48.

†
— Matt 25:14–30 || Luke 19:11–27.

†
— Matt 26:1–5 || Mark 14:1–2, Luke 22:1–2, John 11:45–53.

†
— Matt 26:6–13 || Mark 14:3–9, John 12:1–8.

†
— Matt 26:14–16 || Mark 14:10–11, Luke 22:3–6.

†
— Matt 26:17–25 || Mark 14:12–21, Luke 22:7–14, 21–23, John 13:21–30; 26–29 || Mark 14:22–25, Luke 22:15–20, 1 Cor 11:23–25.

ICC International Critical Commentary

1QS Qumran Manual of Discipline

StB H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 6 vols.,

Munich: Beck, 1922–61

 Matt 26:30–35 || Mark 14:26–31, Luke 22:31–34, John 13:36–38; 36–46 || Mark 14:32–42, Luke 22:39–46.

 Matt 26:47–56 || Mark 14:43–50, Luke 22:47–53, John 18:3–12.

NovT Novum Testamentum

 Matt 26:57–68 || Mark 14:53–65, Luke 22:54–55, 63–71, John 18:12–14, 19–24.

* Cf. most recently The Trial of Jesus: Cambridge Studies in Honour of C. F. D. Moule, ed. B. Bammel, Cambridge University Press, 1970.

 Matt 26:69–75 || Mark 14:66–72, Luke 22:56–62, John 18:15–18, 25–27.

 Matt 27:1–2 || Mark 15:1, Luke 23:1–2, John 18:28–32.

Gr. Greek

IDB The Interpreter’s Dictionary of the Bible, 4 vols., New York and Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1962

 Matt 27:3–10 || Acts 1:18–19.

Heb. Hebrew

LXX The Septuagint

 Matt 27:11–14 || Mark 15:2–5, Luke 23:3–5, John 18:33–38.

 Matt 27:15–26 || Mark 15:6–15, Luke 23:13–25, John 18:39–19:16.

TS Theological Studies

 Matt 27:27–31 || Mark 15:16–20, John 19:2–3.

 Matt 27:32–44 || Mark 15:21–32, Luke 23:26–43, John 19:17–27.

 Matt 27:45–56 || Mark 15:33–41, Luke 23:44–49, John 19:28–30.

ET Expository Times

TB Talmud Babli

 Matt 27:57–66 || Mark 15:42–47, Luke 23:50–56, John 19:38–42.

†
— Matt 28:1–15 || Mark 16:1–8, Luke 24:1–12, John 20:1–10.

Gr. Greek

†
— Matt 28:16–18 || Mark 16:14–18, Luke 24:36–49, John 20:19–23, Acts 1:9–11.

AB The Anchor Bible, 1964–

Table of Contents

INTRODUCTION

I. THE GOSPEL AND THE CANONICAL “GOSPELS”

II. MATTHEW IN RELATION TO THE SYNOPTIC GOSPELS

III. THE “Q” MATERIAL IN THE SYNOPTIC GOSPELS

IV. THE OLD TESTAMENT BACKGROUND OF MATTHEW’S GOSPEL

V. THE DISCIPLES

VI. THE KINGDOM: THE MAN AND THE MESSIANIC COMMUNITY

VII. THE KINGDOM: THE MAN AND THE FATHER

VIII. THE KINGDOM: THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

IX. JESUS AND THE LAW

X. MIRACLES IN MATTHEW

XI. PARABLES IN MATTHEW

XII. THE MESSIAH IN MATTHEW

XIII. AUTHORSHIP AND CHRONOLOGY

SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. The Background of the New Testament

II. The New Testament Sources

III. On Matthew’s Gospel

IV. Miscellaneous Works on Particular Themes

V. Greek Texts

MATTHEW

1. THE GENEALOGY OF JESUS (1:1–17)†

NOTES

COMMENT

2. THE BIRTH OF JESUS (1:18–25)†

3. THE VISIT OF THE MAGI (2:1–12)

4. THE FLIGHT TO EGYPT (2:13–15)

5. THE SLAUGHTER OF THE CHILDREN (2:16–18)

6. RETURN FROM EGYPT (2:19–23)

7. JOHN THE BAPTIST (3:1–12)†

8. THE BAPTISM OF JESUS (3:13–17)†

9. THE TEMPTATIONS (4:1–11)†

10. THE BEGINNING OF THE MINISTRY (4:12–17)†

11. THE FIRST DISCIPLES (4:18–22)†

12. MINISTRY IN GALILEE (4:23–25)†

- 13. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN \(5:1–12\)†
- 14. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: MARKS OF THE DISCIPLE \(5:13–16\)†
- 15. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW—FULFILLMENT \(5:17–20\)
- 16. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: ANGER \(5:21–26\)†
- 17. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW—ADULTERY \(5:27–30\)†
- 18. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW—MARRIAGE \(5:31–32\)†
- 19. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW—OATHS \(5:33–37\)
- 20. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW—RETALIATION \(5:38–42\)†
- 21. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: THE LAW—ENEMIES \(5:43–48\)†
- 22. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: ALMSGIVING \(6:1–4\)
- 23. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: PRAYER \(6:5–14\)†
- 24. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: FASTING \(6:16–18\)
- 25. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: WEALTH \(6:19–21\)†
- 26. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: DISCIPLESHIP AND DETACHMENT \(6:22–34\)†
- 27. THE GREAT INSTRUCTION: DISCIPLESHIP \(7:1–14\)†

(Ebook) Second Baruch: A Critical Edition of the Syriac Text: With Greek and Latin Fragments, English Translation, Introduction, and Concordances by Daniel M. Gurtner ISBN 0567609405 Pdf Download

<https://ebooknice.com/product/second-baruch-a-critical-edition-of-the-syriac-text-with-greek-and-latin-fragments-english-translation-introduction-and-concordances-2252242>

4.8 out of 5.0 (22 reviews)

DOWNLOAD PDF

(Ebook) Second Baruch: A Critical Edition of the Syriac Text: With Greek and Latin Fragments, English Translation, Introduction, and Concordances by Daniel M. Gurtner ISBN 0567609405 Pdf Download

EBOOK

Available Formats

■ PDF eBook

Study Guide

Ebook

EXCLUSIVE 2025 EDUCATIONAL COLLECTION - LIMITED TIME

INSTANT DOWNLOAD

VIEW LIBRARY

Here are some recommended products for you. Click the link to download, or explore more at ebooknice.com

(Ebook) Biota Grow 2C gather 2C cook by Loucas, Jason; Viles, James ISBN 9781459699816, 9781743365571, 9781925268492, 1459699815, 1743365578, 1925268497

<https://ebooknice.com/product/biota-grow-2c-gather-2c-cook-6661374>

(Ebook) Minna no Nihongo I Second Edition Translation and Grammar Notes — English by 3A Corporation ISBN 9784883196043, 4883196046

<https://ebooknice.com/product/minna-no-nihongo-i-second-edition-translation-and-grammar-notes-english-13566216>

(Ebook) Introduction to Syriac: Key to Exercises & English-Syriac Vocabulary by Daniel M. Gurtner ISBN 9781588140456, 1588140458

<https://ebooknice.com/product/introduction-to-syriac-key-to-exercises-english-syriac-vocabulary-1960310>

(Ebook) Exodus: A Commentary on the Greek Text of Codex Vaticanus by Daniel M. Gurtner ISBN 9789004254282, 9004254285

<https://ebooknice.com/product/exodus-a-commentary-on-the-greek-text-of-codex-vaticanus-4728032>

(Ebook) SAT II Success MATH 1C and 2C 2002 (Peterson's SAT II Success) by Peterson's ISBN 9780768906677, 0768906679

<https://ebooknice.com/product/sat-ii-success-math-1c-and-2c-2002-peterson-s-sat-ii-success-1722018>

(Ebook) Matematik 5000+ Kurs 2c Lärobok by Lena Alfredsson, Hans Heikne, Sanna Bodemyr ISBN 9789127456600, 9127456609

<https://ebooknice.com/product/matematik-5000-kurs-2c-larobok-23848312>

(Ebook) The Works of St. Ephrem the Syrian (Vol 3): Syriac, Greek, and Latin (Syriac Studies Library) (English and Latin Edition) by Peter Benedictus ISBN 9781607248248, 1607248247

<https://ebooknice.com/product/the-works-of-st-ephrem-the-syrian-vol-3-syriac-greek-and-latin-syriac-studies-library-english-and-latin-edition-49454312>

(Ebook) Cambridge IGCSE and O Level History Workbook 2C - Depth Study: the United States, 1919-41 2nd Edition by Benjamin Harrison ISBN 9781398375147, 9781398375048, 1398375144, 1398375047

<https://ebooknice.com/product/cambridge-igcse-and-o-level-history-workbook-2c-depth-study-the-united-states-1919-41-2nd-edition-53538044>

(Ebook) The Works of St. Ephrem the Syrian (Vol 2): Syriac, Greek, and Latin (Syriac Studies Library) (English and Latin Edition) by Stephen Evodius Asse ISBN 9781607248231, 1607248239

<https://ebooknice.com/product/the-works-of-st-ephrem-the-syrian-vol-2-syriac-greek-and-latin-syriac-studies-library-english-and-latin-edition-49452656>

The Works of St. Ephrem the Syrian

Daniel M. Gurtner

Second Baruch

A Critical Edition of the Syriac Text

With Greek and Latin Fragments,
English Translation, Introduction,
and Concordances

t & t clark

T&T CLARK JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN TEXTS SERIES

JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN TEXTS IN CONTEXTS AND RELATED STUDIES

SERIES

Executive Editor

James H. Charlesworth

Editorial Board of Advisors

Motti Aviam, Michael Davis, Casey Elledge, Loren Johns, Amy-Jill Levine, Lee McDonald, Lidija Novakovic, Gerbern Oegema, Henry Rietz, Brent Strawn

This page intentionally left blank

Second Baruch: A Critical Edition of the Syriac Text

*With Greek and Latin Fragments,
English Translation, Introduction,
and Concordances*

Daniel M. Gurtner

t & t clark

NEW YORK • LONDON

2009

The Continuum International Publishing Group Inc
80 Maiden Lane, New York, NY 10038

The Continuum International Publishing Group Ltd
The Tower Building, 11 York Road, London SE1 7NX

www.continuumbooks.com

Copyright © 2009 by Daniel M. Gurtner

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without the written permission of the publishers.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

A catalog record for this book is available from the Library of Congress.

Printed in the United States of America

ISBN-13: 9780567609403

To Craig A. Evans

Scholar, Mentor, and Friend

This page intentionally left blank

CONTENTS

Foreword, by James H. Charlesworth	ix
The Scintillating Wisdom and Promise Preserved in the Apocalypse of Baruch (2 Baruch)
Preface	xiii
Abbreviations	xv
Introduction	1
§1: Introduction	1
§2: The Text of Second Baruch	6
§3: Original Language	10
§4: Provenance	13
§5: Relation to 4 Ezra	15
§6: Date	16
§7: Genre	18
§8: Structure and Contents	20
§9: The Epistle of 2 Baruch	24
§10: Translation(s)	26
2 Baruch: Text and Translation	29
Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch	30
Epistle of Second Baruch	124
Concordance to the Syriac of 2 Baruch	149
Concordance to the Greek of 2 Baruch	195
Concordance to the Latin of 2 Baruch	197
Bibliography	198
Index of Passages	208

This page intentionally left blank

FOREWORD

The Scintillating Wisdom and Promise Preserved in the Apocalypse of Baruch (2 Baruch)

The most devastating loss for the Jews in antiquity occurred in the late summer of 70 C.E. Nine years before Mount Vesuvius captured Pompeii and Herculaneum in 79, the Roman army, directed by Titus, a future emperor, conquered Jerusalem, the center of the world for most Jews (Jubilees).

In September of 70, the Holy City and the Temple fell to the most hated enemy of first-century Jews. The loss of the Holy City, the Temple, and the Land promised to Abraham and his descendants had a devastating effect on Jews all over the Mediterranean world; it hit them like a tsunami, wreaking havoc like the devastation wrought by a volcanic eruption. The author of the Sibylline Oracles hailed the eruption of Vesuvius as God's judgment on the Romans because they destroyed "the blameless tribe of the pious" (Sib. Or. 4:136; Collins in OTP 1.387).

In the three decades after the loss of the Land and the place where YHWH dwelt, three major apocalypses were composed: 4 Ezra, 2 Baruch, and the Revelation of John. These masterpieces of revelatory literature sought to explain how an infidel could defeat God's people. While only the latter apocalypse was canonized within the Christian Bible, 2 Baruch is preserved within the earliest complete Syriac Bible, Codex Ambrosianus, which was copied in the sixth or seventh century C.E. As Daniel M. Gurtner clarifies in the following pages, 2 Baruch also appears in Jacobite lectionaries. The apocalypse was thus considered sacra scriptura and liturgically important in many eastern churches.

The author of 4 Ezra had no answers to the questions frustrating him. He composed perhaps the masterpiece in the history of theodicy. God had made three irrevocable promises: the Land would belong to Abraham's posterity; Abraham's descendants would be innumerable; they would be God's elect people who prosper and enjoy life in the Land. Now, the Romans owned the Land, the Temple (God's House) had disappeared in smoke, and God's people were massacred or taken as slaves to Rome. In the land of the conquerors, the Jews built the Coliseum; they even left inscriptions at Herculaneum and Pompeii—but only inelegant scratches in slave quarters.

The author of 4 Ezra could not contemplate that God was powerless. He could not imagine that God had made no promises. He could not conclude that Jews had been unfaithful to God's covenant with them. His questions are so direct, frank, and uncompromising that he will not accept the answer from God that he will be saved, among the few, while the many go to destruction. That would render God unjust and unfaithful. Messianic belief is no answer. The Messiah will come and reign with the just for a thousand years; but he will die and all those with him. He will not fulfill God's promises or drive the heathen from the Land. Ezra continues questioning the archangel, Uriel [the Light of God]; but this archangel must confess: sed nescio, "but I do not know" (4 Ezra 4:52). This confession is rather exceptional—an archangel confesses ignorance (cf. Mark 13:32).

Like the author of 4 Ezra, the author of Revelation thinks in a Semitic language. But unlike the author of 4 Ezra, he has an answer. Rome is evil Babylon. The Messiah has come. He is Jesus Christ. He is the Lamb slain for all who believe in Jesus' Messiahship. The blood on the lamb comes from his own body; he has died so those being conquered will become conquerors. Wars raging in heaven and on earth will cease. Satan, the Dragon and the Serpent, will be defeated completely and finally. There will be a new heaven and a new earth. The eternal city, Jerusalem, will appear from above. In it there is no need for a Temple, because God will be dwelling with his elect ones.

The author of 2 Baruch also has an answer to Ezra's seemingly damning questions. The author of 4 Ezra portrays Ezra screaming out:

Oh, Adam, what have you done? For though it was you who sinned, the fall was not yours alone, but ours also who are your descendants. For what good is it to us, if an eternal age has been promised to us, but we have done deeds that bring death? And what good is it that an everlasting hope has been promised us, but we have miserably failed? [4 Ezra 7:48[118]–51[121]; Metzger in OTP 1.541]

The author of 2 Baruch seems to be familiar with this cry but turns lament into exhortation:

Adam is, therefore, not the cause, except only for himself, but each of us has become our own Adam. [2 Bar. 54:19; Klijn in OTP 1.640]

What is the relation of 2 Baruch to 4 Ezra? Is one author dependent on the other's composition? Daniel M. Gurtner wisely avoids the problems encountered in trying to ascertain a literary relationship among the complex passages in 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch. He astutely draws attention to the vast amount of sources that antedate and inform each apocalypse that clearly postdate 70 C.E. and predate Bar Kokhba (132–136 C.E.). This approach avoids overinterpreting each apocalypse and clarifies the central role Adam played in ancient Jewish sources, especially in the attempt to understand the possible interrelationships among sin, forgiveness, and acceptance.

As F. Rosenthal pointed out in 1885, 2 Baruch is similar to the School of Akiba; the author of this apocalypse and Akiba were near contemporaries. The author of 2 Baruch finds the answer to all questions in obedience to Torah, God's will, referring more than once to the "lamp of the eternal law." In the Jeremiah-Baruch tradition and cycle of texts, he perceives that Israel's faithlessness caused the loss of Temple and Land in 70: "your Law . . . they have transgressed" (48:47). Hope is restored by this recognition: "And we also have gone from the land, and Zion has been taken from us, and we have nothing now except the Mighty One and his Law" (85:3).

Rome did not defeat Israel; Israel's unfaithfulness caused all losses. The future will be blissful, if God's faithful followers obey God's will revealed in Torah. The New Age will be a return to Eden and Paradise; the imagery is stunning and preserves some of the best apocalyptic eschatology ever written. Observe the beautiful poetry in the Apocalypse. The author begins by emphasizing the importance of the Land and then continues:

The earth also will yield its fruit ten thousandfold, and on each vine there will be a thousand branches, and each branch will produce a thousand clusters, and each cluster will produce a thousand grapes, and each grape will produce a cor of wine. And those who have been hungry will rejoice; and also they will see wonders every day. [29:5–6]

Note the vision of this approaching time preserved in the Letter of Baruch:

For the youth of this world has passed away, and the strength of the creation is already exhausted. And the coming of the times is very short and has passed by. And the pitcher is near to the cistern, and the ship to the port, and the course of the journey to the city, and life to (its) end. [85:10]

For the author of 2 Baruch, unlike the author of 4 Ezra and similar to the author of Revelation, the Messiah is perceived to fulfill God's promises: "And it will be after these things, when the time of the appearance of the Messiah is fulfilled, that he will return in glory. Then all who have fallen asleep in hope of him will rise" (30:1).

Gurtner correctly sees that 2 Baruch is a thoroughly Jewish work (thus following J. Davila and rejecting N. Rivka's conclusion that the work is Christian). Gurtner takes literally 2 Bar. 1:1 and dates the composition to about 95 C.E. This date is plausible. Against those who claim that never in ancient Judaism is there works-righteousness is the translation of 51:7, "But those who have been saved by their works, and to whom the Law has been a hope, and understanding an expectation, and wisdom a trust, will see marvels in their time."

Now, Gurtner presents a critical edition of the Syriac text [the major witness] to 2 Baruch. The script is presented in an attractive Estrangela and the English faces it. Gurtner rightly points out that the message of 2 Baruch "is timeless," and that it provides "an important gap between Temple-centered Judaism and rabbinic Judaism." All scholars will be grateful to him for providing a critical text of 2 Baruch, with Greek (2 Bar. 12–14 of the fourth or fifth century) and Latin (2 Bar. 48:36, 33–34 in Cyprian) fragments, and a fresh English translation (the Arabic manuscript does not improve our understanding of the Syriac). The concordance will also assist those who wish to study this complex composition.

Gurtner rightly isolates the Epistle of Baruch. It has a history that is attached to the Apocalypse and one that is separate from it. The latter version was canonized within the ancient Syrian Orthodox Church.

Gurtner wisely concludes that the Syriac text of 2 Baruch is most likely translated from a Greek manuscript, but he cautions against proceeding to conclude that the original language is Greek. One cannot close out the option that 2 Baruch was composed in a Semitic language (Hebrew or Aramaic). The data is opaque; as I have often said, one cannot argue from Semitisms in a Syriac text to a putative Semitic original; they are inherent in the Syriac itself. In summation, Gurtner provides scholars with data that greatly facilitate our study of ancient Jewish apocalyptic thought generally and 2 Baruch specifically.

James H. Charlesworth
Princeton

PREFACE

2 Baruch is an ancient document offering the careful reader a puzzling array of issues. It is preserved in two sections, an apocalypse (2 Bar. 1–77, here SAB) and an epistle (2 Bar. 78–87, here Ep2B).¹ As a thoroughly Jewish text written shortly after the destruction of the Jerusalem temple in 70 C.E., 2 Baruch seeks to make theological sense of a historical tragedy—what is often called theodicy. It reveals the plight, hardships, and tensions of faith of the Jewish people in a time of enormous uncertainty. In this respect, its message is timeless.

My interest in this book initially stems from a comparison with the Christian canonical Gospels. These also concern themselves—albeit with varying purposes—with the destruction of the temple in particular and God’s activities in first-century Palestine in general. Comparisons and contrasts are numerous, but beyond the scope of the present volume. Instead, it is my primary intent here to provide an accessible edition of the Syriac text, with some emendations proposed by myself, other scholars, and other manuscript traditions with both the apocalypse (2 Baruch 1–77) and the epistle (2 Baruch 78–87) together, and a corresponding English translation. Secondly, I have provided a modest introduction to 2 Baruch. New proposals are limited, and more innovative work in 2 Baruch is anticipated in the forthcoming Commentary on Early Jewish Literature (CEJL) volume. The present critical text is accompanied by the few locations where 2 Baruch is preserved in Greek and Latin accompanying the Syriac text. Corresponding to each ancient text is an exhaustive concordance. It is my hope that my presentation and translation of the text are both accurate and clear and my introduction is sufficiently thorough to be of use for further research, facilitating the development of scholarship in the respective fields of scholarly inquiry for which 2 Baruch is important.

Several people have made contributions to the production of this book. First, I am grateful to Burke Gerstenschl ger of T & T Clark for his immediate interest in the project and encouragement toward its inclusion in this series. Second, I am grateful to Prof. James H. Charlesworth for his acceptance of my work into the important series that he oversees. Third, I am grateful to Mr. Seth Ehorn for his diligent research, proofreading, and preparation of the Latin and Greek concordances. Fourth, I am grateful for the skills, encouragement, and expertise on a number of fronts of Dr. Matthias Henze, Dr. Jonathan Moo, Dr. Jonathan Loopstra, Mr. Christopher Brenna, and Mr. Mark Batluck. Thanks go to my beloved family; my wife, Beth, and my dear children, Matthew, Kyra Lynn, and Elisha Faith, for enduring my frequent departures to the basement to undertake this work, and creating a climate of sheer joy to keep my heart light and my mind fresh for the meticulous work that went into this book. Finally, I am grateful to my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, for whose glory all my labors are undertaken (Col 3:17).

1. As a point of clarification, 2 Baruch includes the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch (2 Baruch 1–77), and the Epistle of 2 Baruch (2 Baruch 78–87). Scholars sometimes refer to the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch when they really mean the entirety of 2 Baruch.

I am pleased to be able to offer this project in dedication to Dr. Craig A. Evans. He is a model of Christian scholarship at its highest level while working capably and respectfully with Jewish texts of antiquity. Moreover, Prof. Evans has been a constant source of encouragement in my own professional development. It is with gratitude that I dedicate this book to him.

ABBREVIATIONS

General

(?)	designates uncertainty	mss	manuscripts
B.C.E.	Before the Common Era	MT	Masoretic Text
C.E.	Common Era	NAS	New American Standard
fol.	folio	OG	Old Greek
Lat	Latin	Pesh	Peshitta
Lect	Lectionary	Syr	Syriac
LXX	Septuagint	Theod	Theodotion
ms	manuscript

Secondary Literature

ABD	Anchor Bible Dictionary
ANRW	Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt: Geschichte und Kultur Roms im Spiegel der neueren Forschung
APOT	R. H. Charles, ed., Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament in English
AUSS	Andrews University Seminary Studies
BBR	Bulletin for Biblical Research
BDAG	Walter Bauer, William Arndt, Wilbur Gingrich, and Frederick Danker, Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature
BIOSCS	Bulletin of the International Organization for Septuagint and Cognate Studies
BZ	Biblische Zeitschrift
CBR	Currents in Biblical Research
CRINT	Compendia rerum iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum
CSCO	Corpus scriptorum christianorum orientalium
DNTB	Craig Evans and Stanley Porter, Dictionary of New Testament Background
DSD	Dead Sea Discoveries
DTC	Dictionnaire de théologie catholique
FRLANT	Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments
JAC	Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum
JBL	Journal of Biblical Literature

JETS	Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society
JSJ	Journal for the Study of Judaism in the Persian, Hellenistic, and Roman Periods
JSJSup	Supplements to the Journal for the Study of Judaism in the Persian, Hellenistic, and Roman Periods
JSOT	Journal for the Study of the Old Testament
JSP	Journal for the Study of the Pseudepigrapha
JSPSup	Journal for the Study of the Pseudepigrapha, Supplement Series
JSS	Journal of Semitic Studies
JTS	Journal of Theological Studies
Judaica	Judaica: Beiträge zum Verständnis des jüdischen Schicksals in Vergangenheit und Gegenwart
JWSTP	Jewish Writings of the Second Temple Period
OOT	M. de Jonge, ed., Outside the Old Testament (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1985)
OTP	J. H. Charlesworth, ed., Old Testament Pseudepigrapha
PS	R. Payne Smith, ed., Compendious Syriac Dictionary. Founded upon the Thesaurus Syriacus of R. Payne Smith
PTS	Patristische Texte und Studien
PVTG	Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece
RB	Revue Biblique
RBL	Review of Biblical Literature
SBL	Society of Biblical Literature
SBLDS	SBL Dissertation Series
SBLSP	SBL Seminar Papers
SC	Sources chrétiennes
Sem	Semeia
SR	Studies in Religion
Str-B	Strack, H. L., and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrash . 6 vols. Munich: Beck, 1926-1963.
SVTP	Studia in Veteris Testamenti pseudepigraphica
TANZ	Texte und Arbeiten zum neutestamentlichen Zeitalter
TLZ	Theologische Literaturzeitung
VT	Vetus Testamentum
VTSup	Supplements to Vetus Testamentum
ZAW	Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft
ZWT	Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie

Ancient Literature

HEBREW BIBLE

Gen	Genesis	Eccl	Ecclesiastes
Exod	Exodus	Song	Song of Solomon
Lev	Leviticus	Isa	Isaiah
Num	Numbers	Jer	Jeremiah
Deut	Deuteronomy	Ezek	Ezekiel
Josh	Joshua	Lam	Lamentations
Judg	Judges	Dan	Daniel
1 Sam	1 Samuel	Hos	Hosea
2 Sam	2 Samuel	Jon	Jonah
1 Kgs	1 Kings	Mic	Micah
2 Kgs	2 Kings	Nah	Nahum
1 Chron	1 Chronicles	Hab	Habakkuk
2 Chron	2 Chronicles	Zeph	Zephaniah
Neh	Nehemiah	Hag	Haggai
Esth	Esther	Zech	Zechariah
Ps(s)	Psalms(s)	Mal	Malachi
Prov	Proverbs

EARLY CHRISTIAN

Matt	Matthew	1 Tim	1 Timothy
Mark	Mark	2 Tim	2 Timothy
Luke	Luke	Titus	Titus
John	John	Phlm	Philemon
Rom	Romans	Heb	Hebrews
1 Cor	1 Corinthians	Jas	James
2 Cor	2 Corinthians	1 Pet	1 Peter
Gal	Galatians	2 Pet	2 Peter
Eph	Ephesians	1 John	1 John
Phil	Philippians	2 John	2 John
Col	Colossians	3 John	3 John
1 Thess	1 Thessalonians	Jude	Jude
2 Thess	2 Thessalonians	Rev	Revelation

APOCRYPHA AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHIA

Apoc. Zeph.		SAB=	Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch (= 2 Baruch 1–77)
	Apocalypse of Zephaniah
Bar	Baruch (LXX)	3 Bar.	3 (Greek) Baruch
2 Bar.	2 (Syriac) Baruch	4 Bar.	4 Baruch
	Ep2B= Epistle of 2 Baruch	4 Ezra	4 Ezra [2 Esd. 3–14]
	(= 2 Baruch 78–87)	1 En.	1 (Ethiopic) Enoch

2 En.	2 (Slavonic) Enoch	Sib. Or.	Sibylline Oracles
Jub	Jubilees	Sir	Sirach
LAB	Liber antiquitatum biblicarum (Pseudo-Philo)	T. Abr.	Testament of Abraham
LAE	Life of Adam and Eve	T. Jos.	Testament of Joseph
1 Macc	1 Maccabees	T. Jud.	Testament of Judah
2 Macc	2 Maccabees	T. Levi	Testament of Levi
3 Macc	3 Maccabees	T. Mos.	Testament of Moses
4 Macc	4 Maccabees	T. Zeb.	Testament of Zebulun
Odes	Odes of Solomon	Tob	Tobit
Pss. Sol.	Psalms of Solomon	Wis	Wisdom of Solomon

OTHER EARLY JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN LITERATURE

m. Abot	Abot (Mishnah)	1QH	Hymns/Hodayot
Apos. Con.	Apostolic Constitutions	1QM	War Scroll
1 Clem.	1 Clement	1QpHab	Habakkuk Pesher
Apoc. Pet.	Apocalypse of Peter	1QS	Community Rule/Manual of Discipline
Barn.	Epistle of Barnabas	CD	Cairo Genizah copy of Damascus Document
Cyrian, Test.	Cyprian, Testimoniorum adversus Judaeos
Irenaeus, Adv. Haer.	Irenaeus, Against Heresies	PHILO
		Praem. et Poen.	De praemiis et poenis
Tg. Ps.-J.	Targum Pseudo-Jonathan	Rer. Div. Her.	Quis rerum divinarum heres sit
b. Zeb.	b. Zebahim (Babylonian Talmud)	Spec. Leg.	De specialibus legibus
DEAD SEA SCROLLS		Vit. Mos.	De vita Mosis
1Q27 (1QMyst)	Book of Mysteries	JOSEPHUS
1Q28b, 1Q5b	Community Rule	Ant.	Antiquities of the Jews
1QapGen	Genesis Apocryphon	B.J.	Bellum Judaica
		C. Ap.	Against Apion

CLASSICAL SOURCES

Sophocles
Oed. Rex	Sophocles, Oedipus the King
Tacitus
Hist.	Tacitus, The Histories

INTRODUCTION

§1 INTRODUCTION

Throughout most of the history of the Jewish people, the city of Jerusalem has been the center of political, cultural, and cultic life. Its centrality in religious contexts accounts for the diversity of religions—Jews, Christians, and Muslims—who in our day vie for a share of it in their respective religious traditions. In antiquity, Jerusalem was no less central. It was, indeed, the “Holy City.” Given its importance, it is small wonder that the prophet Jeremiah should speak so lamentably about its destruction in the Hebrew Scriptures. Obviously, Jeremiah was a pivotal figure in the generation enduring the destruction of the Jerusalem Temple in 587 B.C.E. Scholars have recognized that the events of that tragedy cast a long shadow over the history of Judaism well into the Second Temple period. It is not surprising, then, that when the catastrophe of 587 B.C.E. was repeated at the hands of the Romans in 70 C.E., traditions from the prophecy of Jeremiah were evoked in response. Specifically, the prophet’s scribe, Baruch, is called from his role as companion and secretary to the prophet (Jer 36:4–10, 26, 32) and placed as a nobleman (Jer 21:12; 43:2–3; 51:59). Here he resumes his role of dedicated service (Jer 45:2) not as a scribe to a prophet but as the recipient of a prophetic revelation himself. J. E. Wright asserts that this tradition envisaged Baruch “as Jeremiah’s prophetic successor.”¹ It seems natural, then, that the close associate of the revered prophet would himself be named among the apocalyptic visionaries of the Second Temple period.²

Among other works bearing the name of Baruch is the Septuagintal Book of Baruch. This work, preserved in Greek, is closely associated with the Greek version of Jeremiah and circulated with that book. It places Baruch among exiles in Babylon, exhorts people with a series of divine revelations (Bar 1:1–14), and offers an extended prayer (Bar 1:15–3:8). A poetic section (Bar 3:9–4:4) sings the praises of wisdom, which is followed by an exhortation to the exiles to remain faithful to God amidst their hardships (Bar 4:5–5:9). In that work Baruch appears as a Danielic interpreter of Torah. Third Baruch is a Greek apocalypse set, like 2 Baruch, in the destruction of Jerusalem in 587 B.C.E., though it surely was written as much as two centuries after the 70 C.E. disaster. It consists of the seer’s tour of five heavens in response to his angst over the tragedy wrought on the holy

1. J. E. Wright, “Baruch: His Evolution from Scribe to Apocalyptic Seer,” in M. E. Stone and T. A. Bergren, eds., Biblical Figures outside the Bible (Harrisburg, Pa.: Trinity Press International, 1998), 266.

2. His memory endures among the devout of Eastern Christianity, who celebrate a feast to this saint on September 28 or November 15. W. Speyer, “Baruch,” JAC 17 (1974): 185, 189. For an excellent summary of Baruch and literature bearing his name, see J. E. Wright, “Baruch, Books of,” DNTB 148–51.

city. In these visions Baruch is let in on heavenly secrets and God's sovereign control of history is affirmed, thus comforting Baruch. Fourth Baruch, also called Paraleipomena Jeremiou (Par. Jer. = "Omissions of Jeremiah") or "The Rest of the Words of Baruch," was likely written in the early second century C.E. and is heavily dependent on 2 Baruch. Its story recounts how Abimelech awoke after a sixty-six-year sleep to find Jerusalem destroyed by the Babylonians and its people taken into captivity. He is told, though, that God will restore his people, and learns that cultic vessels survived the Temple's destruction and will be put into service again when the Temple is one day restored. The role of Baruch is magnified in 2 Baruch, where he is an apocalyptic visionary and crucial leader of God's people in a time of crisis. Second Baruch is thought by some to be preserved and read among Syriac-speaking Jews recalling the destruction of Jerusalem.³

§1.1 Introduction to the Study of 2 Baruch

The study of 2 Baruch has been largely neglected for some time. Recently Mark Whitters has suggested its recent discovery, obscure language, and complex structure and symbolism contribute to the problem.⁴ Indeed, the Syriac of 2 Baruch often has some very difficult syntax, and the imageries meant to clarify matters to the ancient reader often further muddy the waters to the modern reader. Nevertheless, 2 Baruch occupies a unique and important place in biblical scholarship on a number of fronts. That it is a purely Jewish text (see §4) dating from the Second Temple period (see §6) lends to its importance in reconstructing historical and theological structures of that shadowy era in history. Moreover, that it relates to the appropriation of the Jewish religion shortly after the destruction of its Temple in 70 C.E. suggests that it bridges an important gap between Temple-centered Judaism and rabbinic Judaism. Second Baruch also speaks to the adaptation and appropriation of prophetic traditions from the Hebrew Bible for its own context. It serves as an important document for the description and defining of the slippery genre of "apocalypse" in the ancient Mediterranean world and, along with the books of 4 Ezra and Revelation, could be considered among the most important early examples of this genre. Finally, 2 Baruch provides some helpful points of comparison on a number of subjects pertinent to the study of the New Testament and earliest Christianity. The present volume will by no means address all or even most of these subjects. Instead, the present volume is intended to make a carefully reconstructed Syriac text of all 2 Baruch, with Greek and Latin fragments, in conjunction with a fresh English translation and concordance to all the ancient languages in which the book—save Arabic—is extant. That is, it is intended to be a tool for the development of further scholarship in the respective fields to which 2 Baruch contributes. I will, though, attempt to provide some discussion of introductory matters here.

3. P.-M. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch, introduction, tradition du Syriac et commentaire (SC 144 and 145; Paris: Cerf, 1969), 1.448–51.

4. Mark F. Whitters, The Epistle of Second Baruch: A Study in Form and Message (JSPSup 42; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2003), vii.

§1.2 History of Research to P. Bogaert

Modern study of the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch begins with the monumental work of P. Bogaert. His two-volume work (1969) includes both an extended introduction to issues pertaining to 2 Baruch and a full commentary on the Syriac text. In the introduction to his work, Bogaert provides an important summary of the history of scholarship in the study of 2 Baruch to date which, along with input from some other sources, will guide us in the history of the study of 2 Baruch. Bogaert notes his own work as part of a continuum of studies that spans three centuries. Critical study began with the epistle in volume 9 of the Paris Polyglot in 1645 (and, subsequently, in the Walton Polyglot of London [1657]), which disclosed the existence of an epistle of Baruch to the West that was distinct from the “canonical” manuscript of the same name transmitted in Syriac only. Gabriel Sioniti was responsible for the editing and providing a Latin translation.⁵ The transmitters of the Paris Polyglot clearly thought it differed from the canonical text,⁶ which also existed in Syriac.⁷

Theories of the origins of the manuscript of the epistle arose quickly, followed by published editions. Pierre-Daniel Huet⁸ (1630–1721) regarded it as the work of a Syrian monk. Augustin Calmet (1672–1757) disagreed on the grounds of differing angelologies.⁹ In 1723, the Latin translation of the letter was republished in a later edition of Codex Pseudepigraphus by J. A. Fabricius. W. Whiston produced an English translation in 1727 and recognized its Jewish origins. A French translation did not appear until the work of J. P. Migne in 1858. The first of the critical editions was provided in 1861 by P. A. de Lagarde (1827–1891).

Credit for the discovery of the Apocalypse of Baruch goes to another scholar. It was A. M. Ceriani (1828–1907) who dubbed the book “The Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch” upon his discovery of the document in the Ambrosian Library in Milan in the nineteenth century.¹⁰ In 1866, he made the apocalypse known, of which the pseudepigraphic letter is a part. The Syriac text was published in 1871. Later, the 1907 edition by M. Kmoskó in the Patrologia Syriaca provided a complete edition of the original text.

Concurrently, 2 Baruch’s Jewish character was also recognized. F. Rosenthal (1885) attributed the work to the school of Rabbi Aqiba, the “very heart of Judaism.”¹¹ The year 1892 saw the publication of the respective works of Eugène de Faye (1860–1929) and R. Kabisch (1868–1914). These scholars argued on

5. Cf. I. Ziadé, “Sionite,” Dictionnaire de théologie catholique (ed. I. Gabriel ; Paris : Letouzey et Ané, 1941), vol. 14.2, cols. 2167–70.

6. A header on the Paris Polyglott reads “Haec Epistola differt omnino a Vulgata et LXX.”

7. The canonical version was published for the first time in Syriac according to two manuscripts then in England.

8. Demonstratio Evangelica (Leipzig: J. Thomam Fritsch, 1694), 450–51.

9. Commentaire littéral sur tous les livres de l’Ancien et du Nouveau Testament (Paris: Emeryl Saugrin/Martin, 1726), 6:324.

10. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 3.

11. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch, 1.28; F. Rosenthal, Vier apokryphische Bücher aus der Zeit und Schule R. Akiba’s (Leipzig: Otto Schulze, 1885).

theological and literary grounds that 2 Baruch was the product not of an author but of an editor. For them, it was an amalgamation. The problem of the composition and unity of 2 Baruch has been revisited on several occasions, as we will see below.

The first commentary on 2 Baruch appeared in 1896 and was the work of R. H. Charles (1855–1931).¹² Charles also viewed the work as the product of an editor or editors rather than a single, unified whole. Charles also published a critical edition to the letter and was the first to discuss its textual history from thirteen manuscripts and the Walton and Paris Polyglots. Charles's work is noted for its attention to source-critical matters pertaining to 2 Baruch. He finds inconsistencies and contradictions throughout to indicate that we should think not of an author of 2 Baruch, but rather an editor of its disparate traditions. Indeed, it is this incoherence that led Charles to look closely for evidence of sources,¹³ which was very much "in vogue in Charles' day."¹⁴ His work finds six distinct literary sources that make up SAB alone, which then leads to problems of incoherence within the apocalypse. (Surely more work must be done on the Syriac stylistic features to aid in isolating these distinctions with more sophistication.) The theme that unifies these disparate sources, he indicates, is the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 C.E. He finds three sources from prior to that event, A¹, A², and A³. These are characterized by optimism about a future messianic age. Later sources, B¹, B², and B³, are more pessimistic and do not articulate a future intervention by the Messiah. Whittiers cogently summarizes Charles's views: "The A materials vary according to how active a role the Messiah plays in Israel's deliverance, while B traditions have given up hope for the Messiah and show various responses to the downfall of Jerusalem."¹⁵ So detailed is Charles's work on these sources that he even speculates on their geographical origins (B²—Judea and B³—Babylon). Charles sees Ep2B as a counterpart of a letter used as a source in the LXX Baruch.¹⁶ By Bogaert's time, literary unity was doubtful and expected to be proven rather than assumed. A few scholars, though, including P. M. J. Lagrange and P. J. B. Frey, advocated literary unity.

12. In English work, in contrast, Charles's work was widely disseminated in his "Apocalyptic Literature" article in Encyclopaedia Biblica (ed. T. K. Cheyne and J. C. Black; London: A. C. Black, 1899) and in his well-known Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament.

13. R. H. Charles, The Apocalypse of Baruch: Translated from the Syriac (London: A. & C. Black, 1896; repr. Eugene, Or.: Wipf & Stock, 2005), lxii.

14. Whittiers, Epistle of Second Baruch, 25.

15. Whittiers, Epistle of Second Baruch, 24.

16. See Whittiers, Epistle of Second Baruch, 25–26 for a summary; Charles, Apocalypse of Baruch, lxxv–lxxvii for further details. Whittiers's criticism (Epistle of Second Baruch, 26) is surely correct that Charles's fragmentation of 2 Baruch as a whole fails to make adequate sense of the literary whole in which it has come to us. This is underscored by J. H. Charlesworth, who shows that both Jewish and Christian apocalypses are replete with what strikes the modern reader as redundancies and inconsistencies that were inherent to the genre ("Qumran in Relation to the Apocrypha, Rabbinic Judaism and Nascent Christianity: Impacts on the University Teaching of Jewish Civilization in the Hellenistic-Roman Period," in Jewish Civilization in the Hellenistic-Roman Period (ed. S. Talmon; Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1991), 172; see also F. J. Murphy, The Structure and Meaning of Second Baruch (SBLDS 78; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1985), 3.

In 1924 Bruno Violet, having studied 4 Ezra at length, published a German translation of both apocalypses with copious notes and critical introduction. Bogaert hails it as the most comprehensive work to date.¹⁷ Violet advocated the literary unity of each apocalypse, while highlighting their close resemblance. For Violet, 2 Baruch was a coherent book carefully comprised of its various sources. The work is accompanied by a philological appendix by Hugo Gressmann, which reveals in 4 Ezra a familiarity with 2 Baruch.¹⁸ The matter of the literary relationship between 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch has also been the subject of some discussion and will be dealt with later (§5). Gressmann's work is also important for evaluating the potential Vorlagen of the Syriac of 2 Baruch.¹⁹

§1.3 History of Research since Bogaert

Bogaert's work sets the standard for modern study of 2 Baruch. He views the book as a coherent unit, putting into question Charles's work that 2 Baruch originated from various inconsistent sources. Bogaert rather focuses on the work's unity and the relation between 2 Baruch and rabbinic Judaism, specifically Judaism following the catastrophes of 70 C.E.²⁰ Whitters describes Bogaert's concerns as primarily historical and theological, using 2 Baruch as a source for understanding Judaism at the time of Jesus. Indeed, Bogaert's attention to the theological matters of 2 Baruch is seen in the 439-page introduction to his 157-page exegetical commentary!²¹

Since Bogaert, a dissertation on 2 Baruch was presented in the 1970s,²² and two others in the 1980s, the latter concerned with literary matters pertaining to 2 Baruch.²³ These will be discussed with literary features below. Several articles have also made contributions to the study of 2 Baruch. Other advances have been made in recent years that, while not primarily addressing just 2 Baruch, are nonetheless foundational for our understanding of this fascinating document. Foremost among these is the delineation of the genre and other issues pertaining to the term "apocalyptic," appropriately used of 2 Baruch. Of equal importance is the development of more sophisticated methodologies for determining the provenance of numerous pseudepigrapha, including 2 Baruch. Both of these issues will be addressed below. What remains for other scholars is to incorporate developing study

17. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch, 1.30.

18. Also in the third edition to W. Bousset's Die Religion des Judentums im späthellenistischen Zeitalter (Tübingen: Mohr, 1926).

19. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 28.

20. The limited availability of documents from Qumran accounts for Bogaert's inattention to them.

21. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 29.

22. A. B. Kolenkow, "An Introduction to 2 Baruch 53, 56–74: Structure and Substance." Ph.D. diss., Harvard University, 1971.

23. G. B. Sayler, Have the Promises Failed? A Literary Analysis of 2 Baruch (SBLDS 72; Missoula, Mont: Scholars Press, 1984); and Murphy, Structure and Meaning.

of Syriac lexicography, relating 2 Baruch to extended work on the diversity and (at times) unity of Second Temple Judaism, particularly the enormous investigation currently under way on Josephus, who provides the most substantive historical account of the events surrounding the destruction of the Temple in 70 C.E. to which 2 Baruch is written in response.

§2 The Text of Second Baruch

2 Baruch is found in the earliest whole Syriac Bible manuscript, Codex Ambrosianus (ms 7a1),²⁴ though it is absent in all later Syriac biblical manuscripts.²⁵ Some texts, however, were preserved fragmentarily in lectionaries. The manuscript was found under A. M. Ceriani's curatorship of the Ambrosian library in 1855, and he is credited with bringing its significant cache of Syriac Bible manuscripts to light.²⁶ Whitters describes the manuscript as vellum, measuring 36 by 26 cm, in three neat columns of Estrangela script, about fifty-two lines per column. The text is partially pointed, lacks vowels, and is punctuated. The fact that there are wide margins on the manuscript devoid of scribal notations suggested to Ceriani that the manuscript may have not been in circulation within ecclesiastical usage.²⁷ Ceriani's discovery was the first of its existence, a 330-folio document that is the oldest Syriac biblical manuscript. The text of 2 Baruch is comprised of about 8,800 Syriac words in all. It consists of two parts, the Syriac Apocalypse (= SAB; 2 Baruch 1–77) and an Epistle (=Ep2B; 2 Baruch 78–87). Discussion of the text of the Apocalypse (SAB) and Epistle (Ep2B) are best dealt with separately.

§2.1 Text of SAB

The primary text for SAB is a single Syriac manuscript, though other versions—in part and in full—are also extant.

§2.1.1 Syriac Text of SAB

The text of SAB is extant in full in a single Syriac manuscript, which remains the best and earliest full text of the apocalypse.²⁸ The manuscript is Bibliotheca Ambrosiana B. 21 Ins, in Milan, folios 257f–265b, #7a1. It dates from the sixth or 24. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, vii, 4. See D. Bundy, "Pseudepigrapha in Syriac Literature," SBLSP 30 (1991), 745–65.

25. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 5.

26. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 5.

27. A. M. Ceriani, Translatio Syra Pescitto Veteris Testamenti ex codice Ambrosiano (Milan: Pogliani, 1876–1881), 8.

28. The Arabic version is also extant, though it is thought to be a free rendering of the Syriac. See §2.1.4.

seventh century.²⁹ Moreover, four Jacobite lectionaries and an additional manuscript contain small sections of the Apocalypse:

1. Lectionary 1312 (British Library, Addit. MS 14.686), dated 1255, fol. 77a, c. 1, l. 14—77b, c. 2, l. 9, contains 44:9–15.
2. Lectionary 1313 (British Library, Addit. MS 14.687), dated 1256, fol. 157b, c. 1, l. 6—158a, c. 2, l. 3, contains 72:1–73:2.
3. Lectionary 1313 (British Library, Addit. MS 14.687), dated 1256, fol. 175a, c. 1, l. 1, contains 72:173:2–.³⁰
4. Lectionary 1515 (A. Konath Libr. [Pampakuda, Kerala, India], MS 77[4]), dated to 1423 C.E., contains SAB 44:9–15 and 72:173:2–.³¹

All are lectionaries from the Jacobite tradition of Syriac Christianity. The first published edition of a critical text of SAB was in 1973. At that time the Peshitta Institute of Leiden presented a text, without 2EpB, edited by S. Dederling.³² Dederling omitted 2EpB because he intended to address it where it commonly appears in the Syriac tradition, after Baruch and the Epistle of Jeremiah and before 4 Ezra. Dederling's untimely death meant that a critical text of 2EpB was yet to be published.³³

§2.1.2 Greek of SAB

Also extant are excerpts from 2 Bar. 12–14 in Greek on a single fragment—verso (11:1–13:2) and recto (13:11–14:3) from the Oxyrhynchus papyri cache. It dates to the fourth or fifth century.³⁴ It is presented here without comment, in parallel to the extant Syriac text.³⁵

§2.1.3 Latin of SAB

Also extant is a Latin excerpt, perhaps translated from the Greek. The one surviving Latin fragment of 2 Baruch is a single citation found in Cyprian, Test. 3.29, which corresponds to 2 Bar. 48:36, 33–34. This fragment is presented here without comment and in parallel to the extant Syriac.³⁶

29. A. F. J. Klijn, “2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch,” OTP 1.615.

30. On lectionaries 1312 and 1313, see W. Baars, “Neue Textzeugen der syrischen Baruchapokalypse,” VT 13 (1963): 476–78.

31. S. Dederling, ed., “Apocalypse of Baruch,” in The Old Testament in Syriac (Leiden: Brill, 1973), par. 4, fasc. 3. iii.

32. Dederling, “Apocalypse of Baruch.”

33. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 7.

34. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 8, and n. 17. Cf. A.-M. Denis, Concordance grecque des pseudépigraphes d'Ancien Testament (Concordance, corpus des textes, indice; Louvain: Peeters, 1987), 905. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch, 1.40–43; K. Aland, Repertorium der griechischen christlichen Papyri (1. Biblische Papyri: Altest Testament, Neues Testament, Varia, Apokryphen; PTS 18; Berlin/New York: de Gruyter, 1976), 367.

35. For notes on the texts and versions, see B. Violet, Die Apokalypsen des Esra und des Baruch in deutscher Gestalt (GCS 32; Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1924), 219–20, 222–23, 357–63.

36. R. Weber, in A.-M. Denis, Concordance latine des pseudépigraphes d'Ancien Testament (Turnhout: Brepols, 1993), 631.

§2.1.4 Arabic of SAB

An Arabic manuscript is also extant (Sinai no. 589), which has only been published and discussed since 1975.³⁷ Discovered in the 1970s in photographs of its codex from the library of the Monastery of St. Catherine,³⁸ the manuscript itself is 28 by 17 cm and contains sixty-eight folios—thirty-three of 2 Baruch and thirty-five of 4 Ezra.³⁹ The first folio and colophon are both missing, which leads scholars to determine its history from internal evidence.⁴⁰

Klijn's preliminary observations suggest that this manuscript is a translation of a Syriac document, but probably not the same text as present in Bibliotheca Anzbrosinno B. 21 Inf: "The translation is rather free and thoroughly adapted to Muslim ideas."⁴¹ Its dating must be determined from its Arabic syntax and orthography, which seem to reflect best that of Christian Middle Arabic.⁴² The dates have ranged from the tenth or eleventh century⁴³ or perhaps a century or two earlier.⁴⁴ F. Leemhuis argues for a Muslim origin of the manuscript,⁴⁵ though not all would agree. Surely, however, Klijn⁴⁶ and others⁴⁷ are correct that the Syriac and Arabic documents are sufficiently distinct so as to warrant study of their own textual traditions in isolation from each other. That is, the Arabic manuscript does not significantly improve our understanding of the Syriac text, but it is sometimes useful in evaluating conjectured improvements to the Syriac proposed by former 37. P. S. van Koningsveld, "An Arabic Manuscript of the Apocalypse of Baruch," JSS 6 (1975): 205–7.

38. Aziz Suryal Atiya, The Arabic Manuscripts of Mount Sinai: A Handlist of the Arabic Manuscripts and Scrolls Microfilmed at the Library of the Monastery of St. Catherine, Mount Sinai, 1 (Baltimore: Publications of the American Foundation for the Study of Man, 1955); A. Drint, ed. The Mount Sinai Arabic Version of IV Ezra (CSCO 564; Scriptores Arabici tom. 49; Leuven: Peeters, 1997). Whitters (Epistle of Second Baruch, 9 n. 21) notes that, in the latter, "Apocalypse of Baruch" denotes the entirety of 2 Baruch, not just the apocalypse.

39. Whitters (Epistle of Second Baruch, 9, and n. 22) makes some fascinating observations on the manuscript. He notes that the last page consists of handwritten notes by a monk, which reveal that the author of the document visited the Church of the Resurrection in Jerusalem, though the notations are of a differing hand from the manuscript itself and likely written much later. Cf. Drint, The Mount Sinai Arabic Version of IV Ezra, vi.

40. See F. Leemhuis, A. F. J. Klijn, and G. J. van Gelder, The Arabic Text of the Apocalypse of Baruch (Leiden: Brill, 1986), 4–5.

41. Klijn, "2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch," 1.615; cf. F. Leemhuis, "The Arabic Version of the Apocalypse of Baruch: A Christian Text?" JSP 4 (1989): 19–26; A. F. J. Klijn, "Recent Developments in the Study of the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch," JSP 4 (1989): 3–17; F. Leemhuis, "The Mount Sinai Arabic Version of the Apocalypse of Baruch," in Actes du Deuxième Congrès International d'Études Arabes Chrétiennes (Rome: Pontificum Institutum Studiorum Orientalium, 1986), 73–79.

42. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 9; cf. J. Blau, A Grammar of Christian Arabic (CSCO 267, 279, 276; Louvain: Secrétariat du Corpus CSO, 1966–1967).

43. Atiya, Arabic Manuscripts of Mount Sinai.

44. Drint, The Mount Sinai Arabic Version of IV Ezra ii, xxvi; cf. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 10 and n. 28.

45. Leemhuis, "Arabic Version of the Apocalypse of Baruch," 19–20. For a summary, see Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 10–11.

46. Klijn, "Recent Developments," 4.

47. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 12.

editors of this pseudepigraphon. No critical edition of both is possible, and no Arabic is reproduced here.

§2.2 Text of Ep2B

The Epistle of 2 Baruch (Ep2B) is preserved in numerous Syriac manuscripts, thirty-six in all.⁴⁸ The oldest codex of the Syriac Bible, manuscript 7a1, has two forms of the letter: the first is incorporated into the apocalypse proper, the second occurs as an independent form of the epistle placed near the book of Baruch and the Epistle of Jeremiah. It was this latter form that was widely circulated and present in medieval Syriac Bible manuscripts. The manuscript evidence for Ep2B is distinct from that of the rest of 2 Baruch (SAB). The letter that was canonized by ancestral communities in the Syrian Orthodox ecclesiastical traditions differs from that discovered in Ceriani's manuscript.⁴⁹

The thirty-six manuscripts of the epistle occur in two recensions: that of 7a1 and all the rest. Whittiers comments that though there is no exhaustive critical edition of Ep2B in print, following Charles he conjectures that there are likely no radical differences between the two recensions.⁵⁰ Bogaert contended that the recension of Ep2B attached to the apocalypse is older than the other, suggesting that the discrepancies from the independent recension are best explained by being detached from the apocalypse at a later date. This leaves the recension affixed to the apocalypse, designated "c," the likely oldest version in his view.⁵¹ For convenience, the alphabetic designation of manuscripts employed by Charles and others is followed here:

Ms a: Codex Ambrosianus, fols. 176b–177b

Ms b: British Library, Addit. MS 17.105, fols. 116a–121a (ca. sixth century; twelfth century?)

Ms c: Bibliotheca Ambrosiana B. 21 Ins, in Milan, folios 265a – 267b, #7a1 (ca. sixth century).

Ms d: Codex Ambrosianus A 145.

Ms e: Codex Bodley, No. 1, Syr. MSS, fol. 430, 432 (ca. 1627)

Ms f: Codex British Museum Egerton 704, fol. 373a–374a (ca seventeenth century)

Ms g: Codex British Museum Addit. 12.172, fol. 192b–195b (ca tenth–eleventh century)

Ms h: Codex British Museum Addit. 18.715, fol. 242b–244a (ca twelfth century)

Ms i: Codex Bodley, No. 2, Syr MSS (ca. 1614)

Ms k: Codex Bodley, No. 20, Syr., fol. 37–38,

Ms l: Codex British Museum Addit. 12.178, fol. 111b (ca. ninth–tenth century)

48. Klijn, "2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch," 1.616.

49. Whittiers, Epistle of Second Baruch, 6.

50. Whittiers, Epistle of Second Baruch, 14.

51. Bogaert, Apocalypse de Baruch, 1.67–72.

Ms m: Codex British Museum 14.482, fol. 47b–48a (ca. eleventh–twelfth century)

Ms n: Codex British Museum 14.684, fol. 24 (ca. twelfth century).

Ms o: Codex British Museum 14.485 fols. 64v, 119v (ca. 824).⁵²

Ms P: Paris Polyglot (1645)

Ms W: Walton Polyglot (1657)

§2.3 Text Presented Here

For this edition I have chosen to reproduce, almost in its entirety and with very little alteration, the single whole manuscript of 2 Baruch, 7a1. I have also incorporated, however, some very slight alterations to the text for syntactical clarity, and collated suggested emendations proposed by various scholars in footnotes.⁵³ Where possible, I have tried to limit the adoption of emendations to ms 7a1 to features of grammatical and/or syntactical errors only. Emendations proposed by other scholars, such as the choice of one word over another, the inclusion or omission of a relative pronoun, etc., have been referenced in footnotes but not incorporated in the primary text. Furthermore, the few readings from other Syriac manuscripts for various portions of the text are noted in footnotes. The few extant Greek and Latin texts are presented in full and parallel to the corresponding Syriac text.

§3 Original Language

There is some question as to the original language of 2 Baruch. The superscript to 2 Baruch 1:1 indicates that the Syriac is a translation from the Greek (ܡܬܬܪܝܡ ܡܢ ܗܝܠܐܢܐ; “translated from Greek into Syriac”). Scholars widely recognize this to be the case.⁵⁴ Some, though, suggest that the Greek itself may have been a translation of a Semitic original.

§3.1 Arguments in Favor of a Greek Original

Scholars from the 1800s, beginning with Ceriani, generally posited a Greek original.⁵⁵ Bogaert continues that tradition with a thorough discussion of the matter.⁵⁶

52. According to Violet (Die Apokalypsen des Esra und des Baruch, lvii), this ms is omitted by Charles because of its identity with ms m.

53. Charles and others are known to make extensive emendations to such texts. See the criticism by J. H. Charlesworth, The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha and the New Testament: Prolegomena for the Study of Christian Origins (rev. ed.; Harrisburg, Pa.: Trinity Press International, 1998), 15–16.

54. See Klijn, “2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch,” 1.616.

55. Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 15, n. 46.

56. Apocalypse de Baruch, 1.353–80.

He claims to have found LXX citations in 2 Baruch. All this really shows, though, is that the Greek Vorlage was influenced by the LXX and does not necessarily suggest Greek as the original language.⁵⁷ Moreover, as Bogaert argues, alleged Semitisms are likewise found in texts of unquestionably Greek origin in the New Testament.⁵⁸ The decisive element for Bogaert, however, is his contention for a diaspora milieu for 2 Baruch, which, in his view, necessitates a Greek original.

§3.2 Arguments in Favor of Semitic Original

Other scholars (Charles, Violet, Gressmann, Schürer, Wellhausen, Ryssel, Ginzberg, Torrey, Strugnell, Klijn, and Hadot) argue for a Hebrew or even an Aramaic original.⁵⁹ Charles and Violet/Gressmann have particularly challenged the notion of a Greek original in favor of a Semitic original. They argued this on a number of grounds: 2 Baruch's references to texts from the Hebrew Bible follow the Hebrew rather than the Greek traditions (LXX); some Syriac expressions are intelligible only when retroverted to Hebrew; numerous Hebraisms throughout; and affinities with rabbinic writings. For Violet, the primary reason for favoring a Semitic origin is that the extant Syriac tradition does not coalesce with the extant Greek fragment.⁶⁰

Klijn also argues for a Semitic original for slightly different reasons. First, he argues that the many parallels between 2 Baruch and other Jewish writings composed in Hebrew or Aramaic suggest that 2 Baruch has the same Semitic origin. Second, in some cases, the Syriac text is intelligible only after translating it into Hebrew. Finally, a translation of the Syriac text into Hebrew restores a play on words apparently contained in the original.⁶¹ None of these arguments are in themselves convincing. The language of similar literature is hardly sufficient for contending for the same language. The notion of reconstructing a Hebrew retroversion is highly subjective especially because the Syriac would seem to be a rather free rendering of its alleged Vorlage.

57. Similarly, Whitters, Epistle of Second Baruch, 17 n. 56.

58. See F. Zimmerman, "Textual Observations on the Apocalypse of Baruch," JTS 40 (1939): 151–56; Charles, Apocalypse of Baruch, xliiv–lii; and esp. Violet, Die Apokalypsen des Esra und des Baruch, 344–50. See, recently, Karen H. Jobes, "The Syntax of 1 Peter: Just How Good Is the Greek?" BBR 13, no. 2 (2003): 159–74.

59. See Strugnell's review of Bogaert in JBL 89 (1970): 484–85; Klijn, "2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch," 1.616; J. Hadot, "Le problème de l'Apocalypse Syriacque de Baruch d'après un ouvrage récent," Sem 20 (1970): 59–76 (esp. 63–64). The various scholars and their views on the issue are outlined by Bogaert (Apocalypse de Baruch, 1.353–54). Charles suggests that the Syriac bears evidence of transliterations of Greek words, and "renderings explicable only on the hypothesis that the translator followed the wrong meaning of the Greek word before him" (Charles, Apocalypse of Baruch, 1).

60. Violet, Die Apokalypsen des Esra und des Baruch, lxii–lxiv.

61. Klijn, "2 (Syriac Apocalypse of) Baruch," 1.616.

Other documents randomly have different content

Welcome to our website – the ideal destination for book lovers and knowledge seekers. With a mission to inspire endlessly, we offer a vast collection of books, ranging from classic literary works to specialized publications, self-development books, and children's literature. Each book is a new journey of discovery, expanding knowledge and enriching the soul of the reader.

Our website is not just a platform for buying books, but a bridge connecting readers to the timeless values of culture and wisdom. With an elegant, user-friendly interface and an intelligent search system, we are committed to providing a quick and convenient shopping experience. Additionally, our special promotions and home delivery services ensure that you save time and fully enjoy the joy of reading.

Let us accompany you on the journey of exploring knowledge and personal growth!

ebooknice.com

35
1500
AD
AD
1915

APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM
AND ASCENSION OF ISAIAH

Translations of Early Documents

CORNELL UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES
ITHACA, N. Y. 14853

JOHN M. OLIN
LIBRARY

Cornell University Library
30.A6A3 1918

The apocalypse of Abraham /

3 1924 010 244 048

Cornell University
Library

The original of this book is in the Cornell University Library.

There are no known copyright restrictions in the United States on the use of the text.

TRANSLATIONS OF EARLY DOCUMENTS
SERIES I
PALESTINIAN JEWISH TEXTS
(PRE-RABBINIC)

THE APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

THE APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

EDITED, WITH A TRANSLATION FROM THE SLAVONIC TEXT AND NOTES

BY

G. H. BOX, M.A.

LECTURER IN RABBINIC HEBREW, KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON;
HON. CANON OF ST. ALBANS

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF

J. I. LANDSMAN

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING
CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE

LONDON: 68, HAYMARKET, S.W. 1.

NEW YORK: THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

1918

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN BY RICHARD CLAY & SONS, LIMITED,
BRUNSWICK ST., STAMFORD ST., S.E. 1,
AND BUNGAY, SUFFOLK.

EDITORS' PREFACE

THE object of this series of translations is primarily to furnish students with short, cheap, and handy text-books, which, it is hoped, will facilitate the study of the particular texts in class under competent teachers. But it is also hoped that the volumes will be acceptable to the general reader who may be interested in the subjects with which they deal. It has been thought advisable, as a general rule, to restrict the notes and comments to a small compass; more especially as, in most cases, excellent works of a more elaborate character are available. Indeed, it is much to be desired that these translations may have the effect of inducing readers to study the larger works.

Our principal aim, in a word, is to make some difficult texts, important for the study of Christian origins, more generally accessible in faithful and scholarly translations.

In most cases these texts are not available in a cheap and handy form. In one or two cases texts have been included of books which are available in the official Apocrypha; but in every such case reasons exist for putting forth these texts in a new translation, with an Introduction, in this series.

* * * * *

An edition of The Apocalypse of Abraham is included in the present volume. The explanatory notes, in this case, given in the commentary on the text, are rather longer and fuller than usual. This was rendered necessary by the fact that the Book is made accessible here to English readers for the first time; and the difficulties and obscurities in the text are not inconsiderable.

W. O. E. OESTERLEY.

G. H. BOX.

INTRODUCTION

SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE BOOK

The Apocalypse of Abraham, which has been preserved in old Slavonic literature, falls into two distinct parts (cf. the somewhat similar case of The Ascension of Isaiah). The first part, contained in chaps. i.–viii., consists of a Midrashic narrative based upon the legend of Abraham's conversion from idolatry, which has several peculiar features.¹ The second part (chaps. ix.–xxxii.) is purely apocalyptic in character, and contains a revelation made to Abraham about the future of his race, after his (temporary) ascent into the heavenly regions, under the guidance of the archangel Jael, who here seems to play the part of Metatron-Michael. It is based upon the account of Abraham's trance-vision described in Genesis xv.—a favourite theme for apocalyptic speculation. In the Book, as it lies before us, the two parts are organically connected. Thus in chap. x. the archangel says: I am the one who was commissioned to set on fire thy father's house together with him, because he displayed reverence for dead (idols)—an allusion to the narrative of chap. viii.; and the general plan of the whole work seems to be based upon the idea that Abraham's dissatisfaction with the idol-worship by which he was surrounded, which found vent in his strong protest to his father Terah (chaps. i.–viii.), appealed so much to the divine favour, that the archangel Jael was specially sent by God to instruct him and initiate him into the knowledge of heavenly mysteries. Whether the apocalyptic portion ever existed in a shorter and independent form will be discussed below.

¹ See Appendix I, esp. p. 93.

The Book opens with a description of Abraham's activities as a maker and seller of idols, his father Terah being a manufacturer of idols. His doubts as to the justifiable character of the idol-worship are roused especially by an accident that befell the stone image called Merumath, and by a similar accident that happened to "five other gods," by which they were broken in pieces (chaps. i.-ii.). Reflecting on this, he is led to protest to his father against the unreality of asking a blessing from such helpless images, thereby rousing Terah's anger (chaps. iii.-iv.). He is led to test further the powers of the idols by placing a wooden god Barisat before the fire, and telling the idol to see that the fire must not be allowed to die down during his absence. On returning he finds Barisat fallen backwards and "horribly burnt" (chap. v.). He again protests to his father against the futility of such worship, sarcastically contrasting the relative merits of gold, silver and wooden idols (chap. vi.). He then proceeds to show that the elements of fire, water, earth, and the heavenly bodies (sun, moon, and stars) are more worthy of honour than the idols, and yet, as each is subjected to some superior force, they can none of them claim to be God (chap. vii.). While he was yet speaking to his father a voice came from heaven bidding him leave his father's house. He had scarcely left the house when fire descended and consumed all within it.

The apocalyptic part opens with a divine command to Abraham to prepare a sacrifice with a view to receiving a divine revelation concerning the future (chap. ix.). Abraham, terrified at the experience, is confronted by the angel Jaoel, who encourages him, and explains his commission to be with Abraham, and act as his celestial guide. Under the direction of the angel he proceeds to Horeb, the Mount of God, a journey of forty days (chaps. x.-xii.), and there, with the help of Jael, accomplishes the sacrifice. At this point Azazel, the fallen archangel and seducer of mankind, intervenes and attempts to dissuade Abraham from his purpose. In the form of an unclean bird he flies down "upon the carcasses" (cf. Gen. xv. 11), and tries to induce Abraham to leave the holy place, but in vain. Jael denounces the evil spirit, bidding him depart, and telling him that the heavenly garment which was formerly his has been set aside for Abraham (chaps. xiii.-xiv.).

After this Abraham and the angel ascend on the wings of the unslaughtered birds (of the sacrifice) to heaven, which is described at length. It is filled with "a strong light" of power inexpressible, and there they see the angels who are born and disappear daily, after singing their hymn of praise (chaps. xv.-xvi.). At this point Abraham, hearing the divine voice, falls prostrate, and, taught by the angel, utters the celestial song of praise, and prays for enlightenment (chap. xvii.). He sees the divine throne with the Cherubim and the holy Creatures (hayyoth), of whom a description is given, and particularly of their rivalry which is mitigated by the activity of Jael (chap. xviii.). God now speaks and discloses to Abraham the powers of heaven in the various firmaments below (chap. xix.). God promises him a seed numerous as the stars (chap. xx.). In answer to a question by Abraham about Azazel, God shows him a vision of the world, its fruits and creatures, the sea and its monsters (including Leviathan), the Garden of Eden, its fruits, streams, and blessedness. He sees also a multitude of human beings "half of them on the right side of the picture, and half of them on the left" (chap. xxi.). The fall of man is explained to him, being traced to the sin of Adam and Eve in the Garden, a vision of which appears in the picture and also of its results upon the destinies of mankind, who are divided into the people on the right side of the picture, representing the Jewish world, and the people on the left representing the heathen world. In particular the sin of idolatry resulting in impurity and murder is sketched and made manifest (chaps. xxii.—xxv.). The question, why sin is permitted, is answered by God (chap. xxvi.), and this is followed by a vision of judgement in which the destruction of the Temple is portrayed. In answer to Abraham's anguished question it is explained to him that this is due to the sin of idolatry on the part of his seed. At the same time a hint is given him of coming salvation (chap. xxvii.). In answer to the question, how long shall the judgement last? a description is given of the troubles preceding the Messianic Age, and the dawn of the latter (chaps. xxviii.—xxix.; the latter chapter contains a long Christian interpolation). At this point Abraham finds himself "upon the earth," but receives a further disclosure regarding the punishment of the heathen and the ingathering of Israel (chaps. xxx.—xxxi.). A short paragraph repeating the promise of the chosen people's deliverance from oppression closes the Book (chap. xxxii.).

The character of the Book, as a whole, is thoroughly Jewish. Its original language was probably Hebrew or Aramaic, from which a Greek version (underlying the Slavonic) was made; and the date of the original composition may be placed at the end of the first or the beginning of the second century A.D.

THE SLAVONIC TEXT AND MSS ¹

The Slavonic version, or rather translation, of The Apocalypse of Abraham (Ap. Abr.) has been preserved in a number of MSS. The oldest and most valuable of these is the famous Codex Sylvester,²

¹ The substance of this section of the Introduction has been contributed by Mr. J. I. Landsman.

² Sylvester, after whom the MS. is named, was a prominent priest in the early years of the reign of Ivan the Terrible, which now belongs to the Library of the Printing-department of the Holy Synod in Moscow. The MS., which dates from the first half of the fourteenth century, is written on parchment, with two columns on each page, and contains 216 leaves in all, our Apocalypse occupying leaves 164-182.¹ It contains a collection of lives of different saints, and The Apocalypse of Abraham stands in it as a work complete in itself, without any connexion with the works which precede and follow it.

The text of our Apocalypse according to Codex Sylvester (cited as S) has been edited by Professor N. Tikhonravov in his Memorials of Russian Apocryphal Literature (Pamyatniki otrechennoi russkoi literatury), Moscow, 1863, Vol. I. pp. 32-53; and also Professor J. Sreznevsky in his Ancient Monuments of Russian Writing and Language (Drevnie Pam'yatniki russkovo pis'ma i yazyka), Petrograd, 1863, I. pp. 247^b-256^a, with readings from the Uvaroff MS., which apparently is a mere copy of S. Tikhonravov has supplied his edition with corrections of the numerous clerical mistakes which abound in S, thereby earning the gratitude of students, while Sreznevsky has satisfied himself with producing a mere copy of the text, with all its mistakes. Apart from these editions there has also been published by the Imperial Society of Bibliophiles a facsimile edition of the text of our Apocalypse, according to S (Petrograd, 1890), thus affording students the means of consulting the MS. itself. Apart from S the upon whom he for some years exercised a salutary influence. He was an author and lover of books, and the Codex was one of a collection of MSS. which remained after his death in the Kirillo monastery, whither he was banished: see Sreznevsky, Narratives about the Saints Boris and Gleb (Skazan'ia o sv'yatykh Borisě i Glěbě), Petrograd, 1860, Pt. I., and The Orthodox Encyclopædia (Pravoslavnaya Bogoslovskaya E.) iv. 1195 (s.v. Domostroi).

¹ A full description of S is given by Sreznevsky, op. cit., pp. i-viii.

text of Ap. Abr. is also contained in many Palæas.¹ The Palæa, as its name indicates (ἡ παλαιά sc. διαθήκη), deals with the Old Testament, especially with the historical part of it, beginning with creation and ending with David or Solomon, the biblical narratives being enlarged and embellished with apocryphal and pseudepigraphical matter. The origin of the Slavonic Palæa must be sought in some Greek prototype,² which by way of Bulgaria and Serbia had, at an early date, found an entrance into Russia, where for centuries it enjoyed great popularity—at least so long as a translation of the whole Bible had not been made accessible to both clergy and people, that is up till the sixteenth century.

There are two kinds of Palæas, the historical and the expository, the former being also known as the “eyes” of the Palæa, because it contains the text upon which the expository Palæa comments. The expositions are of a polemical character, the polemic being invariably directed against the Jews (Zhidovin), to whom it is demonstrated that all the prophecies and the manifold types had found their true fulfilment in Christ. The Palæa draws richly upon the Jewish Midrashic Literature, and then uses the material as an argument against the Jews from whom it was borrowed.

Originally our Apocalypse had no place in the Palæa, as may be seen from the oldest Palæa MS., which dates from the fourteenth century, and is preserved in the Alexander-Nevsky Monastery (Petrograd). Later, it was inserted, but still retained its original character of an independent work (as is the case in the Uvaroff Palæa); but later still ¹ On the subject of the Palæa see the works of N. S. Tikhonravov (Sochinenia), Moscow, 1898, Vol. I. pp. 156–170, and the valuable notes at the end of the volume; cf. also the article Palæa in the Russian Encyclopædia published by Brockhaus—Efron.

² A MS. of a Greek Palæa is known to exist in the Vienna Library, and has been edited by A. V. Vasil'eff in Anecdota græco-byzantina, I. pp. 188–192 (Moscow, 1892).

(from the sixteenth century and onwards) the text of Ap. Abr. loses its original character of an independent work, the material being worked into the life of Abraham. The title of the Book is dropped, and the first person in which Abraham speaks in S is altered into the third, that is, it is changed into a narrative about Abraham, though the scribe often forgets himself and retains the first person of the original.

The apocryphal and pseudepigraphical writings must have been introduced into Russia at a very early date. Large parties of devout Russians, conducted by some learned monk, made frequent pilgrimages to Constantinople and the Holy Land. It was on such pilgrimages that the people were, for the first time, made acquainted with these writings, and the learned monk would, on the spot, translate the book, which had enriched his knowledge concerning the Patriarchs or the Apostles, into Slavonic, and then bring it back, as a most precious treasure to his own country, to the great delight of his fellow-monks in the monastery. It may, therefore, be taken for granted that the Greek original of our Apocalypse had never been brought to Russia, and that there never existed more than one translation of it into Slavonic, for S and the Palæa do not represent different translations, but only different types or recensions of one and the same version. The differences between the Palæa and S are very slight, the former only modernising here and there the style and the orthography. The Palæa is, therefore, of great value for the reconstruction of the original text, especially as it has preserved, in many cases, a more correct copy than is the case with S. The Palæa version is, however, disfigured by the many interpolations made by subsequent scribes which are all absent from S, and which are easily discernible as being interpolations.¹

¹ Matter which is not found in S is, in the translation printed below, enclosed in square brackets, and printed in smaller type.

The Palæa version of our Apocalypse has been edited by Tikhonravov¹ from a MS. which once belonged to the Joseph-Monastery in Volokolamsk, whence it has been transferred to the Library of the Moscow Academy of Divinity,² the MS. dating from the fifteenth century. Then I. Porfir'ev edited it in his Apocryphal Narratives about Old Testament Persons and Events (Apokrificheskia skazania o vetkhozavetnykh litsakh i sobytiakh), Petrograd, 1877, pp. 111-130,³ from a MS. dating from the seventeenth century, originally the property of the Library of the Solovetzk-Monastery, whence it was transferred to the Library of the Kasan Academy of Divinity.⁴ A and K are closely related to each other, and represent a type of text common to them both. Thus the same mistakes are found in both, and also the same additional matter, not extant in S.⁵

Another Palæa-text, containing part of the text of our Apocalypse, viz. the legendary narrative in chaps. i.-viii. only, has been edited by A. Pypin in Pseudepigrapha and Apocrypha of Russian Antiquity (Ložnyja i otrechennaja knigi russkoi stariny) in the third volume of Kuselev-Bezborodko, Memorials of Old Russian Literature (Pam'yatniki starinnoj russkoi literatury), Petrograd, 1882, pp. 24-26. This is from the Palæa of the Rumjancov Museum, dating from the year 1494.⁶

In S the end of the Book is missing, but is, fortunately, extant both in A and K. K also has at the end a short paragraph not found in A, which forms an appropriate conclusion to the whole Book. The reader will find it given in the notes on

¹ Op. cit., pp. 54-77.

² Cited below as A.

³ Forming part of Vol. XVII, published by the Department of the Russian Language and Literature of the Imperial Academy of Sciences.

⁴ Cited below as K.

⁵ For some examples of identical errors in the text which appear in both A and K see Bonwetsch, p. 8.

⁶ Cited as R below.

the concluding passage. See further Appendixes II. and III.¹

DATE OF COMPOSITION AND ORIGINAL LANGUAGE OF THE BOOK

The Slavonic text, it is obvious, was made from a Greek version which, no doubt, was current in Constantinople. It is probable, however, that the Greek text underlying the Slavonic was itself a translation of a Semitic original. A number of indications suggest this. The simple co-ordination of the sentences, the naïve repetitions, and the frequency of the phrase "Here am I" (= Hebrew hinnēnî), which characterise all parts of the Book, point in this direction. Then, too, the sarcastic names given to the idols in the first part (chaps. i.-viii.)—the stone idol Merumath (= 'eben Mērūmā, "stone of deceit"), the wooden idol Barisat (= bar 'ishtā "son of the fire," Aramaic)—presuppose a knowledge of Hebrew or Aramaic, or both, on the part of the original readers which would hardly be likely in a purely Greek composition. The fact, too, that Abraham is supposed to be the speaker throughout may lend some weight to the argument for a Hebrew original. The cumulative effect of these considerations taken in conjunction with the intensely Jewish character of the Book as a whole makes a Semitic original highly probable. Perhaps the Book was composed in Hebrew, with a slight admixture of Aramaic, such as occurs in the early Palestinian Midrashim.

The date of the composition of the Book can be determined, within narrow limits, with some probability. Clearly the terminus a quo is the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem in 70 A.D. which is bewailed by Abraham in the apocalyptic part of the Book. The fact, too, that it forms the central point of the picture, that the revelation leads up to it as a sort of climax, and that the apocalyptist is so deeply moved at the disclosure, suggests that the event is fairly recent. Ginzberg (J.E., i. 92) thinks "the last decades of the first century" are probably the period to which the composition of the Book should be assigned, at any rate in its earliest form. In any case the terminus ad quem can hardly be later than the first decades of the second century. The fact that the Book won acceptance in Christian circles, and was adapted by slight interpolation to Christian purposes—though its intensely Jewish character is manifest on every page—strongly supports the early date. Such a Book would have appealed to Jewish-Christians in Palestine, when Jewish-Christianity was still in close touch with a non-Christian Jewish community in the Holy Land—and it may be assumed, in view of the Semitic character of its original language, that the Book was of Palestinian origin. It must, therefore, have been produced at a time when early apocalyptic literature was still being written in Hebrew or Aramaic, i. e. not later than the early decades of the second century.¹

¹ See further, Bonwetsch, pp. I-II.

The question as to the existence of the Book at first in a shorter and much simpler form is discussed below.

EARLY ATTESTATION OF THE BOOK

That the Book must have enjoyed some considerable vogue and popularity in certain Christian circles is proved by its survival, in more than one form, in old Slavonic literature. And this must be equally true of the Greek form of the Book from which the Slavonic was derived. There is, as we should expect, some early evidence of the Book's existence, though some of it is vague and uncertain. What seems to be the clearest and most explicit piece of evidence of this kind is found in the Clementine Recognitions, I. 32, which carries us back to at least the early part of the fourth century, and which, not improbably, through the sources of the Clementine Literature, may go back to an earlier period, still, perhaps another century.¹ The section in the Recognitions deals with Abraham, and the part which specially concerns us runs as follows :

¹ See E.A., p. lviii ff.

From the first this same man [Abraham], being an astrologer, was able, from the account and order of the stars, to recognise the Creator, while all others were in error, and understood that all things are regulated by His providence. Whence also an angel, standing by him in a vision, instructed him more fully concerning those things which he was beginning to perceive. He shewed him also what belonged to his race and posterity, and promised them that those districts should be restored rather than given to them.

Here the first sentence clearly refers to some form of the legend of Abraham's conversion from idolatry ; but it agrees rather with Philo's account in de Abrahamo, § 15 (see Appendix I.) than with that embodied in the first part of our Book, which depicts Abraham in his early days as a maker and seller of idols rather than as an astrologer. But the second sentence forms a good description of the second or apocalyptic part of our Book, and may be taken as a reference to it. That in fact a book known as " the Apocalypse of Abraham " existed in his time is explicitly stated by Epiphanius (Hær. xxxix. 5) where, in speaking of the Gnostic sect called " the Sethians," he says they possessed a number of books " written in the name of great men," seven in the name of Seth, and among others one " in the name of Abraham which they also declare to be an apocalypse," and which is " full of all wickedness " (πάσης κακίας ἐμπλεών). Schürer thinks that this heretical book cannot be identified with our Apocalypse.

¹ Cf. Hort, Clementine Recognitions, pp. 80 ff.

Dr. M. R. James, however,¹ is inclined to believe "that Epiphanius on his authority is here going too far, and is fathering on the Sethians a book, which they may well have used, but which they did not manufacture." It is quite possible, and not improbable that this Gnostic sect made use of our Book in an interpolated form. As we shall see, there are Gnostic features in it in the form in which it has reached us, and Ginzberg is inclined to regard these as interpolations from a Gnostic book bearing the same name. A heretical Book (or Apocalypse) of Abraham may also possibly be referred to in a passage in the Apostolic Constitutions, vi. 16 (compiled in its present form probably in the second half of the fourth century), which runs as follows:

And among the Ancients also some have written apocryphal books of Moses, and Enoch, and Adam, and Isaiah, and David, and Elijah, and of the three patriarchs, pernicious and repugnant to the truth (φθοροποιὰ καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐχθρά).

It will be noticed that this is a list of Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, most of the items of which are easily recognisable. By "the three patriarchs" can only be meant Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Thus the passage attests the existence, at the time when the compiler wrote, of an apocryphal Book of Abraham, which may well be identical with our Apocalypse.² Lastly there is the evidence of the lists of books (containing the bare names) included in the Synopsis of Pseudo-Athanasius (compiled probably about 500 A.D.) and the Stichometry of Nicephorus (drawn up in Jerusalem perhaps about 850 A.D.). The latter is identical with the former, except that it attaches to the name of each book the number of stichoi or lines contained in it. The first six names on these lists are as follows: (1) Enoch; (2) Patriarchs; (3) Prayer of Joseph; (4) Testament of Moses; (5) Assumption of Moses, (6) Abraham. The second list adds to the sixth name "stichometry 300," thus giving us "a book [of Abraham] rather shorter than the Greek Esther, which has 350 στίχοι." Dr. M. R. James¹ is of opinion that the word ἀποκάλυψις is to be supplied before Ἀβραάμ here, and this view we may safely accept. We have thus another piece of evidence of the existence of a Book called "the Apocalypse of Abraham," which was of sufficient importance to be included in a list of books of Old Testament apocrypha containing such well-known names as the Book of Enoch, the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, and the Assumption of Moses.

¹ The Testament of Abraham (Cambridge "Texts and Studies"), p. 14.

² It might, of course, refer to some other apocryphal Book of Abraham; Dr. M. R. James thinks the reference may be to The Testament of Abraham.

From a survey of this evidence it may be concluded that an apocryphal book (or books) under the name of Abraham was current in the early Christian centuries; and that our Apocalypse is one product or form of this literature. The so-called Testament of Abraham is, no doubt, another. The possibility remains to be considered that our Apocalypse may have assumed different forms (by enlargement or curtailment) and have been adapted at different times for different purposes.

GNOSTIC ELEMENTS IN THE TEXT

Among the Gnostic features in the text of our Book may be reckoned the significant emphasis laid upon "right" and "left" in the apocalyptic representation (cf. xxii. (end), xxiii.), the "right" side being the source of purity and light, the "left" that of impurity and darkness. This idea is ancient,² depending upon the dualism which insists upon the category of light and darkness, and can be traced back to ancient Zoroastrianism. But it was developed in the early Gnostic systems (see Irenæus, adv. Hæres. I., xi. 2; II. xxiv. 6), and in the Jewish ¹ Op. cit., p. 9. The synopsis embraces eleven items.

² Cf. Matt. xxv.

Ḳabbalah, where "right side" and "left side" (siṭrā yēmīnā wē-siṭrā 'ahārā) become technical terms. In the Emanistic system of the Zohar, the whole world is divided between "right" and "left," where pure and impure powers respectively operate—on the right side the Holy One and His powers, on the left the serpent Sammael and his powers (cf. Zohar, Bereshith, 47*b*, 53*f*, 169*b* and following, 174*b*). When, therefore, we find our Book dividing mankind into two hosts, one on the right side (= the Jews) and one on the left (= the heathen), the presence of Gnostic influence seems clear. At the same time, it may well be an original feature of the Book, as the idea had already been assimilated by the ancient Jewish mystical tradition (Ḳabbalah), and if our Apocalypse was of Essene origin there would be nothing surprising in the presence of such an element.

The opposition between light and darkness seems also to be present in an obscure passage in chap. xiv., which is absent from S. It runs as follows (Azazel is being addressed):

For thy heritage is (to be) over those existing with thee being born with the stars and clouds, with the men whose portion thou art, and (who) through thy being exist; and thine enmity is justification.

Perhaps by those "being born with the stars and clouds" is meant those who by birth and creation belong to the sphere of night and darkness, as opposed to the righteous who belong to the sphere of light. This again accords with the ancient dualistic conception referred to above, and may very well be an original feature. The absence of the clause from S may be due to excision. It can hardly be an interpolation from Slavonic sources.

On the other hand, there are two passages where the original text may have been modified under Christian Gnostic influence (apart from the obvious interpolation indicated by italic type in chap. xxix.). In chap. xx. God, addressing Abraham, says: "As the number of the stars and their power, (so will) I make thy seed a nation, and a people set apart for me in my heritage with Azazel." And again in chap. xxii. : " But those which are on the right side of the picture—they are the people set apart for me of the peoples with Azazel." Here God is represented as sharing His heritage (= the Jewish people) with the evil spirit Azazel. " This," says Ginzberg (J.E., i. 92), " is no doubt the Gnostic doctrine of the God of the Jews as kakodaimon," i. e. that the God of the Old Testament is an inferior deity, whose work was fused with evil elements. Still, these Gnostic elements in our Book are not very pronounced; there are no clear and explicit allusions to any of the full-blown doctrines of the Ophites or kindred Gnostic sects. The phenomena suggest that the Book is an essentially Jewish one, which may have been used and read by Gnostic Christians, and adapted by slight revision to make it acceptable to such readers.

GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE BOOK AND INTEGRITY OF ITS TEXT

The Book is essentially Jewish, and there are features in it which suggest Essene origin; such are its strong predestinarian doctrine, its dualistic conceptions, and its ascetic tendencies. It may well have passed from Essene to Ebionite circles—the interpolation in chap. xxix. certainly looks like the work of a Jewish-Christian—and thence, in some form, have found its way into Gnostic circles.

Is the Book as it lies before us—apart from the interpolation in chap. xxix.—substantially in its original shape? To this question an affirmative answer may, with some probability, be given. Ginzberg, it is true, suggests a different view. He says (J.E., i. 92) :

It is quite probable that certain parts of the heretical Apocalypse of Abraham, which was in circulation among the Gnostics (Epiphanius, xxxix. 5), were incorporated in the present text [of our Apocalypse]. Subtracting, then, the first part [i. e. chaps. i.-viii., containing the "Legend"], which does not belong to the Apocalypse, and the Gnostic and Christian interpolations, only about three hundred lines remain, and this number would exactly correspond with the number which, according to the stichometry of Nicephorus, the Apocalypse of Abraham contained.

There are considerable difficulties attaching to this theory. It is difficult to suppose that the Book in its original form was without the opening chapters (i.-viii.) narrating Abraham's conversion from idolatry. There are several allusions in the later chapters to this opening narrative, which come in quite naturally. The chapters form a good introduction to what follows, and, as such, were probably put into their present shape by the original author of the Book. The material of the legend was, of course, much older; but it is to be noticed that our author has handled this material in a very free way, and this fact also suggests that these chapters were no mere addition to the Book, borrowed from one of the current forms of the legend. It seems more probable that the shorter "Apocalypse of Abraham" implied by the Stichometry of Nicephorus was a shortened recension of the original book, probably adapted for orthodox Christian purposes. It is by no means impossible that a shorter recension may have existed side by side with the fuller original form at a later date. The latter may have survived and have been read in certain circles by preference, and thence have passed over into the old Slavonic Church literature. Whether the heretical "Apocalypse of Abraham" referred to by Epiphanius which, according to him was "full of all wickedness" was another and independent recension, it is impossible to say. On the whole it seems more likely that the older form of the Book—especially if it had grown up in Ebionite (Jewish-Christian) circles—was the form in which it was read by the Sethian Gnostics. The mere fact that it was read in such circles would make it suspicious in the eyes of a later orthodoxy, which may have endeavoured to suppress it by issuing a shorter recension of the text. But the older form was too popular to be eliminated in this way entirely—though it has almost disappeared from Christian literature, and in its Greek and Semitic forms has, in fact, disappeared, only surviving in its old Slavonic dress.

That such a Jewish-Christian Book would have been acceptable to Sethian Gnostic readers is not surprising. This Gnostic sect held the doctrine that the Sophia “found means to preserve through every age, in the midst of the Demiurge’s world, a race bearing within them the spiritual seed which was related to her own nature” . . . they “regarded Cain as a representative of the Hylic; Abel, of the Psychical; and Seth, who was finally to reappear in the person of the Messiah, of the Pneumatic principle.”¹

The emphasis laid in our Book (chap. xxiv.) upon the lawlessness of Cain, “who acted lawlessly through the Adversary,” and its evil consequence in the slaughter of Abel would appeal to such Gnostic readers no less than the division of mankind into “right” and “left,” and the assignment of the latter to the dominion of the “lawless Adversary” Azazel. Abraham, too, the hero of the Book, was in the line of Seth, and it is from him that the Messiah springs (chap. xxix.). All this would be read by such Gnostic readers in the light of their own presuppositions.

We conclude, then, that the Book, substantially as it lies before us, is a Jewish and Essene production, like the related Testament of Abraham. It depicts the initiation of Abraham into the heavenly mysteries associated with the Divine “Chariot” (cf. Ezek. i.). Its angelology is in line with Essene speculation, and in chap. xvii. Abraham is taught by the archangel, in the form of the celestial hymn, the mystery of the Divine Name. We have reached the stage when Enoch has fallen into the background, and Abraham, like Moses, has become the centre of mystic lore, that is "when the seal of circumcision had become the pledge of life."¹ It is noteworthy that the Kabbalistic book Sefer Yeširā (? second century A.D.) was attributed to Abraham.

¹ Neander, Church History, ii. 154.

It may occur to some readers as an objection to this view that the prominence assigned to Abraham's sacrifice in the Book, and to the destruction of the Temple, regarded as the supreme calamity, is inconsistent with Essene authorship, since the Essenes rejected animal sacrifices. But, as Kohler has shewn,² the Essenes, who accepted the Mosaic Law, were not opposed to such sacrifices on principle. What they opposed was the priesthood in the Temple "out of mistrust as to their state of holiness and purity, rather than out of aversion to sacrifice." To Abraham, the Essene saint, acting under direct divine command, no such objection would apply.

It should be added that the Slavonic MSS. yield a text which is markedly shorter than the texts of the Palæan MSS. Some of the omitted passages are perhaps cases of deliberate excision, and others of accidental omission. But there remain a substantial number where the shorter text is probably original, and the presence of glosses or later amplifications is to be suspected. All such passages are indicated in the text of the translation given below.

THEOLOGY OF THE BOOK

The apocalyptic part of the Book is based upon the story of Abraham's sacrifice and trance, as described in Gen. xv. This experience is interpreted to mean that Abraham received a divine disclosure as to the destinies of his descendants, which is also the view of the Rabbinical Midrash (cf. Bereshith rabba, xlv. 15 f.). This scheme provides the framework in which our apocalypse is set.

¹ Cf. Kohler in J.Q.R., vii. 594 (July 1895).

² In J.E., v. 230 (s.v. Essenes).

Abraham, after completing the prescribed sacrifice, ascends to heaven, under the guidance of the angel, and from thence sees below him the drama of the world's future, and also the various powers and forces that operate in the celestial sphere. In exactly the same way the Midrash (Bereshith rabba, xlv. 14) interprets Abraham's experience as an ascension. According to a saying of R. Jehuda, citing the authority of R. Johanan, God caused him [Abraham] to ascend above the vault of the firmament, and said to him: "Look now toward heaven": "looking" [here] means nought else but from [the height] above to [what is] below. This is a continuation of a comment on the sentence: And He brought him forth outside (Gen. xv. 5) interpreted to mean: "And He (God) brought him (Abraham) forth outside the world."

The angel who conducts Abraham on his celestial journey is the archangel Jael, who plays an all-important rôle. As is pointed out in the notes, he fulfils the functions elsewhere assigned to Michael and Metatron. Just as Metatron bears the tetragrammaton (cf. Ex. xxiii. 21, "My Name is in him"), so Jael here (chap. x.) is possessed of the power of the Ineffable Name. The name Jael itself is evidently a substitute for the tetragrammaton, which was too sacred to be written out in full. This angelic being is thus God's vicegerent, second only to God Himself. Yet he may not be worshipped, but rather himself sets Abraham the example of worshipping God. He is thus the supreme figure in Jewish angelology. Like Enoch, who was also transformed into Metatron, Jael acts as celestial guide. Jael is also the heavenly choir-master (chap. xii. "Singer of the Eternal"; cf. also chap. xvii.), a function assigned elsewhere to Michael; like Michael he is the guardian of the chosen race (chap. x., end), and is potent to subdue "the attack and menace of every single reptile" (ibid.).

It is this supreme angelic being who in one line of apocalyptic tradition becomes the heavenly Son of Man—a conception that exercised an important influence on Christological development.¹

Over against Jaoel stands Azazel, who here appears as the arch-fiend,² and as active upon the earth (chap. xiii.), though his real domain is in Hades, where he reigns as lord (chap. xxxi.). In fact, according to the peculiar representation of our Apocalypse, Azazel is himself the fire of Hell (cf. chap. xiv. "Be thou the burning coal of the furnace of the earth," and xxxi., "burnt with the fire of Azazel's tongue"). He is the source of all wickedness and uncleanness (chap. xiii.), and the godless are his heritage (ibid.). He is denounced as the slanderer of truth and the seducer of mankind, having "scattered over the earth the secrets of heaven," and "rebelled against the Mighty One" (chap. xiv.). The radical dualism of the Book comes out not only in the sharp division of mankind into two hosts, which stand for Jewry and heathendom respectively, but also in the clearly defined contradistinction of two ages, the present Age of ungodliness and the future Age of righteousness (cf. chap. xxix. and ix.). The present Age—called "this æon" (chap. xxxi.)—is "corruptible" (chap. xvii.), "the Age of ungodliness" (chap. xxix., xxxii.), during which the heathen have the dominion over the Jews (chap. xxxi.); it is to last "twelve" years or "hours" (chap. xxix.). Over against it stands "the coming Age" (chap. xxxi.), or "Age of the righteous" (chap. xvii., xxix.). The origin of sin is traced to the Fall, which is described in chap. xxiii. The agent is, of course, the serpent, who is merely the instrument of Azazel. Indeed, the twelve wings of the latter are given in the description to the serpent. The evil spirit, who is described as being "between" the human pair in the Garden, "representeth ungodliness, their beginning (on the way) to perdition, even Azazel," and the seer proceeds to ask why God has given "power to such to destroy the generation of men in their works upon the earth." In some sense, then, according to the representation of our Apocalypse, the sin of Adam affects the destinies of all his descendants. The moral poison of sensuality (Heb. zôhāmā) with which the serpent infected Eve (T. B., Yēbāmôth, 103 b) passed on to all generations (cf. Wisdom ii. 24, 4 Ezra iii. 21).¹ This has an important bearing on the Pauline doctrine of original sin. At the same time, our Apocalypse, in spite of its strong expression of predestinarian views elsewhere, insists with marked emphasis upon the freedom of man's will (cf. chap. xxvi.).

¹ Cf. E.A., p. 284. The name Jaoel (Yahoel) occurs as the name of a principal angel (over fire) in the Kabbalistic Book Berith Menuḥa 57a, and below him are seven others, including Gabriel: see Lueken, Michael, p. 54.

² So in one form of the tradition in 1 Enoch, Azazel stands at the head of the fallen angels.

The Book apparently knows nothing of a resurrection. The righteous dead, it would seem, proceed straight to the heavenly Paradise ("the Garden of Eden"), where they enjoy heavenly "fruits and blessedness" (chap. xxi.), while the wicked dead go immediately to the underworld and Azazel. Nothing is said of an intermediate state. The more usual view is that the heavenly Paradise is reserved for the righteous dead, who will enter it after the final judgement (except for a few privileged saints like Enoch, who are allowed to enter it beforehand). The nearest parallel to the idea of our Book, seems to occur in 1 Enoch lx. 8, 23, lxi. 12, lxx. 4, where the elect righteous already dwell in the garden of life.

"A judgement" is spoken of "at the end of the world," but it is a judgment upon the heathen nations effected by Israel at the end of the present age of ungodliness¹ (cf. chap. xxii., xxix.).

¹ In T.B. Aboda zara 22b R. Johanan refers to this as follows: At the moment when the serpent came upon Eve he infected her with sensuality (zôhāmā). Was this also the case with Israel (generally)? When the Israelites stood upon Mount Sinai their infection (impulse to sensuality, zôhāmāthān) ceased, the aliens (heathen) who did not stand upon Mount Sinai—their infection (of sensuality) did not cease. The Covenant on Mount Sinai annulled the effects of the Fall.

A detailed eschatological description of the end of the present age of ungodliness and the coming in of the age of righteousness is given in chap. xxix.—xxx. In chap. xxix. it is stated that before the beginning of the new Age God's judgement will be effected on the ruthless heathen nations by God's people²; ten plagues come upon all creatures of the earth on account of sin; those who are of Abraham's seed survive according to a pre-determined number, hasten to Jerusalem, wreak vengeance on their foes, and rejoice before God, to whom they return (chap. xxix.). In the following chapter (xxx.) a detailed description is given of the ten plagues which visit the heathen "at the twelfth hour of the present Age." Chap. xxxi. describes the trumpet-blast which announces the mission of God's Elect One (the Messiah), who gathers together the dispersed of Israel, and the annihilation and horrible doom of the godless foes of Israel and of God's enemies both within and without Israel (the former renegade Jews), and the joy which the downfall of these wicked people and the signal manifestation of God's righteousness cause.

It will be noticed that chaps. xxx. and xxxi. duplicate to some extent the contents of chap. xxix. They read like an appendix. Moreover, the figure of the Messiah first emerges here, and his rôle is a somewhat limited one. The last words of chap. xxix. ("And lo! I am with you for ever") may well have formed the conclusion of the Apocalypse.

It should be noted also that in the Christian addition in chap. xxix. no emphasis is laid upon Christ's divinity. The description reads like an Ebionitic one.

¹ The "judgement of the Great Assize" mentioned in chap. xxiv. occurs in a clause which is absent from S, and may be an interpolation.

² According to chapter xxii. these peoples are destined "some for judgement and restoration, and others for vengeance and destruction at the end of the world."

In this connexion it may be noted that the identification of the fruit of the forbidden tree in chap. xxiii. with the grape may reflect the ascetic tendency, which grew up in Jewish (and Jewish-Christian) circles after the destruction of Jerusalem, to abstain from wine as a mark of mourning. This feeling may have stimulated the view that wine was the source of woe to mankind (see note on passage). Apparently the Essenes regarded Jonadab, the founder of the sect of "water-drinkers" (Rechabites), as a prototype of the Essene order (see J.E., v. 230b).

As has been pointed out above, our Apocalypse, like the companion one of The Ascension of Isaiah, and other examples in the apocalyptic literature, expresses the mystical tradition and experience associated with the mysteries of the Divine Chariot or Throne. The speculation which gave rise to this tradition starts from Ezekiel's Chariot-Vision (Ezek. i.), and is embodied in a fairly extensive literature especially in i. and ii. Enoch in the earlier Apocalyptic, and in the neo-Hebraic "Hekalot" literature (eighth to tenth centuries A.D.). The material of which it is composed, and which is constantly re-shaped, consists mainly of descriptions of the seven heavens "with their hosts of angels, and the various store-houses of the world, and of the divine throne above the highest heaven."¹ Heaven is pictured as filled with light of inexpressible brilliance, and the Divine Chariot is surrounded by fiery angels of warlike aspect. The mystic who is allowed to enter the celestial sphere usually receives divine disclosures about the future or the spiritual world.

In order to enjoy this experience the mystic has to prepare himself to enter the ecstatic state which is brought about especially by ablutions and fasting, but also sometimes by fervent invocations and by other means. He is rewarded by "the vision of the Merkabah" or "Divine Chariot" (šēfiyyath ha-merkābā). Those who thus imagined themselves entering the Heavenly Chariot and floating through the air were called Yōrēdē Merkābā, i. e. "those who go down (embark) into the ship-like chariot " (Jellinek). " In this chariot they are supposed to ascend to the heavens, where in the dazzling light surrounding them they behold the innermost secrets of all persons and things otherwise impenetrable and invisible." ¹ The heavenly charioteer is Metatron (according to Kohler suggested by Mithra), the angel next the Throne, whose name is like God's, and who possesses all knowledge, and imparts it to man. Metatron, as we have seen, is Enoch transformed. In our Book he seems to appear under the name Jaobel. It is interesting to note that according to the late Jewish " Hekalot " the initiated one who is admitted to the heavenly regions, in order to be allowed to step before the Divine Throne must recite certain prayers until God Himself addresses him, if he be worthy; cf. with this the Hymn-Prayer which Abraham is taught to recite in chap. xvii. of our Book. According to Kohler ² the Merkabah-mysteries " remained the exclusive property of the initiated ones, the Ṣenû'im or Ḥashshā'im," whom he identifies with the Essenes.

¹ Cf. J.E., viii. 499b.

[The emphasis that is laid throughout all parts of the Book upon the sin of idolatry is noteworthy, and especially that the Temple-sacrifices had been polluted by idolatrous rites (cf. chap. xxiv.). Perhaps this is intended to suggest a reason why the sanctuary was destroyed.]

LITERARY AFFINITIES AND SPECIAL IMPORTANCE OF THE BOOK

Our Apocalypse has affinities, as has already been pointed out, with such books as The Ascension of Isaiah, which like it deals with the mysteries of the heavens ² and is set in a similar mystical framework.

¹ Cf. J.E., viii. 499b.

² The seven heavens are referred to, and partly described in our Apocalypse in chap. xix. Another point of contact is the reference to the " heavenly garment " in chap. xiii.,

But the latter work has a pronouncedly Christian element, and is a production of Jewish-Christian origin in its present form, whereas in our Book the Christian element is confined to a short interpolated passage in chap. xxix.

With the Testament of Abraham, there is a certain affinity, and this work, like our Apocalypse, may be of Essene origin. But the two books are quite distinct, and their historical setting is different. The Testament, though it contains an apocalyptic element in the parts which describe Abraham's "ride" through the heavenly regions when he sees the fate of departed souls, is based upon the idea of Abraham's death; moreover, the chief angelic figure in the Testament is Michael, and the eschatology is different. Possibly the eschatology of the two Books may be regarded as complementary, the Apocalypse giving the national, and the Testament the individual aspects of it from the Essene standpoint.

There is, too, a certain affinity with the Clementine literature (Homilies and Recognitions), which is highly important for the history of Gnostic Judæo-Christianity. Thus in the Clementine Homilies the doctrine of contrasts is much elaborated. The ruler of this world is Satan, the ruler of the future world is the Messiah. The divinity of Christ is not recognised, no stress is laid upon the doctrine of the atonement, and strict asceticism is enjoined.

Our Book is important as illustrating the Jewish ideas that lie behind the doctrine of original sin in connexion with the story of the Fall, and in its angelology and demonology. In the angelic figure of Jaoel (= Michael = Metatron), God's vicegerent and the impartor of divine revelation to man (in the person of Abraham) we have one more illustration of the range of conceptions on the Jewish side which end. For a discussion of the theological affinities of these ideas with the New Testament writings cf. Introduction to The Ascension of Isaiah, pp. xxi.-xxiv.

influenced the Logos-idea and Christological development. The pessimistic estimate of the world as it is—"the æon of ungodliness—which to a large extent is under the dominion of Azazel, illustrates such phrases as "the god of this world" (2 Cor. iv. 4), "the ruler of this world" (John xii. 31) which are applied to Satan. These probably reflect popular Jewish feeling. The earth is the Lord's, as St. Paul himself insists (1 Cor. x. 26), but has fallen under the dominion of the evil one, and can only be redeemed therefrom by God's Messiah.

Our Book is specially important as one more interesting example of the apocalyptic ideas of late Judaism, and, more particularly, as throwing a welcome light on the ideas specially congenial to early Jewish-Christianity when it had already become, to some extent, detached from the common stream of Church life.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For the editions of the Slavonic text see the second section of this Introduction.

A valuable German translation of the Slavonic text, with critical notes and Introduction, has been published in the series Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und Kirche: it is edited by Prof. G. Nathanael Bonwetsch (Leipzig, 1897).

Articles by Ginzberg in J.E., i. 91f.; Lagrange in Revue Biblique, 1905, pp. 511-514; see also Schürer, Geschichte des jüdischen Volkes, iii. pp. 336-338.

SHORT TITLES, ABBREVIATIONS, AND BRACKETS USED IN THIS EDITION

1 Enoch = The Ethiopic Book of Enoch.

2 Enoch = The Slavonic Book of Enoch.

Ap. Bar. = The Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch.

The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch = The Apocalypse edited under this title (and based upon a Greek and also a Slavonic text) by Dr. H. Maldwyn Hughes in the Oxford Corpus of The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, ii. pp. 527-541.

Asc. Is. = The Ascension of Isaiah.

Pirke de R. Eliezer is cited according to the edition (English translation and notes) of G. Friedlander (London, 1916).

Beer = Leben Abraham's nach Auffassung der jüdischen Sage, von Dr. B. Beer (Leipzig, 1859).

Bonwetsch = Die Apokalypse Abrahams . . . herausgegeben von G. Nathanael Bonwetsch (Leipzig, 1897, in the series Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche).

Volz = Jüdische Eschatologie von Daniel bis Akiba, dangesammelt von Paul Volz (Tübingen und Leipzig, 1903).

Weber = Jüdische Theologie auf Grund des Talmud und verwandter Schriften: von Dr. Ferdinand Weber (Leipzig, 1897).

S = Codex Sylvester (first half of fourteenth century): Facsimile Edition, Petrograd, 1890 (edited also by Tikhonravov).

P = Palæa (Old Testament narratives and expositions in Slavonic).

A = a Palæa-text of Ap. Abr., edited by Tikhonravov from a MS. of the fifteenth century.

K = a Palæa-text of Ap. Abr., edited by I. Porfir'ev from a MS. of the seventeenth century.

R = a Palæa-text of Ap. Abr., i.-viii., edited by A. Pypin from a MS. dated 1494.

See further the second section of the Introduction.

Lueken = Michael: eine Darstellung und Vergleichung der jüdischen und der morgenländisch-christlichen Tradition vom Erzengel Michael: von Wilhelm Lueken (Göttingen, 1898).

E.A. = The Ezra-Apocalypse, edited by G. H. Box (1912).

J.Q.R. = Jewish Quarterly Review.

D.B. = Dictionary of the Bible.

J.E. = Jewish Encyclopædia.

M.T. = Masoretic Text.

[] Square brackets enclosing words in smaller type indicate additional, and in most cases presumably interpolated, matter, which is absent from S.

() Round brackets enclosing words in italic type indicate glosses or editorial additions.

() Round brackets enclosing words in ordinary type indicate additions to the text of the translation made for the sake of clearness.

For the works cited under the following names—

Tikhonravov, see pp. xi, xiv.

Sreznevsky, see p. xi.

Pypin, see p. xiv.

Porfir'ev, see p. xiv.

[The translation that follows has been prepared with the assistance of Mr. J. I. Landsman, who has consulted for this purpose the Facsimile Edition of Codex S, and the various printed editions referred to above. For the form of the translation here given Mr. Landsman takes full responsibility. No previous translation or edition of the Book has been published in English so far as the Editor is aware.]

THE APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

PART I

THE LEGEND (Chapters I.-VIII.)

Title ¹

The Book of the Revelation of Abraham, the son of Terah, the son of Nahor, the son of Serug, the son of Roog (Reu ²), the son of Arphaxad, the son of Shem, the son of Noah, the son of Lamech, the son of Methuselah, the son of Enoch, the son of Jared (Arad).

Abraham's Conversion from Idolatry (Chapters I.-VIII.).

I. On the day when I planed the gods of my father ³ Terah and the gods of Nahor his brother,⁴ when I was searching as to who the Mighty God in truth is—I, Abraham, at the time when it fell to my lot, when I fulfilled the services (the sacrifices ⁵) of

¹ The whole of the title occurs only in S.

² Some links in the genealogical chain are omitted: Reu son of Peleg, son of Eber, son of Shelah, son of Arphaxad (Gen. xi. 10-16); Abraham was thus "the tenth from Noah" (Josephus, Ant., i. 6, 5).

³ Abraham is represented as having followed the occupation of his father, that of an idol-maker; cf. Bereshith rabba on Gen. xi. 28 (see Appendix, p. 90).

⁴ his (i. e. Abraham's) brother; probably a gloss (the structure of the narrative demands "my"); A omits.

⁵ Probably a gloss (so Tikhonravov); or read of the altar for sacrifices (Bonwetsch).

my father Terah to his gods of wood and stone, gold and silver, brass and iron; ¹ having entered into their temple for service, I found the god whose name was Merumath ² (which was) hewn out of stone, fallen forward at the feet of the iron god Nahon. ³ And it came to pass, when I saw it, my heart was perplexed, and ⁴ I considered in my mind that I should not be able to bring him back to his place, I, Abraham, alone, ⁵ because he was heavy, being of a large stone, ⁶ and I went forth and made it known to my father. And he entered with me, and when both of us moved him (the god) forward, so that we might bring him back ⁷ to his place, his head fell from him ⁸ while I was still holding him by the head. And it came to pass, ⁸ when my father saw that the head of Merumath ⁹ had fallen from him, he said to me: "Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I." And he said to me: "Bring me an axe, of the small ones, ¹⁰ from the house." And I brought it to him. ¹¹ And he hewed aright another Merumath out of another stone, without head, and the head which had been thrown down from Merumath he placed upon it, and the rest of Merumath he shattered. ¹¹

II. And he made five other gods, and gave them to me [and] ¹² commanded me to sell them outside in the street of the town. And I saddled my father's ¹³

¹ Cf. Dan. v. 4.

² The stone idol Merumath (= Heb. 'eben mērûmā, "stone of deceit") was the chief object of Abraham's worship at this period.

³ So A; S has Naritson; K, by name Nahin.

⁴ and omitted by S.

⁵ I Abraham alone: K omits; S, + and lo!

⁶ being of a large stone: R omits.

⁷ so that we might bring him back: R omits.

⁸⁻⁸ R omits.

⁹ + his god, K.

¹⁰ of the small ones: K omits.

¹¹⁻¹¹ K reads: And he cut off the head of another god of stone and fastened it upon the god Merumath which fell before, and the head which fell down from him and the rest of the other god he shattered.

¹² and: S K omit.

¹³ father's: A omits.

ass, and placed them upon it, and went towards the inn to sell them. And lo! merchants from Fandana¹ in Syria were travelling with camels going to Egypt,² to trade.³ And I spoke with them. And one of their camels uttered a groan, and the ass took fright and sprang away and upset the gods; and three of them were smashed, and two were preserved. And it came to pass, when the Syrians saw that I had gods, they said to me: "Why didst thou not tell us [that thou hadst gods? Then we would have bought them]⁴ before the ass heard the sound of the camel, and they would not have been lost. Give us, at any rate, the gods that remain, and we will give thee the proper price⁵ for the broken gods, also for the gods that have been preserved."⁵ For I was concerned in my heart as to how I could bring to my father the purchase-price;⁶ and the three broken ones I cast into the water of the river Gur, which was at that place, and they sank into the depths,⁷ and there was nothing more of them.

III. When I was still going on the way, my heart was perplexed within me, and my mind was distracted. And I said in my heart: ["What evil deed is this that my father is doing? Is not he, rather, the god of his gods, since they come into existence through his chisels and lathes, and his wisdom, and is it not rather fitting that they should worship my father, since they are his work? What is this delusion of my father in his works?]⁸ Behold, Merumath fell and could not rise in his own temple, nor could I, by myself, move him until my father came, and the two of us moved him; and as we were thus too weak, his

¹ Fandana probably = Paddan-Aram (Gen. xxv. 20).

² Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 25.

³ K reads: in order to buy from thence papyrus from the Nile. And I questioned them, and they informed me.

⁴ S omits.

⁵⁻⁵ A K omit; they read instead: And I deliberated in my heart, and they gave me the value.

⁶ K reads: and he took the pieces of the broken gods and cast them in the Dead Sea, from which it could never emerge.

⁷ A K, + of the river Gur.

⁸ This passage is given by A K, but is absent from S; apparently it is a later interpolation.

head fell from him, and he (i.e. my father) set it upon another stone of another god,¹ which he had made without head. And the other five gods were broken in pieces down from the ass, which were able neither to help themselves,² nor to hurt the ass, because³ it had broken them to pieces; nor did their broken fragments come up out of the river."⁴ And I said in my heart: "If this be so, how can Merumath, my father's god, having the head of another stone,⁵ and himself being made of another stone,⁵ rescue a man, or hear a man's prayer and reward him?"⁶

IV. And while I cogitated thus, I reached my father's house; and having watered the ass, and set out hay for it, I brought the silver and gave it into the hand of my father Terah. When he saw it he was glad, [and]⁷ he said: "Blessed art thou, Abraham, of my gods,⁸ because thou hast brought the price of the gods, so that my work was not in vain." And I answered and said to him: "Hear, O my father, Terah! Blessed are the gods⁹ of thee, for thou art their god, since⁹ thou hast made them; for their blessing is ruination, and their power¹⁰ is vain;¹¹ they who did not help themselves,¹² how shall they, then, help thee or bless me¹³? I have been ¹ Cf. Wisdom xiii. 10 ("a useless stone, the work of an ancient hand"); K reads: and set upon him the stone head of another god.

² Cf. Wisdom xiii. 16 ("knowing that it is unable to help itself").

³ = ? although (Heb. 'aph kî; Rabbinic 'aph 'al pî).

⁴ According to the Mishna 'Abôdâ zārâ iii. 3 it was the duty of Jews to destroy an idol by sinking it in the waters of the Dead Sea, from which it could never emerge.

⁵⁻⁵ Omitted by K.

⁶ Cf. Wisdom xiii. 17 f. (the whole chapter should be compared in this context).

⁷ S omits.

⁸ Lit. to my gods: read ? of (by) my god (Bonwetsch).

⁹⁻⁹ Text of S here corrupt.

¹⁰ A, help.

¹¹ K, powerless.

¹² Cf. note ² in previous chapter.

¹³ For the thought cf. Heb. vii. 7.

kind to thee in this affair,¹ because by (using) my intelligence, I have brought thee the money for the broken gods." And when he heard my² word, he became furiously angry with me, because I had spoken hard words against his gods.

V. I, however, having thought over my father's anger, went out; [and after I had gone out]³ my father⁴ cried, saying: "Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I." And he said: "Take and collect the splinters of the wood out of which I made gods of pine-wood before thou camest; and make ready for me the food of the mid-day meal."⁵ And it came to pass, when I collected the splinters of wood, I found under them a little god which had been lying among the brush-wood on my left, and on his forehead was written: GOD BARISAT.⁶ And⁷ I did not inform my father that I had found the wooden god Barisat under the chips. And it came to pass, when I had laid the splinters in the fire, in order that I might make ready food for my father—on going out to ask a question regarding the food, I placed Barisat before the kindled fire,⁸ saying threateningly to him: "Pay careful attention, Barisat, [that]⁹ the fire do not die down until I come; if, however, it dieth down, blow on it that it may burn up again." And I went out and accomplished my purpose.¹⁰ And on returning I found Barisat fallen backwards, and¹¹ his feet surrounded by fire and horribly burnt.¹² I burst into a fit of laughter, and I said to myself: "Truly, O Barisat, thou

¹ Lit. transaction.

² K, this.

³ S omits.

⁴ S, he.

⁵ Cf. Is. xlv. 15, Wisdom xiii. 12 f.

⁶ Barisat = probably bar 'ishtā, "son of the fire."

⁷ A K, + it came to pass, when I found him, I kept him and.

⁸ Lit. kindling of the fire.

⁹ S omits.

¹⁰ Lit. did my counsel: a Hebrew phrase, 'āsā 'ēšā, "execute a plan" (Is. xxx. 1).

¹¹ S, + before.

¹² A, + And it came to pass when I saw it,

canst kindle the fire and cook food!" And it came to pass, while I spake (thus) in my laughter ¹ he (i.e. Barisat) was gradually burnt up by the fire and reduced ² to ashes. And I brought the food to my father, and he did eat. And I gave him wine and milk, ³ and he was gladdened and blessed his god Merumath. And I said to him: "O father Terah, bless not thy god Merumath, and praise him not, but rather praise thy god Barisat because, loving thee more, he hath cast himself into the fire to cook thy food!" And he said to me: "And where is he now?" [And I said:] ⁴ "He is burnt to ashes in the violence of the fire and is reduced to dust." And he said: "Great is the power of Barisat! I (will) make another to-day, and to-morrow he will prepare ⁵ my food."

VI. When I, Abraham, however, heard such words from my father, I laughed in my mind and sighed in the grief and in the anger of my soul, and said: ⁶ "How then can that which is made by him—manufactured statues—be a helper of my father? Or shall the body then be subject to its soul, and the soul to the spirit, and the spirit to folly and ignorance!" ⁷ And I said: ⁶ "It is fitting once to endure evil. So I will direct my mind to what is pure and lay my thoughts open before him." [And] ⁸ I answered and said: "O father Terah, whichever of these thou praisest as a god, thou art foolish in thy mind. Behold the gods of thy brother

¹ A, mind; K, in my mind and laughed.

² Lit. became.

³ Wine was sometimes mixed not only with water, but with milk, in Palestine; cf. Cant. V. 1 (I have drunk my wine with my milk); cf. also Is. lv. 1.

⁴ S A omit.

⁵ Lit. make.

⁶ i. e. thought ("said in my heart"). The sentence that follows ("It is fitting once to endure evil") means: "It is well to suffer in this way for a good cause."

⁷ In this sentence the text of S is not in order, and has been corrected by Tikhonravov in accordance with A and K.

⁸ Omitted by S.

Ora,¹ which stand in the holy temple, are more worthy of honour than [these of]² thine. For behold Zucheus, the god of thy brother Oron,³ is more worthy of honour than thy god Merumath, because he is made of gold which is highly valued by people, and when he groweth old in years he will be re-modelled; but if your god Merumath is changed or broken, he will not be renewed, because he is a stone; the which is also the case with the god Joavon⁴ ⁵ [who standeth with Zucheus over the other gods—how ⁶ much more worthy of honour is he than the god Barisat, who is made of wood, while he is forged of silver! How ⁶ is he made, by adaptation of man, valuable to outward appearance! But thy god Barisat, while he was still, before he had been prepared, rooted up (?) ⁷ upon the earth and was great and wonderful with the glory of branches and blossom,⁸ thou didst hew out with the axe, and by means of thy art he hath been made into a god. And lo! his fatness is already withered and perished, he is fallen from the height to the ground, he hath come from great estate to littleness, and the appearance of his countenance hath vanished, and he] Barisat himself is burnt up by fire and reduced to ashes and is no more; and thou sayest: “To-day I will make another which ⁹ to-morrow shall make ready my food!”¹⁰ “He hath perished to utter destruction!”¹⁰

VII. ¹¹ “Behold, the fire is more worthy of honour

¹ i. e. Haran (so S); A has thy father Nahor, K my brother Nahor.

² Omitted by S.

³ Another form of Haran (so S); A and K read as indicated in the previous note.

⁴ So S: A, Joauv; K, Joav; R, Jav.

⁵ The long passage in brackets which here follows is extant in A and K, but is wanting in S. It consists of a long comparison between the gods Joauv (Joavon) and Barisat, and is very obscure. It is probably a later interpolation.

⁶ Lit. that.

⁷ ? read rooted.

⁸ i. e. while it was growing as a tree. ⁹ Lit. and he.

¹⁰⁻¹⁰ Hath he not abandoned this (once for all) by perishing to utter destruction? A (K).

¹¹ A K insert at the beginning of this chapter: Having thought thus, Abraham came to his father, saying: “Father Terah,” forgetting that Abraham was already speaking to him. The sentence is wanting in S.

than ¹ all things formed because even that which is not subjected is subjected unto it, and things easily perishable are mocked by its flames.¹ ² But even more worthy of honour is the water,² because it conquereth the fire and ³ satisfieth the earth.³ But even it I do not call God, because ⁴ it is subjected to the earth under which the water inclineth.⁴ But I call the earth much more worthy of honour, because it overpowereth the nature (and the fulness)⁵ of the water. Even it (viz. the earth), however, I do not call god, [because]⁶ it, too, is dried up by the sun, [and]⁶ is apportioned to man to be tilled.⁷ [I call the sun more worthy of honour than the earth,]⁸ because it with its rays illumineth the whole world⁹ and the different atmospheres.⁹ [But]⁶ even it I do not call god, because at night¹⁰ and by clouds its course is obscured.¹⁰ Nor, again, do I call the moon or the stars god, because they also in their season obscure [their]¹¹ light at night.¹² [But]¹¹ hear [this],¹¹ Terah my father; for ¹³ I will make known to thee¹³ the God who hath made everything, not these we consider as gods. Who then is He? or what is He?

Who hath crimsoned the heavens, and made the sun golden,

¹⁻¹ So S; for this A K have thy honoured gods of gold, silver, stone, and wood, because it burneth up thy gods; yea, thy gods are burnt up in subjection to the fire, while the fire mocked them, devouring thy gods.

²⁻² A K read: But that (viz. the fire) I do not call god, because it hath been subjected to the water, while the water is more worthy of honour than it (i. e. the fire).

³⁻³ A K, maketh the fruits of the earth sweet.

⁴⁻⁴ A K, the water inclineth under the earth.

⁵ So S; but A K omit—it is probably a gloss.

⁶ S omits. ⁷ Lit. for work (= Heb. la'ābōd).

⁸ Omitted by S; but it must have belonged to the original text. It is attested by A K.

⁹⁻⁹ So S; A K omit: atmospheres (? lower and upper) = 'āēpes; cf. 4 Ezra vi. 4, altitudines aerum.

¹⁰⁻¹⁰ A K, it is obscured by the darkness.

¹¹ S omits. ¹² Or by (through) night.

¹³⁻¹³ Lit. I will investigate (or examine) before thee concerning. The question that follows, Who then is He? etc., gives the subject of the investigation.

And the moon lustrous, and with it the stars;
And hath made the earth dry in the midst of many waters,

And set thee in ¹ ² [and tested me in the confusion of my thoughts]²

"Yet may God reveal Himself to us through Himself!"

VIII. And it came to pass while I spake ³ thus to my father Terah in the court of my ⁴ house, there cometh down ⁵ the voice of a Mighty One ⁶ from heaven in a fiery cloud-burst,⁷ saying and crying :
"Abraham, Abraham!" And I said: "Here am
I." And He said: ⁸ "Thou art seeking in the understanding of thine heart the God of Gods and the Creator;⁸ ⁹ I am He:⁹ Go out from thy father Terah, and get thee out from the ¹⁰ house, that thou also be not slain in the sins of thy father's house."
And I went out. And it came to pass when I went out, that before I succeeded in getting out in front of the door of the court, there came a sound of a [great]¹¹ thunder¹² and burnt ¹³ him and ¹³ his house,¹³ and everything whatsoever in his house, down to the ground, forty cubits.¹⁴

¹ Something has to be supplied here.

²⁻² So A K; S omits.

³ S K, reflected.

⁴ A K, his (i. e. Terah's), rightly. At this point there follows in A K (R) an insertion which contains, among other things, a version of the well-known legend about Abraham's burning of the idol-temple, and with it his brother Haran; cf. Appendix I.

⁵ Lit. falleth (S); K, fell (A omits).

⁶ = LXX. δ ἰσχυρός (frequent as a rendering of Heb. hā'ēl, "God"); cf. 4 Ezra ix. 45, etc.

⁷ K, flame.

⁸⁻⁸ The text of S is not in order; Sreznevsky reads: Cogu Coisya, God thou dost fear, and the Creator thou art seeking.

⁹⁻⁹ A omits.

¹⁰ K, his.

¹¹ S omits.

¹² K, + and there fell fire from heaven.

¹³⁻¹³ A (K R) omit.

¹³ K, + and the dwellers therein, both men and beasts.

¹⁴ Here R ends. The Midrashic story about the burning of Terah's house is really based upon an interpretation of the Biblical "Ur of the Chaldees" (Gen. xi. 31, xv. 7). Here "Ur" is interpreted as = "fire"; Abraham was brought out of "Ur" ("fire") by the Lord.

PART II

THE APOCALYPSE (Chapters IX.-XXXII.).

Abraham receives a Divine Command to offer Sacrifice after Forty Days as a Preparation for a Divine Revelation (Chapter IX.; cf. Gen. xv.).

IX. Then a voice came to me speaking twice : " Abraham, Abraham ! " And I said : " Here am I ! " And He said : " Behold, ¹ it is I ¹; fear not,² for I am before the worlds,³ and a mighty God who hath created ⁴ the light of the world.⁴ I am a shield over thee,² and I am thy helper. Go, take me a young heifer of three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtledove and a pigeon,⁵ and bring me a pure sacrifice. And in this sacrifice I will lay before thee the ages (to come), and make known to thee what is reserved, and thou shalt see great things which thou hast not seen (hitherto) ; ⁶

¹⁻¹ K, I am with thee.

² Cf. Gen. xv. 1.

³ Or ages (" æons ").

⁴⁻⁴ A, the first light ; K, in the beginning heaven and earth and then the first luminary of light and of the world (cf. Gen. i. 1 f.). The reference is apparently to the created (not the uncreated) light. For the latter cf. note on chap. xvii.

⁵ Cf. Gen. xv. 9.

⁶ The revelation made to Abraham which is described in Gen. xv. 9 f. early became a favourite theme for apocalyptic speculation, and an intimation was discovered in the passage of Israel's later captivity and subjection to the four oppressive world-powers of the Book of Daniel (see the Targums ad loc). This apocalyptic experience of Abraham is referred to in 4 Ezra iii. 14 (and unto him [Abraham] only didst thou reveal the end of the times secretly by night). According to the Ap. Bar. iv. 4 the heavenly Jerusalem was shown to Abraham " by night among the portions of the victims."

because thou hast loved to search me out, and I have named thee my Friend.¹ But abstain² from every form of food that proceedeth out of the fire, and from the drinking of wine, and from anointing (thyself) with oil, forty days,"³ and then set forth for me the sacrifice which I have commanded thee, in the place which I will shew thee, on a high mountain,⁴ and there I will shew thee the ages which have been created and established,⁵ made and renewed,⁵ by my Word,⁶ and⁷ I will make known to thee what shall come to pass in them on those who have done evil and (practised) righteousness in the generation of men.

Abraham, under the Direction of the Angel Jael, proceeds to Mount Horeb, a Journey of Forty Days, to offer the Sacrifice (Chapters X.-XII.).

X. And it came to pass, when I heard the voice of Him who spake such words to me, (and)⁸ I looked hither and thither and lo! there was no breath of a ¹ Or "lover." Abraham, as God's chosen friend (or "lover of God," cf. 2 Chron. xx. 7, Is. xli. 8, Ep. James ii. 23) can receive special revelation; for the juxtaposition of the two ideas cf. 4 Ezra iii. 14.

² Or refrain thyself. By every form of food that proceedeth out of the fire, flesh-meat is no doubt meant.

³ Fasting as a preparation for the reception of a divine revelation was much practised by the apocalyptists. In 4 Ezra four fasts of seven days followed in each case by a divine revelation are referred to. Here, it is to be noted, the period is one of forty days. For the terms here used cf. 4 Ezra ix. 24. Anointing the body (especially the face) with oil was a mark of joy used in connexion with feasting (cf. Eccles. ix. 8, Ps. xxiii. 5, Amos vi. 6), and omitted in mourning as a sign of grief (cf. 2 Sam. xiv. 2, Dan. x. 3).

⁴ Cf. Gen. xxii. 2.

^{5,5} A omits.

⁶ The "Word" of God here has a quasi-personal significance; cf. 4 Ezra vi. 38 ("and thy Word, O Lord, perfected the work"), 43, etc.

⁷ and omitted by A.

⁸ Omit (a Hebraism? marks apodosis).

man,^{1 2} and my spirit was affrighted, and my soul fled from me, and I became like a stone, and fell down upon the earth, for ² I had no more strength to stand on the earth.^{3 4} And while I was still lying with my face upon the earth,⁴ I heard the voice of the Holy One speaking: "Go, Jaoel,⁵ and by means of my ineffable Name raise me yonder man, and strengthen him (so that he recover) from his trembling." And the angel came, whom He had sent to me, in the likeness of a man, and ⁶ grasped me by my right hand, and set me up upon my feet, and said to me: ⁷ " ⁸ Stand up,⁸ [Abraham,] ⁹ Friend of God who loveth thee; let not ¹⁰ the trembling of man seize thee! For, lo! I have been sent to thee to strengthen thee and bless thee in the name of God—who loveth thee—the Creator of the celestial and terrestrial. Be fearless and hasten to Him. I am called Jaoel¹¹ by Him who moveth that which existeth with me on the ¹ Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 29 ("omnes qui spiramentum habent hominis").

²⁻² K reads: and he was affrighted in his spirit, and his soul perished in him, and he became like a dead man, and fell down like a stone upon the earth, and.

³ Cf. Ezek. i. 28; Dan. viii. 17, x. 8 f.; 1 Enoch xiv. 14, 24; 4 Ezra x. 29 f.

⁴⁻⁴ K omits.

⁵ The name of the archangel Joel (Jaoel) is differently spelt in the various texts (cf. the Slavonic version of The Book of Adam, ed. by Jagić, in Denkschriften des Kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften in Wien, philol.-histor. Classe, Vol. XLII.): S, Naoil, Iloil, A, Aol, K, Jaol, Book of Adam, Joil = Joel. Jaoel (= Heb. Yahoel) is represented in our Apocalypse as a being possessed of the power of the ineffable name, a function assigned in the Rabbinical writings to Metatron, "whose name is like unto that of God Himself" (T.B. Sanh. 38b). The name Yahoel (Jaoel) is evidently a substitute for the ineffable name Yahweh, the writing out of which in full was forbidden. In chap. xvii. below God Himself is addressed as Jaoel. For Jaoel as the heavenly choirmaster cf. note on chap. xvii.

⁶ A omits.

⁷ Cf. 4 Ezra x. 30.

⁸⁻⁸ A omits.

⁹ S omits.

¹⁰ A K, if.

¹¹ S, Eloel; A, Aol; K, Ioal.

seventh¹ expanse upon² the firmament,³ a power in virtue of the ineffable Name that is dwelling in me.⁴ I am the one who hath been given to restrain, according to His commandment, the threatening attack of the living creatures of the Cherubim against one another,⁵ and teach those who carry Him⁶ the song of the seventh hour of the night of man.⁷ I am ordained to restrain the Leviathan, for unto me are subject the attack and menace of every single reptile.⁸ [I am he who hath been commissioned to loosen

¹ A, middle.

² i. e. ? "over."

³ The angel sent to Isaiah to conduct him through the various "heavens" had "come from the seventh [i. e. the highest] heaven"; cf. Asc. Is. vi. 13, vii. 27.

⁴ Cf. Ex. xxiii. 21 ("my name is in him," i. e. the angel of Jahveh); here Jaël seems to play the rôle of Michael (see Introduction, p. xxv).

⁵ By "the living creatures of the Cherubim" are meant the "holy hayyoth" of Ezek. i. who are expressly identified with the [heavenly] Cherubim in Ezek. x. 20. They are four in number (each with four faces), and are the bearers of the divine throne (see next note). Apparently they are here represented as of threatening aspect and in danger of menacing attack upon one another, so that a restraining influence was necessary. According to the Midrash (Exodus rabba v.) envy and mistrust are absent from the angelic world, though the angels envied Israel the possession of the Law; but cf. Asc. Is. vii. 9.

⁶ i. e. "the holy hayyoth ['living creatures'] who carry the throne of glory" (Sifra on Lev. i. 1).

⁷ According to T.B. Abôdâ zârâ 3b, "God sits [at night] and listens to the song of the living creatures [hayyoth], as it is said (Ps. xlii. 8): By day the Lord commandeth His loving-kindness [i. e. judges and sustains the world, and occupies Himself in the study of the Law], and in the night His song is with me." In T.B. Hag. 12b it is said that the companies of ministering angels in the fifth heaven "utter His song in the night, and are silent in the day for the sake of the glory of Israel." In Pirke de R. Eliezer iv. Michael is represented as the head of the first of four bands of ministering angels who utter praise before the Holy One; cf. also Mekilta to Ex. xv. 1; and in the New Testament Luke ii. 13 (the angelic song at night).

⁸ Michael is represented in Kabbalistic literature as the angel-prince who is set over the element of water (cf. Lueken, Michael, p. 54); this conception is probably old, for on it rests the haggadic story that when Solomon married Pharaoh's

Hades, to destroy him who stareth at the dead.]¹ I am the one who was commissioned to set on fire thy father's house together with him, because he displayed reverence for dead (idols).² I have been daughter, Michael drove into the bed of the sea a stick, around which slime gathered, and on which Rome was ultimately built (Midrash rabba on Cant. i. 6, in the name of R. Levi, end of third century A.D.). Michael is also the prince of snow, which belongs to the element of water (Deut. rabba v. 12). Leviathan as the sea-monster par excellence would be subject to him, with all reptiles, though the task of slaying the monster is assigned, by Jewish legend, to Gabriel; but Michael and Gabriel are often confused in these connexions. [For the "spirit of the sea" that restrains it cf. 1 Enoch lx. 16.] The representation here is parallel in a sense with that which depicts Michael as the enemy and conqueror of Satan (cf. Rev. xii. 7 ff.) and in later Christian tradition as the vanquisher of the dragon (cf. Lueken, op. cit., pp. 106 ff.). It should be noted that according to the Kabbalistic book Raziel fol. 4a the name of Michael is a powerful charm against the reptiles (cf. Lueken, p. 28).

¹ The bracketed clause is omitted by S. One of Michael's functions (with Gabriel) is to open the gates of Hell and release the sinners therein; see Yalqut Shim. on Is. xxvi. 2, and cf. Lueken, op. cit., p. 52. What is meant by "destroying" him who stareth at the dead is not clear. It might conceivably refer to the duty of burying the dead. To allow a corpse—even an enemy's—to remain unburied was considered an impiety (cf. Ps. lxxix. 2 f.; Tobit i. 17, ii. 7; Josephus, Apion, ii. 29), and it is notable that, according to The Life of Adam and Eve, xlvi. 4 f.; (cf. Charles, Corpus ii. 151), Michael and Uriel bury the bodies of Adam and Abel in Paradise. But the language of the phrase here hardly suits this. In view of the next clause, where "dead" = dead idols, the reference may perhaps be to idol-worship. In a Byzantine text the story of Michael's contest with the devil about the body of Moses is given a somewhat similar motive. The devil is represented as seeking to bring down Moses' dead body to the Israelites in order that they may worship it—and this may depend originally upon a Jewish source which in this way protested against the Christian worship of saints and relics (cf. Lueken, op. cit., p. 121 f.). But perhaps stareth at should be altered to terrifieth, and the reference is to Death personified; cf. Add. Note, p. 86 f.

² In the Rabbinical form of the legend (see Appendix) Abraham is rescued from the fiery oven into which he had been cast by Nimrod by Michael, according to the opinion sent to bless thee now, and the land ¹ which the Eternal One, whom thou hast invoked, hath prepared for thee, and for thy sake have I wended my way upon the earth.² Stand up, Abraham! Go without fear; be right glad and rejoice; and I am with thee! For eternal honour hath been prepared for thee by the Eternal One. Go, fulfil the sacrifices commanded. For lo! I have been appointed to be with thee and with the generation prepared (to spring) from thee; and with me Michael ³ blesseth thee for ever. Be of good cheer, go!"

XI. And I rose up and saw him who had grasped me by my right hand and set me up upon my feet: and the appearance of his body ⁴ was like sapphire, and the look of his countenance like chrysolite, and the hair of his head like snow, and the turban upon his head ⁵ like the appearance of the rainbow, and the clothing of his garments like purple; and a golden sceptre was in his right hand.⁶ And he said to me:

of Eliezer b. Jacob (Genesis rabba xliv. 16). Michael, according to the Rabbis, was the defender of the Patriarchs. Strictly it is Gabriel who is the prince of fire.

¹ i. e. the land of Palestine. In Mohammedan tradition Michael is the good angel who brings peace and plenty.

² It was Michael who, according to Rabbinic tradition, at various times appeared to Abraham, e. g. he told Abraham that Lot had escaped, protected Sarah from being defiled by Abimelech (Pirke de R. Eliezer xxvi.), announced to Sarah that she should have a son (Gen. xviii. 10), rescued Lot from Sodom (T.B. Baba mesia, 86b), and prevented Isaac from being sacrificed by substituting a ram. In The Test. of Abraham (i.) it is Michael who comes down and visits Abraham in order to take his soul.

³ Here Michael is associated with the speaker, the archangel Jaoel. This rather suggests that the latter is really fulfilling the rôle of Metatron (Michael and Metatron are companions, Zohar i. 149b). But Jaoel really combines the functions of both. The writer wishes to make it clear that Jaoel is closely associated with Michael.

⁴ K, + his feet (a gloss? suggested by Rev. i. 15).

⁵ Cf. Rev. xix. 12 ("upon his head many diadems").

⁶ Cf. Rev. i. 16 ("and he had in his right hand seven stars"). There is a general resemblance here to the description of the exalted Christ in Rev. i. 14-16, but the details

"Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I, thy servant." And he said: "Let not my look affright thee, nor my speech, that thy soul be not perturbed.¹ Come with me and I will go with thee, until the sacrifice, visible, but after the sacrifice,² invisible for ever. Be of good cheer, and come!"

XII. And we went, the two of us together, forty days and nights,³ and I ate no bread, and drank no water, because my food⁴ was to see the angel who was with me, and his speech—that was my drink.⁵ And we came to the Mount of God, the glorious Horeb. And I said to the angel: "Singer of the Eternal One! Lo! I have no sacrifice with me,⁶ nor am I aware of a place of an altar on the mountain: how can I bring a sacrifice?" And he said to me: "Look round!"⁷ ⁸ And I looked round,⁸ and lo! there were following us all the prescribed sacrificial (animals)—the young heifer, and the she-goat, and the ram, and the turtle-dove, and the pigeon.⁹ And the angel said to me: "Abraham!" I said: "Here am I."

are different except that both have the characteristic descriptive phrase, derived from Dan. vii. 9 ("the hair of his head like pure wool," here "like snow," cf. Rev. i. 14); cf. also 2 Enoch i. 5 (the description of the two angels who visit Enoch). The figure described is regal (notice the purple garments and the sceptre), and is invested with the divine glory; cf. Ezek. i. 26 f.

¹ Or "troubled"; cf. 2 Enoch i. 8, and often in apocalyptic writings.

² K, + I will be. The angel appears in visible form for the time being. So Michael appears to Abraham "like a very comely warrior" (Test. Abrah. i.).

³ Cf. 1 Kings xix. 8.

⁴ S, + and my drink.

⁵ Cf. John iv. 31-34. Elijah ate and drank before starting on his journey to Horeb, and "went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights" (1 Kings xix. 8); cf. Ex. xxiv. 18. There is a close parallel to our text in Philo, Life of Moses, Bk. III. 1, where it is said of Moses in the Mount: "he neglected all meat and drink for forty days together, evidently because he had more excellent food than that in those contemplations with which he was inspired from above from heaven."

⁶ Cf. Gen. xxii. 7.

⁷ A, behind.

⁸⁻⁹ A K omit.

⁹ Cf. Gen. xv. 9.

And he said to me : " All these slaughter, and divide the animals into halves, one against the other, but the birds do not sever ;¹ and (" but ") give to the men, whom I will shew thee, standing by thee, for these are the altar² upon the Mountain, to offer a sacrifice to the Eternal ; but the turtledove and the pigeon give to me, for I will ascend upon the wings of the bird,³ in order to shew thee in heaven, and on the earth, and in the sea, and in the abyss, and in the under-world, and in the Garden of Eden, and in its rivers and in the fulness of the whole world and its circle—thou shalt gaze in (them) all. " ⁴

Abraham accomplishes the Sacrifice, under the Guidance of the Angel, and refuses to be diverted from his Purpose by Azazel (Chapters XIII.–XIV.).

XIII. And I did everything according to the commandment of the angel, and gave the angels, who had come to us, the divided animals, but the angel⁵ took the birds. And I waited for the evening sacrifice. And there flew an unclean bird down upon the carcasses,⁶ and I drove it away. And the unclean bird spake to me, and said : " What doest thou, Abraham, upon the holy Heights, where no man eateth or

¹ Cf. Gen. xv. 10.

² Living men (or rather angels) take the place of the material altar; cf. the metaphorical use of " temple " as applied to the body (cf. John ii. 21; 1 Cor. iii. 16, vi. 19). But such a use of the term " altar " does not appear to have become current in Jewish literature.

³ The ascent to heaven is accomplished on the wings of a dove. The dove is appropriate in this connexion because of its swiftness (cf. Ps. lv. (6) 7, " Oh that I had wings like a dove," etc.; cf. also Virgil, Æn. vi. 190 ff.), and its purity. For the symbolism of the dove applied to Israel, and also to the Holy Spirit (Matt. iii. 16), cf. I. Abrahams, Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels, pp. 47 ff.

⁴ The revelations here promised to Abraham correspond to the earlier models given in 1 and 2 Enoch.

⁵ K, + Jaœl.

⁶ Cf. Gen. xv. 11.

drinketh,¹ neither is there upon them (any) food of man, but these² consume everything with fire, and (will) burn thee up. ³ Forsake the man, who is with thee, and flee; for if thou ascendest to the Heights they will make an end of thee.³ And it came to pass, when I saw the bird speak, I said to the angel: "What is this, my lord?" And he said: "This is ungodliness,⁴ this is Azazel."⁵ And he said to it: "Disgrace upon thee, Azazel! For Abraham's lot is in heaven, but thine upon the earth. Because thou hast chosen and loved this for the dwelling-(place) of thine uncleanness, therefore the eternal mighty Lord made thee a dweller upon the earth⁶ and through thee every evil spirit of lies,⁷ and through

¹ i. e. they are in the domain of the spiritual sphere, where there is no eating and drinking; cf. Test. Abrah. (A) iv., "all the heavenly spirits are incorporeal, and neither eat nor drink."

² i. e. the heavenly beings.

³⁻³ Omitted by A K.

⁴ Cf. Zech. v. 8.

⁵ Azazel is the fallen archangel, the seducer of mankind, who here, as in the Book of Enoch, fills the rôle of Satan or Sammael. He is essentially the spirit of uncleanness, and, in this character, is depicted in our text as descending in the form of an unclean bird. It is interesting to note that the Palestinian Targum on Gen. xv. 11 interprets the unclean birds figuratively of idolatrous peoples ("And there came down idolatrous peoples which are like to unclean birds, to steal away the sacrifices of Israel; but the righteousness of Abram was a shield over them").

⁶ Azazel, who is here clearly a fallen archangel like the later Satan (cf. Bousset, *Relig. d. Judentums*², 386), has been expelled from heaven by God. According to 2 Enoch xxix. 5 Satan's domain, after his expulsion, was the air (cf. Eph. ii. 2), but here Azazel is a "dweller upon the earth," where he controls the evil powers (cf. John xii. 31, "prince of this world," Matt. iv. 8 f.). In The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (cf. also Asc. Is.) Beliar is the arch-fiend, the head of the evil spirits, and the source of impurity and lying. But Azazel, like all celestial beings, can fly through the air (Gen. rabba xix.) and assume any form, such as that of a bird (T. B. Sanh., 107a).

⁷ Azazel's expulsion carried with it that of his hosts, of which he was the leader. [Note that in chap. xxxi. of our Book Azazel is depicted as the lord of hell.]

thee wrath and trials for the generations of ungodly men;¹ for God, the Eternal, Mighty One, hath not permitted that the bodies of the righteous should be in thy hand,² in order that thereby the life of the righteous and the destruction of the unclean may be assured.³ Hear, friend,⁴ begone with shame from me. For it hath not been given to thee to play the tempter in regard to all the righteous. Depart from this man! Thou canst not lead him astray, because he is an enemy to thee, and of those who follow thee and love what thou wilt. For, behold, the vesture which in heaven was formerly thine hath been set aside for him,⁵ and the mortality which was his hath been transferred to thee."⁶

XIV. The angel said to me: ⁷ ["Abraham!" And

¹ For the sin and misery brought upon the earth by the fallen angels cf. 1 Enoch viii. 2, ix. 6, 8, x. 7 f., etc.

² According to T.B. Baba bathra, 17a the "evil impulse" (yeşer hā-ra') had no power over the three righteous men, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. In The Test. Abrah. Abraham is represented as sinless.

³ Notice the strong dualism. The activity of the evil powers makes perdition certain for their victims, while, on the other hand, by its very failure in the case of the righteous it makes their felicity more certain in the end.

⁴ [Lit. "counsellor," an idiomatic expression still found in Russian dialects (cf. Dalj's Dictionary of the Russian Language, s.v. sovetnik) meaning "friend," used in a good-humoured way.—J. I. L.]

⁵ The "heavenly garments" are here referred to "which are now stored up on high in the seventh heaven" according to Asc. Is. iv. 16. The idea, originally a realistic one, was gradually spiritualised, and came to mean the spiritual bodies in which the righteous will be clothed in heaven; cf. 1 Enoch lxii. 15 f. ("garments of glory," "garments of life"); cf. also 2 Enoch xxii. 8 f., where Michael is bidden by God to "take from Enoch his earthly robe . . . and clothe him with the garment of my glory." In The Ascension of Isaiah the seer is unable to ascend to the highest heaven until his "garment" has been brought to him (Asc. Is. ix. 1-2). There he sees the crowns and garments which are reserved for the righteous (ibid. ix. 13 ff.); cf. also Asc. Is. viii. 14; Rev. iii. 4, 5, 18, vi. 11, vii. 9; 2 Cor. v. 3 ff.

⁶ Azazel has thus lost his "garment of life," or robe of immortality, and become mortal, while Abraham gains it.

⁷ S, Abraham.

I said: "Here am I, thy servant." And he said: "Know from henceforth that the Eternal One hath chosen thee, (He) whom thou lovest; be of good courage and use this authority, so far as I bid thee, against him who slandereth truth;¹ should I not be able to put him to shame who hath scattered over the earth the secrets of heaven² and hath rebelled³ against the Mighty One?"]⁵ Say to him: 'Be thou the burning coal of the Furnace of the earth;⁶ go, Azazel, into the inaccessible parts of the earth;⁷ [for thy heritage is (to be) over those existing with thee being born with the stars and clouds,⁸ with the men whose

¹ Cf. John viii. 44 ("he [the Devil] is a liar and the father thereof"). Satan—here Azazel—is par excellence "the slanderer" (ὁ διάβολος), "he who slandereth truth."

² The fallen angels (1 Enoch vii., lxix. 6 ff.), and especially Azazel (1 Enoch viii. 1), are represented as having brought moral ruin upon the earth by teaching men the use of magic, astrology, and science (including the use of warlike weapons). A close parallel to our text exists in 1 Enoch ix. 6: "See what Azazel hath done, how he hath taught all unrighteousness on earth and revealed the secret things of the world which were wrought in the heavens."

³ So Sammael, "the great prince in heaven," is reproached by the Torah for rebellion against God (Pirke de R. Eliezer xiii.: "The Torah began to cry aloud saying: Why, O Sammael! now that the world is created, is it the time to rebel against the Omnipresent? Is it like a time when thou shouldst lift up thyself on high (Job xxxix. 18)?"). Thus the two chief sins of Azazel consist in "scattering the secrets of heaven upon the earth," and in devising rebellion against the Most High.

⁴ = probably LXX. ὁ ἰσχυρός (Heb. hā 'ēl); see chap. viii. note 1. Kohler suggests Heb. 'abîr, "Mighty One" (of Jacob), Gen. xlix. 24 (LXX, ὁ δυνάστης), Is. xlix. 26 (LXX, ἰσχύς).

⁵ Bracketed clause attested by A K, omitted by S.

⁶ Azazel is condemned to be in himself the fire of Hell; cf. xxxi. ("burnt with the fire of Azazel's tongue"). Thus wherever he goes he, as it were, carries Hell with him—a conception that appears to be peculiar to our Apocalypse in early apocalyptic literature (cf. Volz, p. 291).

⁷ i. e. into those parts of the earth reserved for him till the final judgement. In 1 Enoch x. 4 Azazel is condemned to be bound and placed in Dudâêl, in the desert, and there to be imprisoned in darkness till the final judgement.

⁸ This expression is obscure. It apparently refers to the men who belong (? by birth) to Azazel, whose lot has been pre-determined (see next note).

portion thou art, and (who) through thy being exist; ¹ and thine enmity is justification. On this account by thy perdition disappear from me." And I uttered the words which the angel had taught me. And he said: "Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I, thy servant."] ²

And the angel said to me: "Answer him not; for God hath given him power (lit. will) over those who do answer him." ³ [And the angel spake to me a second time and said: "Now rather, however much he speak to thee, answer him not, that his will may have no free course in thee, because the Eternal and Mighty One hath given him ⁴ weight and will; ⁴ answer him not." I did what was commanded me by the angel;] ⁵ and however much he spake to me, I answered him ⁶ nothing whatsoever. ⁶

Abraham and the Angel ascend on the Wings of the Birds to Heaven (Chapters XV.-XVI.).

XV. And it came to pass when the sun went down, and lo! a smoke as of a furnace. ⁷ And the angels who had the portions of the sacrifice ⁸ ascended from the top of the smoking furnace. And the Angel took

¹ The wicked are Azazel's "portion," i. e. they have been assigned to him from the beginning. The idea seems to be predestinarian; cf. Wisdom ii. 24 ("by the envy of the devil death entered into the world, and they that are his portion make trial thereof"), Ap. Bar. xlii. 7 ("for corruption will take those that belong to it, and life those that belong to it"); 1 Enoch xli. 8. [Does the phrase in the previous clause, "being born with the stars and clouds," mean those who by birth and creation belong to the sphere of night and darkness, as opposed to the righteous, who belong to the realm of light? See 1 Enoch xli. 8 and Charles's note.]

² The bracketed clause is attested by A K, but is absent from S. It may be a later interpolation (but see Introduction).

³ A fine psychological touch.

⁴⁻⁴ The text may be corrupt. It might mean an overpowering will.

⁵ The bracketed clause is attested by A K, but is absent from S. It is obviously a parallel and alternative text to the preceding clause.

⁶⁻⁶ According to Sreznevsky's reading (no se ni ti, lit. "not this nor that").

⁷ Cf. Gen. xv. 17 (also xv. 12).

⁸ Cf. chap. xii. above.

me with the ¹ right hand and set me on the right wing of the pigeon, and set himself on the left ² wing of the turtle dove, which (birds) had neither been slaughtered nor divided. And he bore me to the borders of the flaming fire [and we ascended as with many winds to the heaven which was fixed upon the surface.³ And I saw on the air]⁴ on the height, to which we ascended a strong light, which it was impossible to describe,⁵ and lo! in this light a fiercely burning fire for people, many people of male appearance,⁶ all (constantly) changing in aspect and form, running and being transformed, and worshipping and crying with a sound of words which I knew not.⁷

XVI. And I said to the Angel: "Why ⁸ hast thou brought me up here now, because I ⁹ cannot now see, for I am already grown weak, and my spirit departeth from me?"¹⁰ And he said to me: "Remain by me; fear not! And He whom thou seest come straight towards us with great voice of holiness ¹¹—that is the

¹ A, his.

² A omits.

³ i. e. ? the heaven above the firmament.

⁴ Omitted accidentally in S by homoiotelenon ("ascended . ascended").

⁵ i. e. the uncreated light, which originally illuminated the earth, but was withdrawn when Adam sinned. See further notes on xvii. below.

⁶ K, sex.

⁷ The description refers to the host of angels who are born daily, sing their song of praise before God, and then disappear; cf. Genesis rabba lxxviii. 1: Rabbi Helbo in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman said: "One angel-host never repeats the song of praise, but every morning God creates a new angel-host and these cantillate a new song before Him and then disappear." They are created daily out of the stream of fire that proceeds from the holy hayyoth (ibid.); cf. Ps. civ. 4. Cf. also 2 Enoch xxix. 3: "And from the fire I made the ranks of the spiritual hosts, ten thousand angels, and their weapons are fiery, and their garment is a burning flame"; see further Weber, p. 166 f.

⁸ S, where.

⁹ K, mine eyes.

¹⁰ The mortal man, conscious of his weakness, is blinded by the heavenly light. On the other hand, Adam, before he fell, was able to see by its aid "from one end of the world to the other" (T.B. Hag. 12a).

¹¹ i. e. proclaiming His holiness, so A; in S the word is corrupt. K (which may preserve the right reading here)

Eternal One who loveth thee; but Himself thou canst not see.¹ But let not thy spirit grow faint [on account of the loud crying],² for I am with thee, strengthening thee."

Abraham, taught by the Angel, utters the Celestial Song and prays for Enlightenment (Chapter XVII.).

XVII. And while he yet spake (and) lo ! fire³ came against us⁴ round about,⁴ and a voice was in the fire like a voice of many waters,⁵ like the sound of the sea in its uproar.⁶ And the angel bent his head with me and worshipped.⁷ And I desired to fall down upon the earth, and the high place, on which we stood, [at one moment rose upright,]⁸ but at another rolled downwards.⁹

has : " [with a great voice] saying : Holy, holy, holy is the Lord." In 1 Enoch xxxix. 12 the trisagion (Is. vi. 5) is the song of the angelic watchers.

¹ God is Himself invisible.

² Omitted by S.

³ The Divine Presence is revealed by fire (Ex. iii. 2, Deut. iv. 36, Ps. lxxviii. 14), and God Himself is spoken of as " a consuming fire " (Deut. iv. 24, ix. 3). But here the fiery chariot which bore the Divine Presence is probably thought of; cf. Ezek. i. 4 (" a great cloud with a fire infolding itself ").

⁴⁻⁴ A omits.

⁵ Cf. Rev. i. 15 (Dan. x. 6). This feature is part of the supernatural colouring so characteristic of Apocalyptic—the heavenly light is of dazzling brilliance, the divine voice is like thunder (cf. 2 Enoch xxxix. 7 : " like great thunder with continual agitation of the clouds "); see Volz, Der Geist Gottes, p. 120 f.

⁶ Cf. Is. xvii. 12.

⁷ A strongly Jewish touch—divine honour may be paid to God alone, and to none other, even the most exalted of heavenly beings; cf. Rev. xxii. 9.

⁸ S omits.

⁹ This description is interesting. The seer has ascended " as with many winds " to heaven, and is standing " on the height " (chap. xv.). He experiences a strong feeling of desire to fall down upon the earth, because the high place on which he is standing with the angel, at one moment rose upright, at another plunged downward (cf. 4 Ezra vi. 29 and 13-16). The commotion is produced by the Divine Voice. In chap. xxx. the seer finds himself suddenly (while God is speaking) again upon the earth.

And he said : " Only worship, Abraham, and utter the song which I have taught thee ; " because there was no.¹ earth to fall upon. And I worshipped only, and uttered the song which he had taught me.² And he said : " Recite without ceasing." And I recited, and he³ also himself^{3 4} with me⁴ recited the song :⁵

Eternal, mighty, Holy, El,⁶

⁷ God only—Supreme !

Thou who art self-originated,⁷ incorruptible, spotless,

Uncreate, immaculate, immortal,

Self-complete, self-illuminating ;

⁸ Without father, without mother, unbegotten,⁸

Exalted, fiery One !

¹ A omits no.

² Only the angels understand how to utter the divine song of praise, though the blessed among mortals may (as here) be taught to sing thus in a state of ecstasy. Each of the angelic spheres has its own " Voice " (cf. 1 Enoch xl. 3 ff.), and the angelic language is incomprehensible to mortals (cf. chap. xv. above, end), though the illuminated and inspired seer may be taught both to understand and utter such " words " (as here; cf. ἐν γλώσσαις λαλεῖν in N.T.). The exalted Enoch in heaven underwent a similar experience (cf. 1 Enoch lxxi. 11 f. : " I fell on my face and my whole body melted away, but my spirit was transfigured, and I cried with a loud voice," etc.), as also did Isaiah (Asc. Is. viii. 17). According to Philo no beings can adequately express the praise due to God (Life of Moses, ii. xxxi. [§ 239]), contrast Ecclus. xxxix. 6. See further Volz, op. cit., p. 137.

^{3 3} A omits.

^{4 4} S omits. In Asc. Is. viii. 17 the inspired seer joins with the angel in the celestial song of praise.

⁵ K, + the first song of Abraham which I, the holy angel Jaobel, taught him (while) moving with him in the air.

⁶ A K omit El.

^{7 7} Cf. the opening lines of the Jewish mediæval hymn, 'Adon 'ôlām, " Lord of the world He reigned alone, while yet creation was unformed," and for " self-originated " the phrase " beginningless " (bēlî rē'shîth) applied to God in the same context. The divine name Shaddai was traditionally explained as = " the self-sufficient " (shē-dai hū lô). This idea may underlie the text here.

^{8 8} Cf. Heb. vii. 3, ἀπάτωρ ἀμήτωρ ἀγενεαλόγητος, of Melchizedek (= Heb. bē'ên 'āb bē'ên 'ēm bē'ên yaḥas). As Westcott remarks (ad loc.), " The words (ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ) were used

Lover of men,¹ benevolent,² bountiful,³ jealous over me and very compassionate;⁴
 Eli, that is, My God—
 Eternal, mighty holy Sabaoth,⁵ very glorious El, El, El, El, Jaoel!⁶
 Thou art He whom my soul hath loved!
 Eternal Protector, shining like fire, Whose voice is like the thunder,⁷ constantly in Greek mythology (e. g. of Athene and Hephæstus); and so passed into the loftier conceptions of the Deity, as in that of Trismegistus quoted by Lactantius (iv. 13): ipse enim pater Deus et origo et principium rerum quoniam parentibus caret ἀπείρων ἀμήτωρ a Trismegisto verissime nominatur, quod ex nullo sit procreatus."

¹ = φιλόανθρωπον: cf. Wisdom i. 6 ("For Wisdom is a spirit that loveth men" [φιλόανθρωπον πνεῦμα]).

² = ? χρησπός.

³ = χαριστικός.

⁴ Cf. Deut. v. 9 f. The whole clause (from "lover of men" to "compassionate") contains a short summary of the divine attributes based upon Ex. xxxiv. 6, 7, a passage much used in later literature (cf. e. g. Wisdom xv. 1), and especially in the Liturgy; cf. 4 Ezra vii. 132–viii. 3 and the writer's notes thereon. These attributes are predicable especially of the Tetragrammaton (Jahveh), which connotes more particularly the elements of mercy and compassion, while 'Elôhîm denotes multiplied power (the Almighty), and is associated with the idea of justice and fixed law; 'El is part of 'Elôhîm and denotes simply power.

⁵ The use of Sabaoth alone as a designation of God is unusual, but not unexampled; cf. Ex. rabba iii. 6 [in answer to Moses' question, What is His name? Ex. iii. 13]: "The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Dost thou seek to know my name? I am called according to my deeds. I am called at various times by the names 'El Shaddai, Sabaoth, Elohîm, Jahveh. When I judge the creatures I am named Elohîm, and when I wage war against the wicked I am called Sabaoth, and when I suspend (the punishment) of man's sins I am called 'El Shaddai, and when I compassionate my world I am called Jahveh, because Jahveh means nought else but the attribute of compassion, as it is said (Ex. xxxiv. 6 f.) Jahveh, Jahveh a God full of compassion," etc.

⁶ The fourfold El (attested only by S) looks like a substitution for the Tetragrammaton; Jaoel (here applied to God) is undoubtedly so. Elsewhere in this book it is the designation of the archangel.

⁷ Cf. Note ³ at beginning of this chapter.

Whose look is like the lightning, all-seeing,¹

Who receiveth the prayers of such as honour Thee !

[And turneth away from the requests of such as embarrass with the embarrassment of their provocations,

Who dissolveth the confusions of the world² which arise from the ungodly and righteous³ in the corruptible age,⁴ renewing the age of the righteous !⁵]

Thou, O Light, shinest⁷ before the light of the⁸ morning upon Thy creatures, ¹ Cf. Dan. x. 6 ("and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire") and Ezek. i. 13, 14.

² Lit. "the all" (Heb. ha-kôl); the expression is sometimes so used in the later Hebrew Liturgy.

³ The mixture of good and evil, or rather of the righteous and ungodly, in this world, makes the present æon "corruptible" (cf. 4 Ezra iv. 26-30); even the righteous themselves suffer from contact with the godless—their holiness is dimmed.

⁴ i. e. the present corruptible age (or "æon"); cf. 4 Ezra vii. 112, xiv. 13 ("the life that is corruptible").

⁵ The confusions of the present world will be overcome by the elimination of the godless; then the renovated world (i. e. the present world purified) will become the fit habitation of the righteous. This view harmonises with the Rabbinical, which contemplated a renovation of the present world; see further Volz, Eschatologie, p. 297, and cf. Jubilees, passim.

⁶ The bracketed clause is attested by A K, but omitted by S; it is probably an interpolation. The rhythm is much improved by its omission.

⁷ Or "Thou shinest as Light"; the original Semitic text should probably be rendered "Thou didst shine." Light is the most striking feature in the highest heaven (cf. 2 Enoch xx. i, "I saw there a very great light," and xxxi. 2); God is Light (cf. 1 John i. 5). His majesty is surrounded with light to make Him invisible to all beings (T. B. Megilla, 19b). It is this heavenly light which is referred to here (cf. also Wisdom vii. 26 f., where Wisdom is represented as the radiance of the everlasting light). The first act of creation was when God "robed Himself with light as with a garment" (Ps. civ. 2), while the "radiance of His glory" (Heb. ziv hădārô) illumined the earth from one end to the other (cf. Gen. rabba iii., Pirke de R. Eliezer iii.). This heavenly light was afterwards withdrawn; the luminaries receive their light from a spark of it. For light as a symbol of blessedness cf. Volz, Eschatologie, p. 328. Ps. xix. contrasts natural (created) and spiritual light.

⁸ Perhaps, as Ginzberg suggests, "before the morning light" is a mistranslation of the Semitic original "before

[so that it becometh ¹ day upon the earth,] ²
 And in Thy ² heavenly dwelling places there is no need of any other light than (that) of the unspeakable splendour from the lights of Thy countenance. ³ Accept my prayer [and be well-pleased with it], ⁴ likewise also the sacrifice which Thou hast prepared Thee through me who sought Thee !
 Accept me favourably, and shew me, and teach me,
 And make known to Thy servant as thou hast promised me ! ⁵

Abraham's Vision of the Divine Throne (Chapter XVIII.).

XVIII. And ⁶ while I still recited the song, the mouth of the fire which was on the surface rose up on high. And I heard a voice like the roaring of the the primæval morning" ('ôr rîshôn or nêhôrâ kadmōniyyā).

 The meaning of the original line would be that God at first illumined the earth with the heavenly radiance.

¹ Render became.

² S omits.

³ Cf. Rev. xxii. 5, xxi. 23, Is. lx. 19 f. [The theme is expanded in the Synagogue Liturgy in connexion with the Benediction over light which precedes the recitation of the Shema : " Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who formest light and createst darkness. . . . Yea, eternal light (Heb. 'ôr 'ôlām) in the treasury of life; for He spake, and out of darkness
 there was light."]

⁴ The bracketed clause is attested by A K; S omits.

⁵ Abraham prays that the sacrifice may be accepted, and as a result of this that the secrets of the future may be disclosed by revelation. The prayer seems to be a personal addition to the song of praise on the part of Abraham. The structure of the whole with its opening invocation, made up of clauses describing the divine attributes and transcendence, and followed by a prayer, is similar to that of 4 Ezra viii. 20 ff. (cf. especially verses 20-27), which is also poetical in form. Here it is to be noticed that the "song" proper appears to be a midrashic development of the divine attributes and character as deduced from the various names of God (El Shaddai, Elohim, Jahveh, Sabaoth).

⁶ S omits.

sea; nor did it cease on account of ¹ the rich abundance ¹ of the fire.² And as the fire raised itself up, ascending into the height, I saw under the fire a throne of fire,³ and, round about it all-seeing ones,⁴ reciting the song, and under the throne four fiery living creatures singing, and their appearance was one, each one of them with four faces.⁵ And ⁶ such was the appearance of their countenances, of a lion, of a man, of an ox, of an eagle. ⁷ four heads [were upon their bodies] ⁸ [so that the four creatures had sixteen faces]; ⁹ and each had six wings; ¹⁰ from their shoulders, [and their sides] ¹¹ and their loins. And with the (two) wings from their shoulders they covered their faces, and with the (two) wings which (sprang) from their loins they covered their feet, while the (two) middle wings they spread out for flying straightforward.¹² And when they had ended the singing, they looked at one another and threatened one another.¹³ And it came to pass

¹⁻¹ So A K; S is corrupt here.

² i. e. ? the voice was still audible even through the crackling of the fire.

³ Cf. 2 Enoch xx. 3. The vision of God's throne of glory was the central point of the mystical experience.

⁴ "The watchfulness of many eyes" (2 Enoch xx. 1), cf. Ezek. i. 18, x. 12: the "Ophannim" ("Wheels") are so described, and are regarded as an order of heavenly beings (like the Cherubim). But here the Cherubim are probably meant.

⁵ Cf. Ezek. i. 5, 6.

⁶ S K omit.

⁷ Cf. Ezek. i. 10 (Rev. iv. 7).

⁸ S omits.

⁹ The bracketed clause is attested by A K; S omits. It looks like a scribal gloss.

¹⁰ So Rev. iv. 8 (based on Is. vi. 2); in Ezek. i. 6 the four "living creatures" have each four wings. Here S reads three (i. e. ? three pairs of wings).

¹¹ S omits.

¹² Cf. Is. vi. 2, Ezek. i. 11, 12.

¹³ The underlying idea of this strange representation seems to be that of emulation and rivalry (in service). This may be illustrated from the Midrash Tanhuma on Gen. ii. 4 (ed. Buber, p. 10), where in a comment on the verse Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places (Job xxv. 2) it is said: "Dominion, i. e. Michael, and fear, i. e. Gabriel; who maketh peace in his high places, even the celestials (hā-'elyônîm) need peace. The constellations rise:

when the angel who was with me saw that they were threatening each other, he left me and went running to them and turned the countenance of each living creature from the countenance immediately confronting him, in order that they might not see their countenances threatening each other.¹ And he taught them the song of peace which ²hath its origin [in the Eternal One].²

And as I stood alone and looked, I saw behind the living creatures a chariot with fiery wheels, each wheel full of eyes round about; ³ and over the wheels was a throne; ⁴ which I saw, and this was covered with fire, and fire encircled it round about,⁵ and lo! an indescribable fire environed a fiery host. And I heard its holy voice like the voice of a man.⁶

God discloses to Abraham the Powers of Heaven (Chapter XIX.).

XIX. And a voice came to me out of the midst of the fire, saying: "Abraham, Abraham!" I said:

Taurus says, "I am first, and I see what is before him"; the Gemini say, "I am first, and I see what is before him"; and so every single one says, "I am first" (corrected text). It is to be noted that in the mystical Hebrew literature concerned with the theme of the Divine Chariot and Throne (Merkaba) the angels who guard the Chariot are represented as fierce and warlike in aspect—flames dart forth from their eyes, and they are armed with fiery weapons (cf. Jellinek, Beth ha-Midrash iii. 94 f.). See further Additional Note II (p. 87).

¹ The relative position of the celestial beings about the divine throne is thus described in the Liturgy: "The hayyoth ['living creatures'] sing: the Cherubim glorify: the Seraphim exult, and the Arelim bless. The face of every hayya, Ophan, and Cherub is set toward the Seraphim, and thus confronting each the other, they utter praise and say, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from His place" (Service of the Synagogue, Festival Prayers (New Year), p. 87 (ed. Davis)).

²⁻² Lit. which is in itself [of the Eternal One]: S omits the bracketed words.

³ Cf. Ezek. i. 15, 18, x. 9, 12.

⁴ Cf. Ezek. i. 26.

⁵ Cf. Ezek. i. 27.

⁶ Cf. Ezek. i. 28 (end) combined with i. 26.

"Here am I!"¹ And He said: "Consider the expanses which are under the firmament on which thou art (now) placed,² and see how on no single expanse is there any other but He whom thou hast sought, or who hath loved thee."³ And while He⁴ was yet speaking (and) lo! the expanses opened, and beneath me⁵ the heavens. And I saw upon the seventh firmament upon which I stood a fire widely extended, and light, and dew, and a multitude of angels, and a power of invisible glory over the living creatures which I saw; but no other being did I see there.⁶

And I looked from the mountain⁷ in which I stood⁷ [downwards]⁸ to the sixth firmament, and saw there a multitude of angels, of (pure) spirit, without bodies, who carried out the commands of the fiery angels who were upon the eighth⁹ firmament, as I was standing suspended over them. And ¹ Cf. Ex. iii. 4, 4 Ezra xiv. 1 (K, + Lord).

² Abraham is now presumably "placed" in the seventh heaven, and surveys from above what is disclosed to him as existing in the various firmaments below him, and in the earth (the angels, celestial bodies, and everything that is moving on the earth).

³ ? God is the sole controller of all these, and in this sense is the only reality.

⁴ A K this (voice).

⁵ A, them.

⁶ In Asc. Is. vii. 7 f. it is said that Isaiah saw in the seventh heaven "a wonderful light and angels innumerable," and "all the righteous from the time of Adam" (including Abel and Enoch); in T. B. Hag. 12b the seventh heaven (Araboth) contains judgement and righteousness, the treasures of life, peace, and blessing, the souls of the departed righteous, the spirits and souls yet unborn, the dew with which God will awake the dead, the Seraphim, Ophanim, Hayyoth, and other angels of service, and God Himself sitting on the Throne of Glory. No doubt the "dew" in our passage is the resurrection-dew. Fire and light are much dwelt upon in this connexion. Possibly this mystical literature was influenced by the cult of Mithra, who was especially the God of Light.

^{7,7} Lit. of my standing.

⁸ S omits.

⁹ eighth can hardly be right: read ? seventh.

behold, upon this firmament ¹ there were no other powers ¹ of (any) other form, but only angels of (pure) spirit, like the power which I saw on the seventh firmament.² And He commanded ³ that the sixth firmament ⁴ should be taken away.³ And I saw there, on the fifth firmament,⁴ the powers of the stars which carry out the commands laid upon them, and the elements of the earth obeyed them.⁵

The Promise of a Seed (Chapter XX.).

XX. And the Eternal Mighty One said to me : " Abraham, Abraham ! " And I said : " Here am I." [And He said :] ⁶ " Consider from above the stars which are beneath thee, and number,⁷ them [for me],⁸ and make known [to me]⁸ their number." And I said : " When can I ? For I am but a man [of dust and ashes].⁹ And he said to me : " As the number of the stars and their power, (so will) I make thy seed a nation ¹⁰ and a people, set apart for me in my heritage with Azazel."¹¹

¹⁻¹ So A; S, their powers were not.

² In 2 Enoch xix. the seer describes what he saw in the sixth heaven : legions of angels more resplendent than the sun, the archangels set over the sun, stars, seasons, rivers, vegetation, the living things and the souls of men, with six phoenixes, seven cherubim, and seven hayyoth in the midst, all singing with a voice indescribably beautiful; cf. also Asc. Is. viii. 1 ff, 6 ff., where the sixth heaven is described as full of hosts of angels uttering praise. In our passage apparently the angels of service (ministering angels) are located in this heaven.

³⁻³ A K, the sixth firmament and it went away : S reads third for sixth.

⁴ Lit. surface.

⁶ In T. B. Hag. 12b the sun, moon, and stars are located in the second heaven; in 2 Enoch xi. 1-5 " the course of the sun " and the angels " which wait upon the sun " are located in the fourth heaven.

⁶ S omits; K, + to me. ⁷ Cf. Gen. xv. 5. ⁸ S omits.

⁹ Cf. Gen. xviii. 27, 4 Ezra iv. 5, 6. The bracketed clause is attested by A K, but omitted by S.

¹⁰ Cf. Gen. xv. 5 (the MSS. read for thy seed instead of thy seed). S adds (after nation) of people wrongly.

¹¹ The underlying idea seems to be that God's heritage, the created world, is, under the conditions of sin, " shared "

And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Let thy servant speak before Thee, and let not Thine anger kindle against Thy chosen one!"¹ Lo, before Thou leddest me up Azazel inveighed against me. How, then, while he is not now before Thee, hast Thou constituted Thyself with him?"

A Vision of Sin and Paradise: the Mirror of the World (Chapter XXI.).

XXI. And He said to me: "Look, now, beneath thy feet at the firmaments² and understand³ the creation⁴ foreshadowed⁵ in this expanse, the creatures existing on it, and the age⁶ prepared according to it." And I saw beneath [the surfaces of the⁷ feet, and I saw beneath]⁸ the sixth heaven⁹ and what was therein,¹⁰ and then the earth and its fruits, and what moved upon it and its animate beings;¹¹ and the power of its men, and the ungodliness of their souls, and their righteous deeds [and the beginnings of their works],¹² and the lower regions¹³ and the perdition therein, the Abyss¹⁴ and its torments. I saw there the sea and its with Azazel (see further Introduction, p. xxxii), i. e. it is largely under the dominion of evil powers. This is one of the fundamental conceptions of Apocalyptic. On the other hand, the Chosen People—who are ideally identified with the righteous—redeem the world, and in themselves make it once again fit to be God's heritage. From another point of view the same question is discussed in 4 Ezra—the problem, why, if the world was created for Israel, is Israel disinherited? (cf. 4 Ezra vi. 38–59).

¹ Cf. Gen. xviii. 32. ² Lit. surface. ³ + now.

⁴ Slavonic text, creature. ⁵ Or represented.

⁶ So S; A K, ages ("æon," "æons").

⁷ K, my.

⁸ S omits.

⁹ A K, the likeness of heaven (or for the sixth heaven render the six heavens).

¹⁰ A, what was with it. ¹¹ = ? "its spirits" (Bonwetsch).

¹² The bracketed clause is attested by A K; S omits.

¹³ Cf. Ephesians iv. 9 ("the lower parts of the earth").

¹⁴ i. e. Tartarus; cf. 2 Enoch xxviii. 3, xxix. 5. The "Abyss" is described in 1 Enoch xviii. 11–16 (xxi. 1–6, xc. 25, 26), where it is the abode of the impure angels; cf. Luke viii. 31; Rev. ix. 1, xi. 7.

islands, and its monsters and its fishes, and Leviathan and his dominion,¹ and his camping-ground, and his caves, and the world which lay upon him,² and his movements, and the destructions of the world on his account.³ I saw there streams and the rising of their waters, and their windings. And I saw there the Garden of Eden and its fruits, the source⁴ of the stream issuing from it, and its trees and their bloom, and those who behaved righteously. And I saw therein their foods and blessedness.⁵ And I saw there a great multitude — men and women and children [half of them on the right side of the picture]⁶ and half of them on the left side of the picture.⁷

¹ Or possession. Leviathan's dwelling is "in the lowest waters" (Pirḳe de R. Eliezer ix.). All the great sea-monsters in the sea are Leviathan's food, one being devoured every day (ibid.).

² "and between its [Leviathan's] fins rests the middle bar of the earth" (op. cit., ibid.).

³ When Leviathan is hungry, one haggadic saying runs, "it sends forth from its mouth a heat so great as to make all the waters of the deep boil." [The two great monsters in the original form of the legend were Behemoth (the male) and Leviathan (the female): cf. Job xl.-xli.; 1 Enoch lx. 7 f.; Ap. Bar. xxix. 4. In the Rabbinical form of the Haggada (cf. T. B. Baba bathra 74b) each monster was multiplied into a pair, male and female; but they were rendered incapable of producing any progeny, lest by so doing they should "destroy the world." The female leviathan was killed and reserved for the righteous in the world to come; the male leviathan will not be slain till the last; see further 4 Ezra vi. 49-52, and the writer's discussion in E.A., pp. 90 ff., with references.

⁴ A, sources.

⁵ The heavenly Paradise is referred to which is to be the abode of the righteous ("those who behaved righteously"), whose fruits are "incorruptible" (4 Ezra vii. 123), wherein is "the tree of life" (Rev. ii. 7) whose "leaves are for the healing of the nations" (Rev. xxii. 2). In 2 Enoch viii. 2 the seer describes how he saw in Paradise "all the trees of beautiful colours and their fruits ripe and fragrant, and all kinds of food which they produced, springing up with delightful fragrance." Note that Paradise is here located on the earth, though the transcendental Paradise is meant; see E.A., p. 196.

⁶ The bracketed clause is omitted (accidentally) in S.

⁷ The whole world is divided into two parts; the people of God on the right half, and the nations on the left.

The Fall of Man and its Sequel (Chapters XXII.-XXV.).

XXII. And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! What is this picture of the creatures?" And He said to me: "This is my will with regard to those who exist in the (divine) world-counsel,¹ and it seemed well-pleasing before my sight, and then afterwards I gave commandment to them through my Word.² And it came to pass whatever I had determined to be, was already planned beforehand in this (picture), and it stood before me ere it was created, as thou hast seen."³

And I said: "O Lord, mighty and eternal! Who are the people in this picture on this side and on

The latter (= the heathen) are Azazel's portion (cf. chap. xxxi.).

¹ Emended text (Bonwetsch); MSS. read in the light.

² Note this hypostasising use of Word developed from such passages as Ps. xxxii. 6; cf. Heb. xi. 3, 2 Pet. iii. 5, 4 Ezra vi. 38.

³ The whole conception is strongly predestinarian; the whole course of creation—the rise of evil, and the coming of the righteous—is predetermined; cf. 1 Enoch xciii., cvii. 19, cvii. 1, and Charles's note on 1 Enoch xlvi. 3. A strong expression of this idea occurs in 4 Ezra iv. 36, 37. For the "picture" of our passage we may perhaps compare the "pattern" (ὑποδείγμα) of Heb. viii. 5 (Ex. xxv. 40, xxvi. 30, Acts vii. 44). In the Rabbinical literature Israel's election is spoken of as predestined before the creation of the world, and this idea is applied to certain other things, such as the name of the Messiah, the Torah, and repentance. In such connexions they often employ the figure of an architect and plans. One passage (Gen. rabba i.) runs: When a man erects a building, at the time when the building is erected he enlarges it as it is erected, or otherwise he enlarges it below, and contracts it above: but the Holy One . . . does not act thus, but "the heavens" (which He created) were the heavens which had ascended in (His) thought, and "the earth" (which He created) was the earth which had ascended in His thought. It was, however, the Essenes who insisted on an absolute predestination. The Rabbis, while allowing for a certain amount of predestination, emphasised man's moral freedom: "Everything is foreseen, but free will is given," as Akiba said.

that?" And He said to me: "These which are on the left side are the multitude of the peoples which have formerly been in existence and which are after thee destined,¹ some for judgement and restoration, and others for vengeance and destruction at the end of the world.² But these which are on the right side of the picture—they are the people set apart for me of the peoples with Azazel.³ These are they whom I have ordained to be born of thee and to be called My People.

XXIII. "Now look again in the picture, who it is who seduced Eve and what is the fruit of the tree, [and]⁴ thou wilt know what there shall be, and how it shall be to thy seed⁵ among the people at the end of the days of the age,⁶ and so far as thou canst not understand I will make known to thee, for thou art well-pleasing in my sight, and I will tell thee what is kept in my heart."

And I looked into the picture, and mine eyes ran to the side of the Garden of Eden. And I saw there a man very great in height and fearful in breadth. incomparable in aspect,⁷ embracing a woman, who

¹ Lit. prepared.

² Of the peoples on the left side, who represent the heathen world as opposed to the Jews, some are to be spared at the final judgement, while the rest will be annihilated; cf. Ap. Bar. lxxii, 2, where it is said of the Messiah that he will summon all the nations, and some of them He will spare, and some of them He will slay. Sometimes (as in 4 Ezra xiii. 37 ff.) the whole heathen world is doomed to annihilation, and this view is very prominent in later Judaism. The idea of our text accords with the older view based upon such passages as Ps. lxxii. 11, 17; Is. lxvi. 12, 19–21 (cf. Psalms of Solomon, xvii. 34). Notice that our passage says nothing about the Messiah in this connexion.

³ Cf. chap. xx. note ¹¹.

⁴ S omits.

⁵ So A K, reading sēmeni; S has to thy name (reading imeni).

⁶⁻⁶ So S; but A K omit.

⁷ Adam's great stature is often referred to in Rabbinical literature: "it reached" (when he was first created) "from one end of the world to the other," but when he sinned it was diminished (T. B. Hag. 12a); his manly beauty is also referred to T. B. Baba mešia 84a).

likewise approximated to the aspect and shape of the man. And they were¹ standing under a tree of (the Garden of) Eden, and the fruit of this tree² was like the appearance of a bunch of grapes of the vine,³ and behind the tree was standing as it were a serpent in form, having hands and feet like a man's,⁴ and wings on its shoulders, six⁵ on the right side and six⁵ on the left,⁶ and they were holding the grapes of the tree⁷ in their hands,⁷ and both were eating it whom I had seen embracing.

And I said: "Who are these mutually embracing, or who is this who is between them, or what is the fruit which they are eating, O Mighty Eternal One?"

And He said: "This is⁸ the human world,⁸ this is Adam, and this is their desire upon the earth, this

¹ K, + both.

² Cf. Gen. iii. 6.

³ Cf. T. B. Berakoth 40a, where it is recorded that R. Meir declared that the tree of which Adam ate was a vine, because the one thing that brings woe upon mankind is wine; cf. Gen. ix. 21 ("And he drank of the wine and was drunken"). So also the Greek, Ap. Bar. iv. 8 (cf. Sanh. 70a, Bereshith rabba xix. 8). The usual opinion was that the tree was a fig-tree; according to another view (Gen. rabba xi. 8) the fruit was barley; another (Samuel ben Isaac) a date. With this last agrees the varia lectio of A K here ("palm-tree").

⁴ Cf. Gen. rabba xx. 8: "Upon thy belly shalt thou go: At the moment when the Holy One . . . said to the serpent upon thy belly shalt thou go the ministering angels descended and cut off its hands and its feet, and its cry went from one end of the world to the other." This legend was well known in antiquity. According to Syncellus (i. 14) the serpent had originally four feet; cf. also Josephus i. 1, 4, who declares that the serpent was deprived of both language and feet. For the punishment of the serpent see Pirke de R. Eliezer xiv. (ed. Friedlander, p. 99 and notes).

⁵ v.l. three.

⁶ This description really applies to Sammael (or Azazel), who had twelve wings (Pirke de R. Eliezer xiii.), and who descended and, finding the serpent skilful to do evil, mounted and rode upon it. Before its punishment by God the serpent had the appearance of a camel, according to the same authority (ibid.).

⁷⁻⁷ A K omit.

⁸⁻⁸ Lit. "council of the world," so K; A S, "light of the world." Adam (whose body is compounded of the four primal elements) is the microcosm.

is Eve; but he who is between them representeth ungodliness, their beginning (on the way) to perdition, even Azazel." ¹

And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Why hast Thou given to such power to destroy the generation of men in their works upon the earth?"

And He said to me: "They who will (to do) evil—and how much I hated (it) in those who do it!—over them I gave him power, and to be beloved of them." ²

And I answered and said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Wherefore hast Thou willed to effect that evil should be desired in the hearts of men, since Thou indeed art angered over that which was willed by Thee, at him who is doing what is unprofitable in thy counsel?" ³

XXIV. And He said to me: "Being angered at the nations ⁴ on thy account, and on account of the people of thy family who are (to be) separated after thee, as thou seest in the picture the burden (of destiny) that (is laid) upon them ⁵—and I will tell thee what shall be, and how much shall be, in the last days. Look now at everything in the picture."

And I looked and saw there what was before me in creation; I saw Adam, and Eve existing with him, and with them the cunning Adversary, ⁶ and Cain who

¹ Azazel plays the part elsewhere assigned to Sammael; he uses the serpent as his instrument (cf. Pirke de R. Eliezer xiii.).

² In chap. xiii. (end) the wicked (as distinguished from the righteous) are spoken of as those who "follow" Azazel, and "love" what he wills. They are Azazel's "portion." A striking feature of our book is the way in which the souls and bodies of men are represented as possessed by either good or evil powers.

³ A K, world (which may be right). The word in S rendered counsel is an unusual one in this meaning.

⁴ A, men.

⁵ This apparently is the answer to the question given at the end of the previous chapter. God allows men to desire evil (with its inevitable punishment later) because of the treatment meted out by the nations to the chosen seed (Abraham and his descendants).

⁶ Cf. 2 Cor. xi. 3 ("the serpent beguiled Eve in his craftiness").

acted lawlessly through the Adversary,¹ and the slaughtered Abel, (and) the destruction brought and caused upon him through the lawless one.² I saw there also Impurity,³ and those who lust after it, and its pollution, and their jealousy, and the fire of their corruption in the lowest parts of the earth. I saw there Theft, and those who hasten after it, and the arrangement [of their retribution, the judgement of the Great Assize].⁴ I saw there⁵ naked men, the foreheads against each other, and their disgrace, and their passion which (they had) against each other, and their retribution. I saw there Desire, and in her hand the head of every kind of lawlessness [and her scorn and her waste assigned to perdition].⁶

XXV. I saw there the likeness of the idol of jealousy,⁷ having the likeness of woodwork such as my father was wont to make, and its statue⁸ was of glittering bronze; and before it a man, and he worshipped it; and in front of him an altar, and upon it a boy slain in the presence of the idol.

But I said to Him: "What is this idol, or what is the altar, or⁹ who are they that are sacrificed,⁹ or who is the sacrificer? Or what is the Temple

¹ According to Pirke de R. Eliezer xxi. Cain was the offspring of Eve and Sammael.

² In Ep. Barnabas xv. 5 the Devil is called "the Lawless One" (ὁ ἀνόμος): when His Son shall come, and shall abolish the time of the Lawless One (cf. also 2 Thess. ii. 8).

³ Notice that here and below certain evil tendencies are personified (Impurity, Theft, Desire; the catalogue seems to have been influenced by the Decalogue, Commandments vii., viii., x.). In later Kabbalistic books such tendencies are personified as demons; cf. e. g. The Testament of Solomon, § 34 (J.Q.R., xi. 24; 1899), where seven female demons appear before Solomon bearing such names as "Deception," "Strife," "Jealousy," "Power."

⁴ The bracketed clause is missing in S.

⁵ A, also (instead of there).

⁶ Omitted by S. Perhaps the clause is an interpolation; in any case the text appears to be corrupt. The word here rendered scorn (moltshanie, lit. "silence") is sometimes used in this sense, expressing "contempt," "scorn"; see D'yachenko's Church Slavonic Dictionary, s.v.

⁷ Cf. Ezek. viii. 3, 5.

⁸ Or body.

⁹⁻⁹ K, who is the sacrificed one.

which I see that is beautiful in art, and its beauty (being like) the glory that lieth beneath Thy¹ throne? "

And He said: "Hear, Abraham. This which thou seest, the Temple and altar and beauty, is my idea of the priesthood of my glorious Name, in which dwelleth every single prayer of man, and the rise of kings and prophets, and whatever sacrifice I ordain to be offered to me among my people who are to come out of thy generation.² But the statue which thou sawest is mine anger³ wherewith the people⁴ anger me who are to proceed for me from thee. But the man whom thou sawest slaughtering—that is he who inciteth murderous sacrifices,⁵ of (sic) which are a witness⁶ to me of the final judgement, even at the beginning of creation."

Why Sin is permitted (Chapter XXVI.).

XXVI. And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Wherefore hast Thou established⁷ that it should be so, and then proclaim the knowledge thereof? "

And He said to me: "Hear, Abraham; understand what I say to thee, and answer me as⁸ I question thee. Why did thy father Terah not listen to thy voice, and (why) did he not cease from the devilish idolatry until he perished [and]⁹ his whole household with him? "

And I said: "O Eternal, [Mighty One]!⁹ (It

¹ S, my (a scribal mistake?).

² The whole sacrificial system and the Levitical cultus are of divine origin, and embody the divine ideal. The "rise of kings and prophets" is apparently involved in it as a subordinate development from it. The tone of the passage is reminiscent rather of Jubilees. In apocalyptic literature such allusions to the cultus are rare.

³ "The image of jealousy" is correctly explained here as meaning the image which provokes God's jealousy or anger. Idolatrous practices in Israel are referred to.

⁴ K omits the people.

⁵ i. e. sacrifices involving the slaughter of human beings such as the offering (through fire) of children to Moloch.

⁶ A, witnesses.

⁷ Or ordained.

⁸ Lit. what.

⁹ S omits.

was) entirely because he did not choose to listen to me; but I, too, did not follow his works."

And He said [to me]:¹ "Hear, Abraham. As the counsel² of thy father is in him, and as thy counsel is in thee, so also is the counsel of my will in me ready for the coming days, before thou hast knowledge of these,³ or (canst) see with thine eyes what is future in them. How those of thy seed will be, look in the picture."

A Vision of Judgement and Salvation (Chapter XXVII.).

XXVII. And I looked and saw: lo! the picture swayed and [from it]⁴ emerged, on its left side,⁵ a heathen people, and they pillaged those who were on the right side, men and women and children: [some they slaughtered,]⁴ others they retained with themselves.⁶ Lo! I saw them run towards them through four entrances,⁷ and they burnt the Temple with

¹ S omits.

² i. e. "will."

³ God's will is free, but so also is man's. The argument is interesting. From the fact, proved by the two contrary instances of Terah and Abraham, that man's will is free, the writer justifies God's freedom to permit sin, hinting, however, that the future will still further justify the divine counsel. The vision that follows (chap. xxvii.) serves to illustrate this.

⁴ Omitted by S.

⁵ The use of "right" and "left" throughout these chapters is notable. The conception of the right side being the source of light and purity, while the left is the source of darkness and impurity, is Gnostic, and passed from the Gnostics into the Kabbalah; see further Introduction p. xix. f.

⁶ Sc. in slavery.

⁷ So A K; S (schody), descents (= ? "generations"). The four "entrances" or "descents" by which the heathen make inroads upon the chosen people apparently correspond to the four hundred years of slavery for Israel predicted by God to Abraham in the vision of Gen. xv. (cf. vs. 13). This was interpreted by our apocalyptist, in accordance with current tradition, to refer to Israel's captivity and subjection by the four oppressive world-powers of the Book of Daniel, understood to be Babylon, Media, Greece, and Rome (cf. chap. ix. above, note ⁶). thus the Palestinian Targum to Gen. xv. 13 runs: And behold, Abram saw four kingdoms fire, and the holy things that were therein they plundered.¹

And I said: "O Eternal One! Lo! the people (that spring) from me, whom Thou hast accepted, the hordes of the heathen do plunder, and some they kill, while others they hold fast as aliens,² and the Temple they have burnt with fire, and the beautiful things therein they do rob [and destroy].³ O Eternal, Mighty One! If this be so, wherefore hast Thou now⁴ lacerated⁵ my heart, and why should this be so?"

And He said to me: "Hear, Abraham. What⁶ thou hast seen⁷ shall happen on account of thy seed who anger me by reason of the statue which thou sawest, and on account of the human slaughter in the picture, through zeal in the Temple;⁸ and as thou sawest⁹ so shall it be."⁹

And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! May the works of evil (wrought) in ungodliness now pass by, but¹⁰ (show me)¹¹ rather those who fulfilled the commandments, even the works of his (?)¹² righteousness. For thou canst do this."

which should arise to bring his sons into subjection. It is important to remember that the fourth "entrance" here corresponds to the Roman Empire [cf. also Pirke de R. Eliezer xxviii.]. Possibly "descent" (S) is the right reading here, and means "generation," a generation being roughly reckoned as equivalent to a hundred years: Heb. ? תוצאות.

¹ The writer obviously has in mind the operations of the Romans under Titus, which ended in the destruction of the Temple by fire in A.D. 70. For the burning and pillaging of the Temple cf. Josephus, War, vi. 4, 5 f.; cf. also 4 Ezra x. 21 f.

² Of those who were not killed in the Roman war, some were reserved for the victor's triumph, some for the arena, and the rest were sold as slaves; cf. Josephus, War, vi. 9, 2 f. ³ Omitted by S. ⁴ A, from now onward.

⁵ K, angered.

⁶ Lit. so much.

^{7,7} A omits.

⁸ Israel's captivity and sufferings are due to lapse into idolatry.

^{9,9} So A K; but S omits.

¹⁰ A omits but.

¹¹ Something has fallen out of the text here.

¹² So A K; S, this. [The sentence O Eternal Mighty One . . . his (?) righteousness is rendered according to the text of A K; the text of S here is not in order.]

And He said to me : " The time of the righteous meeteth [them]¹ first through² the holiness (flowing) from kings³ and righteous-dealing rulers whom I at first created in order from such to rule among them.³ But from these issue men who care for their interests,⁴ as I have made known to thee and thou hast seen."

How long ? (Chapters XXVIII.—XXIX.).

XXVIII. And I answered and said : " O Mighty, [Eternal One],⁵ hallowed by Thy power ! Be favourable to my petition, [for for this hast Thou brought me up here—and shew me].⁶ As Thou hast brought me up to Thy height, so make [this]⁵ known to me, Thy beloved one, as much as I ask—whether what I saw shall happen to them for long ? " ⁷

And He showed me a multitude of His people, and said to me : " On their account through four issues,⁸ as thou sawest, I shall be provoked by them, and in these⁹ my retribution for their deeds shall be (accomplished). But in the fourth outgoing¹⁰ of a hundred years¹¹ and one hour of the age—the same is a hundred years¹²—it shall be in misfortune among ¹ So K; A, him; S omits.

² So S; A K, the type (set) by.

³ The " kings " and " righteous-dealing rulers " referred to are, presumably, such as David, Hezekiah, and Josiah, under whose rule the claims of righteousness were recognised and the sovereignty of God, to some extent, realised.

⁴ Lit. " for them " (= ? " for themselves ")—from the righteous rulers spring sons who are faithless to their heritage (such as Manasseh). The sentence is obscure, and the meaning uncertain.

⁵ S omits.

⁶ Omitted accidentally in S (by homoioteleuton, " brought up . . . brought up ").

⁷ Cf. 4 Ezra iv. 33 ff.

⁸ S K (schody) = descents (cf. chap. xxvii. note ⁷ above); cf. Gen. xv. 13–16 : " four descents " = " four generations."

⁹ Sc. four generations. ¹⁰ S, descent (as above).

¹¹ i. e. in the fourth generation (cf. Gen. xv. 16).

¹² In chap. xxx. the coming of the ten plagues on the heathen world is placed " at the passing over of the twelfth hour "; then follows (chap. xxxi.) the Messianic salvation. Apparently the present age is reckoned as enduring for the heathen [but one hour in mercy and contumely, as among the heathen]."¹

XXIX. And I said: "O Eternal [Mighty One]!² And how long a time is an hour of the Age?"³

And He said: "Twelve years⁴ have I ordained of this ungodly Age⁵ to rule among the heathen and twelve hours (each hour = 100 years), i. e. one day (cf. John xi. 9). The apocalyptic writer may possibly reckon this day as beginning with the founding of the Holy City by David (cf. 4 Ezra x. 46) and culminating in the destruction of the last Temple by Titus, which calamity was to be followed by the period of woes described in chap. xxx., these bringing the present age (or æon) to a close. Now according to Josephus (War, vi. 10) the period from David's reign in Jerusalem to the destruction of the Temple by Titus amounted to 1179 years. If we suppose the seer to be writing at the close of the first or in the early years of the second century A.D. the period would include about 1200 years. Like all the apocalyptists he obviously supposes himself to be standing on the brink of the new age. Perhaps in the text above "and one hour of the Age" is intended to synchronise with the "fourth out-going of a hundred years." [In Pirke de R. Eliezer xxviii. a dictum ascribed to R. Elazar ben Azariah runs: (from Gen. xv.) thou mayest learn that the rule of these four kingdoms will only last one day, according to the Day of the Lord (= 1000 years).]

¹ The bracketed clause is attested by A K, but not by S. It may be an addition to the text. Contumely can hardly be right. Perhaps there was an error in the Greek text from which the Slavonic Version was made; ? τιμῇ misread ἀτιμῇ: read, then, "in mercy and honour."

² S omits.

³ This question has already been answered at the end of the previous chapter (one hour = 100 years); moreover, the reply that follows here does not really answer the question. There is probably something wrong in the text; "hours" and "years" seem to be confused. Perhaps the question originally ran somewhat as follows: How much time is there (in) the hours of the age?

⁴ ? Read hours for years. We may compare 4 Ezra xiv. 11 ("For the world-age is divided into twelve parts"), and the cloud and water vision in Ap. Bar. liii. f., where a similar division appears. If "years" be kept, each year will probably stand for a generation (reckoned at 100 years?); cf. 4 Ezra x. 45 (3000 years = 30 generations).

⁵ The present age is the age of ungodliness, where the organised forces of evil are dominant; cf. 1 Enoch xlvi. 7 ("the world of unrighteousness"), 4 Ezra iv. 29 f.

in thy seed; and until the end of the times it shall be as thou sawest. ¹ And do thou reckon and understand and look into the picture."

And I [looked and] ² saw a man going out from the left side of the heathen; ³ and there went out men and women and children, from the side of the heathen, many hosts, and worshipped him. ⁴ And while I still looked there came out from the right side ⁵ (many), and some insulted that man, while some struck him ⁶; others, however, worshipped him. [And] ² I saw how these worshipped him, and Azazel ran and worshipped him, and having kissed his face he turned and stood behind him. ⁷

And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Who is the man insulted and beaten, who is worshipped by the heathen with Azazel?"

¹ The passage printed in italic type that follows can only be regarded as a Christian interpolation (probably a Jewish-Christian one). ² S omits.

³ The man is clearly intended to be Jesus. His emerging "from the left side of the heathen" is curious. If the text is in order it must apparently refer to the emergence into prominence of the Early Christian Church in the Gentile world. It clearly cannot refer to racial origin, for it is stated further on in the chapter that "the man" sprang from Abraham's "generation" and God's people. But in view of the definite statement below—this man from thy generation whom thou sawest (issue) from my people—it is better to suppose that the text here is out of order: read ? from the right side and omit of the heathen as an incorrect gloss.

⁴ i. e. His followers are to include large numbers from the Gentile world.

⁵ i. e. from the Jewish world.

⁶ Cf. Is. liii. 3.

⁷ The worship of Christ by the Devil (Azazel) is a striking feature in this representation. It is difficult to determine its exact significance here. Does it reflect the Jewish-Christian feeling that the access of so large a part of the heathen world to Christianity endangered the purity of the new faith by inevitably bringing in its train a large admixture of heathenism? It can hardly mean that Azazel had been truly converted. Indeed, his homage is significantly depicted as lip-homage ("kissed his face"; cf. the treacherous kiss of Judas). Perhaps the real meaning is that the kingdom of evil, and the Satanic powers, have been vanquished by Christ (cf. Luke x. 18, Phil. ii. 9, 10, Col. ii. 15, Ephes. i. 21 f.). The homage of Azazel—the head of the unredeemed heathen world—marked the triumph of Christ.

And He answered and said: "Hear, Abraham! The man whom thou sawest insulted and beaten and again worshipped—that is the relief¹ (granted) by the heathen to the people who proceed from thee, in the last days,² in this twelfth hour³ of the Age of ungodliness. But in the twelfth year³ of my final Age⁴ I will set up this man from thy generation, whom thou sawest (issue) from my people; this one all will follow,⁵ and such as are called by me⁶ (will) join, (even) those who change in their counsels.⁷ And those whom thou sawest emerge from the left side of the picture—the meaning is:⁸ There shall be many from the heathen who set their hopes upon him;⁹ and as for those whom thou sawest from thy seed on the right side, some insulting and striking, others worshipping him—many of them shall be offended at him.¹⁰ He, however, is testing¹¹

¹ = ἔλεος (= Heb. mēnuhā).

² What is meant by the relief (granted) by the heathen to the people who proceed from thee, in the last days? The expression is difficult and obscure. Perhaps the "relief" spoken of means the mitigation of the process of "hardening" that has taken place in Israel (by its rejection of Jesus), which is brought about by the adhesion of some (a remnant) in Israel to the new faith, in conjunction with the great numbers who are streaming in from the Gentile world; cf. Rom. xi., especially xi. 25 ("a hardening in part hath befallen Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in and all Israel shall be saved," and vss. 29–30: "For as ye in time past were disobedient but now have obtained mercy by their disobedience, even so have these also now been disobedient that by the mercy shewn to you they also may obtain mercy").

³⁻³ Omitted by A (homoioteleuton). For the confusion of "hour" and "year" see note ³ at the beginning of this chapter.

⁴ Lit. of the Age of mine end.

⁵ Or "imitate," "become like."

⁶ Cf. 2 Tim. i. 9 ("God who hath called us with a holy calling"), Ephes. iv. 1, 4, and often.

⁷ those who change in their counsels, i. e. repent (μετανοεῖν = "change one's mind or will").

⁸ Lit. "that (is)."

⁹ Cf. Is. xi. 10 ("unto him shall the nations seek"), Matt. xii. 21, Rom. xv. 12.

¹⁰ Cf. Matt. xi. 6, John vi. 66, Rom. xi. 8, etc.

¹¹ Cf. Rev. iii. 10 ("the season of trial that is coming upon the whole habitable earth"). The time of "trial" or "testing" referred to is, no doubt, the period of the Messianic woes which precedes the advent of the new age.

those who have worshipped him of thy seed, in that twelfth hour of the End,¹ with a view to shortening the Age of ungodliness.²

"Before the Age of the righteous beginneth to grow,³ my judgement shall come upon the lawless heathen through the people of thy seed⁴ who have been separated for me. In those days I will bring upon all creatures of the earth ten plagues,⁵ through misfortune and disease and sighing of the grief of their soul. Thus much will I bring upon the generations of men that be upon it on account of the provocation and the corruption of its creatures,⁶ whereby they ¹ i. e. the time immediately preceding the End of the present Age.

² Cf. Matt. xxiv. 22, Ep. Barnabas iv. 3, Ap. Bar. xx. 2 ("Therefore have I now taken away Sion in order that I may the more speedily visit the world in its season"). In the latter passage the fall of Jerusalem is regarded as hastening the End. Impatient longing for the End is characteristic of the Apocalyptists; see e. g. 4 Ezra iv. 33 ff.

³ The coming Age is the "Age of the righteous" (for the expression cf. also chap. xvii. of our Book); it has been "prepared" for them (4 Ezra viii. 52), and they will inherit it (4 Ezra vii. 17). For the metaphor of growth in this connexion cf. 4 Ezra iv. 29, 35; the community of the righteous has already been "sown" (1 Enoch lxii. 8; cf. also 1 Enoch x. 16, "the plant of righteousness will appear"), but its full growth will only become visible after the judgement.

⁴ Judgement on the heathen will be executed by the agency of Israel itself; cf. 1 Enoch xc. 19. In the Midrash rabba on Ruth ii. 19 a saying ascribed to R. Eliezer b. Jacob runs: "Vengeance on the nations of the world is in the hands of the Israelites (Ezek. xxv. 14)."

⁵ A saying handed down in the name of R. Eleazar b. Pedath runs: "Just as the Holy One . . . brought (plagues) upon Egypt He will bring (plagues) upon this (wicked) nation [i. e. Rome], as it is said [Is. xxiii. 5]: 'As at the report from Egypt so shall they be pained at the report of Šor'" (read Šār "adversary," which is to be understood as meaning "Rome"): see Midrash Tanḥuma, ed. Buber, ii. 30; Bacher, Pal. Amoræer ii. 87. For a description of the plagues see the next chapter.

⁶ On account of the sins of men God's anger must be visited upon the earth in judgement; cf. Jubilees xxiii. 22, etc. The idea that a time of great calamity and suffering would immediately precede the Messianic Age is a standing feature in Apocalyptic; cf. e. g. Matt. xxiv. 8, Mark xiii. 8 ("the birth-pangs of the Messiah").

provoke me. And then shall righteous men of thy seed be left ¹ in the number which is kept secret by me, ² hastening ³ in ⁴ the glory of My Name to the place prepared beforehand for them, which thou sawest devastated in the picture; ⁵ and they shall live and be established through sacrifices and gifts of righteousness and truth ⁶ in the Age of the righteous, and shall rejoice in Me continually; ⁷ and

¹ i. e. shall survive the Messianic "woes." The term "survive," "be left" (οἱ περιλειπόμενοι, Vulg. qui residui sumus, 1 Thess. iv. 15), became a technical one in Apocalyptic in this connexion; cf. 4 Ezra vi. 25, ix. 7, xiii. 16-24, 26, 48.

² The number of the elect righteous is pre-determined. This idea recurs in more than one form in Apocalyptic. Here apparently what is meant is that the number of elect righteous who shall survive the Messianic woes has been fixed beforehand, and is a secret known only to God. These living righteous shall enjoy the blessedness of the new Age upon the renovated earth (in Jerusalem). Nothing is said about the resurrection of the righteous dead to share in this felicity. In chap. xxi. the latter enjoy a blessed existence in the heavenly Paradise. Our Book apparently knows nothing of a resurrection. On the other hand, in Rev. vi. 11 it is the number of the righteous dead (the martyrs) that is predetermined. Another application of the same idea is to the whole number of mankind who are to be born, which is predetermined; cf. Ap. Bar. xxiii. 4. For those who survive the period of calamity, and share in the bliss of the new Age, see 4 Ezra vi. 25, vii. 27, ix. 7 f., Ap. Bar. xxix. 2; but in none of these passages is their number said to have been fixed beforehand.

³ Cf. 4 Ezra vii. 98.

⁴ A K, to.

⁵ By the place prepared beforehand (cf. Rev. xii. 6) is here meant Jerusalem (which thou sawest devastated in the picture), presumably the renovated city on a renovated earth. The expression place prepared beforehand certainly suggests the heavenly Jerusalem (cf. Ap. Bar. iv. 2-6), which according to Rev. xxi. 2, 9 f. is to descend from heaven upon the renovated earth. But this is not certain. Our Book may contemplate nothing more than the earthly Jerusalem transformed and glorified.

⁶ The sacrificial cultus in a purified form will be revived in the new Jerusalem; cf. ? 1 Enoch xxv. 6 ("the fragrance thereof" = ? of the incense). Prayer for the restoration of the Temple and cultus is a central feature in the Jewish Liturgy.

⁷ With the restoration of the cultus the righteous will enjoy the privilege of seeing God's glory continually.

they shall destroy those who have destroyed them,
And shall insult those who have insulted them,¹

"And of those who defamed them they shall spit in the face, scorned by Me, while they (the righteous) shall behold Me full of joy, rejoicing with My people, and receiving those who return to Me² [in repentance].³

See, Abraham, what thou hast seen,
And [hear]³ what thou hast heard,
And [take full knowledge of]³ what thou hast come to know.

Go to thy heritage,⁴
And lo! I am with you for ever."

The Punishment of the Heathen and the In- gathering of Israel (Chapters XXX.-XXXI.).

XXX. But while He was still speaking, I found myself upon the earth. And I said: "O Eternal, [Mighty One],⁵ I am no longer in the glory in which I was (while) on high, and what my soul longed to understand in mine heart I do not understand."

And He said to me: "What is desired in thine⁶ heart I will tell thee, because thou hast sought to see the ten plagues which I have prepared for the heathen, and have prepared beforehand⁷ at the passing over of the twelfth hour⁸ of the earth. Hear what I divulge to thee, so shall it come to pass:⁹ the

¹ Cf. Jubilees xxiii. 30 and see note * p. 80.

² ? Heathen who are converted. ³ S omits.

⁴ Cf. Gen. xv. 15 (Thou shalt go to thy father in peace);
A K, my.

⁵ S omits.

⁶ A K, mine.

⁷ These also have been pre-determined.

⁸ i. e. the last hour of the present Age.

⁹ It is God's property to announce beforehand what is to occur and then to bring it to pass; cf. Justin Martyr, Apology
i. 14 (end): For this is the work of God to declare a thing shall come to be long before it is in being, and then to bring about that thing to pass according to the same declaration.
Cf. also 4 Ezra ix. 6 (Gunkel's rendering of the "times of the Most High"): their beginning is in word (i. e. the prophetic word) and portents, but their end in deeds and marvels.

first¹ (is) pain of great distress;² the second, conflagration of many cities;³ the third, destruction and pestilence of animals⁴; the fourth, hunger of the whole world and of its people⁵; the fifth by destruction among its rulers,⁶ destruction by earthquake⁷ and the sword; the sixth, multiplication of hail and snow;⁸ the seventh, the wild beasts will be their grave; the eighth, hunger and pestilence will alternate with their

¹ The ten "plagues" here enumerated mark the distressful period which precedes the advent of the new Age; they correspond to the "signs" which are a common feature in the traditional eschatology; cf. 4 Ezra iv. 52-v. 13, vi. 13-28, ix. 1-6, xiii. 16 ff., Ap. Bar. xxv.-xxvii., xlvi. 30-38, lxx., 1 Enoch xcix. 4 f., 7-10, c. 1-6 (Dan. xii). The first of the Ezra passages just cited affords a good example of the contents of these descriptions. It depicts a time of commotions, and the general break-up of moral and religious forces; the heathen world-power (i. e. Rome) will be destroyed; there will be portents in nature, general chaos in society; monstrous and untimely births, the failure of the means of subsistence, and internecine strife; and wisdom and understanding will have perished from the earth. With our passage depicting ten plagues may be compared T. B. Sanh. 97a, which divides the period into seven years; in the first there will be rain on one city and no rain on another (cf. Amos iv. 7); in the second arrows of famine; in the third a great famine in which men, women, and children and pious will perish, and the Torah will be forgotten; in the fourth abundance and dearth; in the fifth great abundance, the people will eat and drink, and the Torah will return; in the sixth voices announcing the coming of the Messiah; in the seventh war, and at its end Messiah ben David will come. In the New Testament, besides the Apocalyptic passage in Matt. xxiv. 8-31 and parallels, there is a marked parallelism with the Apocalypse of the seven trumpets (Rev. viii. 6-ix. 21, x. 7, xi. 14-19), six of which mark partial judgements, while the seventh ushers in the final judgement. Several of the "trumpets" announce judgements like the Egyptian plagues.

² i. e. distressful pain, sickness.

³ The fall of fire is one of the portents of the End in Ap. Bar. xxvii. 10; cf. the fiery hail of the seventh Egyptian plague (Ex. ix. 23 f.) and the "first trumpet" (Rev. viii. 6-7); cf. also Rev. xi. 19b ("great hail").

⁴ Cf. the fifth Egyptian plague (murrain among the cattle, Ex. ix. 1 ff.).

⁵ Cf. 4 Ezra vi. 22, Ap. Bar. xxvii. 5-6, Matt. xxiv. 7.

⁶ Cf. Ap. Bar. xxvii. 3, 4 Ezra ix. 3.

⁷ Cf. Ap. Bar. xxvii. 7.

⁸ Cf. Ex. ix. 23 f.

destruction; the ninth, punishment by the sword and flight¹ in distress; the tenth, ²thunder and voices² and destructive earthquake.³

XXXI. "And then I will sound the trumpet⁴ out of the air, and will send mine Elect One,⁵ having in him all my power, one measure⁶; and this one shall summon⁷ my despised people from the nations,⁸ and I will burn with fire⁹ those¹⁰ who have insulted them and who have ruled among¹¹ them in (this) Age.

"And I will give those who have covered me with

¹ Cf. Matt. xxiv. 16.

²⁻² K, "voices of thunder."

³ Cf. Rev. xi. 19b. [Perhaps the passage most closely parallel with our text is Ap. Bar. xxvii. 1-13.]

⁴ The trumpet is blown to announce the Divine intervention and the coming of salvation; it is not a direct summons to the exiles to return (cf. Volz, p. 310); cf. Benediction X in the Shēmōnē 'Esrē Prayer (Singer, p. 48): Sound the great horn for our freedom, lift up the ensign to gather our exiles, and gather us from the four corners of the earth.

⁵ This title of the Messiah is a favourite one in the "Similitudes" of 1 Enoch; cf. 1 Enoch xlviii. 9, lv. 4, etc. It recurs as a Messianic title in Luke ix. 35, xxiii. 35, and goes back to Is. xlii. 1.

⁶ i. e. a measure of all the divine attributes—he reflects in little the totality of the divine character. This is an exalted conception, but does not seem to imply more than that the Messiah is a divinely endowed man, full of the power of the Holy Spirit (Is. xi. 1), which makes him free from sin (Ps. Sol. xvii. 36 f.). He is not depicted as a supernatural angelic being like Metatron. He is sent by God at the appointed time; cf. Ps. Sol. xvii. 23, Gal. iv. 4, John xvii. 3.

⁷ Note that it is the Messiah here who summons the outcast Israelites from the nations (so also Ps. Sol. xvii. 28, Matt. xxiv. 31, 4 Ezra xiii. 39). More usually this is performed by God Himself (cf. the prayer cited in note ⁴ above).

⁸ Cf. Is. lx. 4.

⁹ Punishment of the godless by fire at God's hands is a common feature in the eschatology. It is the fire of the divine anger that is thought of, and is based upon Mal. iv. 1 (iii. 19); cf. the "fiery stream" and "flaming breath" which the Messiah emits from his mouth to destroy his enemies in 4 Ezra xiii. 10 (interpreted figuratively in verses 36 f.). A adds through him (after I will), i. e. through the Messiah; K, through them.

¹⁰ i. e. the heathen nations.

¹¹ i. e. "over." Cf. Ap. Bar. lxxii. 6 ("But all those who have ruled over you . . . shall be given to the sword").

mockery to the scorn of the coming Age;¹ and I have prepared them to be food² for the fire of Hades and for ceaseless flight to and fro through the air in the underworld beneath the earth³ [the body filled with worms.⁴ For on them shall they see the righteousness of the Creator—those, namely, who have chosen to do my will, and those who have openly kept my⁵ commandments,⁶ (and) they shall rejoice with joy over the downfall of the men who still remain, who have followed the idols and their murders.⁷ For they shall putrefy in the body of the evil worm Azazel,⁸ and be burnt with the fire of Azazel's tongue;⁹ for I hoped that they would come to me,¹⁰ and ¹ Those who have scorned shall be scorned; cf. Wisdom iv. 18, Dan. xii. 2, Ps. Sol. ii. 32 f. ("the coming Age" is the Age of the righteous). Possibly renegade Jews are referred to, and are the subject of the remaining part of this chapter.

² Cf. Mal. iv. 1 (iii. 19).

³ Here two conceptions seem to be mixed; there is (1) the idea of "the fire of Hades" (or Hell), which is located beneath the earth (for "Hades" = Hell in this sense; cf. Ps. Sol. xv. 11); this fire consumes their bodies; (2) combined with this is the idea of wandering (flying) restlessly about (properly in the air or outer darkness); cf. 4 Ezra vii. 80. In T. B. Shabb. 152b the souls of the wicked are said to be given no place of rest till the judgement. Here (at the word earth) S ends. The rest of the text (printed in small type) is found both in A and K.

⁴ In Judith xvi. 17 "fire and worms" await the heathen enemies of Israel; cf. Ecclus. vii. 17, 1 Enoch xlii. 6 ("darkness will be their dwelling and worms their bed"), Is. lxvi. 24. Here renegade Jews are probably meant.

⁵ A, thy.

⁶ Cf. Is. lxvi. 24, 4 Ezra vii. 93.

⁷ The renegade Jews here referred to are described as idolaters (cf. Ezek. xx. 16, Jer. vii. 9); and the righteous rejoice over their "downfall"; cf. 1 Enoch lvi. 8 ("Sheol will devour the sinners in the presence of the elect"), xciv. 10 ("Your creator will rejoice at your destruction"), xcvi. 2 ("the angels rejoice" over it), Is. lxvi. 24. Notice that idolatry and murder are here conjoined; cf. Acts xv. 29 (according to one view of the text).

⁸ Cf. the Greek Apocalypse of Baruch iv. (the dragon of Hades, which devours the bodies of the ungodly). In 2 Enoch xlii. 1 the guardians of the gates of Hell are said to be "like great serpents."

⁹ Here the Evil Spirit is identified with Hell; his tongue devours the ungodly; and he himself is "the burning coal of the furnace of the earth" (chap. xiv.). Hell (Gehenna) is essentially a place of fire; cf. Is. xxx. 33 and Mekilta to Ex. xiv. 21.

¹⁰ ? in repentance.

not have loved and praised the strange (god),¹ and not have adhered to him for whom they were not allotted,² but (instead) they have forsaken the mighty Lord."

Conclusion (Chapter XXXII.)

XXXII. "Therefore hear, O Abraham, and see; lo! thy seventh generation³ (shall) go with thee, and they shall go out into a strange land, and they shall enslave them, and evil-intreat them⁴ as it were an hour of the Age of ungodliness⁵ but the nation whom they shall serve I will judge." ⁶

ADDITIONAL NOTES

I

I am he who hath been commanded to loosen Hades to destroy him who stareth at the dead.

This obscure clause, which occurs in Jaobel's speech in chap. x., is absent from S. The Slavonic text runs as follows—

Az esm' povelěvy razreshiti ada, istliti divyaščas mertvym.

Dr. St. Clair Tisdall suggests the following rendering—

I am commanded to loosen Hades, to turn to corruption (by) gazing at the dead.

Dr. Tisdall explains the meaning thus: "The speaker has power given to him to 'deliver over to corruption' the

¹ i. e. probably Azazel.

² This clearly indicates that renegade Jews are referred to. For a similar reference cf. 4 Ezra viii. 25-31. It would appear that large numbers of Jews had lapsed, after the fall of Jerusalem, into indifference, or even open apostasy; cf. the Rabbinical references to "the people of the land" ('am hā-'āreṣ).

³ Including Abraham, the seven generations may be reckoned thus: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Levi, Kohath, Amram, Moses.

⁴ Cf. Gen. xv. 13.

⁵ i. e. ? 100 years; cf. chap. xxviii, end.

⁶ Cf. Gen. xv. 14. K concludes with the following words: And this, too, said the Lord: Hast thou heard, Abraham, what I have announced to thee, what shall befall thy people in the latter days? And Abraham heard the words of the Lord, and received them into his heart.

bodies of the dead by gazing at them. The verb [rendered 'gazing'] strictly denotes marvelling, admiring."

Mr. Landsman writes as follows: "The verb diviyati is used in Slavonic, meaning 'to be ferocious,' 'to rage'; divyaščas means thus 'to stare at' somebody in such a way that he is frightened by the ferocity of the look. It can be translated as Dr. Tisdall translates it, but does this rendering and interpretation harmonise with the context?" Mr. Landsman goes on to suggest that the second line refers to Death personified; cf. Ps. xlix. 14 ("Death shall be their shepherd") and Rev. xx. 13, 14, where "Death and Hades" are "cast into the lake of fire." Then render—

I am he who hath been commanded to loosen Hades, to destroy him [i. e. Death] who terrifieth the dead.

This yields an admirable sense, and is probably right. Jaöel thus claims to be commissioned to abolish the terrors of Hades and Death.

II

And when they [the Cherubim] had ended the singing, they looked at one another and threatened one another. And it came to pass when the angel who was with me saw that they were threatening each other, he left me and went running to them, and turned the countenance of each living creature from the countenance immediately confronting him in order that they might not see their countenances threatening each other. And he taught them the song of peace which hath its origin in the Eternal One (chap. xviii.).

In addition to the illustration given in note ¹³ (p. 62) on this passage, the following extract from The Revelation of Moses (Gedulath Moshe), translated by Dr. Gaster in The Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for July 1893, p. 576 ("Hebrew Visions of Hell and Paradise") may be quoted—

Moses went to the fifth heaven, and he saw there troops of angels, half of fire and half of snow, and the snow is above the fire without extinguishing it, for God maketh peace between them [as it is said: "He maketh peace in his high places," Job. xxv. 2], and all praise the Almighty. Cf. also the Midrash Debarim rabba (to Deut. xx. 10), where with reference to the same passage of Job (xxv. 2) it is said: Michael [who presides over the water] is altogether snow, Gabriel is altogether fire, and they stand next each other without being harmed on either side (so also Midrash rabba to Cant. iii. 11); cf. also 2 Enoch xxix. 2.

APPENDIX I

THE LEGEND OF ABRAM'S CONVERSION FROM IDOLATRY

(Cf. Chapters I.–VIII. of our Book.)

ABRAM'S emergence from the prevalent idolatry early became the theme of legend, which has assumed various forms and was widespread. These are collected, with full references, in Beer's Leben Abrahams (Leipzig, 1859), Chaps. I. and II., and are well summarised in J.E. I. 84–87 ("Abraham in apocryphal and Rabbinical Literature").

The earliest literary evidence appears to be some extracts from Jewish Alexandrine works cited by Josephus under the names of Hecataeus and Berosus, of the third and second centuries B.C., and summarised by him (Ant. I. 1, 7): [Abraham] was a person of great sagacity both for understanding all things and persuading his hearers, and not mistaken in his opinions; for which reason he began to have higher notions of virtue than others had, and he determined to renew and to change the opinion all men happened then to have concerning God: for he was the first that ventured to publish this notion, that there was but one God, the Creator of the Universe, and that as to other [gods] if they contributed anything to the happiness of men, that each of them afforded it only according to his appointment, and not by their own power. This his opinion was derived from the irregular phenomena that were visible both on land and sea, as well as those that happen to the sun, and moon, and all the heavenly bodies, thus: "If [said he] these bodies had power of their own, they would certainly take care of their own regular motions; but since they do not preserve such regularity, they make it plain, that so far as they co-operate to our advantage, they do it not of their own abilities, but as they are subservient to him that commands them, to whom alone we ought justly to offer our honour and thanksgiving." For which doctrines, when the Chaldæans and other peoples of Mesopotamia raised a tumult against him, he thought fit to leave that country; and at the command, and by the assistance of God, he came and lived in the land of Canaan.

Another early attestation of the legend occurs in The Book of Jubilees, probably dating from the close of the second century B. C. Here it is related (chap. xi. 16-xii) that Abraham as a child "began to understand the errors of the earth," and at the age of fourteen, in order not to be entangled in the idolatry, practised in connexion with astrology by the whole house of Nahor, separated from his father and family, and prayed to God to save him "from the errors of the children of men." He became an inventor of an improved method of sowing seed, by which it was preserved against the depredations of the ravens. He then made efforts to wean his father from idolatry, but Terah, though acknowledging that his son was right, was afraid to make a public renunciation, and told Abraham to keep silent. Being no more successful with his brothers, Abraham rose by night and set fire to the house of idols. His brother Haran in an attempt to save them perished in the fire, and was buried in Ur of the Chaldees.

Here we meet with a feature which provided a motif for various forms of the legend—viz. the fire which burnt the idols and their house. This is really derived from the etymological meaning of Ur = "fire;" thus "Ur of the Chaldees" is taken to mean "fire of the Chaldees." In our Book the fire descends from heaven and burns the house and all in it (including Terah), Abraham alone escaping. In other forms of the legend Abraham is cast into the fire (by Nimrod), and is miraculously preserved. Philo's account of Abraham's conversion (de Abrahamo, § 15) is as follows: ¹ the study of astronomy, and attributed all events to the motions of the stars by which they fancied that all the things in the world were regulated, and accordingly they magnified the visible essence by the powers which numbers and the analogies of numbers contain, taking no account of the invisible essence appreciable only by the intellect. But while they were busied in investigating the arrangement existing in them with reference to the periodical revolutions of the sun and moon and the other planets and fixed-stars, and the changes of the seasons of the year, and the sympathy of the heavenly bodies with the things of earth, they were led to imagine that the world itself was God, in their impious philosophy comparing the creature to the Creator.

The Chaldæans were, above all nations, addicted to

¹ Yonge's translation, vol. ii. p. 417.

The man [Abraham] who had been bred up in this doctrine, and who for a long time had studied the philosophy of the Chaldæans, as if suddenly awaking from a deep slumber and opening the eye of the soul, and beginning to perceive a pure ray of light instead of profound darkness, followed the light, and saw what he had never seen before, a certain governor and director of the world standing above it (κατεῖδεν . τοῦ κόσμου τινὰ ἡνιόχον καὶ κυβερνήτην ἐφεστῶτα), and guiding his own work in a salutary manner, and exerting his care and power in behalf of those parts of it which are worthy of divine superintendence.

The legend is cited or referred to in many places in the Rabbinical Literature. The following extract from Bereshith rabba xxxviii. 19 (on Gen. xi. 28) is a good example :

And Haran died in the presence of his father Terah. R. Hiyya bar R. Idi of Joppa said : " Terah was a maker and seller of idols. On one occasion he went out somewhere, (and) set Abraham to sell in his place. A man came (and) wished to buy (an idol), and he (Abraham) said to him : ' How old art thou ? ' And he said : ' Fifty or sixty years.' [Abraham] said to him : ' Woe to the man who is sixty years old, and will worship (an image) a day old ! ' And (the buyer) was shamed and went his way. Another time there came a woman, carrying in her hand a dish of fine flour. ' Here thou art,' said she. ' Offer it (as an oblation) before them (i. e. before the gods).' [Abraham arose, took a club in his hand, and smashed all the images, and placed the club in the hand of the largest of them. When his father came back, he said to him: 'Who has done this to them?' He [Abraham] said to him: 'Why should I hide (the matter) from thee? A woman came carrying a dish of fine flour. And she said to me: "Here thou art: offer it (as an oblation) before them." I offered (it) before them. Then one said: "I will eat first," and another said: "I will eat first." The one who was greatest among them rose up, took a club, and smashed them.' And [Terah] said to him: 'Why wilt thou fool me? How should they understand (anything)?' [Abraham] said to him: 'Let not thy ears hear what thy mouth says!' [Terah] took him and delivered him to Nimrod. The latter said to him: 'We will worship the fire?' Abraham said to him: 'But we should (rather) worship water.' Nimrod said to him: 'We will worship the water.' [Abraham] said to him: 'If so, we ought to worship the cloud that bears the water.' Nimrod said to him: ['We will worship] the cloud.' He replied to him: 'If so, we ought to worship the wind; it scatters the cloud.' [Nimrod] said to him: ['We should worship] the wind.' He replied: 'We should worship man, who endures, (defies) the wind.' He replied: 'You are bandying words with me; I worship the fire only, (and) lo, I will cast thee into the midst of it; then, let the God whom thou worshippest come and deliver thee from it.' Haran was standing there in doubt. He said: 'At all events if Abraham is victorious I will say I am of Abraham's opinion; but if Nimrod is victorious I will say I am of Nimrod's opinion.' When Abraham descended into the fiery furnace and was delivered, they said to him: 'On whose side art thou?' He said to them: 'Abraham's.' They seized him and threw him into the fire. And his bowels were scorched, and it fell out that he died in the presence of his father. That is the meaning of the verse, and Haran died in the presence of Terah his father.'

Another version of the same legend (cf. Tanna debe Eliyaha ii. 25, and see J.E. i. 86) runs as follows:

Terah was a manufacturer of idols and had them for sale. One day when Abraham was left in charge of the shop, an old man came to buy an idol. Abraham handed him one on the top, and he paid the price asked. "How old art thou?" Abraham asked. "Seventy years," he replied. "Thou fool," said Abraham; "how canst thou adore a god so much younger than thyself? Thou wert born seventy years ago, and this god was made yesterday." The buyer threw away the idol and received his money back. The other sons of Terah complained to their father that Abraham did not know how to sell the idols, and it was arranged that he should act as priest to the latter. One day a woman brought a meal-offering for the idols, and as they would not eat he exclaimed: A mouth have they but speak not, eyes have they but see not, ears but hear not, hands but handle not. May their makers be like them, and all who trust in them (Ps. cxv. 5-8); and he broke them in pieces, and burned them. Abraham was thereupon brought before Nimrod, who said: "Knowest thou not that I am god, and ruler of the world? Why hast thou destroyed my images?" Abraham replied: "If thou art god and ruler of the world, why dost thou not cause the sun to rise in the west and set in the east? If thou art god and ruler of the world, tell me all that I have now at heart, and what I shall do in the future?" Nimrod was dumbfounded, and Abraham continued: "Thou art the son of Cush, a mortal man. Thou couldst not save thy father from death, nor wilt thou thyself escape it."

Another form of the legend, after narrating the wonderful nature of Abraham's birth, Nimrod's alarm at the report of the astrologers and magicians in connexion therewith, and his attempt to bribe Terah to give up the child, who, under the charge of a nurse, was hidden by his father in a cave, where he remained for some years, proceeds (cf. Midrash hagadol on Genesis. ed. Schechter p. 189 f.):

When Abraham came forth from the cave, his mind was inquiring into the creation of the world, and he was intent upon all the luminaries of the world, to bow down to them and serve them, in order that he might know which of them was God. He saw the moon, whose light shone in the night from one end of the world to the other, and whose retinue [of shining stars] was so numerous. Said he: "This is God!" (and) he worshipped her all the night. But when at day-break he saw the sun-rise, and at its rising the moon become dark and her strength wane, he said: "The light of the moon only proceeds from the light of the sun, and the world is only sustained by the light of the sun," and so he worshipped the sun all day. At evening the sun set, and its power waned, and the moon and the stars and the constellations emerged (once more). Said [Abraham]: "Verily there is a Lord and a God over these."

A peculiar form of the legend occurs in the Biblical Antiquities of Pseudo-Philo vi. 5-18.¹

According to this Midrashic account, Abram with eleven other men whose names are given, refused to bake bricks for the building of the Tower of Babel. In consequence, they were seized by the people of the land, and brought before the princes, and on their persistent refusal to take any part in the building of the Tower, were condemned to be burnt. A respite of seven days is given them at the intercession of Jectan, "the first prince of the captains," but at the end of this time, if they have not already changed their mind, they are to be handed over for execution. Jectan, a secret friend, contrives their escape to the mountains, and eleven of the men do escape, but Abram refuses to flee, and remains behind. At the end of the seven days, the "people of the land" demand that the imprisoned men shall be produced. Jectan explains that eleven of them "have broken prison and fled by night," but Abram is produced, is cast into the fire, but is miraculously delivered by God,¹ who causes an earthquake which breaks up the furnace and scatters the fire, which "consumed all them that stood round about in the sight of the furnace; and all they that were burned in that day were 83,500. But upon Abram was there not any the least hurt by the burning of the fire."

¹ Edited for the first time in English by Dr. M. R. James, and published in this Series.

It is obvious from what has been adduced that the legend assumed different forms. The narrative just cited is quite independent of the rest, except for the episode of the fiery furnace. The form also given in our Book is largely independent. Nowhere else do we meet with the details about the idol-gods Meru-math and Barisat. The fiery furnace also is absent, and the burning of the idols is effected by fire from heaven. At the same time in chap. vii. of our Book in the speech of Abraham to Terah about the claims to divinity of fire, water, earth, sun, moon, and stars, there is a marked parallelism with the Rabbinical accounts. It is clear that the form of the legend in our Book is due to an independent and free handling of the legendary material, many new features having been introduced in the process.

The legend also occurs in various forms in the Patristic and Mohammedan literature. For the former cf. Clem. Recognitions, i. 32 f., Augustine, De Civitate xvi. 15; and for the latter cf. J.E., i. 87 f. ("Abraham in Mohammedan Legend"). See further Fabricius, Codex pseudepigraphus

¹ According to R. Eliezer b. Jacob it was Michael who delivered Abraham from the fire; but the prevailing view was that it was God Himself; cf. Beresith rabba xliv. 16.

Vet. Test. (2nd ed., Hamburg, 1722), pp. 335-428), Bonwetsch, pp. 41-55. The later Jewish forms of the legend (as preserved in late Midrashim) have been collected and translated into German by Wünsche, Aus Israels Lehrhallen (1907), i. pp. 14-48 (the original Hebrew texts are printed mainly in Jellinek's Beth ha-Midrash); cf. also G. Friedlander, Rabbinic Philosophy and Ethics (1912), pp. 47 ff.

APPENDIX II ¹

All the Palæas begin the story of Abraham as follows :

"But Terah begat Abraham : " and Terah began to do the same work which he saw (being done) in the case of his father Nahor, and worshipped the gods, and offered sacrifices before them, calves, and heifers, and performed everything well-pleasing to the Devil. When Abraham, however, had seen this, and on account of it fell into much reflexion, he said within himself : "These gods are wood, through which my father Terah is deceived, and these gods have no soul in themselves ; and possessing eyes they see not, and having ears they hear not, and possessing hands they handle not, and having feet they go not, and possessing noses they smell not, and there is no voice in their mouth. Therefore I am of opinion that in truth my father Terah is deceived. But Abraham having thought thus.

Then some of the MSS. proceed :

Abraham (or I.), however, one day planed the gods, etc. (as in chap. i.) ; but the rest continue with chap. vii. : [Having thought thus, Abraham] came to his father, etc.

APPENDIX III ²

A portion of our Apocalypse is contained in an abbreviated form in the Kukulevic MS. which is described by V. Jagic in his Contributions to the History of the Literature of the Croat and Serbian People (Prilozi k historji knjizevnosti naroda hrvatskoga i srbskoga), Agram 1868.

¹ See Bonwetsch, p. 9.

² See Bonwetsch, pp. 9-11.

The MS. dates from the year 1520, and includes on pp. 37^v foll. parts of The Apocalypse of Abraham, in a much abbreviated, dislocated and altered form as compared with the tradition represented by the Russian MSS. This apparently represents an independent South Slavonic Recension of our Book. It runs as follows : ¹

A word of righteous Abraham, as God loved Abraham. He was born ; in sixty years [i. e. at the age of 60] He [God] had given him (Terah) a son, (even to Terah) who believed in the idols, and manufactured idols, and gave them names. Abraham went and sold the idols. When on a certain day Abraham had lain down in the field, and saw the stars of heaven and everything (made) by God, he surveyed it all in his heart, and said : " O great marvel ! These idols have not made it heaven and earth and everything hath God made, we, however, are senseless men not believing in the Creator of heaven and earth, but we believe in stones and wood, and in vain things, but I see and understand that God is great, who hath created heaven and earth and the whole world."

On a certain day his father carved idols, and told Abraham to prepare (their) food. And Abraham took a god and stood him at the fire behind the pot, and said to him : If thou art a god, pay heed to the pot and to thyself. And then the pot boiled over, and burnt the god's head. And Abraham approached, and saw it, and laughed about it much, and said to his father : " Father, these idols are no good, they cannot protect themselves, how should they protect us ? " And his father was angry, and said : " Ills have befallen us, my son, I am not offended." And then Abraham arose and took the idols, and loaded them on an ass, and brought them into the street to sell. And he saw a great marsh, and said to the idols . " If you are gods, take heed to the ass that it do not drown you." And the ass went into the marsh and sank in the mire. And Abraham said to them . " If you were good gods, (then) you would protect . . . and also protect yourselves ; but since you are evil gods, you must suffer evil." And he took them and shattered them.

¹ As given in a German translation by Dr. L. Masing of Dorpat (in Bonwetsch, pp. 10 f.).

And he returned to his father, and said : " Father, I tell thee the truth ; these gods are no good, and you are wrong to believe in them." Thereupon his father flung a knife against him, and Abraham stood aside, and was perplexed in his mind. And he went into the land of Mesopotamia Chaldaea and did not know the way by which to go. Then the angel Uriel came to him, having made himself (in appearance) like a traveller. And Abraham said to the angel : " Tell me, Brother, whence art thou, and whither goest thou ? " The angel said to him : " I go to the land of Chaldaea." And Abraham said : " I also go with thee." And the angel said to him : " Come, Brother ! " And Abraham saw a large (and) very black eagle sitting and nodding its head at Abraham ; and Abraham passing by it was seized with great fear, and said nothing.

And the angel said to him : " Talk, Brother, of nothing but God." And the angel taught him all the time to talk of nothing but godly things. And the angel said to him : " Yonder eagle was indeed the Devil himself, and desired to make thee turn back."

And in that land Abraham abode fifteen years ; there he dwelt, (and) thither his father came to him, and his brother Lot, and there Abraham took his wife Sarah.

And the angel came to Abraham, and told him to depart from this land, and to go into the land of Chaldaea (sic), " for there the Lord hath commanded thee to live." Abraham did accordingly. The narrative then proceeds on the basis of the account given in Gen. xx.

It is obvious that this is largely an independent reshaping of the old material. But it contains clear reminiscences both of the legendary and apocalyptic parts of our Book.

INDEX

[The references are to pages, unless otherwise indicated ;
n. = " note " or " notes. "]

ABBREVIATIONS, xxxii f.

Abraham—

prominence of, in later Literature, xxiv

legend of, ch. i-viii and Appendix I (cf. also
p. 48 and notes)

as maker of idols, 35 n.

burns idol-temple, Appendix I (cf. p. 43)

trance of (Gen. xv), 44 n.

" Friend of God," 45 n.

Abraham, Apocalypse of—

The Slavonic text, x ff.

original language and date of, xv ff.

early attestation of, xvi
ff.

Jewish and Essene character of, xxi

Abraham, Testament of—xix, xxiii, xxxi, 49 n., 52 n., 53 n.

Abyss, the, 66 n.

Adam, stature of, 69 n.

Age (the coming), " sown,"
80 n.

Angelology, xxv f.

Angels = material altar,
51 n.

worship of, 57 n.

Apostolic Constitutions cited,
xviii

Asceticism in Ap. Abr., xxix

Azazel, xxi, xxiii, xxvi, xxxii, 52 n., 53 n., 54 n., 65 n., 71 n., 78 n., 85

G

Barisat, xv, 39 f. and note,
41

Beliar, 52 n.

Cain, lawlessness of, xxiii,
cf. 72 n.

Chariot, the divine, xxix f., 63 n.

Cherubim, 87. See also Hayyoth

Christ, worship of, 78 n.

Christological development,
xxv, xxxi f.

Clementine Literature, xxxi

Day (= 1000 years), 77 n.

Dead, burial of the, 48 n.

Dew (the resurrection), 64 n.

" Descents " (= " generations "), 74 n., 76 n.

Dove, the, 51 n.

Dualism, xxvi, 53 n.

Ebionites, xxi f.

Elect, number of the, predetermined, 81 n.

Enoch, falls into background, xxiv relation of, to Metatron, xxv

Essenes, xxiv, xxix, 68 n.

Fasting, 45 n.

Fire, theophanic, 57 n.

as element of punishment,
84 n.

Food (heavenly), 50 n.

- Freedom, moral, 74 n.
 Friend, see Abraham
- Garments, heavenly, 53 n.
 Ginzberg, cited, xxi f., et al.
 Gnostic elements in Ap. Abr.
 xix f.
 Gnostics, xvii ff., xxii f.
- Hades, 86
Hayyoth ("living creatures"),
 47 n., 56 n., 62 n., 64 n.
 Hell, 85 n.
 Heathen, punishment of,
 xxviii, 69 n., 80 n.
 Heavens, the seven, 47 n.,
 64 n., 65 n.
 "Hour" (= 100 years), 76 f.
 and note
- Irenæus referred to, xix, xx
- Jaol (archangel), xxiii, xxv,
 46 n. See also Metatron
- James, Dr. M. R., quoted,
 xviii
- Jealousy, image of, 73 n.
 Jews, renegade, 85 n., 86 n.
 Judgement, the, xxvii f.
- Kabbalah, xx, 72 n.
 Köhler, quoted, xxiv, xxx
- "Lawless One" (Devil), 72 n.
 Leviathan, 48 n., 67 n.
 Light (created), 44 n.
 (uncreated), 56 n., 60 n.,
 64 n.
 Light and darkness (opposition of), xix
 Liturgy, Jewish, cited, 58 n.,
 59 n., 61 n., 63 n., 84 n.
 Logos-idea, see Christological development
- Merumath, xv, 35 n., 41
- Messiah—
 in line of Seth, xxiii gathers Israel, xxviii, (cf.
 ch. xxxi and notes)
- Messiah—
 endowed with a measure of the divine attributes,
 84 n. (cf. also 69 n.)
 Messianic Salvation, the,
 76 n., 84 n.
 Metatron (Michael), xxv,
 46 n., 49 n. See further Jaol, Michael
 Michael, 47 n., 48 n., 49 n.
 See further Metatron
 Midrash, cited, xxiv f., 35,
 48 n., 52 n., 56 n., 62 n.,
 68 n., 70 n., 80 n., 87
 Mighty One (title of God),
 43 n., 54 n., 55
 Mishna cited, 38 n.
 Mithra, cult of, 64 n.
- Name, the divine, mystery of, xxiii
 Names, the divine, mystical significance of, 55 f. and notes, 61 n.
 Nicephorus, Stichometry of,
 xviii f., xxii
- Ophannim ("Wheels"),
 62 n., 63 n., 64 n.
- Palaea, xii, 94
 Paradise, the heavenly,
 xxvii, 67 n.
 Philo cited, xvii, 50 n.,
 58 n.
 Plagues, the ten (at end of the Age), 76 n., 80 n., 83 n.
 Porfir'ev, I., xiv
 Predestinarian ideas in Ap.
 Abr., 55 n., 68 n., 81 n.,
 82 n.
 Prediction, divine, 82 n.
 Pypin, A., xiv
- "Right and left," xx, 67 f.
 and note, 69 n., 74 n.
 Resurrection doctrine, absence of in Ap. Abr., xxvii, 81 n.

- Sabaoth, 59 n.
 Sacrifices, human, 73 n.
 Sacrificial system divine,
 73 n. (cp. 81 n.)
 Sammael, 54, 70 n., 71 n.
 Seth, line of, xxiii Shaddai, 59 n.
 Sin, original, xxvii, xxxi
 Song (angelic), 46 n., 56 n.,
 58 n., 87
 Sreznevsky, J., xi
 "Survive" (technical term in Apocalyptic), 81 n.
 Sylvester, Codex, x, xi

 Talmud, cited xxvii, 47 n.,
 49 n., 52 n., 53 n., 60 n.,
 64 n., 67 n., 69 n., 70 n.,
 83 n.

 Tartarus, see Abyss
 Temple, burning of the, 75 n.
 Throne (of God), vision of,
 ch. xviii, 62 n., 64 n.
 Tikhonravov, xi, xiv Tree (of Paradise), = the vine, 70 n.
 Trumpet, the, 84 n.

 Ur (of the Chaldees), 43 n.

 Wine and milk, 40 n.
 "Woes" (Messianic), 81 n.
 Word of God, 45 n., 68 n.

 Zohar, referred to, xx, 49 n.
 Zoroastrianism, xix

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN BY
RICHARD CLAY & SONS, LIMITED,
BRUNSWICK ST., STAMFORD ST., S.E. 1,
AND BUNGAY. SUFFOLK.

TRANSLATIONS OF EARLY DOCUMENTS
SERIES I
PALESTINIAN JEWISH TEXTS
(PRE-RABBINIC)

THE ASCENSION OF ISAIAH

THE ASCENSION OF ISAIAH

BY

R. H. CHARLES, D.LITT., D.D.

CANON OF WESTMINSTER; FELLOW OF MERTON COLLEGE; FELLOW OF THE BRITISH ACADEMY

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE REV. G. H. BOX, M.A.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING
CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE

LONDON: 68, HAYMARKET, S.W.

1917

EDITORS' PREFACE

THE object of this series of translations is primarily to furnish students with short, cheap, and handy text-books, which, it is hoped, will facilitate the study of the particular texts in class under competent teachers. But it is also hoped that the volumes will be acceptable to the general reader who may be interested in the subjects with which they deal. It has been thought advisable, as a general rule, to restrict the notes and comments to a small compass; more especially as, in most cases, excellent works of a more elaborate character are available. Indeed, it is much to be desired that these translations may have the effect of inducing readers to study the larger works.

Our principal aim, in a word, is to make some difficult texts, important for the study of Christian origins, more generally accessible in faithful and scholarly translations.

In most cases these texts are not available in a cheap and handy form. In one or two cases texts have been included of books which are available in the official Apocrypha; but in every such case reasons exist for putting forth these texts in a new translation, with an Introduction, in this series.

We desire to express our thanks to Canon Charles and Messrs. A. & C. Black for their permission to reprint here the translation of the Ascension of Isaiah, published in 1900.

W. O. E. OESTERLEY.
G. H. BOX.

INTRODUCTION

SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE BOOK

THE apocryphal book known as The Ascension of Isaiah appears to be a work of composite structure made up of three originally distinct parts, one of which is of Jewish, the others of Christian origin. The title given to the whole work—The Ascension of Isaiah—is due to the principal extant version, the Ethiopic. Strictly, however, it applies only to the last part, contained in chapters vi.–xi. (“The Vision of Isaiah”). The other two parts, which probably circulated independently at first, may be identified with writings (otherwise lost) known as The Martyrdom of Isaiah (= i. 1–iii. 12 and v. 1 b–14), a Jewish work, perhaps pre-Christian; and The Testament of Hezekiah (iii. 13–v. 1 a), which like The Vision of Isaiah (= vi.–xi.) is of Christian origin. The whole work appears to have been combined in its present form by a Christian editor, some time in the second century A.D.¹ The entire book is extant in an Ethiopic version, and fragments of it exist in Greek, Latin, and Slavonic. The original language in which the work was composed was certainly Greek for the two Christian parts, and probably also for the Jewish part (the Martyrdom), though this last may depend ultimately upon a Hebrew or Aramaic prototype.

¹ “From the third century onward the Ascension [in its present form] had an extensive circulation amongst Christian heretics” (Charles).

The process by which these parts were fused into the present whole is difficult to determine exactly. According to Dr. Charles the complicated phenomena presented by the versions and fragments may be explained as follows. The last part, containing "the Vision of Isaiah" (vi.-xi.), was edited in two Greek recensions (G¹ and G²). From G² a Latin (L²) and a Slavonic (S) version were made. G¹ was united with the Greek texts (G) of the Martyrdom and the Testament, and the whole composite work so produced was translated into Ethiopic (E); fragments also are extant in Latin (L¹). The Greek text of G¹ is not extant, but it can be restored to a considerable extent from a Greek work, based upon it, which has survived, and is known as "the Greek Legend (of Isaiah)."¹ Another fragment of the Greek text, written on a papyrus of the fifth or sixth century, has been published by Grenfell and Hunt. It contains the text of ii. 4-iv. 4 (i.e. parts of the Martyrdom and Testament) and is denominated by Dr. Charles G², though it is not to be regarded as a distinct recension like the G² of the Vision (= vi.-xi.). All these texts (the Slavonic in a Latin translation) have been printed in parallel columns, and edited with critical notes, by Dr. Charles in his edition of our book (pp. 83-148).

In accordance with the critical analysis outlined above the whole work may be divided into four parts, and is so divided in the translation that follows.

¹ Discovered by Dr. O. von Gebhardt in a Greek MS. of the twelfth century, preserved in the National Library in Paris.

PART I. (= i. 1-iii. 12) contains the first part of The Martyrdom of Isaiah. Isaiah is introduced predicting, in the presence of Hezekiah and Jôsbab (i.e. Shear-jashub, Isaiah's son) his own death at the hands of Manasseh. After the death of Hezekiah, Isaiah, on account of the "lawlessness" and infamous practices of Manasseh, withdrew with certain other prophets into the desert in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem. Here he is pursued by Balchîrâ, a Samaritan, who denounces him to Manasseh, alleging that Isaiah had uttered prophecies against Jerusalem and the King, in whose heart Beliar dwells.

PART II. (=iii. 13-v. 1a) contains the so-called Testament of Hezekiah (iii. 13-iv. 18), a Christian writing. It has been introduced at this point by the Christian redactor to explain why Beliar is so much incensed with Isaiah. This was occasioned by Isaiah's prediction (here recorded) of the destruction of Sammael (Satan), the redemption of the world by Jesus, the founding of the Church, its persecution by Nero, which is the prelude to the final judgement. Incidentally a somewhat sombre picture is drawn of the state of affairs in the Church in these last days. Worldliness and lawlessness prevail among its ministers, there is much covetousness, respect of persons, slander and vainglory, and true "prophets" are hard to find. This picture reflects the state of affairs in the Church as it existed at the close of the first century, and harmonizes with similar accounts given in 2 Peter, 2 Timothy, and Clement of Rome (ad Cor. iii.).

PART III. (= v. 1 b-14) contains the conclusion of the Martyrdom, resuming iii. 12. It recounts the story of Isaiah's martyrdom. The prophet is tempted by Balchîrâ to recant, but indignantly refusing to do so, is sawn asunder with a wooden saw.

PART IV. (= vi.-xi.) contains The Vision of Isaiah, a Christian writing. It describes a vision, which the prophet experienced while he was prophesying in the presence of King Hezekiah. While he was yet speaking he fell into a trance, with his eyes open. Afterwards he related the vision to the King and the prophets, but not to the people. The vision, as related, describes how the prophet was taken by an angel through the seven heavens, and what he saw there. In the seventh heaven he saw the departed righteous, including Abel and Enoch, and finally the Divine Being ("the Great Glory") Himself, together with a second glorious One like Him, and a third who is the Angel of the Holy Spirit. Then the Most High is heard commissioning the Son to descend through the heavens and the firmament to the world, and even to Sheol. The descent of "The Beloved" is then described, the birth of Jesus of a Virgin, His life, death, and resurrection, and the sending forth of the Twelve; and finally His Ascent though the seven heavens where He seats Himself on the right hand of "the Great Glory," the angel of the Holy Spirit being on the left. The prophet having related the vision to Hezekiah, warns him that these things will come to pass.

Dr. Charles thinks that the three independent writings, which form the constituent elements of our Book, were all, in their original form, in existence in the first century. This view is very probable. We have already seen that the picture of the state of affairs prevailing in the Church, given in the Testament, harmonizes with a first-century date.

This seems to be true also of the last part (vi.-xi). The Jewish colouring in both the Christian parts suggests a date not later than the end of the first century. On the other hand the Martyrdom may well be pre-Christian in substance.

TITLES OF THE BOOK

The book—or parts of it—is referred to in ancient patristic literature under various titles. Epiphanius terms the last part (vi.-xi.) “the Ascension of Isaiah” (τὸ Ἀναβατικὸν Ἠσαίου), as also does Jerome (“Ascensio Isaiae”); elsewhere it is referred to as “the Vision of Isaiah” (ὁρασις Ἠσαίου, “Visio Isaiae”), and this title is actually prefixed to chapter vi. in the texts of the Versions (“The Vision which Isaiah the son of Amoz saw”). Finally Georgius Cedrenus cites iv. 12, under the title of “the Testament of Hezekiah” (Διαθήκη Ἐζεκίου)—a title which, as Dr. Charles has shown, originally applied to an independent writing now incorporated in the entire work (= iii. 13-v. 1 a). As has already been mentioned, the Ethiopic version prefixes the title The Ascension of Isaiah to the whole composite work, and this is now the commonly accepted name of the entire book.

THE ANCIENT VERSIONS

The most important of the ancient versions is the Ethiopic (E), including as it does the entire text. It depends upon three MSS., two of which are in the British Museum, and one in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. The Ethiopic version was made, of course, from the Greek original, and according to Dr. Charles is “on the whole a faithful reproduction” of the first Greek Recension (G¹). An edition of the Ethiopic text was published by Archbishop Laurence in 1819, and an important critical one by Dillmann in 1877. Both these scholars also published translations of E. A Latin version of the last part of the Ascension (vi.-xi.) was printed at Venice in 1522 from a MS. now unknown. This is denominated by Dr. Charles L². Two fragments of what appears to be another Latin version, embracing ii. 14-iii. 13 and vii. 1-19, were discovered and edited by Mai in 1828. This version is styled by Dr. Charles L¹. Fortunately it is possible to compare L¹ and L² in a passage common to both, viz. vii. 1-19. When this is done it appears that L¹ and E agree, to a remarkable extent, against L² and the Slavonic (S). Hence Charles infers the existence behind them of two different recensions of the original Greek text (G), which he terms G¹ and G².¹ The combination EL¹ (and the "Greek Legend") = G¹, and that of SL² = G². The arguments are given in full in Dr. Charles's edition, and appear to be convincing.

The Slavonic text, a Latin translation of which (by Prof. Bonwetsch) is given in Dr. Charles's edition, is a version of the last part only, the "Vision of Isaiah" (vi.-xi.). Its title is The Vision which the [holy] Prophet Isaiah, the Son of Amoz, saw. It is derived ultimately from two MSS. from which an edition by the Russian scholar, A. Popov, was published. As has been pointed out above it depends upon the recension of the original Greek text denominated G².

The text of the Greek Legend, which appears to have been based upon one of the recensions (G¹) of the original work is printed in full by Dr. Charles in his edition of our book. The important papyrus fragment discovered by Grenfell and Hunt contains the Greek text of ii. 4-iv. 4. This is styled by Dr. Charles G², but must not be confounded with the G² which embraces vi.-xi, and is to be regarded as a distinct recension. Where the papyrus fragment differs from the text of EL¹ this difference, according to Dr. Charles, is to be explained "as due to the errors and variations incidental to the process of transmission" and not (as in the case of G² in vi.-xi.) as due to its being part of a distinct recension. The archetypal Greek text may still have been in existence in the fourth century.

¹ These were two recensions of the Greek text of vi.-xi.

SPECIAL IMPORTANCE OF THE BOOK

In accordance with the critical analysis we may regard our Book as containing three distinct and originally independent works, all of which go back to the first century. The last part reflects the beliefs, prevalent, in certain circles, on such subjects as the Trinity, the Incarnation, the Resurrection, the seven heavens, while the Testament (iii. 12-v. 1 a) gives a vivid picture of the state of affairs prevailing in the Christian Church at the close of the first century. It should be noted that both the Christian parts are apocalyptic in character, while the Jewish part—the Martyrdom—is a legendary narrative. This may well be of a much earlier date than the two Christian parts. For the legend which it embodies—Isaiah's death by being sawn asunder with a wooden saw—has very early attestation, and is not improbably alluded to in Heb. xi. 37 (they were sawn asunder). In fact the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews may very well have derived his knowledge of the legend from the Martyrdom. It is referred to clearly by Justin Martyr (Trypho, chap. cxx.), and constantly by later Christian writers. It is also attested in Jewish literature. Both Talmuds refer to Isaiah's death at the hands of Manasseh (cf. 2 Kings xxi. 16), and recount that Isaiah took refuge, fleeing from before Manasseh, in a cedar tree, and when this was discovered, Manasseh had the tree sawn asunder; and that as this was done the prophet's blood flowed out (cf. T.B. Sanhedrin 103^b, Yebamoth 49^b, T.J. Sanhedrin x). On the other hand the legend is not referred to explicitly by Josephus.

We may regard the Martyrdom as an early Jewish Midrash, based upon 2 Kings xxi. 16, and as perhaps composed or already in existence in the first half of the first century A.D. M. Halévy (Etudes évangéliques i. pp. 65 ff.), who accepts a pre-Christian date for the Martyrdom, has indeed tried to show that the narrative of Our Lord's Temptation has been influenced by it. But his parallels are not very convincing. The relevant passage in the Martyrdom (v. 4-8) may be allowed to speak for itself. It runs as follows: And Balchîrâ said to Isaiah: "Say: I have lied in all that I have spoken, and likewise the ways of Manasseh are good and right: and the ways also of Balchîrâ and of his associates are good." And this he said to him when he began to be sawn in sunder. But Isaiah was (absorbed) in a vision of the Lord, and though his eyes were open, he saw them (not).

And Balchîrâ spake thus to Isaiah: "Say what I say unto thee and I will turn their heart, and I will compel Manasseh and the princes of Judah and all the people and all Jerusalem to reverence thee."

And Isaiah answered and said: "So far as I have utterance (I say) : Damned and accursed be thou and all thy powers and all thy house. For thou canst not take (from me) aught save the skin of my body."

This rather bald and jejune account is remote, both in substance and spirit, from the sublime narrative in the Gospels. To suggest anything like direct dependence of the latter on the former, or to regard the Jewish account as the "source" of the Gospel narrative is surely far-fetched. Nevertheless the Martyrdom sheds some interesting light on the Jewish demonology current in the first century. Thus Beliar (=Belial) appears as one of the names of the Prince of evil spirits (=Satan). He is "the Angel of lawlessness, who is the ruler of this world" (cf. John xii. 31; xvi. 11; 2 Cor. iv. 4; Ephes. vi. 12). He is in many respects like Sammael—also a satanic being—though possibly, as Charles suggests, Sammael is regarded as subordinate to Beliar, executing the latter's behests (i. 8). The origin and significance of the name Beliar (Belial) is a matter of controversy; but it seems clear that it had mythological associations, and may originally have been a designation of the underworld (Sheol, Hades) into which the living descend at death, and from which there is no return (= Bal-ya'al, "there is no ascent"). This seems to be the meaning of the term in Ps. xviii. 5:

The breakers of Death had come about me, and the streams of Belial affrighted me:

Here Belial is parallel to Death = place of death, i. e. Sheol.¹ Another illuminating passage, in this connection, is Ps. xli. 8:

A matter of Belial [Hades] (i. e. a mortal disease) is fixed upon him,

¹ Death and Sheol are often parallel; cf. e. g. Is. xxviii. 15, 18.

And now that he lieth he will rise up no more.

The personification easily follows. Death and Sheol were so personified (cf. Ps. xviii. 6), becoming names of the prince of the underworld, and in exactly the same way Belial (Beliar) becomes the name of the prince of evil powers. For a New Testament parallel cf. 2 Cor. vi. 15 (What concord hath Christ with Belial?). Beliar is also designated expressly by another mysterious name. Matanbûchûs (cf. ii. 4, "Beliar whose name is Matanbûchûs"). The commonly accepted explanation of this bizarre form is that it is composed of two Hebrew words, mattan bûkâ, meaning "worthless gift." But this is not very satisfactory. Halévy suggests that it is really a form of the Hebrew mith-dabek, "one who attaches himself," and so designates the evil spirit as the possessor of its victim. There is some support for this explanation in a passage of the Talmud (T.B. Shabbâth 32^a) where, according to one reading of the text, the woman who neglects certain duties is spoken of as threatened by three "mortal possessions" ("attachments of death"), i.e. mortal diseases, which Rashi ad loc. explains as so called "because they attach and bring close death before its time." The "one who takes possession" is an admirable designation of the evil spirit, and harmonizes well with the representation which depicts Beliar as "dwelling" "in the heart of Manasseh" (iii. 11).¹ It should be added that Belial (Beliar) appears in the Book of Jubilees in a Satanic rôle. He is represented as the accuser and father of all idolatrous nations (Jub. i. 20). In the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs Belial is depicted as the arch-fiend, the head of the evil spirits, and the source of impurity and lying.

¹Kohler, in J.E. ii. 659, suggests that Metembûchûs may be a "corrupt form" of Angro-mainyush or Ahriman, the evil deity of the religion of Ancient Persia.

Another demonic figure that appears in the Martyrdom is Sammael (= "venom of God"), who occupies an important place in the late Jewish literature both Talmudic and post-Talmudic. In this literature he is represented as prince of the demons, and is identified with the angel of death, who slays men with a drop of poison. He is "the chief of the Satans" (Deut. rabb. xi. 9; cf. Matt. ix. 34, "the prince of the devils"), and plays the part of accuser, seducer, and destroyer. He thus seems to be identical with Beliar (Belial), but in the Martyrdom he is apparently subordinated to the latter (cf. i. 8). In i. 8 he is surnamed Malchîrâ, which may possibly be explained, as Halévy suggests, as = "king of evil" (melek or malki ra'), or "messenger of evil" (mal'ak ra'). Perhaps the name of the Samaritan false prophet, Balchîrâ, who takes so active a part in bringing about the prophet's martyrdom, may also be explained as = "chosen of evil" (behîr-ra'). According to Dr. Charles' analysis the name "Sammael" was originally peculiar to the Martyrdom (i. 8, 11; ii. i), though it also occurs in editorial additions (vii. 9; iii. 13; v. 15, 16; xi. 41). In the last of these passages Sammael is identified with Satan ("Sammael Satan"). It should be added that Beliar is entirely absent from the "vision" (vi.-xi.). He appears, however, in the Testament, but not, as in the Martyrdom, as a purely immaterial spirit, but as incarnate in Nero, thus fulfilling the rôle of Antichrist ("the Beliar Antichrist," iv. 2, 14, 16, 18). In exactly the same way in the Sibyllines

iv. 2¹ Belial (Beliar) descends from heaven as Antichrist, and appears as Nero, the slayer of his mother. This conception is important for the history of the Antichrist idea. Ultimately the idea may be derived from the early myth of a terrible conflict waged with the Dragon of Chaos—Tiamat—by the divine Hero, who eventually overcomes her. Here, very probably, we have the prototype of the later Antichrist legend, which has undergone so remarkable and rich a development in the course of the ages. On the principle which plays so important a rôle in eschatological development, that “Urzeit” = “Endzeit”—the last stage will reproduce the first—the transference of the idea of the mythical combat of the divine Hero with the primæval Dragon to the end of the ages is easy to understand. The conception thus arises of the battle of God with the devil at the end of the world. “It is very likely,” says Bousset,² “that Antichrist is originally nothing else than the incarnate devil, and that the idea of a battle of God with a human opponent, in whom all devilish wickedness would become incarnate, arose under the influence of definite historical conditions.” The first historical figure to be identified with Antichrist was the persecutor of the Jews, the Syrian King Antiochus Epiphanes, whose lineaments are depicted in the Book of Daniel, and who became the type of the God-opposing tyrant. Later, as in the middle section of our Book (the Testament) and in the Book of Revelation, it was Nero.³ Later still, it was discovered now in this, now in that historical character. But it must not be forgotten that the political application of the idea, though it assumed a dominating place in the later development, was not an essential or original feature of the conception. Occasionally, as in 2 Thess. ii. 3 f.—where “the man of lawlessness” = Beliar, and “he that opposeth and exalteth himself against all that is called God” = Antichrist, i. e. the combined phrase = Beliar-Antichrist—the Antichrist, freed from political associations, becomes a purely ideal figure which works in the spiritual sphere.

¹ Of Christian origin. ² Art. Antichrist (E.R.E. i. 578 f.).

³ In the Psalms of Solomon (first century B.C.), Pompey the Great, the violator of the Holy of Holies, is the Antichrist. He is referred to as “the dragon” (ii. 29) and the “sinner.” (ii. 1). For the Neronic Antichrist in Revelation, cf Rev. xvii.

A striking feature of our Book is the designation of the Messiah as “The Beloved.” This Messianic title is found in all parts of the Book, though, according to Charles it was originally peculiar to the two Christian parts, viz. to the Testament (iii. 13, 17, 18; iv. 3, 6, 9, 18), and the Vision (vii. 17, 23; viii. 18, 25; ix. 12). The passages in the Martyrdom where it occurs (i. 4, 5, 7, 13) are, he thinks, due to the final editor. There are good grounds, as Dr. Armitage Robinson has shown,¹ for believing that this title is pre-Christian. It is used in the Old Testament as a title of Israel (ὁ ἡγαπημένος LXX); cf. e. g. Deut. xxxii. 15, xxxiii. 5, 26, where it is the Greek rendering of Jeshurun (cf. also Is. xlv. 2); the terms ὁ ἡγαπημένος and ὁ ἀγαπητός also occur in Is. v. 1, 7. The transference of the title from the people as a whole to the Messiah was, therefore, perfectly natural, as the parallel cases of “Servant” and “Elect” show. Further, at the time when the Gospels were written the terms “Beloved” and “Elect” were practically interchangeable, for St. Matthew (xii. 18) writes “my Beloved" (ὁ ἀγαπητός μου), in citing Is. xlii. 1, where the Hebrew has "mine Elect," and conversely St. Luke (ix. 35), in the narrative of the Transfiguration, substitutes "Chosen" ("Elect") (ὁ ἐκλελεγμένος) for "Beloved" (Mark ix. 7). It should be added that in the phrase ὁ υἱός μου ὁ ἀγαπητός (Mark i. 11; ix. 7), ὁ ἀγαπητός is probably to be regarded as a separate title, and the rendering should be "My Son, the Beloved." The title is used also as a synonym for "Christ" in Eph. i. 6 ("his grace which he freely bestowed on us in the Beloved"), and is freely employed as a designation of Christ in early Christian writings (Ep. Barn., Clem. Rom., Ignatius, Hermas), and certain passages in the LXX where ὁ ἀγαπητός occurs were interpreted Messianically by Christian writers (e. g. Ps. xlv. [xlv] title, Zech. xii. 10). Its frequent use in our Book as a stereotyped term for the Messiah is thus an interesting link in the evidence for the gradual establishment of its use in this sense.

¹ Hastings, D.B., ii. 501.

Turning now to the Vision (vi.-xi.), we find some interesting and important features which call for comment. In ch. vii. foll. the visionary experience of the prophet is described, how he was conducted by the angel through the seven heavens, and what he saw there. We have here an elaborate description of the seven heavens, which in fulness can only be paralleled with the well-known one in the Slavonic Enoch.¹ The conception of a plurality of heavens was widespread in the ancient world, and was probably known to the ancient Babylonians, and certainly to the followers of Zoroaster, as well as to certain Greek philosophers in the West. It can be traced in the Old Testament, in the apocalyptic and New Testament writings, in the Talmud, and in early Christian literature (outside the New Testament). Ultimately it was given up by Christian theology, and was even banned as heretical. The particular conception of seven heavens seems to be due ultimately to astral theories. The sevenfold division of the planets gave birth to the sevenfold division of earth and hell in ancient Babylonian thought, and it is exceedingly probable that this division was applied to the heavens also in ancient Babylonian religion.

¹ Cf. the elaborate discussion in Charles' ed. of the Slavonic Enoch, pp. xxx.-xlvii.

In the Old Testament the conception of a plurality of the heavens is probably implicit in the Hebrew term for "heaven" (shāmayîm) which is plural in form. It comes to explicit expression in such phrases as "the heaven of heavens" (Deut. x. 14; 1 Kings viii. 27; Ps. cxlviii. 4), and the idea that Satan has access there to the very presence of God (Job i., ii.; cf. 1 Kings xxii. 19-22) may possibly point in the same direction.

It is, however, in the apocalyptic literature of Judaism that the conception is most fully elaborated. One of the fullest descriptions is found in the Test. XII Patriarchs (Levi ii. 7 f.). Here, however, as Charles and other scholars have shown, there are traces of redaction, and it is probable that the earliest (and original) form of the passage was a description of three heavens, and that this was transformed later by redaction into a description of the seven. Thus the earliest Hebrew idea of a plurality of Heavens, seems to have been that there were three, and this idea may underlie the Old Testament passages enumerated above. But by the beginning of the Christian era and subsequently the doctrine of seven heavens was firmly established in Judaism. A detailed description, as has been said, is given of them in the Slavonic Enoch (first century A.D.), and it may underlie the description of the seven "ways" or stages apportioned to souls after death in 4 Ezra vii. 90-98 (end of first century A.D.). From Jewish it passed over to Christian apocalypses such as our Book. In the Babylonian Talmud (Hag. 12^b) there is a discussion of this subject, and the doctrine that there are seven heavens is associated with the name of Resh Lakish (c. 260 A.D.). It is there reported—

Resh Lakish said: There are seven (heavens), and these be they: Vilon (= velum, "curtain"), Raḳîa', Shēḥakîm, Zebûl, Mā'ôn, Mākhôn, 'Arābôth.

It is worth noting that in the detailed description of the seven heavens given in the Slavonic Enoch a place in one of them (the third) is reserved for the damned. (Slav. Enoch x.), and in the second are the fallen angels (ch. vii.).

When we turn to the New Testament we find clear traces of the same conception. St. Paul (2 Cor. xii. 2 f.) explicitly mentions "the third heaven" as the place of location of Paradise, which agrees with the representation of the Slavonic Enoch. It has been disputed whether St. Paul's conception embraced only three or seven heavens. But in view of the evidence of the Slavonic Enoch it seems probable that the later and more developed view lies at the background of his thought. Similarly in the Epistle to the Ephesians (i. 3, 20; ii. 6; iii. 10; and vi. 12) the remarkable phrase is used "in the heavenly (places)" or "sphere" (ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις), which certainly points in the same direction. It is remarkable that the presence of evil (evil powers) "in the heavenly sphere" is here explicitly recognized (cf. Ephes. vi. 12, "against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly sphere"). We may also compare, in this connection, Col. i. 20: "to reconcile all things unto Himself, whether things upon the earth or things in the heavenly sphere." By "the things in the heavenly sphere" are meant probably either the fallen angels imprisoned in the second heaven, or "the powers of Satan whose domain is in the air" (cf. also Ephes. iii. 10). Christ is represented as having "ascended far above all the heavens" (cf. also Heb. iv. 14; vii. 26); and in Rev. xii. "war" in heaven is spoken of, Michael and his angels warring against Satan and his host, who are overthrown and expelled. This last feature gives expression to the religious feeling that found the presence of evil in heaven intolerable.

It can, of course, be argued, and with a considerable amount of truth, that this language of St. Paul and the other New Testament writers must not be unduly pressed. It is a striking fact that nowhere in the New Testament do we find a detailed or materialistic description of the heavenly sphere such as we meet with in some of the earlier apocalyptic writings. There is a marked absence of painful literalism. The dominant ideas behind the language are essentially spiritual. It is, no doubt, largely symbolical. Nor must it be forgotten that the tendency to spiritualize the old crude conception is marked in the late Jewish Apocalypse of Ezra (4 Ezra), the composition of which may be dated about 100 A.D. Nevertheless, even if this be so, it is obvious that the detailed doctrine is implied, and that in its fully developed form it had secured a firm place in first-century Judaism. This conclusion is confirmed by our Book. The part with which we are at present concerned, viz. the "Vision" (vi.-xi.) was, at the earliest, composed at the latter end of the first century A.D., and probably by a Jewish Christian. It seems not improbable that the detailed account of the seven heavens here given has been influenced by the Slavonic Enoch. The description in our Book is, perhaps, less crude and materialistic, but obviously the conception was very much alive in certain (? Jewish and Jewish Christian) circles at the end of the first century A.D. Another point of contact between the two writings may be seen in the idea of heavenly "garments" with which the righteous will be clothed, the "garments" being the spiritual bodies which are awaiting them in heaven (cf. vii. 22; viii. 14, 26; ix. 9, 17, 24-26; xi. 40; also iv. 16). According to the Slavonic Enoch (xxii. 8-10) these "garments" of the blessed are to be composed of God's glory. The New Testament parallels to this idea are referred to in the notes.

A word must be said in conclusion about the very important passage, xi. 2-22, which gives the circumstances of Christ's birth of the Virgin Mary, and emphasizes the Virgin-Birth. Several scholars, including Dillmann and Schürer, regard this section as an interpolation, and for this view there is some positive ground in the fact that the section is substantially absent from the old Latin Version and the Slavonic, which omit all references to Mary and Joseph and Christ's birth. Nevertheless, the section is probably a genuine part of the original work, as Charles rightly argues from the internal evidence. The elimination of all reference to the circumstances of the Birth may easily be explained as due to dogmatic reasons in the interests of a Docetic view of Christ. The Book certainly had an extensive circulation among heretics, and the Latin Version was preserved in these circles. We may add that it would be very extraordinary if, in a Christian writing of the latter part of the first century, which purports to narrate the vision of Isaiah about Christ and His descent from heaven to earth, no mention was made of His birth of a Virgin. The famous passage, Is. vii. 14, had received a Christian application in Jewish Christian circles, as Matt. i. shows. It is incredible that this Jewish-Christian application of the sense was unknown to the writer of the "Vision" at the end of the first century, and it would have been impossible for him to have ignored it. In any case this important section is an early attestation of the doctrine. It should be noted also that the passage, even in its complete form, reveals traces of incipient Docetism. The birth is represented as having taken place without any natural pangs. Doubtless the elimination of all reference to the birth came later, in order to satisfy the demands of the full-blown Docetic theory. The conception of the Trinity is also interesting. The Son and the Holy Spirit are worshipped (ix. 27-36), but they also worship God (ix. 39-40); and the Holy Spirit is referred to as an angel ("the Angel of the Spirit" or "the Angel of the Holy Spirit"). This representation seems also to be characteristically Jewish Christian.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The works of Laurence and Dillmann have already been referred to. The most complete and important edition of the Book both for the texts of the versions, translation, interpretation and criticism is that of Dr. Charles : The Ascension of Isaiah (London, 1900).¹

Dillmann's text has also been translated into French by Basset : Les Apocryphes Éthiopiens, iii., L'Ascension d'Isaïe (1894).

An important study of the Martyrdom has been published by the Jewish scholar, J. Halévy, in his Études évangéliques (Paris, 1903), pp. 65 ff.

Reference may also be made to the articles Isaiah, Ascension of, in Hastings' D.B. (by Dr. Armitage Robinson, important), in J.E. and in Wace's Dictionary of Christian Biography. Schürer has discussed questions of Introduction in § 32, vi. of his History of the Jewish People in the Time of Christ, and gives a conspectus of the passages in the patristic literature which refer to our Book. In the corresponding section of the last German edition a full and up-to-date Bibliography is given.

¹ An edition of the Martyrdom (only), by Charles, is included in the Oxford Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, ii. 155-162. In the German Die Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen, ed. by Kautzsch, an edition of the Martyrdom (only) is included (by Beer).

SHORT TITLES, SYMBOLS AND BRACKETS USED IN THIS EDITION

1 Enoch = the Ethiopic Book of Enoch.

2 Enoch = the Slavonic Book of Enoch.

Ap. Bar. = the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch.

G denotes the lost Greek archetype of G¹ G².

G¹ denotes the lost Greek text from which EL¹ were translated, and on which the Gk. Leg. was based.

G² denotes the Greek text from which SL² were translated, of which ii. 4-iv. 2 has now been recovered.

E denotes the Ethiopic Version.

S denotes the Slavonic Version.

L¹ denotes the Latin Version from G¹ (consisting of ii. 14-iii. 13; vii. 1-19).

L² denotes the Latin Version from G² (consisting of vi.-xi.).

⌈ ⌋. The use of these brackets in the English translation of E means that the words so enclosed are found in G¹ and not in G². In certain cases the words peculiar either to G¹ or G² are derived from G.

(). The words or letters so enclosed are supplied by the editor.

* *. The words so enclosed are emendations of the text.

† †. The words so enclosed are corrupt.

[]. The words so enclosed are interpolated.

D.B. = Dictionary of the Bible, and E.R.E. = Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics. Both edited by Dr. Hastings.

J.E. = Jewish Encyclopædia.

Presumed additions by the final editor of the whole composite work are indicated in the text of the translation by italic type.

THE ASCENSION OF ISAIAH

PART I

The Martyrdom of Isaiah¹ (I. 1-III. 12).

I. 1. And it came to pass in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of Hezekiah king of Judah that he called Manasseh his son. Now he was his only one. 2. And he called him into the presence of Isaiah the son of Amoz the prophet, and into the presence of Jôsâb² the son of Isaiah, in order to deliver unto him the words of righteousness which the king himself had seen: 3. *And of the eternal judgements and the torments of Gehenna³ and of the prince of this world,⁴ and of his angels, and his authorities and his powers,* 4. And the words of the faith of the Beloved⁵ which he himself had seen in the fifteenth year⁶ of his reign during his illness. 5. And he delivered unto him the written words which Samnas the scribe had written⁷ and also those which Isaiah, the

¹ The extracts from the Jewish Martyrdom of Isaiah are contained (with certain editorial additions indicated by italic type) in i. 1-iii. 12+v. 1b-14. Between these sections the Testament of Hezekiah (iii. 13b-iv. 18) is inserted.

² Jôsâb = (Shear)-Jashub; cf. Is. vii. 3.

³ Gehenna: cf. iv. 14 (not again in this book).

⁴ Prince of this world, i. e. Beliar; cf. ii. 4; iv. 2; x. 29.

⁵ i. e. the Messiah, a title frequently occurring in this book (and probably pre-Christian in this sense).

⁶ Cf. 2 Kings xx. 1-6; Is. xxxviii. 1-20.

⁷ Samnas = Shebna (so vi. 17); verses 5b-6 are a summary description of the Vision of Isaiah contained in chaps. vi.-xi.

son of Amoz, had given to him, and also to the prophets, that they might write and store up with him what he himself had seen in the king's house regarding the judgement of the angels,¹ and the destruction of this world, and regarding the garments of the saints and †their† going forth, and regarding †their† transformation and the persecution and ascension of the Beloved.

6. In the twentieth year of the reign of Hezekiah, Isaiah had seen the words of this prophecy and had delivered them to Jôsâb his son. And whilst he (Hezekiah) gave commands, Jôsâb the son of Isaiah standing by,

7. Isaiah said to Hezekiah the king, but not in the presence of Manasseh only did he say unto him : " As the Lord liveth, whose name hath not been sent into this world, and as the Beloved of my Lord liveth, and the Spirit which speaketh in me ² liveth, all these commands and these words will be made of none effect by Manasseh thy son, and through the agency of his hands I shall depart mid the torture of my body. 8. And Sammael Malchîrâ ³ will serve Manasseh, and execute all his desire, and he will become a follower of Beliar ⁴ rather than of me : 9. And many in Jerusalem and in Judæa he will cause to abandon the true faith, and Beliar will dwell in Manasseh, and by his hands I shall be

¹ The Messiah will judge the angels; cf. iv. 18, x. 12; according to one view the saints will act as the Messiah's assessors at the judgement, cf. 1 Cor. vi. 3 (1 Thess. iii. 13).

² The Holy Spirit speaks through the prophets; cf. ix. 36.

³ Sammael, originally one of the chief archangels, tempted Eve, and became the chief of the Satans and the angel of death: see further J.E. x. 665 f. (art. Sammael. For Malchira cf. Introduction, p. xvii.).

⁴ Beliar later identified with Satan (in the Sibyllines with Antichrist). See Introduction, p. xv ff.

sawn asunder." 10. And when Hezekiah heard these words he wept very bitterly, and rent his garments, and placed earth upon his head, and fell on his face. 11. And Isaiah said unto him: "The counsel of Sammael against Manasseh is consummated: nought will avail thee." 12. And on that day Hezekiah resolved in his heart to slay Manasseh his son. 13. And Isaiah said to Hezekiah: "The Beloved hath made of none effect thy design, and the purpose of thy heart will not be accomplished, for with this calling have I been called and I shall inherit the heritage of the Beloved."

II. 1. And it came to pass after that Hezekiah died and Manasseh became king, that he did not remember the commands¹ of Hezekiah his father but forgot² them, and Sammael abode in Manasseh and clung fast to him. 2. And Manasseh forsook the service of the God of his father, and he served Satan and his angels and his powers. 3. And he turned aside the house of his father which had been before the face of Hezekiah (from) the words of wisdom and from the service of God. 4. And Manasseh turned aside his heart to serve Beliar; for the angel of lawlessness, who is the ruler³ of this world, is Beliar, whose name is Matanbûchûs.⁴ And he delighted in Jerusalem because of Manasseh, and he made him strong in apostatizing (Israel) and in the lawlessness which was spread abroad

¹ Cf. i. 6. 7.

² forgot, a play on the name Manasseh (in Hebrew); cf. Gen. xli. 51.

³ ruler of this world is Beliar: cf. x. 29; John xii. 31, xvi. 11 (prince of this world); 2 Cor. iv. 4 (god of this world); Ephes. vi. 12.

⁴ Matanbûchûs, meaning uncertain—possibly = "worthless gift" (Lücke): but cf. Introduction, p. xvi.

in Jerusalem. 5. And witchcraft¹ and magic increased, and divination and auguration, and fornication, [and adultery], and the persecution² of the righteous by Manasseh and [Belachîrâ, and] Tobia the Canaanite,³ and John of Anathoth,³ and by (Zadok) the chief of the works.³ 6. And the rest of the acts, behold they are written in the book of the Kings of Judah and Israel. 7. And, when Isaiah, the son of Amoz, saw the lawlessness which was being perpetrated in Jerusalem and the worship of Satan and his wantonness, he withdrew from Jerusalem and settled in Bethlehem of Judah. 8. And there also there was much lawlessness, and withdrawing from Bethlehem he settled on a mountain in a desert place. 9. And Micaiah⁴ the prophet, and the aged Ananias, and Joel and Habakkuk, and his son Jôsâb, and many of the faithful who believed in the ascension into heaven, withdrew and settled on the mountain. 10. They were all clothed with garments of hair,⁵ and they were all prophets. And they had nothing with them, but were naked, and they all lamented with a great lamentation because of the going astray of Israel. 11. And these ate nothing save wild herbs⁶ which they gathered on the mountains, and having cooked them, they lived thereon together

¹ witchcraft, etc.: cf. 2 Kings xxi. 6.

² Cf. 2 Kings xxi. 16.

³ Unknown.

⁴ And Micaiah, etc., cf. vi. 7. "The aged Ananias" may possibly be Hanani, father of Jehu, a prophet: cf. 1 Kings xvi. 1-7.

⁵ Cf. Matt. iii. 4.

⁶ Cf. 4 Ezra ix. 26; Dan. x. 2, 3. Such asceticism was one of the most esteemed ways of preparing for the reception of a divine revelation.

with Isaiah the prophet. And they spent two years of days on the mountains and hills. 12. And after this, whilst they were in the desert, there was a certain man in Samaria named Belchîrâ, of the family of Zedekiah, the son of Chenaan,¹ a false prophet, whose dwelling was in Bethlehem. Now †Hezekiah †² the son of Chanânî, who was the brother of his father, and in the days of Ahab, king of Israel, had been the teacher of the 400 prophets of Baal,³ had himself smitten⁴ and reproved Micaiah the son of Amâdâ the prophet. 13. And he, Micaiah, had been reproved by Ahab and cast into prison. (And he was) with Zedekiah the prophet: they were with Ahaziah the son of Ahab, king in Samaria. 14. And Elijah the prophet of Têbôn⁵ of Gilead was reproving Ahaziah and Samaria, and prophesied⁶ regarding Ahaziah that he should die on his bed of sickness, and that Samaria should be delivered into the hand of Leba Nâsr⁷ because he had slain the prophets of God. 15. And when the false prophets, who were with Ahaziah the son of Ahab and their teacher Jâlerjâs of Mount †Joel†, had heard—16. Now he was a brother of Zedekiah—when they had heard, they persuaded Ahaziah the king of †Agua-rôn †⁸ and (slew) Micaiah.

¹ For this false prophet cf. 1 Kings xxii. 11.

² Apparently a mistake for Zedekiah (i. e. the same person as the one just before mentioned). This Zedekiah was an uncle of Belchîrâ.

³ Cf. 1 Kings xviii. 22 (confused here with 1 Kings xxii. 6).

⁴ Cf. 1 Kings xxii. 24 (Micaiah, son of Imlah, in 1 Kings).

⁵ Têbôn = Thisbe, a town of Naphtali; cf. 1 Kings xvii. 1, where "of the sojourners of" is taken by LXX as = "of Thisbe."

⁶ Cf. 2 Kings i. 1-6.

⁷ Corrupt for Salmanassar.

⁸ Read Gomorrha with the Latin.

III. 1. And Belchîrâ recognized and saw the place of Isaiah and the prophets who were with him; for he dwelt in the region of Bethlehem, and was an adherent of Manasseh. And he prophesied falsely in Jerusalem, and many belonging to Jerusalem were confederate with him, and he was a Samaritan. 2. And it came to pass when Alagar Zagâr,¹ king of Assyria, had come and captured Samaria and taken the nine (and a half) tribes² captive, and led them away to the mountains of the Medes and the rivers of Tâzôn;³ 3. This (Belchîrâ), whilst still a youth, had escaped and come to Jerusalem in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, but he walked not in the ways of his father of Samaria; for he feared Hezekiah. 4. And he was found in the days of Hezekiah speaking words of lawlessness in Jerusalem. 5. And the servants of Hezekiah accused him, and he made his escape to the region of Bethlehem. And *they*⁴ persuaded . . . 6. And Balchîrâ accused Isaiah and the prophets who were with him, saying: "Isaiah and those who are with him prophesy against Jerusalem and against the cities of Judah that they shall be laid waste, and (against the children of Judah and) Benjamin also that they shall go into captivity, and also against thee, O Lord the king, that thou shalt go (bound) with hooks and iron chains:" 7. But they prophesy falsely against Israel and Judah. 8. And Isaiah himself hath said: "I see more than Moses the prophet." 9. But Moses

¹ Read Salmanassar with the Latin.

² i. e. the (northern) Kingdom of Israel; cf. 4 Ezra xiii. 40, and Ap. Bar. lxii. 5, etc.

³ i. e. Gozan: cf. 2 Kings xvii. 6; xviii. 11.

⁴ i. e.? the false prophets; the missing object may be Balchirâ (Grenfell and Hunt).

said : " No man can see God and live " ; ¹ and Isaiah hath said : " I have seen God and, behold, I live." ² 10. Know, therefore, O king, that he is lying And Jerusalem also he hath called Sodom, and the princes of Judah and Jerusalem he hath declared to be the people of Gomorrah.³ And he brought many accusations against Isaiah and the prophets before Manasseh. 11. But Beliar dwelt in the heart of Manasseh and in the heart of the princes of Judah and Benjamin and of the eunuchs and of the counsellors of the king. 12. And the words of Belchirâ pleased him [exceedingly]. and he sent and seized Isaiah.

PART II (iii. 13-v. 1a)

The Testament of Hezekiah (iii. 13*b*-iv. 18).

13. For Beliar was in great wrath against Isaiah by reason of the vision, and because of the exposure wherewith he had exposed Sammael, and because through him the going forth of the Beloved from the seventh heaven had been made known, and His transformation and His descent and the likeness into which He should be transformed, (that is) the likeness of man, and the persecution wherewith He should be persecuted, and the tortures wherewith the children of Israel should torture Him, and the coming of His twelve disciples, and the teaching, and that He should before the Sabbath be crucified upon the tree, and should be crucified together with wicked men, and that He should be buried in the sepulchre. 14. And the twelve who were with Him should be offended because of Him : ⁴ and the watch of those who watched the sepulchre : ¹ 15. And the descent of the angel of the Christian Church,² which is in the heavens, whom He will summon in the last days. 16. And that (Gabriel) the angel of the Holy Spirit,³ and Michael, the chief of the holy angels, on the third day will open the sepulchre : 17. And the Beloved sitting on their shoulders will come forth and send out His twelve disciples : 18. And they will teach all the nations ⁴ and every tongue of the resurrection of the Beloved, and those who believe in His cross ⁵ will be saved, and in His ascension into the seventh heaven whence He came : 19. And that many who believe in Him will speak through the Holy Spirit : 20. And many signs and wonders will be wrought in those days. 21. And afterwards, on the eve of His approach, His disciples will forsake the teaching of the Twelve Apostles, and their faith, and their love and their purity.⁶ 22. And there will be much contention ⁷ on the eve of [His advent and] His approach. 23. And in those days many will love office, though devoid of wisdom. 24. And there will be many lawless elders, and shepherds dealing wrongly by their own sheep, and they will ravage (them) owing to their not having holy shepherds. 25. And many will change the honour of the garments of the saints for the garments of the covetous,⁸ and there will be much respect of persons in those days and lovers of the honour of this world. 26. And there will be much slander and vainglory at the approach of the Lord, and the Holy Spirit will withdraw

¹ Ex. xxxiii. 20. ² Is. vi. 1. ³ Cf. Is. i. 10. ⁴ Matt. xxvi. 31.

¹ Cf. Matt. xxviii. 4.

² Cf. Rev. ii. 1, 8, etc.

³ Cf. iv. 21; vii. 23; ix. 36, 39, 40; x. 4; xi. 4, 33. The phrase usually means the Holy Spirit.

⁴ Cf. Matt. xxviii. 19.

⁵ Cf. ix. 26.

⁶ Cf. 1 Tim. iv. 12.

⁷ Cf. 1 Tim. iv. 1; 2 Pet. ii. 1.

⁸ Cf. 2 Tim. iii. 1, 2.

from many. 27. And there will not be in those days many prophets, nor those who speak trustworthy words, save one here and there in divers places, 28. On account of the spirit of error¹ and fornication and of vainglory, and of covetousness, which shall be in those, who will be called servants of that One² and in those who will receive that One. 29. And there will be great hatred in the shepherds and elders towards each other. 30. For there will be great jealousy in the last days; for every one will say what is pleasing in his own eyes. 31. And they will make of none effect the prophecy of the prophets which were before me,³ and these my visions also will they make of none effect, in order to speak after the impulse of their own heart.

IV. 1. And now Hezekiah and Jôsâb my son, these are the days of the completion of the world. 2. After it is consummated, Beliar the great ruler, the king of this world, will descend, who hath ruled it since it came into being; yea, he will descend from his firmament⁴ in the likeness of a man, a lawless king, the slayer of his mother:⁵ who himself (even) this king 3. Will persecute the plant⁶ which the Twelve Apostles of the Beloved have planted. Of the Twelve one will be delivered into

¹ Cf. 1 John iv. 6.

² i. e. The Beloved.

³ The false teachers repudiate the Old Testament. This rather suggests Gnostic teachers.

⁴ As distinct from the first heaven above it.

⁵ The allusion seems to be to Nero, who is identified with Antichrist: cf. Sib. Or. iv. 121; v. 145, 363, etc. For Antichrist as "the man of lawlessness," cf. 2 Thess. ii. 3 (R.V. marg.).

⁶ i. e. the Church. For "plant of righteousness" = Israel: cf. 1 Enoch xciii. 5.

his hands.¹ 4. This ruler in the form of that king will come and there will come with him all the powers of this world,² and they will hearken unto him in all that he desireth. 5. And at his word the sun will rise at night and he will make the moon to appear at the sixth hour.³ 6. And all that he hath desired he will do in the world : he will do and speak like the Beloved and he will say : " I am God and before me there hath been none." ⁴ 7. And all the people in the world will believe in him. 8. And they will sacrifice to him and they will serve him saying : " This is God and beside him there is no other." ⁵ 9. And the greater number of those who shall have been associated together in order to receive the Beloved, he will turn aside after him.⁶ 10. And there will be the power of his miracles in every city and region. 11. And he will set up his image⁷ before him in every city. 12. And he shall bear sway three years and seven months and twenty-seven days.⁸ 13. And many believers and saints having seen ⁹ Him for whom they were hoping, who was crucified, Jesus the Lord Christ, [after that I, Isaiah, had seen Him who was crucified and ascended] and those also who were believers in Him—of these ¹ i. e. probably St. Peter, who, with St. Paul, suffered martyrdom in the Neronian persecution (64–65 A.D.).

² Cf. Rev. xx. 7–9; xvi. 14.

³ Cf. 4 Ezra v. 4 (2 Thess. ii. 9; Rev. xiii. 14; xix. 20).

⁴ Cf. 2 Thess. ii. 4 (Rev. xiii. 5 f.).

⁵ Cf. Rev. xiii. 4, 8, 12.

⁶ Cf. Matt. xxiv. 24; Mark xiii. 22.

⁷ Cf. Rev. xiii. 14. Images of the Roman Emperor were set up in various cities to be worshipped.

⁸ i. e. 1335 days = Dan. xii. 12. The last period of three and a half years marks the reign of Antichrist.

⁹ i. e. personally (cf. John xx. 29); this points to the first century.

few in those days will be left ¹ as His servants, while they flee ² from desert to desert, awaiting the coming ³ of the Beloved. 14. And after (one thousand) three hundred and thirty-two ⁴ days the Lord will come with His angels and with the armies of the holy ones ⁵ from the seventh heaven with the glory of the seventh heaven, and He will drag Beliar into Gehenna ⁶ and also his armies. 15. And He will give rest ⁷ to the godly whom He shall find in the body ⁸ in this world,⁹ [and the sun will be ashamed]: 16. And to all who because of (their) faith in Him have execrated Beliar and his kings.¹⁰ But the saints will come with the Lord ¹¹ with their garments ¹² which are (now) stored up on high in the seventh heaven: with the Lord they will come, whose spirits are clothed,¹³ they will descend and be present in the world,¹⁴ and He will strengthen those who have been found in the body, together with the saints,¹⁵ in the garments of the saints, and the Lord will minister to those who have kept watch in

¹ Cf. Luke xviii. 8.

² i. e. from before the Antichrist; cf. Mark xiii. 14 f.; Rev. xii. 6, 14.

³ Cf. 1 Cor. i. 7; Phil. iii. 20, etc.

⁴ ? read thirty-five (1335 days); see iv. 12.

⁵ i. e. the angels; cf. 2 Thess. i. 7; Jude 14; 1 Enoch i, 4, 9.

⁶ Cf. Rev. xix. 20.

⁷ i. e. refreshment; cf. Acts iii. 19.

⁸ Cf. 1 Thess. iv. 17.

⁹ According to some apocalyptic writers they must be gathered in Palestine in order to secure the Messianic salvation; cf. 4 Ezra ix. 8; xiii. 48.

¹⁰ Cf. Rev. xvii. 12-13.

¹¹ Cf. 1 Thess. iii. 13; iv. 14.

¹² Cf. Rev. iii. 4, 5, 18; iv. 4; vi. 11, etc.

¹³ i. e. with spiritual bodies; cf. 1 Cor. xv. 44.

¹⁴ This is the first resurrection (of certain saints): cf. Rev. xx. 1-6.

¹⁵ i. e., the glorified saints who had descended.

this world. 17. And afterwards they¹ will turn themselves upward in their garments, and their body will be left in the world. 18. Then the voice of the Beloved will in wrath rebuke the things of heaven and the things of earth and the mountains and the hills and the cities and the desert and the forests and the angel of the sun² and that of the moon, and all things wherein Beliar manifested himself and acted openly in this world, and there will be [a resurrection and] a judgement in their midst in those days, and the Beloved will cause fire³ to go forth from Him, and it will consume all the godless,⁴ and they will be as though they had not been created. 19. *And the rest of the words of the vision are written in the vision of Babylon.*⁵ 20. And the rest of the vision regarding the Lord, behold, it is written in the parables according to my words which are written in the book which I publicly prophesied. 21. *And the descent of the Beloved into Sheol, behold, it is written in the section, where the Lord saith: "Behold, my Son will understand."*⁶ And all these things, behold they are written [in the Psalms] in the parables⁷ of David, the son of Jesse, and in the Proverbs of Solomon his son, and in the words of Korah, and Ethan the Israelite, and in the words of Asaph, and in the rest of the Psalms also which the angel of the Spirit inspired, 22. (Namely) in those which have not the

¹ i. e. the saints found alive on the earth.

² Cf. Rev. xix. 17, and (for the other angels mentioned) 1 Enoch lx. 12-21; Rev. vii. 1, 2; xiv. 18. Jubilees ii.

³ Cf. 2 Thess. i. 8; ii. 8 (Is. xi. 4).

⁴ Cf. 4 Ezra xii. 33; xiii. 38, 49.

⁵ Cf. Is. xiii. 1 (LXX).

⁶ i. e. Is. lii. 13 (LXX). Perhaps the Descent was supposed to be referred to in Is. liii. 8 (Charles).

⁷ "Parables," i. e. songs.

name written,¹ and in the words of my father Amoz, and of Hosea the prophet, and of Micah and Joel and Nahum and Jonah and Obadiah and Habakkuk and Haggai and Zephaniah and Zechariah and Malachi, and in the words of Joseph the Just² and in the words of Daniel.

PART III (v. 1-14)

The Martyrdom of Isaiah (v. 1b-14) resumed from iii. 12).

V. 1. On account of these visions, therefore, Beliar was wroth with Isaiah, and he dwelt in the heart of Manasseh and he sawed him in sunder with a wooden saw. 2. And when Isaiah was being sawn in sunder Balchîrâ stood up, accusing him, and all the false prophets stood up, laughing and rejoicing because of Isaiah. 3. And Balchîrâ, with the aid of Mechêmbêchûs,³ stood up before Isaiah, [laughing] deriding; 4. And Balchîrâ said to Isaiah: ⁴ "Say: 'I have lied in all that I have spoken, and likewise the ways of Manasseh are good and right. 5. And the ways also of Balchîrâ and of his associates are good.'" 6. And this he said to him when he began to be sawn in sunder. 7. But Isaiah was (absorbed) in a vision of the Lord, and though his eyes were open, he saw them (not). 8. And Balchîrâ spake thus to Isaiah: "Say what I say unto thee and I will turn their heart, and I will compel Manasseh and the princes of Judah and the people and all Jerusalem to reverence

¹ viz. those psalms with no ascription of authorship (e.g. Pss. i. and ii.).

² Probably a pseudepigraphic work entitled The Prayer of Joseph, only known from a few citations: see Hastings, D.B. ii. 778.

³ Cf. ii. 4 (note) = ? Matanbûchûs, i. e. Beliar.

⁴ Verses 4-8 contain the Temptation of Isaiah by Balchîrâ.

thee. 9. And Isaiah answered and said: "So far as I have utterance (I say): Damned and accursed be thou and all thy powers¹ and all thy house. 10. For thou canst not take (from me) aught save the skin of my body." 11. And they seized and sawed in sunder Isaiah, the son of Amoz, with a wooden saw. 12. And Manasseh and Balchîrâ and the false prophets and the princes and the people [and] all stood looking on. 13. And to the prophets who were with him he said before he had been sawn in sunder: "Go ye to the region of Tyre and Sidon; for for me only hath God mingled the cup."² 14. And when Isaiah was being sawn in sunder, he neither cried aloud nor wept, but his lips spake with the Holy Spirit until he was sawn in twain. 15. This Beliar did to Isaiah through Balchîrâ and Manasseh; for Sammael was very wrathful against Isaiah from the days of Hezekiah, king of Judah, on account of the things which he had seen regarding the Beloved, 16. And on account of the destruction of Sammael, which he had seen through the Lord, while Hezekiah his father was still king. And he did according to the will of Satan.

PART IV

The Vision of Isaiah (vi. 1-xi. 43).

THE VISION WHICH ISAIAH THE SON OF AMOZ SAW.

VI. 1. In the twentieth year of the reign of Hezekiah, king of Judah, came Isaiah the son of Amoz,

¹ Balchîrâ is here addressed by Isaiah as a personification of Beliar.

² For the figure of the cup in this connection cf. Mark x. 38; xiv. 36, and parallels.

and Jôsâb, the son of Isaiah, to Hezekiah to Jerusalem "from Galgalâ". 2. And (having entered) he sat down on the couch of the king, "and they brought him a seat, but he would not sit (thereon)". 3. "And when Isaiah began to speak the words of faith and truth with King Hezekiah", all the princes of Israel were seated and the eunuchs and the councillors of the king. And there were there "forty" prophets and sons of the prophets: they had come from the villages and from the mountains and the plains when they had heard that Isaiah was coming from Galgalâ to Hezekiah. 4. "And they had come" to salute him "and to hear his words. 5. And that he might place his hands upon them," and that they might prophesy and that he might hear their prophecy: "and they were all before Isaiah." 6. And when Isaiah was speaking "to Hezekiah" the words of truth and faith, they all heard †a door which one had opened and† ¹ the voice of the Holy Spirit. 7. And the king summoned all the prophets and all the people who were found there, and they came. And Micaiah and the aged Ananias and Joel "and Jôsâb" sat on his right hand (and on the left). 8. And it came to pass when they had all heard the voice of the Holy Spirit, they all worshipped on their knees, and glorified the God "of truth", the Most High "who is in the upper world and who sitteth on high the Holy One and" who resteth among His holy ones.² 9. "And they gave glory to Him" †who had thus bestowed a door in an alien world, had bestowed (it) on a man†.¹ 10. And as he was speaking in the Holy Spirit in the hearing of all, he became silent "and his mind was taken up from him" and he saw not² the men that stood before him, 11. Though his eyes, indeed, were open. Moreover, his lips were silent "and the mind in his body was taken up from him." 12. But his breath was in him; "for he was seeing a vision."³ 13. And the angel who was sent to make him see was not of this firmament,⁴ nor was he of the angels of glory of this world, but he had come from the seventh heaven." 14. And the people who stood near did (not) think, but †the circle of the prophets (did)†,⁵ that the holy Isaiah had been taken up. 15. And the vision which the holy Isaiah saw was not from this world but from the world which is hidden from the flesh. 16. And after Isaiah had seen this vision, he narrated it to Hezekiah, and to Jôsâb his son "and to the other prophets who had come. 17. But the leaders and the eunuchs and the people did not hear, but only Samna⁶ the scribe, and †Ijôaqêm, and†⁷ Asaph the recorder; for these also were doers of righteousness, and the †sweet smell†⁸ of the Spirit was upon them. But the people had not heard; for Micaiah and Jôsâb his son had caused them to go forth, when the wisdom of this world had been taken from him and he became as one dead.

¹ A door, etc. The text of verse 6 seems to be corrupt. Perhaps we should read with the Latin (L²): Then he spake words of truth; the Holy Spirit came upon him, and all saw and heard words of the Holy Spirit.

² Cf. Is. lvii. 15 (LXX).

¹ who had thus bestowed, etc. Text corrupt: read with Charles who had thus bestowed such excellence of words on a man in the world.

² Cf. v. 7. ³ A description of the ecstatic state.

⁴ The abode of Beliar; cf. iv. 2.

⁵ Corrupt: read The prophets recognized.

⁶ = Samnas (i. 5), i. e. Shebna.

⁷ ? read Joah the son of (Asaph); cf. Is. xxxvi. 3 (Charles).

⁸ or good pleasure (= εὐδοκία): so Charles.

VII. 1. And the vision which Isaiah saw, he told to Hezekiah and Jôsâb his son^π and Micaiah and the rest of the prophets, (and) said: 2. At this moment, when I prophesied according to the (words) heard which ye heard, I saw a glorious angel not like unto the glory of the angels which I used always to see, but possessing such glory and †position† that I cannot describe ^πthe glory^π ^πof that angel^π. 3. And having seized me by my hand he raised me on high, and I said unto him: "Who art thou, and what is thy name, and whither art thou raising me on high?" For strength was given me to speak with him. 4. And he said unto me: "When I have raised thee on high [through the (various) degrees] and made thee see the vision, on account of which I have been sent, then thou wilt understand who I am: but my name thou dost not know: 5. Because thou wilt return into this thy body, but whither I am raising thee on high, thou wilt see; ^πfor for this purpose have I been sent."^π 6. And I rejoiced because he spake courteously to me. 7. And he said unto me: "Hast thou rejoiced because I have spoken courteously to thee?" And he said: "And thou wilt see how a greater also than I am will speak courteously and peaceably with thee. 8. And †His Father also who is greater†¹ thou wilt see; for for this purpose have I been sent from the seventh heaven in order to explain all these things unto thee." 9. And we ascended to the firmament, I and he,² and there I saw Sammael and his hosts, and there was great fighting therein, ¹ Read One more eminent man the Greater Himself (Charles).

² Cf. the ascent of Abraham and the angel, and the meeting with Azazel, in Ap. Abraham, ch. xii. foll.

and the angels of Satan were envying one another. 10. And as above so on the earth also; for the likeness of that which is in the firmament is here on the earth. 11. And I said unto the angel (who was with me): “(What is this war and) what is this envying?” 12. And he said unto me: “So hath it been since this world was made until now, and this war (will continue) till He, whom thou shalt see will come and destroy him. 13. And afterwards he caused me to ascend (to that which is) above the firmament: which is the (first) heaven. 14. And there I saw a throne ¹ in the midst, and on his right and on his left were angels. 15. ¶And (the angels on the left were) not like unto the angels who stood on the right², but those who stood on the right had the greater glory, and they all praised with one voice, ¶and there was a throne ³ in the midst⁴, and those who were on the left gave praise after them; but their voice was not such as the voice of those on the right, nor their praise like the praise of those. 16. And I asked the angel who conducted me, and I said unto him: “To whom is this praise sent?” 17. And he said unto me: “(It is sent) to the praise of (Him who sitteth in) the seventh heaven: to Him †who resteth in the holy world†,⁴ and to His Beloved, whence I have been sent to thee. [Thither is it sent.]” 18. And again he made me to ascend to the second heaven. Now the height of that heaven is the same as from the heaven to the earth

¹ ? “an angel belonging to the order called ‘Thrones’” (Charles); cf. Col. i. 16; Test. Lev. iii. 8.

² For the superiority of right to left, cf. vii. 29, 30, 33, 34, and see further J.E. x. 419 f. (art. right and left).

³ i. e. ? an angel.

⁴ = ? to Him who inhabiteth eternity (Is. lvii. 15): cf. vi. 8.

[and to the firmament]. 19. And (I saw there, as) in the first heaven, angels on the right and on the left, ¶and a throne in the midst, and the praise of the angels in the second heaven; and he who sat on the throne in the second heaven was more glorious than all (the rest).¶ 20. And there was great glory in the second heaven, and the praise also was not like the praise of those who were in the first heaven. 21. And I fell on my face to worship him,¹ but the angel who conducted me did not permit me, but said unto me : “ Worship neither throne nor angel which belongeth to the six heavens—for for this cause I was sent to conduct thee—until I tell thee ¶in the seventh heaven¶. 22. For above all the heavens and their angels hath thy throne been placed, and thy garments ² and thy crown which thou shalt see.” 23. And I rejoiced with great joy, that those who love the Most High and His Beloved will afterwards ascend thither by the angel of the Holy Spirit. 24. And he raised me to the third heaven, and in like manner I saw those upon the right and upon the left, and there was a throne there in the midst; but the memorial of this world is there unheard of. 25. ¶And I said to the angel who was with me;¶ for the glory of my appearance was undergoing transformation as I ascended to each heaven in turn : “ Nothing ¶of the vanity¶ of that world is here named.” 26. And he answered me, and said unto me : “ Nothing is named on account of its weakness, and nothing is hidden there of what is done.” 27. ¶And I wished to learn how it is known, and he answered me saying : “ When I have raised thee to the seventh heaven whence I was sent, to that which is above these, then thou shalt know that there is nothing hidden from the thrones and from those who dwell in the heavens and from the angels."¶ And the praise wherewith they praised and the glory of him who sat on the throne was great, ¶and the glory of the angels on the right hand and on the left was beyond that of the heaven which was below them¶. 28. And again he raised me to the fourth heaven, and the height from the third to the fourth heaven was greater than from the earth to the firmament. 29. And there again I saw those who were on the right hand and those who were on the left, ¶and him who sat on the throne (who) was in the midst¶, and there also they were praising. 30. And the praise and glory of the angels on the right was greater than that of those on the left. 31. And again the glory of him who sat on the throne was greater than that of the angels on the right, and their glory was beyond that of those who were below. 32. And he raised me to the fifth heaven. 33. And again I saw ¶those upon the right hand and on the left, and him who sat on the throne possessing greater glory than those of the fourth heaven¶. 34. And the glory of those on the right hand was greater than that of those ¶on the left [from the third to the fourth]. 35. And the glory of him who was on the throne was greater than that of the angels on the right hand¶. 36. And their praise was more glorious than that of the fourth heaven. 37. ¶And I praised Him, who is not named and the Only-begotten¶ ¹ who dwelleth in the heavens, whose name is not known to any flesh, who hath bestowed such glory on the several heavens, ¶and who maketh great the glory of the angels, and more excellent the glory of Him who sitteth on the throne¹.

¹ Cf. Rev. xix. 10; xxii. 8, 9.² Cf. iv. 16.

¹ Cf. John i. 16, 18; iii. 16, 18.

VIII. 1. And again he raised me into the air of the sixth heaven, and I saw such glory as I had not seen in the five heavens. 2. For I saw angels possessing great glory. 3. And the praise there was holy and wonderful. 4. And I said to the angel who conducted me: "What is this which I see, my Lord?" 5. And he said: "I am not thy lord, but thy fellow-servant."¹ 6. And again I asked him, and I said unto him: "Why are there not angelic fellow-servants (on the left)?"² 7. And he said: "From the sixth heaven there are no longer angels on the left, nor a throne set in the midst, but (they are directed) by the power of the seventh heaven, where dwelleth He that is not named² 8. "and the Elect One, whose name hath not been made known, and none of the heavens can learn His name".³ 8. For it is He alone to whose voice all the heavens and thrones give answer. I have "therefore been empowered and" sent to raise thee here that thou mayest see this glory. 9. And that thou mayest see the Lord of all those heavens and these thrones, 10. "Undergoing (successive) transformation until He resembleth your form and likeness." 11. I indeed say unto thee, Isaiah; No man about to return into a body of that world hath "ascended or" seen what thou seest or perceived what thou hast perceived and what thou wilt see. 12. For it hath been permitted to thee in the lot of the Lord to come hither⁴ [and from thence cometh the power of the sixth heaven and of the air]." 13. And I

¹ Cf. Rev. xix. 10; xxii. 8, 9.

² i. e. The Ineffable.

³ Cf. Rev. ii. 17; xix. 12.

⁴ i. e. the seventh heaven.

magnified my Lord with praise, in that through His lot I should come hither. 14 And he said : " "Hear, furthermore, therefore, this also from thy fellow-servant"; when from the body by the will of God thou hast ascended hither, then thou wilt receive the garment ¹ "which thou seest, and likewise other numbered garments laid up (there) thou wilt see", 15. And then thou wilt become equal to the angels of the seventh heaven." 16. And he raised me up into the sixth heaven, and there were no (angels) on the left, nor a throne in the midst, but all had one appearance ² and their (power of) praise was equal. 17. And (power) was given to me also, and I also praised along with them and that angel also,³ and our praise was like theirs. 18. And there they †all named the primal Father† and His Beloved, "the Christ" and the Holy Spirit, all with one voice. 19. And (their voice) was not like the voice of the angels in the five heavens, 20. [Nor like their discourse] but the voice was different there, and there was much light there. 21. And then, when I was in the sixth heaven I thought the light which I had seen in the five heavens to be but darkness.⁴ 22. And I rejoiced and praised Him who hath bestowed such lights on those who wait for His promise. 23. And I besought the angel who conducted me that I should not henceforth ¹ Cf. viii. 26; ix. 9, 24, 25; xi. 3, 5.

² Cf. 2 Enoch xix. 1.

³ Cf. Ap. Abraham xvii., where Abraham and the conducting angel join in a song of praise in heaven.

⁴ The light referred to is no doubt the uncreated light of the Divine Glory, which is a well-known feature in the Midrashic literature; cf. also Ap. Abraham, ch. xvii.; Rev. xxi. 23; xxii. 5. [But this light has its centre in the seventh heaven; cf. verse 25 a few lines lower down.]

return to the carnal world. 24. I say indeed unto you, "Hezekiah and Jôsâb my son and Micaiah" that there is much darkness here. 25. And the angel who conducted me discovered what I thought, and said: "If in this light thou dost rejoice, how much more wilt thou rejoice, when in the seventh heaven thou seest the light, where is the Lord and His Beloved [whence I have been sent, who is to be called 'Son' in this world. 26. Not (yet) hath been manifested He who shall be in the corruptible world]¹ and the garments, and the thrones, and the crowns which are laid up for the righteous, "for those who trust in that Lord who will descend in your form. For the light which is there is great and wonderful". 27. And as concerning thy not returning into the body thy days are not yet fulfilled for coming here." 28. And when I heard (that) I was troubled, and he said: "Do not be troubled."

IX. 1. And he took me into the air of the seventh heaven, and moreover I heard a voice saying: "How far will he ascend that dwelleth in the flesh?" and I feared and trembled. 2. And "when I trembled, behold" I heard from hence² another voice "being sent forth, and" saying: "It is permitted to the holy Isaiah to ascend hither, for here is his garment." 3. And I asked the angel who was with me "and said": "Who is he who forbade me and who is he who permitted me to ascend?" 4. And he said unto me: "He who forbade thee, this is he who is over the praise-giving of the sixth heaven. 5. And He who permitted thee, this is "thy Lord God, the Lord Christ, who will be called ' Jesus ' in the world¹, but His name ¹ thou canst not hear till thou hast ascended out of thy body." 6. And he raised me up into the seventh heaven, and I saw there a wonderful light and angels innumerable. 7. And there I saw all the righteous "from the time of Adam. 8. And there I saw the holy Abel and all the righteous. 9. And there I saw Enoch and all who were with him², stript of the garments of the flesh, and I saw them in their garments of the upper world, and they were "like angels³,² standing there in great glory. 10. But they sat not on their thrones,³ nor were their crowns ⁴ of glory on them. 11. And I asked the angel who was with me : " How is it that they have received the garments, but have not the thrones and the crowns ? " 12. And he said unto me : 13. " Crowns and thrones of glory they do not receive, till the Beloved will descend in the form in which you will see Him descend "[will descend, I say] into the world in the last days the Lord, who will be called Christ⁴. Nevertheless, they "see and" know whose will be thrones, and whose the crowns when He hath descended, and been made in your form, "and they will think that He is flesh and is a man⁴. 14. And the god of that world will stretch forth his hand against the Son, and they will crucify Him on a tree, and will slay Him not knowing who He is. 15. And thus His descent, "as you will see, will be hidden even from the heavens, so that it will not

¹ Omit bracketed words (Charles).

² rather, from above, i. e. from the seventh heaven.

¹ i. e. His heavenly name; cf. Rev. xix. 12, and see viii. 7 of this book.

² Cf. Matt. xxii. 30; Ap. Bar. li. 5, 12.

³ Cf. Rev. iii. 21; Luke xxii. 29, 30; Matt. xix. 28.

⁴ i. e. as victors; cf. Rev. ii. 10; iii. 11; iv. 4; Jas. i. 12; 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

be known who He is¹. 16. And when He hath plundered the angel of death,¹ He will ascend on the third day, [and he will remain in that world five hundred and forty-five days].² 17. And then many of the righteous will ascend³ with Him, whose spirits do not receive their garments⁴ till the "Lord Christ" ascend⁵ and they ascend with Him. 18. Then, indeed, they will receive their [garments and] thrones and crowns, when He hath ascended into the "seventh" heaven. 19. And I said unto him that which I had asked him in the third heaven: 20. " Show me how everything which is done in that world is here made known." 21. And whilst I was still speaking with him, behold one of the angels who stood nigh, more glorious than the glory of that angel who had raised me up from the world, 22. Showed me a book, [but not as a book of this world] and he opened it, and the book was written, but not as a book of this world.⁶ And he gave (it) to me and I read it, and lo ! the deeds of the children of Israel were written therein, and the deeds of those whom I know (not), my son Jôsâb. 23. And I said: " In truth, there is nothing hidden in the seventh heaven, which is done in this world." 24. And I saw there many garments laid up, and many thrones and many crowns. 25. And I said to the angel:

¹ The " harrowing of Hell " was effected, according to the Latin Gospel of Nicodemus (Part ii.) by the descent of Christ into Hades; cf. Rev. xx. 13 (Matt. xxvii. 52 f.).

² A Gnostic interpolation (Charles).

³ viz. from Hades.

⁴ i. e. their spiritual bodies.

⁵ viz. to heaven.

⁶ i. e. one of the heavenly books; these were to be opened at the judgement; cf. Dan. vii. 10; cf. also in the N.T., Rev. iii. 5; xiii. 8; xvii. 8, and often (" the book of life ").

“ Whose are these garments and thrones and crowns ? ”

26. And he said unto me : “ These garments many from that world will receive, believing in the words of That One, “who shall be named” as I told thee, “and they will observe those things, and believe in them, and believe in His cross : for them are these laid up.” 27. And I saw a certain One ¹ “standing, whose glory surpassed that of all,” and His glory was great “and wonderful. 28. And after I had seen Him,” all the righteous whom I had seen “and also the angels whom I had seen” came to Him. “And Adam and Abel and Seth, and all the righteous first drew near” and worshipped Him, and they all praised Him with one voice, “and I myself also gave praise with them,” and my giving of praise was as theirs. 29. And then all the angels drew nigh and worshipped and gave praise. 30. And I was (again) transformed ² and became like an angel. 31. And thereupon the angel who conducted me, said to me : “ Worship this One,” and I worshipped and praised. 32. And the angel said unto me : “ This is the Lord of all the praisegivings which thou hast seen.” 33. And whilst he was still speaking, I saw another Glorious One ³ who was like Him, and the righteous drew nigh and worshipped and praised, and I praised together with them. But my glory was not transformed into accordance with their form. 34. And thereupon the angels drew near and worshipped Him. 35. And I saw the Lord and the second angel, and they were standing. 36. And the second whom ¹ Christ is meant. Note the emphasis laid on the worship of Him in heaven.

² Cf. vii. 25. Isaiah underwent successive transformations.

³ The Third Person of the Godhead (Charles).

I saw was on the left of my Lord. And I asked : " Who is this ? " and he said unto me : " Worship Him, for He is the angel of the Holy Spirit, who speaketh in thee and the rest of the righteous." 37. And I saw the great glory, the eyes of my spirit being open, and I could not thereupon see,¹ nor yet could the angel who was with me, nor all the angels whom I had seen worshipping my Lord. 38. But I saw the righteous ² beholding with great power the glory of that One. 39. And my Lord drew nigh to me and the angel of the Spirit "and He said : " See how it is given to thee to see God, and on thy account power is given to the angel who is with thee." 40. And I saw how my Lord and the angel of the Spirit" worshipped, and they both together praised "God". 41. And thereupon all the righteous "drew near and" worshipped. 42. And the angels "drew near and" worshipped and all the angels praised.

X. 1. And thereupon I heard the voices and the giving of praise, which I had heard in each of the six heavens, ascending and being heard there : 2. And all "were being sent up to that Glorious One" whose glory I could not behold. 3. "And I myself was hearing and beholding the praise (which was given) to Him. 4. And the Lord and the angel of the Spirit were beholding all and hearing all". 5. And all the praises which are sent up from the six heavens ³ are not only heard but seen. 6. And "I heard" the angel "who conducted me and" he said : " This is the Most High of the high ones, dwelling

¹ saw . . . could not see : i. e. saw for a moment, but could not steadfastly behold. By "the Great Glory," is meant the First Person : cf. 1 Enoch xiv. 20.

² i. e. the glorified righteous ; cf. Rev. xxii. 4. -

³ Cf. vii. 16-17.

in the holy world,¹ and resting in His holy ones, who will be called by the Holy Spirit through the lips of the righteous "the Father of the Lord". 7. And I heard the voice of the Most High "the Father of my Lord" saying to my Lord "Christ who will be called Jesus": 8. "Go forth and descend through all the heavens, and Thou wilt descend to "the firmament and" that world: to the angel in Sheol² Thou wilt descend, "but to Haguel³ Thou wilt not go". 9. And Thou wilt become like unto the likeness of all who are in the five heavens. 10. "And Thou wilt be careful to become like the form of the angels of the firmament [and the angels also who are in Sheol]". 11. And none of the angels of that world shall know⁴. "that Thou art Lord with Me of the seven heavens and of their angels. 12. And they shall not know that Thou art with Me, till with a loud voice⁵ I have called (to) the heavens, and their angels and their lights, (even) unto the sixth heaven, in order that Thou mayst" judge "and destroy" the †princes† and angels "and gods" of that world,⁶ and the world that is dominated by them: 13. For they have denied Me and said: 'We alone are, and there is none beside us.'⁷ 14. And afterwards from the angels of death Thou wilt ascend to Thy place, and Thou wilt not be transformed in each heaven, but in glory wilt Thou ascend and sit on My right hand. 15. And thereupon the princes and powers

¹ Based on Is. lvii. 15 (LXX); cf. vi. 8.

² Sheol = Hades: and "the Angel in Sheol" = the Angel of Death.

³ Haguel = Abaddon or Gehenna (the abode of the lost).

⁴ Cf. 1 Cor. ii. 8.

⁵ viz. at the day of Judgement,

⁶ Cf. John xvi. 11,

⁷ Cf. Is. xlvii. 8.

†of that world† will worship Thee.”¹ 16. These commands I heard the Great Glory giving to my Lord. 17. And †so† I saw my Lord go forth from the seventh heaven into the sixth heaven. 18. And the angel who conducted me [from this world was with me and] said unto me : “ Understand, Isaiah, and see how the transformation and descent of the Lord will appear.” 19. And I saw, and when the angels saw Him, “thereupon those in the sixth heaven” praised and lauded Him; for He had not been transformed after the shape of the angels there, “and they praised Him” and I also praised with them. 20. And I saw when He descended into the fifth heaven, that in the fifth heaven He made Himself like unto the form of the angels there, and they did not praise Him (nor worship Him); for His form was like unto theirs. 21. And then He descended into the fourth heaven, and made Himself like unto the form of the angels there. 22. And “when they saw Him”, they did not praise “or laud Him”; for His form was like unto their form. 23. And again I saw when He descended into the third heaven, “and He made Himself like unto the form of the angels in the third heaven. 24. And those who kept the gate of the (third) heaven demanded the password,² and the Lord gave (it) to them in order that He should not be recognized. And when they saw Him, they did not praise or laud Him; for His form was like unto their form. 25. And again I saw when He descended into the second heaven, “and again He gave the password² there; those who kept the gate proceeded to demand and the Lord to give. 26. And I saw when He made Himself like unto the form of the angels in the second heaven, and they saw Him and they did not praise Him; for His form was like unto their form. 27. And, again, I saw when He descended[¶] into the first heaven, [¶]and there also He gave the password¹ to those who kept the gate, and He made Himself like unto the form of the angels who were on the left of that throne[¶], and they neither praised nor lauded Him; for His form was like unto their form. [¶]28. But as for me no one asked me on account of the angel who conducted me[¶]. 29. And again He descended into the firmament [¶]where dwelleth the ruler of this world[¶], and He gave the password¹ [¶]to those on the left[¶], and His form was like theirs, and they did not praise Him there; [¶]but they were envying one another and fighting; for here there is a power of evil and envying about trifles[¶]. 30. And I saw when He descended [¶]and made Himself like[¶] unto the angels of the air, and He was like one of them. 31. And He gave no password; ¹ [¶]for one was plundering and doing violence to another.[¶]

¹ Cf. Heb. i. 6.² or sign.

XI. 1. After this [¶]I saw, and [¶]the angel [¶]who spoke with me, who conducted me[¶], said unto me: "Understand, Isaiah, son of Amoz; for for this purpose have I been sent from God." 2. ² [¶]And I, indeed, saw a woman of the family of David³ the prophet, named Mary, a Virgin, and she was espoused to a man named Joseph, a carpenter, and he also was of the seed and family of the righteous David of Bethlehem

¹ or sign.

² xi. 2-22 are wanting in the Latin version (L²) and in the Slavonic. But the whole section appears to be original.

³ The Davidic descent of the Virgin Mary is here explicitly asserted. This belief has very early attestation; cf. Justin Martyr, Trypho c. xliii., xlv., c. etc.

Judah. 3. And he came into his lot. And when she was espoused, she was found with child, and Joseph the carpenter was desirous to put her away.¹ 4. But the angel of the Spirit appeared in this world, and after that Joseph did not put her away, but kept Mary and did not reveal this matter to any one. 5. And he did not approach Mary, but kept her as a holy virgin, though with child. 6. And he did not live with her for two months. 7. And after two months of days while Joseph was in his house, and Mary his wife, but both alone—8. It came to pass that when they were alone Mary straightway looked with her eyes and saw a small babe, and she was astonished.² 9. And after she had been astonished, her womb was found as formerly before she had conceived. 10. And when her husband Joseph said unto her : “ What has astonished thee ? ” his eyes were opened and he saw the infant and praised God, because into his portion God had come. 11. And a voice came to them : “ Tell this vision to no one.”³ 12. And the story regarding the infant was noised abroad in Bethlehem. 13. Some said : “ The Virgin Mary hath borne a child before she was married two months.” 14. And many said : “ She hath not borne a child, nor hath a midwife gone up (to her), nor have we heard the cries of (labour) pains.” And they were all blinded respecting Him and they all knew regarding Him, though they knew not whence He was.⁴ 15. And they took Him, and went to Nazareth in Galilee. 16. And I saw, O Hezekiah and Jôsâb my son, and I declare to the other prophets also who are standing by, that (this)

¹ Cf. Matt. i. 20 f.

³ Cf. op. cit. xx. (end),

² Cf. Protev. Jacobi xix.

⁴ Cf. John vii. 27.

hath escaped all the heavens and all the princes and all the gods of this world.¹ 17. And I saw: In Nazareth He sucked the breast as a babe and as is customary in order that He might not be recognized. 18. And when He had grown up He worked great signs and wonders in the land of Israel and of Jerusalem. 19. And after this the adversary envied Him and roused the children of Israel against Him², not knowing who He was, "and they delivered Him to the king, and crucified Him, and He descended to the angel (of Sheol). 20. In Jerusalem, indeed, I saw Him being crucified on a tree: 21. And likewise after the third day rise again and remain days. 22. And the angel who conducted me said: "Understand, Isaiah:" and I saw when He sent out the Twelve Apostles² and ascended³. 23. And I saw Him, and He was in the firmament, but He had not changed Himself into their form, and all the angels of the firmament "and the Satans" saw Him³ and they worshipped. 24. And "there was much sorrow there, while" they said: "How did our Lord descend in our midst, and we perceived not the glory [which hath been upon Him], which we see hath been upon Him from the sixth heaven?" 25. And He ascended into the second heaven, and He did not transform Himself, but all the angels who were on the right and on the left and the throne in the midst 26. Both worshipped Him and praised Him and said: "How did our Lord escape us whilst descending, and we perceived not?" 27. And in like manner He ¹ Cf. Ignatius ad Ephes. xix.: And hidden from the prince of this world were the virginity of Mary, and her child-bearing, and likewise also the death of the Lord: cf. also 1 Cor. ii. 7, 8.

² Cf. iii. 17; Matt. xxviii. 18 f.; Acts i. 8 f.

³ all the angels . . . saw Him: cf. 1 Tim. iii. 16, ascended into the third heaven, "and they praised and said in like manner." 28. And in the fourth heaven and in the fifth "also they said precisely after the same manner. 29. But there was one glory, and from it He did not change Himself. 30. And I saw when He ascended" into the sixth heaven, "and they worshipped and glorified Him". 31. But in all the heavens the praise increased (in volume). 32. And I saw how He ascended into the seventh heaven, and all the righteous and all the angels praised Him. And then I saw Him sit down on the right hand of that Great Glory¹ whose glory I told you that I could not behold. 33. And also the angel of the Holy Spirit I saw sitting on the left hand.² 34. And this angel said unto me: "Isaiah, son of Amoz, it is enough for thee; "for these are great things"; for thou hast seen what no child of flesh hath seen. 35. And thou wilt return into thy garment (of the flesh) until thy days are completed.³ Then thou wilt come hither." 36. These things Isaiah saw and told unto all that stood before him, and they praised. And he spake to Hezekiah the King, "and said": "I have spoken these things." 37. Both the end of this world; 38. And all this vision will be consummated in the last generations. 39. And Isaiah made him swear that he would not tell (it) to the people of Israel, nor give these words to any man to transcribe. 40. . . . Such things ye will read. And watch ye in the Holy Spirit in order that ye may receive your garments and thrones and crowns of glory which are laid up in the "seventh" heaven. 41. On account of these visions and prophecies Sammael Satan sawed in sunder Isaiah the son of Amoz, the prophet, by the hand of Manasseh. 42. And all these things Hezekiah delivered to Manasseh in the twenty-sixth year. 43. But Manasseh did not remember them nor place these things in his heart, but becoming the servant of Satan he was destroyed:

¹ Cf. ix. 37; x. 16.² Cf. ix. 36.³ Cf. viii. 27.

Here endeth the vision of Isaiah the prophet with his ascension.

TRANSLATIONS OF EARLY DOCUMENTS

A Series of texts important for the study of Christian origins, by various authors

UNDER THE JOINT EDITORSHIP OF

The Rev. W. O. E. OESTERLEY, D.D.

AND

The Rev. CANON G. H. BOX, M.A.

THE object of the Series is to provide short, cheap, and handy text-books for students, either working by themselves or in classes. The aim is to furnish in translations important texts unencumbered by commentary or elaborate notes, which can be had in larger works.

FIRST SERIES

Palestinian-Jewish and Cognate Texts (Pre-Rabbinic)

1. Aramaic Papyri. A. E. Cowley, Litt.D., Sub-Librarian of the Bodleian Library, Oxford.
2. The Wisdom of Ben-Sira (Ecclesiasticus). The Rev. W. O. E. Oesterley, D.D., Vicar of St. Alban's, Bedford Park, W.; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London.
3. The Book of Enoch. The Rev. R. H. Charles, D.D., Canon of Westminster.
4. The Book of Jubilees. The Rev. Canon Charles.
5. The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. The Rev. Canon Charles.
6. The Odes and Psalms of Solomon. The Rev. G. H. Box, M.A., Rector of Sutton, Beds., Hon. Canon of St. Albans.
7. The Ascension of Isaiah. The Rev. Canon Charles.
8. The Apocalypse of Ezra (ii. Esdras). The Rev. Canon Box.
9. The Apocalypse of Baruch. The Rev. Canon Charles.
10. The Apocalypse of Abraham. The Rev. Canon Box.
11. The Testament of Abraham. The Rev. Canon Box.
12. The Assumption of Moses. The Rev. W. J. Ferrar, M.A., Vicar of Holy Trinity, East Finchley.

FIRST SERIES—continued

13. The Biblical Antiquities of Philo. M. R. James, Litt.D., F.B.A., Hon. Litt.D., Dublin, Hon. LL.D. St. Andrews, Provost of King's College, Cambridge.
14. Lost Apocrypha of the Old Testament. M. R. James, Litt.D.

Now Ready—Nos. 2, 3, 5, 8, 2s. 6d. net each; 9 and 12 (in one vol.), 2s. 6d. net; No. 4, 4s. net; Nos. 7 and 10 (in one vol.), 4s. net; No. 13, 8s. 6d. net.

SECOND SERIES

Hellenistic-Jewish Texts

1. The Wisdom of Solomon. The Rev. Dr. Oesterley.
2. The Sibylline Oracles (Books iii–v). The Rev. H. N. Bate, M.A., Vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, W.; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London.
3. The Letter of Aristeas. H. St. John Thackeray, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.
4. Selections from Philo. J. H. A. Hart, M.A.
5. Selections from Josephus. H. St. J. Thackeray, M.A.
6. The Third and Fourth Books of Maccabees. The Rev. C. W. Emmet, B.D., Vicar of West Hendred, Oxon.
7. The Book of Joseph and Aseneth. Translated and edited from the Syriac text (for the first time in English) by E. W. Brooks.

Now Ready—Nos. 1 and 3, 2s. 6d. net each.

THIRD SERIES

Palestinian-Jewish and Cognate Texts (Rabbinic)

- *1. Pirke Aboth. The Rev. Dr. Oesterley.
 - *2. Berakthoth. The Rev. A. Lukyn Williams, D.D.
 - *3. Yoma. The Rev. Canon Box.
 - *4. Shabbath. The Rev. Dr. Oesterley.
 - *5. Sanhedrin. Rev. H. Danby.
 - *6. Qimchi's Commentary on the Psalms (Book I, Selections). The Rev. R. G. Finch, B.D.
-

7. Tamid	10. Sopherim	13. Taanith
8. Aboda Zara	11. Megilla	14. Megillath
9. Middoth	12. Sukka	Taanith

* It is proposed to publish these texts first by way of experiment. If the Series should so far prove successful the others will follow.

Jewish Literature and Christian Origins :

Vol. I. The Apocalyptic Literature.

„ II. A Short Survey of the Literature of Rabbinical Judaism.

By the Revs. Dr. Oesterley and Canon Box.

Jewish Uncanonical Writings : A popular Introduction. By the Rev. W. J. Ferrar.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE

LONDON : 68 HAYMARKET, S.W.

NEW YORK : THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

[1.1.18.

c. Research

- Dähnhardt, O. Natursagen: Eine Sammlung naturdeutender Sagen, Märchen, Fabeln und Legenden (Leipzig und Berlin, 1907) 1.257–266.
- Kagan-Tarkovskaja, M.D. (Каган-Тарковская, М.Д.) "О потопе," in: Lihačev, D.S. (ed.) (Лихачев Дмитрий Сергеевич), Библиотека литературы Древней Руси (20 томов; С.-Петербург, 1999) 3.373–374.
- Porfir'ev, I. Ja. (Порфирьев Иван Яковлевич) Апокрифические сказания о ветхозаветных лицах и событиях по рукописям соловецкой библиотеки. (Сборник Отделения Русского Языка и Словесности Императорской Академии Наук, 17.1; С.-Петербург, 1877) 52.
- Utey, F.L. The Devil in the Ark (Chillicothe, 1959).

Apocalypse of Abraham

a. Texts

- Franko, I. (Франко, Иван) "Книга о Аврааме праотци и патриарси," Апокрифи і легенди з українських рукописів (Monumenta Linguae Nescion Literarum Ucraino-Russicarum [Ruthenicarum]; 1–5; 5 vols.; Львов: Шевченка, 1896–1910) 1.80–86.
- Jacimirskij, A.I. (Яцимирский А.И.) "Откровение Авраама," Библиографический обзор апокрифов в южнославянской и русской письменности (Списки памятников) Выпуск 1. Апокрифы ветхозаветные (Петроград, 1921) 99–100.
- Jagić, V. (Ягич В.) Prilozi k historiji književnosti naroda hrvatskoga i srbskoga (Agram, 1868) 65–151 at 83–91.
- Novickij, P.P. (Новицкий, П.П.) "Откровение Авраама," Общество любителей древней письменности 99 (С.-Петербург, 1891) (facsimile edition).
- Porfir'ev, I. Ja. (Порфирьев Иван Яковлевич) Апокрифические сказания о ветхозаветных лицах и событиях по рукописям соловецкой библиотеки. (Сборник Отделения Русского Языка и Словесности Императорской Академии Наук, 17.1; С.-Петербург, 1877) 111–130.
- , "Палея Толковая по списку сделанному в г. Коломне в 1406 г." Труды учеников Н. С. Тихонравова. Том 1. (Москва, 1892).
- Philonenko-Sayar, B., and Philonenko, M. L'apocalypse d'Abraham. Introduction, texte slave, traduction et notes (Semitica, 31; Paris, 1981).
- Rupin, A.N. (Пыпин Александр Николаевич) Ложные и отреченные книги русской старины (Памятники старинной русской литературы, издаваемые Графом Григорием Кушелевым-Безбородко, 3; С.-Петербург, 1862 [repr. Paris, 1970]) 24–36.
- Rubinkiewicz, R., L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en vieux slave. Introduction, texte critique, traduction et commentaire (Towarzystwo Naukowe Katolickiego Uniwersytetu Lubelskiego: Źródła i monografie, 129; Lublin, 1987). (Diss. Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1977).
- De Santos Otero, A. Die handschriftliche Überlieferung der altslawischen Apokryphen (PTS 20, 23; Berlin/New York, 1978–1981).
- Sreznevskij, I.I. (Срезневский Измаил Иванович) Сказания о святых Борисе и Глебе. Сильвестровский список XIV века (С.-Петербург, 1860).

- , "Книга Откровение Авраама," Известия Императорской академии наук по отделению русского языка и словесности. Том 10. (С.-Петербург, 1961–1963) 648–645.
- Tihonravov, N.S. (Тихонравов Николай Саввич) Памятники отреченной русской литературы (2 тома; С.-Петербург/Москва, 1863) 1.32–77.

b. Translations

- Bonwetsch, G.N., Die Apokalypse Abrahams. Das Testament der vierzig Märtyrer (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, Bd.1, Heft 1; Leipzig, 1897).
- Box, G.H., and Landsman, J.I., The Apocalypse of Abraham. Edited, with a Translation from the Slavonic Text and Notes (TED, 1.10; London, New York: The Macmillan Company, 1918).
- Enrietti, M. and Sacchi, P. "Apocalisse di Abramo," Apocrifi dell'Antico Testamento (5 vols.; Ed. P. Sacchi, et al.; Torino/Brescia, 1981–1997) 3.61–110.
- Gaster, M., "The Apocalypse of Abraham. From the Roumanian Text, Discovered and Translated," in: M. Gaster, Studies and Texts in Folklore, Magic, Medieval Romance, Hebrew Apocrypha and Samaritan Archeology (London: Maggs Brothers, 1925) (repr. New York, 1971) 1.92–123.
- Kulik, A. (Кулик, Александр) Retroverting Slavonic Pseudepigrapha: Toward the Original of the Apocalypse of Abraham (TCS, 3; Atlanta, 2004) 9–35.
- Pennington, A., "Apocalypse of Abraham," The Apocryphal Old Testament (ed. H.F.D. Sparks; Oxford: Clarendon, 1984) 363–491.
- Petkanova, D. (Петканова Донка) "Откровение на Авраам," in: Petkanova, D. and A. Miltenova (eds.) (Донка Петканова и Анисава Милтенова) Старобългарска есхатология. Антология (Slavia Orthodoxa; София, 1993) 17–30.
- Philonenko-Sayar, B., and Philonenko, M., "Die Apokalypse Abrahams," Jüdische Schriften aus hellenistisch-römischer Zeit 5.5. (Gütersloh, 1982) 413–460.
- , "Apocalypse d'Abraham," in: La Bible. Écrits intertestamentaires (ed. A. Dupont-Sommer et al.; La Bibliothèque de la Pléiade; Paris, 1987) 1691–1730.
- Riebler, P., "Apokalypse des Abraham," in: Altjüdisches Schrifttum außerhalb der Bibel (Freiburg i. B., 1928 [Repr. Freiburg i.B., 1979]) 13–39; 1267–1269.
- Rubinkiewicz, R., "The Apocalypse of Abraham," The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha (2 vols.; ed. J.H. Charlesworth; New York, 1983–1985) 1.681–705.
- , "Apocalypsa Abraham," Apokryfy Starego Testamentu (ed. R. Rubinkiewicz; Warszawa, 1999) 460–481.

b. Studies

- Aalen, S. Heilsverlangen und Heilsverwirklichung. Studien zur Erwartung des Heils in der apokalyptischen Literatur des antiken Judentums und im ältesten Christentum (ALGHJ, 21; Leiden, New York/København/Köln, 1990) 50–51.
- Bamberger, B.J. "Abraham, Apocalypse of," IDB 1.21.
- Baudry, G.-H. "Le péché originel dans les pseudepigraphes de l'Ancien Testament," MSR 49 (1992) 163–192 at 182–184.
- , "La théorie du 'penchant mauvais' et la doctrine du 'péché originel,'" BLE

- 95 (1994) 271–301 at 282.
 —, “La responsabilité d’Ève dans la chute. Analyse d’une tradition,” MSR 53 (1996) 293–320 at 300–301.
 Beer, B. Leben Abrahams nach Auffassung der jüdischen Sage (Leipzig, 1859).
 Begg, C.T. “Rereadings of the ‘Animal Rite’ of Genesis 15 in Early Jewish Narratives,” CBQ 50 (1988) 36–46 at 43–45.
 Boccaccini, G. “Testi apocalittici coevi all’Apocalisse di Giovanni,” RSB 7 (1995) [Apocalittica e origini cristiane. Atti del V convegno di studi neotestamentari (Seiano, 15–18 settembre 1993). Ed. R. Penna], 151–161 at 154–155.
 Bohak, G. “Apocalypse of Abraham,” OxDJR 55.
 Bowley, J.B. “The Compositions of Abraham,” Tracing the Threads: Studies in the Vitality of Jewish Pseudepigrapha (ed. J.C. Reeves; SBLEJL, 6; Atlanta, 1994) 215–238.
 Calvert, N.L. Abraham Traditions in Middle Jewish Literature: Implications for the Interpretation of Galatians and Romans (Ph.D. Diss.; Sheffield, 1993) 262–294.
 Cavallin, H.C. “Leben nach dem Tode im Spätjudentum und im frühen Christentum I,” ANRW 2.19.1 (Berlin/New York, 1979) 240–345 at 300–302.
 Charlesworth, J.H., “The Jewish Roots of Christology: The Discovery of the Hypostatic Voice” Scottish Journal of Theology 39 (1986) 19–41 at 33–37.
 —, “Folk Traditions in Jewish Apocalyptic Literature,” Mysteries and Revelations. Apocalyptic Studies since the Uppsala Conference (JSPSup, 9; Sheffield, 1991) 91–113.
 —, “Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments,” TRE 27.639–645 at 643.
 Christoffersson, O. The Earnest Expectation of the Creature. The Flood-Tradition as Matrix of Romans 8:18–27 (ConBNT, 23; Stockholm, 1990) 91–92.
 Coleman, G.B. The Phenomenon of Christian Interpolations into Jewish Apocalyptic Texts. A Bibliographical Survey and Methodological Analysis (Ph.D. Diss.; Vanderbilt, 1976) 49–51, 319–324.
 De Conick, A.D. “Heavenly Temple Traditions and Valentinian Worship: A Case for First-Century Christology in the Second Century,” The Jewish Roots of Christological Monotheism (eds. C.C. Newman, J.R. Davila, G.S. Lewis; JJSJSup 63; Brill: Leiden, 1999) 308–341 at 314–315.
 Dean-Otting, M. Heavenly Journeys: A Study of the Motif in Hellenistic Jewish Literature (JudUm, 8; Frankfurt am Main/Bern/New York, 1984) 248–255, 260–261.
 Delcor, M., “Le mythe de la chute des anges et de l’origine des géants comme explication du mal dans le monde dans l’apocalyptique juive. Histoire et traditions,” RIIR 190 (1976) 3–53 at 49–50.
 Denis, A.-M., Introduction aux pseudépigraphes grecs d’Ancien Testament (SVTR, 1; Leiden: Brill, 1970) 37–38.
 Flusser, D. “Abraham and the Upanishads,” Imm 20 (1986) 53–61 at 55.
 Fossum, J. “In the Beginning Was the Name.’ Onomatology as the Key to Johannine Christology,” “The Image of the Invisible God.” Essays on the Influence of Jewish Mysticism on Early Christianity (NTOA, 30; Freiburg/Göttingen, 1995) 108–133 at 120–122.
 Frey, J.B. “Abraham (Apocalypse d’),” Dictionnaire de la Bible 1.28–38.
 Gaines, E.A. The Eschatological Jerusalem: The Function of the Image in Biblical Literature (Ph.D. Diss.; Princeton Theological Seminary, 1987) 163–170.
 Géoltrain, P., L’Apocalypse d’Abraham (Diss. Straßburg, 1960).

- Ginzberg, L., “Abraham, Apocalypse of,” JE (1904) 1.91–92.
 Grabbe, L., “The Scapegoat Tradition: A Study in Early Jewish Interpretation,” JST 18 (1987) 152–167 at 156–158.
 Gricaj, M.S. (Грицай, М.С.) “Апокрифи та їх роль у розвитку української літератури (На допомогу студентів-заочників),” Українська мова і література в школі 8 (1975) 27–33.
 Gutiérrez-Larraya, J.A. “Abraham, Apocalipses de,” EncBib 1, col. 83.
 Hahn, F. Frühjüdische und urchristliche Apokalyptik. Eine Einführung (BThSt, 36; Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1998) 87.
 Hall, R.G. “The ‘Christian Interpolation’ in the Apocalypse of Abraham,” JBL 107 (1988) 107–112.
 —, Revealed Histories. Techniques for Ancient Jewish and Christian Historiography (JSPSup, 6; Sheffield, 1991) 21–32; 75–78.
 Halperin, D.J. “Ascension or Invasion: Implications of the Heavenly Journey in Ancient Judaism,” Religion 18 (1988) 47–67 at 53–54.
 —, The Faces of the Chariot. Early Jewish Responses to Ezekiel’s Vision (TSAJ, 16; Tübingen; Mohr, 1988) 103–113.
 Hannah, D.D. Michael and Christ: Michael Traditions and Angel Christology in Early Christianity (WUNT, 2.109; Tübingen, 1999) 53–54, 145–146.
 Harrisville, R.A., III. The Figure of Abraham in the Epistles of St. Paul. In the Footsteps of Abraham (San Francisco, 1992) 71–74.
 Helm, R.T. The Development of the Azazel Tradition (Ph.D. Diss.; Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 1992).
 —, “Azazel in Early Jewish Tradition” Andrews University Seminary Papers 32 (1994) 217–226 at 222–224.
 Helmbold, A.K. “Abraham, Apocalypse of,” ZPEB 1.26–27.
 Henrichs, A. “‘Thou Shalt Not Kill a Tree’: Greek, Manichaean and Indian Tales,” BASP 16 (1979) 85–108 at 105–106.
 Himmelfarb, M. Ascent to Heaven in Jewish and Christian Apocalypses (New York/Oxford, 1993) 61–66.
 Hughes, H.M. The Ethics of Jewish Apocryphal Literature (Diss.; London, 1909 [rep. London, 1928]) 18, 138–139, 210–212, 241, 308.
 Istrin, V.M. (Истрин, В.М.) “Палейное сказание об Аврааме,” in: Istrin, V.M. (Истрин, В.М.) Замечания о составе Толковой Палеи (вып. 1; С.-Петербург, 1897) 15–26.
 James, M.R. “Apocrypha,” EncB 1, cols. 249–261 at 253–254.
 Jaubert, A. La notion de l’alliance dans le judaïsme aux abords de l’ère chrétienne (PS, 6; Paris, 1963) 284–285.
 Jenks, G.C. The Origins and Development of the Antichrist Myth (BZNW, 59; Berlin/New York, 1991) 248–288.
 Kohler, K. “The Pre-Talmudic Haggada. II. The Apocalypse of Abraham and Its Kindred,” JQR 7 (1894/95) 581–606.
 Kozak, E. “Bibliographische Übersicht der biblisch-apokryphen Literatur bei den Slaven,” Jahrbücher für protestantische Theologie 18 (1892) 127–158 at 134.
 Kulik, A. (Кулик, Александр) “Об одном церковнославянском гапаксе,” Paleoslavica 5 (1997) 339–345.
 —, “К датировке ‘Откровения Авраама,’” In Memoriam: Памяти Я.С. Лурье (С.-Петербург, 1997) 189–195.

- , "Откровение Авраама," Вестник Еврейского Университета 5 (2002) 231–254.
- , "The Gods of Nahor: A Note on the Pantheon of the Apocalypse of Abraham," JJS LIV (2003) 228–232.
- , "Interpretation and Reconstruction: Retroverting the Apocalypse of Abraham," Apocrypha 13 (2002) 203–226.
- , Retroverting Slavonic Pseudepigrapha: Toward the Original of the Apocalypse of Abraham (TCS, 3; Atlanta, 2004).
- Lagrange, M.J. "Notes sur le messianisme au temps de Jésus," RB 14 (1905) 481–514.
- Lavrovskij, N.A. (Лавровский Н.А.) Обозрение ветхозаветных апокрифов (Харьков, 1864) 4–25.
- Licht, J., "Abraham, Apocalypse of," EncJud 2 (1972) 125–127.
- Lods, Adolphe, Caquot, André et Gérard E. Weil, Histoire de la littérature hébraïque et juive depuis les origines jusqu'à la ruine de l'état juif (135 après J.-C.) (Paris, 1982) 944–946.
- Lohfink, G. "Der präexistente Heilsplan. Sinn und Hintergrund der dritten Vaterunserbitte," Neues Testament und Ethik (Freiburg-i-Br., 1989) 110–133.
- Lunt, H.G. "The Transmission of the Apocalypse of Abraham," in: Rubinkiewicz, R., "The Apocalypse of Abraham," The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha (2 vols.; ed. J.H. Charlesworth; New York, 1983–1985) 1.681–705 at 686–688.
- , "On the Language of the Slavonic Apocalypse of Abraham," Slavica Hierosolymitana 7 (1985) 55–62.
- Mach, M. "From Apocalypticism to Early Jewish Mysticism?" EncApoc 229–264 at 255–258.
- McGonigal, T.P. "Abraham Believed God": Genesis 15:6 and Its Use in the New Testament (Ph.D. Diss.; Fuller Theological Seminary, 1981) 167–171.
- Mell, U. Neue Schöpfung. Eine traditionsgeschichtliche und exegetische Studie zu einem soteriologischen Grundsatz paulinischer Theologie (BZNW, 56; Berlin/New York, 1989) 169–170.
- Meshcherskij, N.A. (Мещерский Никита Александрович) "Проблемы изучения славяно-русской переводной литературы XI–XV вв." TODRL 20 (1964) 180–231 at 191, 203.
- , Источники и состав древней славяно-русской переводной письменности IX–XV веков (Ленинград, 1978).
- Miltenova, A. "Апокрифи за Авраам," in: Старобългарска литература: Енциклопедичен речник (ed. Д. Петканова; София, 1992) 31–33.
- , "Апокрифи за Авраам," in: Старобългарска литература: Енциклопедичен речник (ed. Д. Петканова; Велико Търново, 2003) 40–42.
- Mueller, J.R., "The Apocalypse of Abraham and the Destruction of the Second Jewish Temple," SBLSP 21 (1982) 341–349.
- Nickelsburg, G.W.E., Jewish Literature between the Bible and the Mishnah. A Historical and Literary Introduction (Philadelphia, 1981) 294–299.
- , "Abraham the Convert: A Jewish Tradition and its Use by the Apostle Paul," Biblical Figures Outside the Bible (ed. M.E. Stone and T.A. Bergren; Harrisburg, 1998) 151–175 at 164–165.
- Niebuhr, K.-W. Gesetz und Paränese. Katechismusartige Weisungsreihen in der frühjüdischen Literatur (WUNT II, 29; Tübingen: Mohr/Siebeck, 1987) 198–200.

- Oegema, G.S. The Anointed and His People. Messianic Expectations from the Maccabees to Bar Kochba (JSPSup, 27; Sheffield, 1998) 212–215. [Der Gesalbte und sein Volk. Untersuchungen zum Konzeptualisierungsprozess der messianischen Erwartungen von den Makkabäern bis Bar Koziba (SIJD, 2; Göttingen, 1994)]
- , Für Israel und die Völker. Studien zum alttestamentlich-jüdischen Hintergrund der paulinischen Theologie (NovTSup, 95; Leiden/Boston/Köln, 1999) 151–152.
- Otzen, B. "The Paradise Trees in Jewish Apocalyptic," Apocryphon Severini Presented to Søren Giversen (ed. P. Bilde, et al.; Aarhus, 1993) 140–154 at 143–144.
- Palcja Tolkovaia, Паляя Толковая по списку сделанному в г. Коломне в 1406 г. Труд учеников Н.С. Тихонравова (Москва, 1892).
- Philonenko, M. "Le Poimandres et la liturgie juive," in: Les syncrétismes dans les religions de l'antiquité (ed. F. Dunand et al., EPRO, 46; Leiden, 1975) 204–211.
- , "L'Anguipède alectorocéphale et le dieu Iaô," Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres (1979) 297–304.
- , "Abraham. VI. Apocryphe Scriften," LTK 1, col. 65.
- Puech, É. La croyance des esséniens en la vie future: immortalité, résurrection, vie éternelle? Histoire d'une croyance dans le judaïsme ancien (ÉB, 21; 2 vols.; Paris: Gabalda, 1993) 1.145–149.
- Reid, G.J. "Apocrypha," CathEnc 1.601–615 at 604.
- Rowland, C. "The Visions of God in Apocalyptic Literature," JSS 10 (1979) 137–154.
- , "The Parting of the Ways: The Evidence of Jewish and Christian Apocalyptic and Mystical Material," Jews and Christians. The Parting of the Ways, A.D. 70 to 135. The Second Durham-Tübingen Research Symposium on Earliest Christianity and Judaism (Durham, September, 1989) (ed. J.D.G. Dunn; WUNT, 66; Tübingen, 1992) 213–237 at 219–222.
- Rozhdestvenskaja, M.V. (Рождественская, М.В.) "Апокрифы об Аврааме в древнерусской письменности," Академик Василий Михайлович Истрин. Тезисы докладов обл. научных чтений посвященных 125-летию со дня рождения ученого-филолога (Одесса, 1990) 74–75.
- Rubinkiewicz, R., "Apokalipsa Abrahama," Ruch Biblijny i Liturgiczny 27 (1974) 230–237.
- , "La vision de l'histoire dans l'Apocalypse d'Abraham," ANRW 2.19.1. (1979) 137–151.
- , "Les sémitismes dans l'Apocalypse d'Abraham," Folia Orientalia 21 (1989) 141–148.
- , "Apokalipsa Abrahama 1–6. Propozycja interpretacji symbolicznej," RTK 29 (1982) 79–94.
- , Die Eschatologie von Henoch 9–11 und das Neue Testament (tr. H. Ulrich; ÖBS, 6; Klosterneuberg, 1984).
- , "Abraham, Apocalypse of," ABD 1.41–43.
- Rubinstein, A. "Hebraisms in the Slavonic 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 4 (1953) 108–115.
- , "Hebraisms in the Slavonic 'Apocalypse of Abraham,'" JJS 5 (1954) 132–135.
- , "A Problematic Passage in the Apocalypse of Abraham," JJS 8 (1957) 45–50.

- Saylor, G.B. Have the Promises Failed? A Literary Analysis of 2 Baruch (SBLDS, 72; Chico, 1984) 134-139.
- Schein, B.E. Abraham in the Non-Christian Writings of the Greco-Roman Period (Ph.D. Diss.; Yale University, 1972) 19-92.
- Scholem, G. Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (New York: Schocken, 1946).
- , Die jüdische Mystik in ihren Hauptströmungen (Frankfurt a. M., 1980) 74-75.
- Schüngel-Straumann, Helen. Die Frau am Anfang. Eva und die Folgen (Freiburg/Basel/Wien, 1989) 70-72.
- Schürer, E. The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C. - A.D. 135) (ed. G. Vermes et al., Edinburg, 1986) 3.1.288-687.
- Segal, A.F. "Heavenly Ascent in Hellenistic Judaism, Early Christianity and Their Environment," ANRW 2.23.2 (Berlin/New York, 1981) 1334-1394 at 1362-1364.
- Slater, T.B. "One Like a Son of Man in First-Century CE Judaism," NTS 41 (1995) 183-198 at 196-197.
- Sreznevskij, I.I. (Срезневский И.И.) "Дополнения к общему повременному обозрению древних памятников русского письма и языка," ИОРЯС 10 (1861-1863) 448-665.
- Steinmann, A.E. The Shape of Things to Come. The Genre of the Historical Apocalypse in Ancient Jewish and Christian Literature (Ph.D. Diss.; Michigan, 1990) 122-126.
- Stökl, D. "Yom Kippur in the Apocalyptic Imaginaire and the Roots of Jesus' High Priesthood. Yom Kippur in Zechariah 3, 1 Enoch 10, 11Q Melchizedek, Hebrews and the Apocalypse of Abraham 13," Transformation of the Inner Self in Ancient Religions (ed. J. Assmann and G. Stroumsa; NumenSup, 83; Leiden/Boston/Köln, 1999) 349-366 at 358-361.
- Stone, M. "Apocalyptic Literature," in: M.E. Stone (ed.), Jewish Writings of the Second Temple Period: Apocrypha, Pseudepigrapha, Qumran Sectarian Writings, Philo, Josephus (Philadelphia, 1984) 383-441; 415-418.
- Stroumsa, G.A. Another Seed: Studies in Gnostic Mythology (NHS, 24; Leiden, 1984) 24-25.
- Thompson, F.J. "'Made in Russia.' A Survey of the Translations Allegedly Made in Kievan Russia," Millenium Russiae Christianae. Tausend Jahre christliches Russland 988-1988. Vorträge des Symposiums anlässlich der Tausendjahrfeier der Christianisierung Russlands in Münster vom 5. bis 9. Juli 1988 (ed. G. Birkfellner; Schriften des Komitees der Bundesrepublik Deutschland zur Förderung der Slawischen Studien, 16; Köln, 1993) 295-354 at 333.
- Trafton, J.L. "Abraham, Apocalypse of," MercerDB 7.
- Turdeanu, É. "L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave," JSS 3 (1972) 153-180.
- , "L'Apocalypse d'Abraham en slave," in: É. Turdeanu, Apocryphes slaves et roumains de l'Ancien Testament (SVTP, 5; Leiden: Brill, 1981) 173-200, 439.
- Van Stempvort, P.A. "Abrahams Apokalypse," BHH 1, col. 15.
- Vandergriff, K.L. The Messianic Significance of the "Seed of Abraham" Concept in Pre-Christian Judaism (Ph.D. Diss.; Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, 1988) 141-143.
- VanderKam, J.C. "Messianism and Apocalypticism," EncApoc 193-228 at 212-213.
- Volz, P. Eschatologie der jüdischen Gemeinde im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter. Nach den

- Quellen der rabbinischen, apokalyptischen und apokryphen Literatur* (Tübingen, 1934) 48-49.
- Weinel, H. "Die spätere christliche Apokalyptik," EYHAPISTHPION. Studien zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments. Hermann Gunkel zum 60. Geburtstag, dem 23. Mai 1922 dargebracht von seinen Schülern und Freunden (ed. H. Schmidt; FRLANT, 36; Göttingen, 1923) 141-173 at 167-170.
- Weitzman, S. "The Song of Abraham," HUCA 56 (1994) 21-33.
- Wernik, N.A. A Critical Analysis of the Book of Abraham in the Light of Extracanonical Jewish Writings (Diss. Brigham Young University, 1968).
- Whitney, K.W., Jr. Two Strange Beasts. A Study of Traditions Concerning Leviathan and Behemoth in Second Temple and Early Rabbinic Judaism (Ph.D. Diss.; Harvard University, 1992) 88-105.
- Wicks, R.H. The Doctrine of God in the Jewish Apocryphal and Apocalyptic Literature (Diss.; London, 1915 [rep. New York, 1971]) 23-24, 107-109, 240-244, 331-332.
- Yarbro Collins, A. "The Seven Heavens in Jewish and Christian Apocalypses," Cosmology and Eschatology in Jewish and Christian Apocalypticism (JSJSup, 50; Leiden/New York/Köln, 1996) 21-54 at 34-36.

Testament of Abraham

- a. Texts
- Angelov, B. and M. Genov (Ангелов, Б. и М. Генов), "Смъртта на Аврама," Стара българска литература (IX-XVIII) въ примери, преводи и библиография (История на българската литература в примери и библиография, 2; София: Паскалев, 1922) 194-196.
- Franko, I. (Франко, Иван) "Слово о святом Аврааме," Апокрифи і легенди з українських рукописів (Monumenta Linguae Necnon Litterarum Ukraino-Russicarum [Ruthenicarum]; 1-5; 5 vols.; Львов, 1896-1910) 4.104-108.
- Jagić, V. (Ягич В.) Prilozi k historiji književnosti naroda hrvatskoga i srbskoga (Agram, 1868) 65-151 at 83-89.
- Lavrov, P.A. (Лавров П.А.) "Сказание об Аврааме," Апокрифические Тексты (Сборник Отделения Русского Языка и Словесности Императорской Академии Наук, 67:3; С.-Петербург, 1899; [rep. Nendeln, 1966]) 70-81.
- Tihonravov, N.S. (Тихонравов Николай Саввич) "Смерть Авраама," Памятники отреченной русской литературы (2 тома; С.-Петербург/Москва, 1863 [rep. Slavic Printings and Reprintings, 184/1-2; The Hague/Paris, 1970]) 1.79-90.
- , "Смерть Авраама," Апокрифические сказания (Сборник Отделения Русского Языка и Словесности Императорской Академии Наук, 58:4; С.-Петербург, 1894) 1-14.
- b. Translations
- Petkanova, D. (Петканова Донка) Апокрифи (Стара българска литература, 1; София, 1981) 88-98.
- Smol'nikova, L.N. (Смоляникова, Л.Н.) "Смерть Авраама," in: Mil'kov, V.V.

ARCHANGEL MICHAEL AS 'ICON' IN THE BYZANTINE AND POST-BYZANTINE PERIODS

by

RAITA STEYN

DISSERTATION

Submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

MAGISTER ARTIUM

in Greek and Latin Studies in the Faculty of Humanities at the

UNIVERSITY OF JOHANNESBURG

Supervisors : Prof. JLP Wolmarans

Ms Annali Cabano-Dempsey

Johannesburg 2008

To my parents

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank my supervisors, Ms. Annali Dempsey and Prof. Hansie Wolmarans (University of Johannesburg), for their sound guidance and assistance during the completion of this dissertation. I also wish to thank Mr. Mentor de Wet for his advice and valuable suggestions regarding matters of style and formulation of the content. Last but not least, I would like to thank my husband, Johan Steyn, for his support and patience, as well as my parents, Prof. B. Hendrickx and Dr. Thekla Sansaridou-Hendrickx, whose encouragement have inspired me to complete this study.

CONTENTS

1. Introduction	5
2. Chapter 1: Icons & Angels	10
3. Chapter 2: The Byzantine & Post-Byzantine Orthodox Society & the importance of hagiography & iconography in its context	33
4. Chapter 3: Archangel Michael represented as an 'icon' in the pure Byzantine & Post-Byzantine Orthodox context of a 'theological art picture'	43
5. Chapter 4: The characteristics & functions of Michael in the Byzantine & Post-Byzantine periods	58
6. Chapter 5: Funeral laments & death rites in the Orthodox Greek society & the role of Archangel Michael	64
7. Chapter 6: The aspects of syncretism, synthesis & parallelism in Archangel Michael's icon status in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine society	79
8. Chapter 7: Michael's Byzantine & Post-Byzantine iconographic identity as understood and/or revealed in the interpretation of 'icon' in its contemporary meaning	93
9. Conclusion	110
10. Abstract	112
11. Bibliography	114

INTRODUCTION

In the year 330 A.D., the East Roman Empire became the Byzantine Empire and in the process, three different basic cultural components, Hellenism, Roman Civilization and Christianity (including Judaism), merged into a new civilization.¹ Byzantine culture and art are essentially religious in character and the primary aim of Byzantine art was to capture that which was holy and mysterious in a concrete form such as icons, murals, and architecture.²

This dissertation will focus on the perception of Archangel Michael as an ‘icon’ in the pure Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox context of a ‘theological art picture; a religious, sacred image’, subject to the theological and artistic Byzantine prescriptions.³

Indeed, Archangel Michael was arguably the most popular and venerated figure among the Judeo-Christian angels, saints, and arch-fathers (of the Byzantine Church) and in Greek society. He was hugely popular across the entire spectrum of Greek society, but especially amongst the Byzantine youth. So much so, for example, that young students venerated him in order to pass their exams, young advocates venerated him so that they may have rich clients, and soldiers venerated him so that they may win their battles. Even the Imperial family elevated him, as leader of the heavenly army, to a status equivalent to that of Emperor. He was eventually venerated by all mortals as the guardian of Paradise and collector of souls.⁴ Because of his broad overall popularity in Greek society in general, we have to specifically examine the functions and status of Michael as ‘icon’ in a Greek Orthodox context.

One cannot however ignore the fact that contemporary society has ‘created’ a similar phenomenon called the modern day icon: “someone greatly admired, often seen as a

¹ Savvides & Hendrickx, Introducing Byzantine History, Paris, 2001, pp. 29-31.

² Yanagi, M., Takahashi, E., Tsusuka, S., & Nagatsuka, Y., Byzantium, London, 1978, pp. 7-13.

³ Theunissen W. P., Ikonen, Den Haag (no date) – Hendrix, P., Skrobucha H & Janssens, A. M., Ikonen, Amsterdam/Brussels, 1960 – Zografidis, G., Βυζαντινή φιλοσοφία της εικόνας (2nd ed.), Athens, 1997.

⁴ Hendrickx, B., “Agathias se epigramme oor ‘ikone’,” in Acta Patristica et Byzantina 5, 1994, pp. 66-75. – Danforth L. M., The Death Rituals of Rural Greece, Princeton University Press, New Jersey, 1982.

perfect example or an idealised role model".⁵ It would therefore be interesting to see how these modern day icons compare to Michael.

1. Research Aims and Justification

This study aims to provide a clean and scholarly sound explanation of why and how Archangel Michael became the main 'icon' in Greek society for more than ten centuries.⁶ No such study has ever been undertaken and I am convinced that a study like this will contribute greatly to the understanding of the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine value system, mentality and worldview.

2. Problem Statements

a. Iconography

In a Byzantine and Post-Byzantine context, serious consideration must be given to the question 'What exactly contributed to the 'iconic status' of Michael?' To fully address this question, we need to look at the following:

- Did traditional Byzantine iconography play a part in the role model status and/or functions of Michael?
- Was this iconography influenced by Michael's status and if so, how and to what extent?

b. Syncretism

- Did syncretism play a role in Michael's 'icon' status?
- Did (and how) ancient pagan elements blend in with the Biblical and Christian traditions?
- Did the Christian 'promise of paradise' alter the negative image of Charon⁷ into a figure capable of bridging earthly life with the eternal one?

⁵ Collins, Today's English Dictionary, London, 1995, p. 388 – (Compare also Eco, U., On Beauty, London, 2004, pp. 418 – 430.)

⁶ Zografidis, Βυζαντινή – Tsakiridis, L., Παμμέγιστοι Ταξίαρχαι Μιχαήλ και Γαβριήλ (Οι Αρχάγγελοι), Κατερίνη (2nd ed.), 2001.

⁷ For a definition, see Hyperidis, "Αυτοκράτορες", Εγκυκλοπαιδικόν λεξικόν Ελευθερουδάκη, vol. VIII, Athens, 1930, pp. 376-377: Charon, also known as Charos, Charondas or Haros.

c. The different roles attributed to Michael

- How did the different ‘roles’ attributed to Michael fit in with his status and did this status enhance his popularity?

d. Contemporary Icons

- In this modern day, what elevates an ordinary person to the status of ‘icon’?
- Can the ‘icon’ of today be compared to the Byzantine icon of Michael?

3. Methodology

A combination of socio-historical, anthropological and literary approaches will be applied within a contextual (such as texts and icons) analysis, to highlight the socio-historical and artistic religious relationships between the different interpretations of the term ‘icon’ (also against a literary background). The relationship between the perceptions/concepts, both in a Byzantine and Post–Byzantine context, will be examined.

For the period under consideration, a broad spectrum of Byzantine and Post–Byzantine sources will be used: icono-hagiography (icons, murals, mosaics), literary sources (poems, inscriptions, graffiti) and laography (study of folklore; in casu recorded visions and dreams) as well as an eclectic and exemplary selection of important and representative pictorial, literary and laographic ‘images’ of Archangel Michael. For the Byzantine iconographic stereotypes and their theological meaning,⁸ the 18th Century text of the Ερμηνεία της ζωγραφικής τέχνης, by Dionysius of Fournà, is most important.⁹

4. Structure

This dissertation will consist of seven chapters in the following order:

Chapter 1

The first chapter will present the terminology and meaning of icons and angels in general with special attention on the Byzantine and Post–Byzantine society.

⁸ Romaïos, K., Κοντά στις ρίζες, Athens, 1980 – See also Danforth, The death rituals.

⁹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, A. (ed.), Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά: Ερμηνεία της ζωγραφικής τέχνης, Thessaloniki, 2004.

Chapter 2

In this chapter a historical overview of the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox society and the degree of importance of iconography and hagiography therein will be discussed. Essential historical events will be examined in terms of religious, social, cultural and political influences with special attention to influences and transformation of pagan themes on early Christian art with regard to the Byzantine iconography and hagiography.

Chapter 3

It will mainly examine the artistic and symbolic iconographic representation of Archangel Michael in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine periods while referring to the writings of Dionysius of Fournas.

Chapter 4

This chapter invites us to analyse the conceptualisation, characteristics and functions of Archangel Michael in the Post-Byzantine Period.

Chapter 5

Chapter five will present a critical overview and discussion of funeral laments and death rites in the Orthodox Greek Society as well as the role which Archangel Michael played in that context. We will also see how mythological figures such as Charon, Hades and Thanatos, blend in with the Biblical and Apocalyptic image of Archangel Michael.

Chapter 6

The Byzantine society consisted of a diverse group of people who shared more or less a similar culture; therefore, this study will include various elements found on Archangel Michael in Ancient Greek, Roman, Judaic, Christian and Islamic civilisations. This is of utmost importance as these elements may have been absorbed in the Post-Byzantine Orthodox society as a result of syncretism, synthesis and parallelism.

Chapter 7

In the final chapter we will examine and compare the parallelisms found in the Post-Byzantine ‘icon’ with those in the modern – day society. Lastly, this will be followed by a conclusion.

* * * * *

Chapter 1

Icons and Angels

In this chapter the terms icon and angel will be defined and analysed in their historical and socio-cultural context. This is especially important in order to comprehend Michael's position in the hierarchical order of angels, who have always played a very significant role in the Orthodox iconography. Moreover, modern interpretations of these terms will be discussed.

1. The term 'icon': etymology and early references

The term 'icon' indirectly derived from the Greek verb 'εἰκέναι' which means 'to be like', and directly from the noun 'εἰκών', which means 'image, a likeness, portrait' or 'similitude, semblance, simile' also 'form, appearance; statue'.¹ It therefore indicates an image or likeness, usually of a religious subject.

In the Septuagint,² the word 'icon' was used to refer not only to man who was created in the image of God, but also to pagan idols.³ In the New Testament the term is used for man who was created in the image of God: "Ἄνθρωπος μὲν γὰρ οὐκ ὀφείλει κατακαλύπτεσθαι

¹ Hendrickx B, "The Byzantine Icon: Some aspects of its Historical and Theological Significance" Apollonia, 1982, pp. 77-96 – Liddell & Scott, Greek English Lexicon, Oxford, 1978 p. 485 – Babiniotis, G., Λεξικό της Νέας Ελληνικής Γλώσσας, Athens, 2002, p. 556.

² The Septuagint is the Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures used by the early Christians.

³ Hendrickx, "The Byzantine Icon" pp. 77-96.

τὴν κεφαλὴν, εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα θεοῦ ὑπάρχων.”⁴ It also refers to Christ being the exact representation of the invisible God⁵ and to the Roman emperor being portrayed on coins:

“Δεῖξάτε μοι δηνάριον· τὸ νοστέχει ἐκὼν καὶ περιγραφόν.”⁶ Finally, in the Apocalypse of John, it refers to the horrible likeness to the beast.⁷ The first instance of an image or icon is found in the Bible (Septuagint⁸), when God made man in his own image.

1.1 The Byzantine Orthodox Icon

In the Byzantine context, an icon is the most important implement in the Orthodox Church. In a pure Byzantine Orthodox sense, an icon is a religious and devotional portrait of the sacred ‘image’ of Christ, Christian angels or the saints, painted on small wooden panels subject to theological as well as artistic Byzantine prescriptions. Icons which were believed to have come into existence miraculously and not painted by a human hand are known as acheiropoieta (ἄχειροποίητα, literally ‘not made by hand’). These images were seen as authoritative as to the true appearance of the subject and acted as important references for other icons.

The origin of icons can be traced back as far as the portraits of Egyptian mummies dating from the Roman period.⁹ “Aan de andere kant zijn de ‘dodenportretten’” - writes Theunissen – “en juist deze hebben een treffende overeenkomst met de oudste ikonen.”¹⁰ These Egyptian portraits not only gave a resemblance to the dead person, but also a sort of idealised image of the ‘immortal’ nature of man. This idealised image found in these encaustic portraits may be regarded as the first influences on icon art.¹¹ As Hendrix explains, those were portraits of individuals dating back to pre-Christian Egypt; painted on wood, attached to the body of the deceased. Their influence on the Byzantine painting

⁴ 1 Cor 11:7.

⁵ Heb 1:3.

⁶ Lk 20:24: “Show me a denarius. Whose portrait and inscription are on it?” Compare also Mt 22:20, Mk 12:16 and Rm 8:29 – Hendrickx, “The Byzantine Icon” pp. 77-96.

⁷ Hendrickx, “The Byzantine Icon” pp. 77-96 – Rv 13:4.

⁸ Gn 1:26-27. The Septuagint’s numbering and names do not correspond to the English Bible and are not uniformly identical.

⁹ Yanagi et al, Byzantium p. 180.

¹⁰ Theunissen, Ikonen, p. 17.

¹¹ Theunissen, Ikonen, p. 17.

is remarkable as seen in the shape of their big expressive eyes, the long thin nose, small mouth and bright colours.¹²

Around the 4th Century A.D. the term 'icon' referred to mosaics, paintings and bas-relief displaying religious themes but was later applied to small wooden panels for devotion in church or at home. From the 15th century onwards, the term 'icon' seemed to be used only for small painted panels.¹³

In the Byzantine Church the iconostasis remained relatively low until the 16th century. In 14th century Russia,¹⁴ however, the iconostasis had already appeared in its final form being that of a solid high barrier completely blocking the congregation's view of the sanctuary and its sacred mysteries. The Russian iconostasis symbolised the basic dogma of the manifestation of Christ as foretold in the Old Testament, fulfilled in the New Testament, and re-enacted in the daily sacramental liturgy to award final salvation to the faithful.¹⁵

Today, on entering a Greek Orthodox Church, one is confronted with the iconostasis (image stand), called the 'Hieron', the Holy Temple. This iconostasis is not only the 'icon screen' that separates the sanctuary from the area around the altar; it also blocks the immediate view of the area around the altar.¹⁶ Only the clergy is supposed to enter the 'Hieron' and an essential characteristic of Eastern Liturgy is the symbolic passing of clergy through its doors.

Small icons also hang in Christian households where they became objects of everyday veneration (δουλεῖα) and sometimes of 'anti-canonical' adoration.¹⁷ These small private wooden icons, in some way, approached the adoration (λατρεῖα) of the images of the ancient gods by substituting God himself. Painted portraits of saints and of Christ were ¹² Hendrix, et al., Ikonen, pp. 68 – 69.

¹³ Hendrickx, "The Byzantine Icon" pp. 77-96.

¹⁴ Hendrickx, "The Byzantine Icon", p. 83. Hendrickx says that the iconostasis in its full form does not come from Byzantium, but from Russia, where it originated in the 11th century, probably under influence of the altar-fences of Asia Minor.

¹⁵ Huges, L., "Art and Liturgy in Russia: Rublev and his successors", in Angold, M., (ed.) The Cambridge History of Christianity, Eastern Christianity, Cambridge, 2006, pp. 283-287.

¹⁶ Hendrickx, "The Byzantine Icon" pp. 77-96.

¹⁷ Yanagi, et al., Byzantium p. 180 – Hendrickx, "The Byzantine Icon", p. 80.

developed from symbols or simple illustrations of non - Christian ideas. This meant they created the essence of an eidolon, an idol.¹⁸

In some cases the icon itself would become an object of veneration (δουλεῖα) as it would be taken along by its owner on travels and by the armies during their campaigns (e.g. the famous Hodigitria).¹⁹ It was believed that some icons would protect them and others were thaumaturgical.²⁰ In the ritual and religious life of 20th century rural Greece, for example, this phenomenon still takes place at funeral ceremonies where the body of the deceased is accompanied to the burial service by an icon. Danforth notes that the placed over the chest; a large white candle is placed between the hands, and an icon is placed on the legs.²¹

In chapter six it is explained how religious syncretism occurs – i.e. when Christian beliefs are reshaped through cultural accommodation. Van Heerden states that when new forms of Christianity are accepted, they are given traditional meanings. It is therefore believed that people do not hold onto the cross as a symbol of the sacrifice of Christ, but rather as a sign of power. As a result, crosses are worn or placed on their houses as a symbol of power to protect them from evil. Apart from it being a symbol of faith, it is also regarded, like an amulet, as a power object.²² In view of this, one may find that some people regard an icon ‘as a sign of power’ as well.

1.2 The Order of the Byzantine Orthodox Icon

Whether hung in a church or a home, the icon encompassed many different themes.²³ To differentiate between these, the following order²⁴ of importance will be applied:

- i. Icons of Christ (Christ Emmanuel, the Acheiropoitos and the Pantokrator).

¹⁸ Hendrickx, “The Byzantine Icon”, pp. 77-96.

¹⁹ Hendrix, et al., Ikonen, pp. 134 – 135.

²⁰ Hendrickx, “The Byzantine Icon” pp. 77 – 96.

²¹ Danforth, The Death Rituals, pp. 38 – 39. The above mentioned ‘picture’ of the deceased was based on fieldwork conducted in the village of Potamia, July 1979, which draws on insights into rural Greek culture.

²² Van Rheeën, G., “World view and Syncretism”, Mongolia 1993, <http://missiology.org/mongolianlectures/worldviewandsyncretism.htm>, 2007/11/15.

²³ Grabar, Byzantine Painting, p. 187.

²⁴ Hendrickx, “The Byzantine Icon” pp. 77 – 96; – Theunissen, Ikonen, p. 17; – Hendrix, et al., Ikonen, p. 143.

- ii. Icons of Mary (types being the Pantassa, the Hodigitria, the Eleousa, the Glykophilousa, the Galaktotrophousa, the Orante-figure, and the Tricheirousa).
- iii. Icons of angels and prophets (prophets painted when foreseeing symbolically events of the New Testament, whilst angels are represented in their different categories being the Seraphim, the Cherubim and the Ordinary Angel).
- iv. Icons of apostles and evangelists (usually painted as a group or individually).
- v. Icons of Saints (usually painted as a group or individually).
- vi. Icons referring to Biblical themes.

1.3 'Icons' in its contemporary meaning

The word icon needs to be understood both in the modern context as well as the Byzantine context. Today the word icon is used to describe a person of fame or importance or 'someone greatly admired', and might even allude to an idealised role model.²⁵ When someone (usually a celebrity) is greatly admired for his or her skills, society can elevate him/her to a messianic role or religious icon.²⁶ In chapter seven we will deal with the question: 'In this modern day, what elevates an ordinary person to the status of 'icon' and can this status be compared to Michael's iconic status?'

1.4 'Icons' as a sign/symbol

There is also another meaning of the word icon. An icon is also used as an indicator of a task, direction, path or command as seen in modern computer technology. These tasks, commands or locations are indicated as little images of the task or command or location of what goes on in our PC. A little image of a printer, for example, indicates both the location of the printer command as well as the command itself. It is literally a reflection of something that otherwise requires lengthy explanation. It indicates a concept which is instantly grasped by the 'user'. Perhaps that is what an icon really is – an image, symbol and concept or idea which is understood by the 'user'. The user has to have 'knowledge' of the concept, symbol or sign in order to understand it.

²⁵ Collins, Today's English, p.388 – see also Eco, On Beauty, pp. 418 – 430.

²⁶ Sunday Times "Christ-like meaning found in Beckham", September 18, 2005, p. 5.

Therefore a Byzantine religious icon can only be understood in the context of Eastern – Christianity, e.g. Mary and Baby have an infinitely greater meaning than just what the image or icon portrays. Jung also states that a word or an image is symbolic when it implies something more than its obvious and immediate meaning.²⁷

Thus, an image or depiction that represents something else of greater significance is usually associated with religious, cultural, political and economical standing.²⁸

2 Angels

2.1 Defining the term ‘angel’

The word ‘angel’ derived from the Greek word ‘ἄγγελος’ (angelos) which literally means ‘messenger’, one that announces or tells’, and later, a semi – divine being’.²⁹ In Hebrew the word ‘mal’akh’ also means ‘messenger’ and can be used either for spirits or men. According to The Bible, angelos is applied directly to John the Baptist, “Behold I send my messenger (angelos) before your face,”³⁰ while mal’akh is used in the prophecy of Malachi: “See, I will send my messenger, who will prepare the way before me.”³¹ The most common use of the biblical word ‘ἄγγελος’ is that of a godly spirit messenger and only the context can determine whether it is a human or angelic messenger.³²

In the Biblical context, angels are spirit-beings created by God before the creation of the universe: “You made the heavens, even the highest heavens, and all their starry host, the earth and all that is in them”³³ and again “For by him all things were created: things in heaven and on earth, visible and invisible.”³⁴ They were created to serve God, Christ and

²⁷ Jung, C. (ed.) Man and his Symbols, Aldus Books Limited, London, 1979. p. 20 - Compare also an ‘anthropological’ definition of a sign, Seymour-Smith, C., Macmillan Dictionary of Anthropology, Macmillan Press Ltd, 1986, p. 258: “A sign in linguistic and SEMIOTIC theory is defined as a relation between a signifier, a signified and a given context or ground. The different kinds of relationship between signifier and signified give the different types of sign: INDEX, ICON and SYMBOL. The relationship between the signifier and signified in the case of an index is existential, in that of an icon representational and in that of a symbol conventional.”

²⁸ Images on coins for political and economical standings will be examined in a later stage.

²⁹ Liddell & Scott, Greek English Lexicon, p. 7.

³⁰ Mk 1:2.

³¹ Mt 3:1 – Ankerberg, J., & Weldon, J., The Facts On Angels, Harvest House Publishers, Oregon, 1995, p. 9.

³² Louw, J.P., & Nida, E. A. (ed.), Greek – English Lexicon of the New Testament, vol. I, New York, 1989, 33.195, p. 410 – Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, Barker Books, Michigan, 2001, p.462.

³³ Neh 9:6.

³⁴ Col 1:16.

the church to perform the will of God on earth.³⁵ It has been stated that Christ is the ground of creation which signifies that all created things, whether visible or invisible, owe their being to Him, which illustrates the true place of the hierarchy of angelic powers that the heretics were trying to set up in conflict to Christ.³⁶

The impression most people have of angels is that they are winged creatures. Art through the ages has portrayed angels as being cute, chubby, baby-like creatures with swirling wings. It is believed that Pseudo-Dionysius the Aeropagite's³⁷ writings had a large influence on the depiction of angels in art.³⁸ According to Marie Chapien, the idea possibly originated with the description of the cherubim and seraphim.³⁹

Contrary to 'cute and chubby creatures', angels are described in the Bible as being higher, stronger and more intelligent than human beings.

- Man is just under the angels: *"You made him a little lower than the angels;"*⁴⁰
- *"yet even angels, although they are stronger and more powerful,..."*⁴¹
- *"Now I have come to explain to you what will happen to your people in the future, for the vision concerns a time yet to come."*⁴²

Angels are innumerable⁴³ and have different ranks as well as a variety of duties according to their ranks.⁴⁴ In the New Testament, Christ used a military term to refer to them as *"legions"*⁴⁵ of angels.⁴⁶

³⁵ Ankerberg, & Weldon, The Facts On Angels, p. 9.

³⁶ Davidson, F., Stibbs, A.M., & Kevan, E.F., The New Bible Commentary, London, 1963, p.1046.

³⁷ Pseudo-Dionysius the Aeropagite is believed to be a fifth century Syrian monk who was the main source for post-New Testament Christian ideas about angels. It states that: "his writings were taken to be those of a convert of the Apostle Paul, mentioned in Acts 17:34." Dionysius writings had a large influence on the depiction of angels in arts: retrieved from Kiefer, J. "Michael and All Angels" <http://satucket.com/lectionary/Michael.htm> 2007/11/16.

³⁸ Kiefer, "Michael and All Angels".

³⁹ Chapien, M., Angels in our lives, U.S.A., 2006, p.131.

⁴⁰ Heb. 2:7, Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p.459.

⁴¹ 2 Pt 2:11.

⁴² Dn. 10:14.

⁴³ Ps. 10:21 & Rv 5:11.

⁴⁴ Col 1:16 & Eph 1:21; 3:10.

⁴⁵ Vine, W.E., An Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, Riverside Book and Bible House, USA, p. 659: The word 'legion' was a Roman military classification for 4,200 to 6 000 soldiers. In the time of Christ it formed a complete army of cavalry, up to 5000 men. (Compare also Chapien, Angels, p. 131).

⁴⁶ Chapien, Angels, p. 131.

2.3 Angels and their functions

The Bible has it that angels are ministering spirits who are sent to help or serve human beings: “Are not all angels ministering spirits sent to serve those who will inherit salvation?”⁴⁷ Angels act as executors of God’s wrath but also deliver Lot from danger.⁴⁸ An angel is appointed leader of the host of Israel and goes before Moses: “my angel shall go before thee.”⁴⁹

In the Old Testament, God’s angels carried out His requests; angels were given special commissions regarding men and ordinary affairs. In the New Testament the angels are the intermediaries between God and man. Children have guardian angels and these angels do not lose the vision of God as they have a mission to fulfil on earth.⁵⁰ Christ sets a seal upon the Old Testament by saying: “See that you do not look down on one of these little ones. For I tell you that their angels in heaven always see the face of my Father in heaven.”⁵¹

In order to perform their functions, angels may appear as normal men⁵² or in visions⁵³, as in Isaiah’s vision, or in dreams⁵⁴, as to Joseph⁵⁵ or as beings in shining garments.⁵⁶ When angels appear directly to men, the effect is normally ‘fear and shock’, and therefore the opening phrase, “Fear not”.⁵⁷

⁴⁷ Heb 1:14 – Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p. 463.

⁴⁸ Gn 28-29.

⁴⁹ Gn 28-29.

⁵⁰ Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p.469. – www.greatdreams.com/Archangels.htm 2007/09/18.

⁵¹ Mt 18:10.

⁵² Gn 18: 1-8.

⁵³ Taylor, M. D., The Complete Book of Bible Knowledge, Tyndale House Publishers, Inc., Illinois, 1992, p.189 – Is 6:1. Nel, M., “Opstanding, en Daniël 12:1-4”, Ekklesiastikos Pharos, Vol.88, University of Johannesburg, 2006, p.16: Nel states that Dn 9 as well as Dn 10-12 can be classified as epiphany-visions, whilst Dn 7 & 8 are symbolic visions.

⁵⁴ Numbers 12:6: “When a prophet of the Lord is among you, I reveal myself to him in visions, I speak to him in dreams”. See also Dn 7-12. Laography (in casu recorded visions and dreams) is another example of visions and dreams. Danforth, The Death, p.135. Here Danforth mentions that to many Greeks in Potamia, dreams represent the experiences of the immaterial portion of man. He furthermore states that when a person sees a dream in which he interacts with another person or saint/s of the Orthodox Church, it is considered that the souls of the two beings have come into contact.

⁵⁵ Mt 1:20, “While he was thinking about this, an angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream and said, “Joseph, descendant of David, do not be afraid to take Mary to be your wife.””

⁵⁶ Lk 24:4: “They stood there puzzled about this, when suddenly two men in bright shining clothes stood by them.”

⁵⁷ Ankerberg, The Facts, p.10: “When they appear directly to men, the result is usually one of emotional shock or fear; hence, the common biblical refrain of the angels, Fear not.” – Lk 1:12-13: “When Zechariah saw him, he was alarmed and felt afraid. But the angel said to him, “‘Don’t be afraid, Zechariah!...’ ””

2.3 Types of Angels

According to the Bible, there are basically two categories:⁵⁸

1. The holy angels:

- Seraphim
- Cherubim
- Thrones
- Archangel
- Ordinary Angels (The Heavenly Host)⁵⁹ and

2. The fallen angels:

- Lucifer
- Dominions, Principalities, Authorities, Powers, evil spirits or demons as described in the Bible.⁶⁰

Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite,⁶¹ places the angels into nine orders which are subdivided in three categories (three triads of three each): The first category consists of the highest order, the Seraphim, Cherubim and Thrones. The second: Dominions, Authorities and Forces and the third category, which is the lowest order, consists of Leaders, Archangels and Angels.⁶² Dionysius the Areopagite states that angels refer to all nine choirs and each order helps to reveal and declare God's glory to the order below.⁶³ On the Christian mystical writings of Dionysius, Kenneth Latourette states that *"God, Who is..., exercises His power through nine orders of celestial beings and does so on earth through the hierarchy of the Church, which corresponds to the celestial hierarchy and which begins with bishops as the highest rank, has priests in the second rank, and deacons in the third and lowest rank."*⁶⁴

⁵⁸ 1 Tm 5:21. Further on this dissertation, the Byzantine example will be followed which will refer to Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite.

⁵⁹ Col 1:16.

⁶⁰ Ankerberg & Weldon, The Facts, p. 9 – Also compare Chapian, Angels, pp. 131 – 136.

⁶¹ On Dionysius the Areopagite, see Latourette, K.S., A History of Christianity: volume 1: Beginnings to 1500, New York, 1975, p. 314: the writings of Dionysius the Areopagite, who is mentioned in The Acts of the Apostles as a convert of Paul at Athens, carried great weight in Christian mysticism. "It is significant that for centuries the most widely used writings on mysticism in Christian circles were those ascribed to Dionysius the Areopagite and that they were written in the East and were profoundly shaped by Neoplatonism." Compare also Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p. 459.

⁶² Kiefer, "Michael and All Angels".

⁶³ Kiefer, "Michael and All Angels".

⁶⁴ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 210.

Pope Gregory I, referring to his Homilies on the Gospel, records the same nine orders but in different hierarchy. Then, it is said that:

*“Dante in the Convivio gives still a third ranking, but affirms the ranking of Dionysius in the Comedy, canto 28. Aquinas discusses the matter in the Summa T., part I, Q 108.”*⁶⁵

Today many scholars, such as Dee Finney, place the angels in nine orders believed to be based on Scripture: Seraphim, Cherubim, Thrones, Dominations, Principalities, Powers, Virtues, Archangels, and Angels.⁶⁶ Modern theologians, such as Graham, also refer to ‘medieval theologians who divided angels into nine grades’. However, he organises the angels in the following order: Archangels, Angels, Seraphim, Cherubim, Principalities, Authorities, Powers, Thrones, Might and Dominion.⁶⁷

The following table illustrates the different interpretations of the nine hierarchical orders of the angels.⁶⁸

Dionysius the Areopagite	Pope Gregory I	Convivio
Category 1	Category 1	Category 1
1. Seraphim	1. Seraphim	1. Seraphim
2. Cherubim	2. Cherubim	2. Cherubim
3. Thrones	3. Thrones	3. Powers
Category 2	Category 2	Category 2
1. Dominions	1. Dominions	1. Principalities
2. Virtues	2. Principalities	2. Virtues
3. Powers	3. Powers	3. Dominions
Category 3	Category 3	Category 3
1. Principalities	1. Virtues	1. Thrones
2. Archangels	2. Archangels	2. Archangels
3. Angels	3. Angels	3. Angels

⁶⁵ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

⁶⁶ Finney, D., “Archangels”.

⁶⁷ Graham, B., Angels: God’s Secret Agents, London, 1976, p. 54.

⁶⁸ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

2.4 Seraph/ Seraphim

Dionysius the Areopagite places the Seraph in the highest class of angels. ‘Seraph’, mentioned only in Isaiah 6, derives from the root word ‘burn’, thus ‘burning’. The word is used in Numbers 21:6, 8; Deuteronomy 8:15, Isaiah 14:29 & 30:6; where it is translated as ‘fiery serpent’.⁶⁹ The Seraphim (plural of Seraph) have six wings; two for flying, two to cover their face and two to cover their feet.⁷⁰ They are the guardians who stand before God’s throne praising and adoring God night and day. They are consumed with personal devotion to God.⁷¹ When Isaiah saw the Lord in a vision, he saw Seraphim worshipping Him and described them as human in form with six wings.⁷² This also confirms Dionysius of Fournas’s⁷³ description of the Seraph having six wings, who furthermore states that the two last wings not only support their flight but also hold sprayers with the following words:

“ἅγιος, ἅγιος, ἅγιος,” (Holy, Holy, and Holy).⁷⁴

He says that the Seraphim devote themselves to contemplating God, living and praising Him.⁷⁵ He then describes the six winged creatures as having one head with four faces (that of an angel, an eagle, a lion and a calf) with a crown on the head and a Gospel in their hands placed against their chest. Their feet also hold Gospels whilst they look upwards.⁷⁶

2.5 Cherub/ Cherubim

It’s uncertain what the Hebrew word ‘Cherub’ means. The letters of the Hebrew root word mean ‘holding something in safekeeping’ and the plural, Cherubim, means ‘to be near’.⁷⁷ In the book of Ezekiel⁷⁸ the Cherub is linked to the glory and worship of God. Ezekiel records two visions in which the Lord appears to him, enthroned above four ⁶⁹ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

⁷⁰ Is 6:2.

⁷¹ Chapan, Angels, p. 131 – Is 6:3.

⁷² Is 6. (Compare also Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 136).

⁷³ Regarding Dionysius of Fournas’s contribution to the development of the Byzantine Hagiography, see chapter three.

⁷⁴ Papadopoulou-Kérameus (ed.), Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 45.

⁷⁵ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

⁷⁶ Papadopoulou-Kérameus (ed.), Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 45.

⁷⁷ Chapan, Angels, p. 138.

⁷⁸ Ezk 1 & 10 - Jung, Man and his Symbols, pp.20-21, – Chapan, Angels, pp. 138-139.

living creatures. He describes these living creatures as Cherubim with four faces (that of a human, a lion, a calf and an eagle) having four wings whilst Dionysius of Fourna describes the Cherub as having one head and two wings.⁷⁹ Furthermore, it is most probable that the ‘living creatures’ referred to in the book of Revelations were Cherubim.⁸⁰ Here, John describes the four separate winged creatures:

- firstly as a lion
- secondly as an ox
- thirdly a human and
- lastly an eagle.⁸¹

There were two carved, gold-plated cherubim placed on the cover of the Ark of the Covenant and in Solomon’s Temple and two larger gold-plated cherubim spread their wings above the Ark.⁸² Also, ancient middle Eastern art often depicts, at the sides of the throne of a king, a figure with the body of a lion or a bull, the face of a man, and the wings of an eagle. Not only flanking a throne, but also placed at the gates or doorways of a city or a temple. Then, in Greek folklore, a griffin is portrayed as having a head, chest, claws and the wings of an eagle, joined to the posterior of a lion.⁸³

The Cherubim must have been angels who were close in the presence of God. Although the Bible does not specify if all angels have wings, the Cherub is presented as a winged being. The Cherubim are never referred to as angels because they are not specifically messengers.⁸⁴ In the Old Testament God enthrones and even rides a Cherub.⁸⁵ It is the Cherubim (also first mentioned in the Bible) that guard the Garden of Eden with flaming swords,⁸⁶ and are stationed around God’s throne to guard the throne and His glory.⁸⁷

⁷⁹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus (ed.), Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 45.

⁸⁰ Rv 4:6, 9, 5:8 & 14.

⁸¹ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”. In both cases the creatures are symbolically associated with the attributes of God, being power, love, justice and wisdom, as well as the four Gospels. Matthew begins with the genealogy of Jesus and thus correspond this Gospel with Man. Then, Mark begins with John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness, and is associated with the wild animal, the Lion. Luke starts with Zacharias in the Temple and is paired with the Ox, a sacrificial animal. Lastly, John starts with the Logos (Eternal Word), which is connected with the Eagle, rising towards the heaven.

⁸² Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 136.

⁸³ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

⁸⁴ Ankerberg & Weldon, The Facts, p. 11.

⁸⁵ 2 Ki 19:15; 2 Sam 22:11; Ps 18:11.

⁸⁶ Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 136. In Gn 3:24 it is noted that the word ‘sword’ is used and not ‘swords’ as referred to by Taylor. Compare also observations on the Angel of the Lord.

From these texts it is derived that Lucifer was part of the class of Cherubim before his fall.⁸⁸

2.6 Thrones/ Thronoli

Thronoli or thrones refer to those who sit upon them. These may be either good or evil angels.⁸⁹ These are also described as the ruling angels in Ephesians,⁹⁰ Colossians⁹¹ and Peter⁹² and form part of Dominions, Principalities and Powers. Dionysius the Areopagite, however, gives the hierarchy as Dominions, Virtues and Powers. Then, Dionysius of Fournia describes the thrones as wheels in flames, surrounded by wings. In the midst of these wheels there are eyes which are entwined to form a royal throne.⁹³

2.7 Principalities, Authorities, Rulers and Powers

In the Biblical context, it appears that one third of the angels were fallen angels.⁹⁴ Principalities, powers and dominions are considered to be the names of different kinds of angelic beings while demons are considered to be fallen or rebellious angels.⁹⁵ According to a definition by Collier,⁹⁶ it is stated that the word ‘demon’ derived from the Greek word δαίμων and is believed to be a human soul. Alexiou comments that the angel who was appointed at baptism to guard the soul “is exactly parallel to Plato’s daimon”⁹⁷ to whom each man is assigned during his lifetime. Then, Davidson, Stibbs and Kevan comment that the terms thrones, dominions, etc., were being used in current angelology and that Paul used these terms to show that “all possible existences are included”,⁹⁸ and are subordinate to Christ.⁹⁹

⁸⁷ Ezk 28:14 & 16.

⁸⁸ Chapien, Angels, p. 135. Compare also observations on Lucifer.

⁸⁹ Chapien, Angels, p. 131 – Col 1:16.

⁹⁰ Eph 1:21 & 3:10.

⁹¹ Col 1:16 & 2:10.

⁹² 1 Pt 3:22.

⁹³ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνιά, p.45.

⁹⁴ Rv 12:4, Eph 1:21, 3:10, 6:12, Col 1:16, 2:10, 2:15, Rom 8:38. Compare also Ankerberg & Weldon, The Facts, p. 11 as well as King, M., “Chief Rainbow Warrior: Archangel Michael”, 2007 <http://www.americanchronicle.com/articles/viewArticle.asp?articleID=5580> 2007/11/16

⁹⁵ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

⁹⁶ Halsey, W.D. (ed), Collier’s Encyclopedia, Macmillan Educational Company, New York, Vol. 8, 1989, p. 96.

⁹⁷ Alexiou, Margaret., The Ritual Lament In Greek Tradition, Great Britain, Cambridge University Press 1974, p. 26.

⁹⁸ Davidson, et al., The New Bible, p. 1046.

⁹⁹ Davidson, et al., The New Bible, p. 1046.

Paul lists four kinds of angels among those who rebelled with Satan:¹⁰⁰

- i. Principalities: The Chief rulers, the highest rank in the demonic kingdom.
- ii. Authorities: The Fallen angels who are under Satan's command.
- iii. Rulers of darkness: The Spirit-world rulers who assist the operations of Satan, and
- iv. Spiritual wicked spirits: Those who operate from the heavenlies.

2.8 Archangels

The prefix 'Arch' means chief-, head-, leader- or upper- (angel) – a chief among angels.¹⁰¹ An Archangel thus is a heavenly being of higher rank than angels. Today, many scholars¹⁰² believe that this implies that there is only one such angel. Therefore, they regard Michael as the principal angel based on the fact that the Bible only refers to 'The Archangel' and not the Archangels.¹⁰³ Then again in, Jewish and Christian literature, four Archangels are given as Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel.¹⁰⁴ An alternative tradition¹⁰⁵ gives seven Archangels. Also, in the book of Tobit¹⁰⁶ and Enoch¹⁰⁷ it is believed that there are seven Archangels. The seven lamps of Revelations are symbolically viewed by many scholars as the seven Archangels.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰⁰ Col 1:16-18, 2:10, Eph 1:21, 6:12 – Chapien, Angels, p. 132.

¹⁰¹ Graham, Angels, pp. 55-56 – Chapien, Angels, p. 132 – Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 196.

¹⁰² Graham, Angels, pp. 55-56 – Chapien, Angels, p. 132 – Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p. 462.

¹⁰³ Dn 10:13, 21, 12:1 - Th 4:16 - Jude 9 - Rv 12:7. Compare also Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p. 462 : "The term archangel appears in two passages, 1 Thessalonians 4:16 and Jude 9. In the latter, Michael is named as an archangel."

¹⁰⁴ Tobit 12:15 & 1 Enoch 20. In Rv. 7:1-2 reference is made to four angels standing at the four corners of the earth, but there is no mention of them being Archangels. In Finney, D., "Archangels" states that in angelology, Raphael is known as the watcher of the North, Gabriel the watcher of the South, Uriel the watcher of the West, and Michael, the watcher of the East. (Compare also Virtue, D., Archangels and Ascended Masters, USA, 2006, pp. 38 & 45. According to Doreen Virtue, Raphael's name means "God heals" or "God has healed" and Uriel's name means "God is light," "God's light" or "fire of God".)

¹⁰⁵ Tobit 12:15, 1 Enoch 20 – Kiefer, "Michael and All Angels". Compare also Finney, "Archangels". Finney comments that the names of the seven Archangels are Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel, Raguel, Sariel, and the fallen Lucifer. She also states that there has been some debate on who the seven Archangels were and that most agreed to the four angels being Michael, Gabriel, Raphael and Uriel. The remaining three Archangels are chosen from Metatron, Remiel, Sariel, Anael, Raguel and Raziel. Also compare the following from www.newadvent.org/cathen/12640b.htm: "Of these seven 'Archangels' which appear in the angelology of post-Exilic Judaism, only three, Gabriel, Michael and Raphael, are mentioned in the canonical Scriptures. The others, according to the Book of Enoch (cf. xxi) are Uriel, Raguel, Sariel, and Jerahmeel, while from other apocryphal sources we get the variant names Izidkiel, Hanael, and Kepharel instead of the last three in the other list."

¹⁰⁶ Tobit 12:15.

¹⁰⁷ 1 Enoch 20.

¹⁰⁸ Rv 4:5 & Kiefer, "Michael and All Angels".

In the Bible, only three angels are ever named: Lucifer, Gabriel and Michael.¹⁰⁹ Hendrix confirms in his book that there are indeed three angels mentioned in the Bible, but he refers to Gabriel, Michael and Raphael.¹¹⁰ In Hebrew, Gabriel is a compound of the words ‘strong / great / mighty’ and ‘God’ and could be interpreted to mean “Man of God”, “God is strong / great / mighty”.¹¹¹ Although the Bible does not refer to him as an Archangel, many define him as one.¹¹² Gabriel is known to be the messenger of God.¹¹³ He announces both the birth of John the Baptist and Jesus.¹¹⁴ Raphael, which means ‘God heals’, is mentioned in the Apocryphal books.¹¹⁵ Raphael is disguised as a man who accompanies Tobias on a quest and gives him a remedy to heal his blind father. Raphael is mentioned in the ‘Book of Tobit’¹¹⁶ whilst Uriel, which means ‘God is my light’,¹¹⁷ is mentioned in the Book of Enoch.¹¹⁸

In Islam, four famous angels are found in the Qur’an and Michael is believed to be one of four Archangels; the other three being Izrail, Israfil and Jibrail. Still, other Muslims believe that there are ten Archangels known to be Mikhail, Izrail, Israfil, Jibrail, Munkar, Nakir, Raqib, ‘Atid, Malik and Ridhwan. It is generally accepted that there are countless angels, therefore the named angels are seen as heads of different departments; e.g. Michael is the chief angel of blessing.¹¹⁹ Hendrix, Skrobucha and Janssens say that the Russian old believers, the Raskolniki, knew eight angels by name.¹²⁰

¹⁰⁹ Ankerberg & Weldon, The Facts, p.10. Also compare Taylor, The Complete Book, pp. 204 & 216.

¹¹⁰ Hendrix, P., Skrobucha, H., & Janssens, A.M, Ikonen, Amsterdam/Brussels, 1960, p. 143: “In de bijbel worden slechts drie engelen met name genoemd: Gabriël d.i. “God is kracht”, Michaël, “Wie is als God” en Rafaël, “God schenkt genezing””.

¹¹¹ Graham, Angels, p. 56 – Chapien, Angels, p. 132.

¹¹² Taylor, The Complete Book, pp.196 & 216. Taylor refers to Michael and Gabriel as Archangels and the only angels mentioned by name in the Bible. – Chapien M., Angels, p. 132. Marie Chapien states that “Gabriel actually isn’t called an Archangel in the Bible, contrary to John Milton and popular opinion. There is only one Archangel and he’s Michael.” – Graham, Angels, p.56 (Compare also Graham’s comment: “However, contrary to popular opinion and to the poet John Milton, it never calls him an Archangel. Yet it refers to his work more often than to Michael’s.”)

¹¹³ Dn 8:16, 9:21, Lk 1:19, 1:26–38. See also Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

¹¹⁴ Lk 1:19 & Lk 1:26– 38.

¹¹⁵ Taylor, The Complete Book, pp. 69, 70 & 87. The word ‘Apocrypha’ comes from the Greek word meaning ‘hidden’ which means something not true. The Apocryphal books are seven books in the Old Testament that are included in the Catholic Bibles. These books were considered to be of lesser importance than the books which were accepted into the canon. The book of Tobit is one of these seven books.

¹¹⁶ Book of Tobit: Tobias 5, 4’.

¹¹⁷ Kiefer, “Michael and All Angels”.

¹¹⁸ Enoch 1. (Compare Finney, “Archangels” on ‘Uriel’).

¹¹⁹ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael 2007/09/19. Compare also Najaar, A., I am a Muslim (no date & place of publication) p. 158.

¹²⁰ Hendrix, et al., Ikonen, 1960, p. 143.

2.9 Archangel Michael

The name Michael means ‘who is like God?’¹²¹ As previously mentioned, many believe that the angel Michael is the only Archangel.¹²² His name is recorded four times in the Scriptures:

1) Daniel 10:13; 2) Daniel 12:1; 3) Jude 9 and 4) Revelations 12:7. In Talmudic tradition, the name Michael means “Who is like God (El) and literally stands for El’s likeness.”¹²³

Orthodox Christians refer to him as the Taxiarch or Archistrategos (Supreme Commander) Archangel Michael whilst Catholics refer to Michael as Saint Michael.¹²⁴ It is also believed that Michael was said to have been the war-cry of the angels in the battle fought in heaven against Satan and his followers.¹²⁵

In the Hebrew Apocrypha Archangel Michael is described as the prince of light, leading forces of good against evil, led by Belial – in the War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness : “He is described as the ‘viceroy of heaven’, a title that is said to have formally belonged to Satan.”¹²⁶

In The New Testament¹²⁷ Michael is portrayed as the commanding officer of legions of angels who cast Satan and his followers out of heaven, also known as the champion of the Christians, whilst in The Old Testament,¹²⁸ he is called “the prince of Israel”¹²⁹ and is regarded as the champion of the Jewish people.¹³⁰ In the book of Jude¹³¹ Michael wins ¹²¹ Graham, Angels – Chapien, Angels – Holweck, F.G., “St. Michael the Archangel” <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm> 2007/11/16.

¹²² Dn 10:13, 21 & 12:1 – 1 Th 4:16 – Jude 9 – Rv 12:7 – Graham, Angels, p. 55 – Chapien, Angels, p. 132.

¹²³ Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”, http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

¹²⁴ Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”, compare also “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael 2007/09/19 – Holweck, “St. Michael”, <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm> 2007/11/16.

¹²⁵ Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”.

¹²⁶ Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”.

¹²⁷ Rv. 12: 7 – 9.

¹²⁸ Dn 10: 21 & 12:1.

¹²⁹ Chapien, Angels, p. 132 – (Compare Graham, Angels, p. 55. Thus, God speaks of Michael as prince of His chosen people, “the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people.” (Dn 12:1).

¹³⁰ Finney, D., “Archangels”, <http://www.greatdreams.com/Archangels.htm> 2007/09/18.

¹³¹ Jude 9.

the battle with Satan over the body of Moses.¹³² In Revelations¹³³ Michael is portrayed as the leader of the heavenly army of the angels of the Lord fighting against Satan.¹³⁴

Michael's rank is in a military sense that of a general. There is a difference regarding Michael's hierarchical rank. Dionysius the Areopagite and other Greek fathers place Michael over all the angels (he is the prince of the other angels) whilst others believe that he is the prince of the Seraphim. St. Thomas place Michael as the prince of the last and lowest choir, the angels.¹³⁵ The following passage in the Coptic Gnostic Gospel of Judas (recently published), seems to indicate that Michael is of a lesser rank than Gabriel. Michael stands in service of a lesser God whilst Gabriel stands in service of God Himself. Judas asks Jesus whether the human spirit dies and Jesus answers as follows:

*“This is why God ordered Michael to give the spirits of people to them as a loan, so that they might offer service, but the Great One ordered Gabriel to grant spirits to the great generation with no ruler of it - that is, the spirit and the soul.”*¹³⁶

The commentary on this passage by the editors is that “God, apparently the God of this world, gives the spirit of life (the breath of life?) to people, through Michael as a loan, but the Great Spirit gives spirit and soul to people, through Gabriel, as a gift”.¹³⁷

Furthermore, in the Islamic faith, Michael appears as second to Gabriel. During the creation of Adam, God first sent Gabriel and then Michael to fetch clay to form man. When Adam and Eve were banned from paradise, it is said that Gabriel was sent to Adam whilst Michael to Eve to pass on comfort.¹³⁸ It is also said that Muhammad, on his deathbed, stated that Gabriel would be first and Michael second to pray for him.¹³⁹

¹³² Chapien, Angels, p. 132.

¹³³ Rv 12:7.

¹³⁴ Rv 12:7.

¹³⁵ Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel”, – compare also Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)) 2007/09/18.

¹³⁶ Kasser, R.O. (ed.), Meyer, M., & Wurst, G., The Gospel of Judas with additional commentary by Ehrman, B. D., Washington, 2006, p. 40.

¹³⁷ Kasser, et al., p. 40, note 124.

¹³⁸ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael 2007/09/19.

¹³⁹ Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/09/18.

2.10 The Angel of the Lord (Angelos Kyriou) and the identification with Christ and/or Michael

On many occasions an unnamed heavenly messenger displays the character of Archangel Michael. According to Danforth, ‘The Angel of the Lord’ (Angelos Kyriou)¹⁴⁰ is identified with Archangel Michael.¹⁴¹ It is stated that some Fathers often question the identity of Archangel Michael where his name is not mentioned in Scripture. An example of this is found in Genesis where we read about the Cherubim who were placed at the Garden of Eden and also of a flaming sword that guards the gate of paradise. Reference is made to Michael, who is believed to be the cherub who stood at the gate of paradise.¹⁴²

No reference, however, is made to a cherub but to the cherubim in Genesis, yet reference is made to a flaming sword which places the text in the framework of the Byzantine iconography – the flaming sword refers to the Archangel Michael. The controversy about the above passage is the result of wrong translation. In the Septuagint, Genesis 3:24 is presented as follows:

“Καὶ ἔβαλε τὸν ὄμῃ καὶ κατέκισεν αὐτὸν πᾶντι τῷ παραδείσῳ τῶς τρυφῶς· καὶ ἔταξε τὸ χειροβῆμα καὶ τὸν φλογὸν τὴν ὁμῶσαν τὴν στρεφομένην, φυλάσσειν τὸν ὄμῃ τὸν ἔλθον τῶς ζωῶς”.¹⁴³

The correct translation of this passage should read as follows:¹⁴⁴

*“And he cast out Adam and caused him to dwell over against the garden of Delight, and stationed the cherubs and the fiery sword that turns about to keep the way of the tree of life.”*¹⁴⁵

Then there is another version which causes confusion as it may indicate that God Himself is holding the fiery sword:

¹⁴⁰ Van der Watt, J. (ed.) Bosman, H., du Rand, J., Janse van Rensburg, F., Nel, M., Smit, D & Venter, P. Die Bybel A-Z, 2003, China, p.1074 “Kyrios wat letterlik “heer, meester, eienaar” beteken en word in die Nuwe-Testamentiese teologie gebruik as ‘n titel vir Jesus, veral vanweë sy opstanding en verheerliking”.

¹⁴¹ Danforth, The Death Rituals, pp. 45–46.

¹⁴² Gn 3:24. Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel”.

¹⁴³ Gn. 3:25

¹⁴⁴ Translation as given by Brenton, L. L., The Septuagint Version of the Old Testament and Apocrypha with an English Translation, London, 1976.

¹⁴⁵ Gn 3:24 (25).

“So het Hy dan die mens weggedrywe en gérubs aan die oostekant van die tuin van Eden laat woon, met die swaard wat vlam en flikker, om die toegang tot die boom van die lewe te bewaak.”¹⁴⁶

The unnamed angel through whom God published the Ten Commandments, the unnamed angel who stood in the way of Balaam¹⁴⁷ and the unnamed angel who destroyed the army of Sennacherib¹⁴⁸ are all associated with Archangel Michael or Christ.¹⁴⁹ In the Book of Joshua, reference is made to ‘the captain of the host of the Lord’ which has the character of Michael the Archangel. This unnamed heavenly herald is said to be supernatural and holy and sent by God:¹⁵⁰

“Now when Joshua was near Jericho, he looked up and saw a man standing in front of him with a drawn sword. Joshua went up to him and asked, ‘Are you for us or for our enemies?’ ‘Neither,’ he replied, ‘but as commander of the army of the LORD I have now come.’ Then Joshua fell face down to the ground in reverence, and asked him, ‘What message does my LORD have for his servant?’”¹⁵¹

There is again some controversy about the above passage. Modern scholars believe that it was not Michael but Christ who appeared before Joshua.¹⁵² Another interpretation, based on Revelations, is that of the pre-Incarnate Christ,¹⁵³ where it is said that angels do not accept the worship of humans.¹⁵⁴ The willingness of this ‘man’ to accept Joshua’s ‘worship’ suggests that he was a divine being.¹⁵⁵ However, it is worthwhile commenting that Joshua fell, face down to the ground, maybe out of fear or respect and did not necessarily have any intention to worship the man, but to merely manifest his worship to ¹⁴⁶ Gn. 3:25.

¹⁴⁷ Nm 22:22.

¹⁴⁸ 2 Ki 19:35.

¹⁴⁹ Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, pp. 467-468.

¹⁵⁰ Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”, http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)).

¹⁵¹ Jos 5:13 – 15.

¹⁵² Davidson, et al., The New Bible, p. 228. Compare also Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, pp. 467-468.

¹⁵³ Anonymous, “Michael”, <http://www.answers.com/topic/michael>.

¹⁵⁴ Rv 22:9.

¹⁵⁵ Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, pp. 463-464 – Anonymous, “Angels today: all about angels”, <http://angelstoday.net/index.php?lang=en&way=2Archangels/1michael> 2007/11/13 – compare also “Michael”, <http://www.answers.com/topic/michael>.

God. Moreover, Michael is usually depicted as winged and with a sword in his hand.¹⁵⁶ The man who stood in front of Joshua was holding a drawn sword. According to a definition, 'The Angel of the Lord' is someone who communicates a message of the Lord, and whose appearance might resemble the Lord Himself. The appearance of the Lord can only be mentioned 'as no man will see God and live'.¹⁵⁷ The following verse explains it: "...I have seen the angel of the Lord face to face! But the Lord said to him, Peace! Do not be afraid. You are not going to die."¹⁵⁸

According to Erickson, the problem with the interpretation of 'The Angel of the Lord,' is a problem of identity:

"The problem comes in fact that while there are numerous passages where the angel of the Lord is identified with God, there are many other passages where the two are distinguished. Examples of passages in which the two are equated are Genesis 31:11 and 13, where the angel of the Lord says, 'I am the God of Bethel,' and Exodus 3:2 and 6, where the angel of the Lord tells Moses, 'I am the God of your father.' Examples of passages in which the two are distinguished are Genesis 16:11, where the angel of the Lord says to Hagar, 'The Lord has heard of your misery,' and Exodus 23:20, where the Lord tells the people of Israel, 'See, I am sending an angel ahead of you.'"

Erickson states that there are three main interpretations of "the angel of the Lord":

- i. He is an angel with a special commission
- ii. He is God Himself, temporarily in a humanlike form
- iii. He is the Logos, a temporary pre-incarnate visit by the second person of the Trinity.

These interpretations are not fully satisfactory, he concludes, as "...in light of the clear statements of identity either the second or the third seems more adequate than the first."¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁶ Grabar, Byzantine Painting, p. 186. On the representation of Michael compare also Hendrix, et al., Ikonen, pp. 91, 143 - 145.

¹⁵⁷ Van der Watt, (ed.) et al., Die Bybel A-Z, p. 204.

¹⁵⁸ Jdg 6:22.

¹⁵⁹ Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p. 468.

Furthermore, it is written that: “The LORD Almighty answers, ‘I will send my messenger to prepare the way for me. Then the LORD you are looking for will suddenly come to his Temple. The messenger you long to see will come and proclaim my covenant’.”¹⁶⁰

To support this statement, Ankerberg & Weldon assert that: ‘The Angel of the Lord’ (Malach – YHWH) does not refer to a created angel, but to Jesus Christ. Christ’s appearance goes beyond the New Testament. In the Old Testament the angel is identified as Christ through the attributes of deity He holds. In fact, the Jews themselves held this angel to be the divine Messiah.¹⁶¹ In the Urantia Book, Michael is identified with Christ.¹⁶²

In other Christian doctrines¹⁶³ it is also held that Archangel Michael is believed to be Christ.¹⁶⁴ This belief is based on biblical references to Archangel Michael as ‘the Archangel,’ which, as explained earlier, means ‘chief angel.’¹⁶⁵ The suggestion that there is only one ‘chief angel’ is likened to Christ being the chief angel. This statement is also based on the following verse:

*“For the Lord himself will come down from heaven, with a loud command, with the voice of the Archangel and with the trumpet call of God, and the dead in Christ will rise first.”*¹⁶⁶

Archangel Michael is stands for the leader of an army of Angels in Heaven who will defeat Satan in a great battle.¹⁶⁷ Christ is also said to lead such an army.¹⁶⁸ The Bible¹⁶⁹ doesn’t refer to two armies in Heaven who are led by two separate leaders.

¹⁶⁰ Mt 3:1.

¹⁶¹ Ankerberg & Weldon, The Facts On Angels 1995, p. 11.

¹⁶² Anonymous, “Michael”, <http://www.answers.com/topic/michael>, 2007/09/19.

¹⁶³ Jehovah’s Witnesses believe that Michael is believed to be Christ: Anonymous, “Michael”.

¹⁶⁴ Anonymous, “Michael”.

¹⁶⁵ Graham, Angels, pp. 55-56 – Chapian, M, Angels, p132 – Dn 10:13, 21, 12:1 – 1 Th 4:16 – Jude 9 – Rv 12:7.

¹⁶⁶ 1 Th 4:16.

¹⁶⁷ Rv 12:7.

¹⁶⁸ 1 Th 4:16; Rv 12:7 – Compare also Rv 17:14 : “They will make war against the Lamb, but the Lamb will overcome them because he is Lord of lords and King of kings-and with him will be his called, chosen and faithful followers.” Then, in Rv 19:11-21: “I saw heaven standing open and there before me was a white horse, whose rider is called Faithful and Truth. With justice he judges and makes war. His eyes are like blazing fire, and on his head are many crowns. He has a name written on him that no one knows but he himself. He is dressed in a robe dipped in blood, and his name is the Word of God. The armies of heaven were following him, riding on white horses and dressed in fine linen, white and clean. Out of his mouth comes a sharp sword with which to strike down the nations. He will rule them

2.11 Ordinary Angels / the Heavenly Host

There is a multitude of angels who were the messengers of God; who helped individuals and God's chosen people of Israel on certain occasions. The Heavenly Host are known to be powerful legions of Angels who occupy the heavens. An example of a powerful angel is found in the Bible where a single angel put to death a hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrian enemy soldiers. Some scholars believe that the angel who destroyed the army of Sennacherib is believed to be the Angel of the Lord who is either associated with Archangel Michael or Christ Himself.¹⁷⁰

2.12 Fallen Angels: Lucifer

The name Lucifer means 'light bearer' and may refer to Satan's attributes before his fall. According to Taylor the name Lucifer is used only once in the King James Version¹⁷¹, and is not used in the New International Version at all. Lucifer is also known as Satan,¹⁷² Belial, Beelzebub, the devil,¹⁷³ the evil one,¹⁷⁴ the old serpent,¹⁷⁵ the great dragon, the destroyer, the accuser,¹⁷⁶ the deceiver¹⁷⁷ and the tempter.¹⁷⁸ Lucifer was a high ranking angel, a cherub with access to the holy mountain of God.¹⁷⁹ According to some modern theologians, Lucifer was an Archangel, perhaps superior to Michael,¹⁸⁰ who rebelled against God and was cast out of the heavens.¹⁸¹

By means of a diachronic approach, our analysis has followed the evolutionary changes of the concepts regarding icons, angels their position and role in the religious formation of the Orthodox Christian faith. In doing so, the position and function of the angel with an iron sceptre. He treads the winepress of the wrath of God Almighty. On his robe and on his thigh he has this name written: KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS."

¹⁶⁹ 1 Th 4:16; Rv 12:7; Rv 17:14.

¹⁷⁰ 2 Ki 19:35. Also compare Erickson, M. J., Christian Theology, p. 466-468 as well as Chapien, Angels, p. 133. See also observations on the 'Angel of the Lord'.

¹⁷¹ Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 329 – Is 14:12 – Compare Graham, Angels, p. 63: "This Satan, or the devil, was once called Lucifer, the son of the morning."

¹⁷² Job 1:1-6.

¹⁷³ Mt 4:1; Rv 12:9.

¹⁷⁴ Mt 6:13; 1 Jn 2:13-14; Jn 17:15.

¹⁷⁵ Rv 20:2.

¹⁷⁶ Zch 3:1; Rv 12:10.

¹⁷⁷ Book of Revelation.

¹⁷⁸ Mt 4:1, 3; 1 Th 3:5.

¹⁷⁹ Ezk. 28: 12 – 19 – Ankerberg & Weldon, The Facts On Angels, p. 11 – Chapien, Angels, p. 135.

¹⁸⁰ Graham, Angels, p. 55.

¹⁸¹ Graham, Angels, p. 63: "Along with Michael he may have been one of the two Archangels, but he was cast from heaven with his rebel forces, and continues to fight." Compare Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 196.

Michael as a leader of the order of angels, i.e. Archangel, has been clearly identified and precisely defined.

Chapter 2

The Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox Society and the importance of hagiography and iconography in its context

Since the iconic status of Archangel Michael in the Byzantine Orthodox Society is unique, it is necessary to look at the characteristic aspects of this society and to put its hagiography and iconography in context. A chronological overview of essential historical events will be examined by means of religious, social, cultural and political influences. The importance of hagiography and iconography in its context as well as the influences and transformation of pagan themes on early Christian art, will also be discussed. A more intense study of the Byzantine traditional iconography will be examined in chapter three, with reference to the works of Dionysius of Fourni.

1. Byzantium and the Byzantine Empire

The name Byzantium derived from Byzantion, which was the name of the former Athenian trading colony founded in 657 by a Greek named Byzas.¹ In 330 A.D, the Emperor Constantine moved the capital of the Roman Empire to Byzantion whereupon he changed the name to Constantinople. Byzantium, Constantinople and later Istanbul, were the names given to the great city on the Bosphorus.² People who lived in the city referred to themselves as Romans as they considered themselves citizens of the (East) Roman Empire, in which the official language was still Latin until after Justinian's reign (6th Century). Only under emperor Herakleios (7th Century) did Greek become the sole official language. The Byzantine civilization was largely determined by three factors – Hellenism, Romanitas and Christianity.³ The term Byzantine as referring to this civilization and culture was only introduced by 16th century historians and used since that time.⁴

¹ Yanagi, et al., Byzantium, pp. 7-13.

² Grabar, A., Byzantine Painting, Macmillan London, 1979, p. 11.

³ Savvides & Hendrickx, Introducing Byzantine History, Paris, 2001, p.29: "by the foundation of 'New Rome' or Constantinople, Byzantium was born out of the merging of imperial Rome with Christian Hellenism – the foundation of medieval Hellenism had been laid."

⁴ Yanagi, et al., Byzantium, pp. 7-13.

Although by the end of the 6th century, Latin had disappeared and the population became mainly Greek-speaking, Byzantium did not consist of ‘ethnic Greeks’ but rather of an agglomeration of diverse groups and peoples who shared a common language and a similar culture.⁵ But the Byzantine Empire is also characterised by its multi-dimensional facets, mainly its multi-ethnicity, multi-linguality and multi-dogmatism. Thus, Byzantium can rightly be called “a mosaic of nationalities.”⁶

Historically, Byzantine history is divided in three main periods. The early Byzantine period itself (ca 284 or 330 – ca 717) is characterised by a formative period (up to ca 518), the age of ‘ecumenicity’, comprising Justinian I and his successors (518-610) and the century of survival from external threats, and Hellenisation (610-717).⁷

The middle Byzantine period (ca 717-1025) is, on the one hand, marked by the iconomachia (mainly 717-843), and on the other hand, the zenith of Byzantine power, especially under the Macedonian dynasty (610-717).

For the subject of this dissertation, it is important to notice the great iconoclastic movement, which triggered the iconomachia, the over-a-century dogmatic and socio – economic confrontation between the supporters of the use and veneration of icons (iconodouloi) and the icon persecutors, the iconoclastai (literary the breakers of icons). The confrontation was finally terminated in 843, with the ‘victory of Orthodoxy’, when it was dogmatically accepted that the icons, which could be ‘venerated’ but not ‘adored’, played indeed an important role in the Orthodox belief and piety.⁸

The late Byzantine period (ca 1025-1453) is marked by the crusades, the ‘feudalisation’ of Byzantium (firstly by its own provincial military landowning aristocracy, then by the crusaders), the capture of Constantinople in 1204 by the crusaders and the establishment of ‘Latin’ or ‘Frankish’ states on Byzantine territory), decline of Byzantine power, the coming of the Turks and finally, the final fall of Constantinople to the Ottoman Turks in ⁵ Yanagi, et al., Byzantium, pp. 7-13.

⁶ Savvides & Hendrickx, Introducing, pp. 30-33. See also Karayannopoulou, I., To Byzantinó krátoç, Thessaloniki, 1996, pp. 54 -59.

⁷ Savvides & Hendrickx, Introducing, pp. 19-22 & 35.

⁸ Savvides & Hendrickx, Introducing, pp. 35-42.

1453.⁹ The Byzantine world after 1000 was coined the ‘Byzantine Commonwealth’ by D. Obolensky to indicate the common civilization of East Europe and Asia Minor, where Orthodoxy and an ‘ecumenical’ worldview had become binding factors.¹⁰

2. Political culture and art in Byzantine Orthodoxy

The Byzantine emperor was politically the successor of the Roman emperor, and his authority, which was considered to be founded on the Divine Grace and Providence, was never questioned. The main concepts in political theory were thus based on the theological concepts of taxis and oikonomia, which were already present in the writings of the Fathers of the Church.¹¹ Helene Ahrweiler defines ‘oikonomia’ as the spiritual principle and power, which organizes what happens (and is thus Providence), thereby noting that the term is inseparable from the concept of ‘taxis’, which expresses the ‘category’ which rules in practice nature, community and human relations.¹² Like God is the pantokrator, so the emperor is the kosmokrator. This conception is at the basis of the imperial cult in which iconography and the elaborated court ceremony and ritual are important. Everyone has his own place in the world (taxis), and the human society on earth mirrors – up to a point – the supernatural one. It is here, as we see in our other chapters, that Archangel Michael plays a role.

Byzantine art developed over a long period while undergoing numerous phases of regeneration.¹³ This art expresses the Orthodox as well as the imperial concepts, discussed above.¹⁴ Content and style goes through a transformation too. Early Christian art shows simple transformation of pagan themes into Christian themes¹⁵, making it almost impossible to recognise any one style that could definitely be called ‘Early ⁹ Savvides & Hendrickx, Introducing, pp. 35-36, 46-55, 85-100.

¹⁰ Shepard J, “The Byzantine Commonwealth 1000-1550”, in Angold, Cambridge History of Christianity, pp. 3-52.

¹¹ Hendrickx, “The politico-ideological concepts of ‘Oikonomia’ & ‘Taxis’ as illustrated in the Epistle to Diognetos”, Ekklesiastikos Pharos 73 (New Series 2), 1991, pp. 44-49.

¹² Ahrweiler H, Η πολιτική Ιδεολογία της Βυζαντινής Αυτοκρατορίας, Athens, 1973, pp. 148-168.

¹³ Yanagi, et al., Byzantium, p. 8.

¹⁴ All aspects of the intensively Orthodox Byzantine world are thoroughly discussed in Angold, M., (ed.), The Cambridge History of Christianity, Vol. 5: Eastern Christianity, Cambridge: University Press, 2006 – Cf. Hendrickx, review of this work in Neotestamentica 41.2 (2007), pp. 437- 444.

¹⁵ Gardner’s Art through the Ages, revised by De la Croix, H., & Tansey, R.G., USA, 1980, p.213. Margaret Alexiou notes that little has changed with the gradual transformation of paganism to Christianity in Greece, in terms of customs, language and laws. Various sources from the seventh to the twelfth century showed that pagan rituals were still evident. Margaret Alexiou, The ritual lament in Greek tradition, Cambridge, 1974, p. 27.

Christian Art'. Christian art brings about the transformation of the naturalistic, classical tradition into an entirely new worldview. This transformation is divided into the following periods:¹⁶

- The period of Persecution (in the first century A.D.)
- The period of Recognition establishment (A.D. 325, when Constantine established Christianity as the official religion of the Roman Empire)
- Then the period of Termination (around A.D. 500, some historians extend the period to A.D. 800, when it was ended by the Iconoclastic storm.)

In early Christian works, for example, Christ is shown as teacher and philosopher whilst in later Byzantine works, He is portrayed as the ruler of heaven and earth, symbolising at the same time the imperial ruler of the Byzantine Empire.¹⁷ Hendrickx comments that the use of portraits seemed to be connected with paintings of the Emperor, and the imperial cult of respecting the portrait of his majesty was based on the theory that the picture of the basileus was in fact the basileus himself, and that the imperial coinage belonged to the Emperor, because it held his picture.¹⁸ Only when Christianity was recognised as the official state religion, was Christ given imperial attributes such as the purple robe, the halo, the throne and other symbolic traits.¹⁹

According to Grabar, Byzantine painting refers to work that chronologically belonged to a period during which a city ceased to bear the name 'Byzantium' and was named 'Constantinople'.²⁰ There are two important factors that need to be considered in terms of the Byzantine Art:²¹

- a) Art forms were widely used to exalt the Emperor (e.g. In Byzantine churches, the Pantocrator occupied the cupola, the place of honour. On the vaulting before the apse, was an empty throne, 'the prepared throne' of Revelation.)

¹⁶ Gardner's Art through the Ages, p. 213.

¹⁷ Hussey, The Byzantine World, pp. 156 -165.

¹⁸ Hendrickx, "The Byzantine Icon", p. 79 – The Gospel according to St. Matthew (20 – 21 & 22). The relationship between the image of the Emperor and Archangel Michael will be analysed further on.

¹⁹ Hussey, The Byzantine World, pp. 156 -165.

²⁰ Grabar, Byzantine Painting, p. 11.

²¹ Hussey, The Byzantine World, pp. 156 -165.

- b) Art became a medium whereby permanent values of a transcendental world might be symbolised. (E.g. The modifications of the pagan basilica focus on the shrine as the main focal point – being the mystery of the Christian faith. The ‘spiritualising design’ is expressed in its bearing walls and columns, leading to a new orientation toward a spiritual rather than a physical world.)²²

Thus the interior of a Byzantine church reflected the universe or the cosmos, the cupola as heaven, the place of honour holding the Pantocrator, the middle zone symbolising paradise and the lowest zone earth. The mosaic artists represented the figures of the heavenly hierarchy in such a way that the worshippers in the church below felt as if these figures were actually present. Hussey refers to Demus, stating that: “In Byzantium, the beholder was not kept at a distance from the image; he entered within its aura of sanctity, and the image, in turn, partook of the space in which he moved.”²³

When Christianity became the official state religion under Constantine, there was an urgent need to set up buildings and to decorate them according to the requirements of the Christian Cult.²⁴ The acceptance of Christianity in the Empire was followed by the reconstruction of monasteries and churches and other artefacts which were used for ecclesiastical purposes.²⁵ Mosaic images became the instrument of decoration for churches.²⁶ Being probably the most popular among the angels, saints and arc fathers of the Byzantine Church and society, Michael’s cult²⁷ was expressed in mosaics, murals, icons, dedications in churches and poems. Averil Cameron comments that Agathias ²² Gardner’s Art through the Ages, p. 215. Compare also Hussey, The Byzantine World, pp. 156 -165.

²³ Hussey, The Byzantine World, p. 163.

²⁴ Gardner’s Art through the Ages, pp. 215-216. It is stated that the Western churches adopted the rectangular basilica church whilst in the classical building type a polygonal domed structure was favoured in the east.

²⁵ Hussey, The Byzantine World, p. 163.

²⁶ Gardner’s Art through the Ages, p. 217: “It is as if the building imitated the ideal Christian, with grave and plain exterior and a soul glowing and beautiful within.”

²⁷ Rhodes, R., Find It Quick Handbook on Cults and New Religions, Harvest House Publishers, Oregon, 2005, p. 7. According to Rhodes, the word ‘cult’ derives from the Latin word cultus, which means worship. Cults are thus groups that have distinguishable forms of worship. He furthermore states that the word ‘cult’ is often used in both a sociological and theological sense: “sociologically, a cult is a religious or semi-religious sect or group whose members are often controlled or dominated almost entirely by a single individual or organization.”

Scholastikos's epigrams of Archangel Michael are an important testimony for the beginning of veneration of the icons and for the cult of the Archangel itself.²⁸

In the post – Justinian period the idea was there that an icon was “an actual bode of the person portrayed.”²⁹

Archangel Michael was venerated by soldiers and even the imperial family looked at Michael as leader of the heavenly army and therefore the equivalent of the emperor. In his article, Hendrickx³⁰ comments on Agathias's (6th century) three epigrams (i.34, i.35, i.36 on icons of Archangel Michael)³¹ that Michael, heavenly commander of the angels, symbolises the earthly Emperor as earthly commander of the army. Epigrams i.36 illustrates the office bearer, Theodoros, illustrius and twice proconsul receives the insignia of his dignity (office) from Archangel Michael:

Anthologia Palatina i.34.³²

- 1 *Met baie waagmoed het was 'n onsigbare leier van engele, liggaamloos deur die soort van sy vorm, geskep.
Tog is dit nie nutteloos nie, want 'n sterling wat 'n beeltenis waarneem, rig sy gees na 'n hoër voorstelling:*
- 5 *nie langer het hy 'n verwarde ontsag nie'
maar in homself skilder hy die oorspronklike beeld, en hy vrees dit daarom asof dit aanwesig is:
oë wek mos 'n diep begrip op: kuns weet mos*

²⁸ Cameron, Agathias, p. 105.

²⁹ Kitzinger, E., “The cult of images in the age before iconoclasm”, Dumbarton Oaks Papers VIII (1954), p. 147.

³⁰ Hendrickx, “Agathias”, p.66-75. For background and importance of Agathias (ca 536-82/3), Byzantine historian and epigrammatist, see Savvides, A., “Agathias”, in Savvides, A., Hendrickx, B., Simpson Alicia and Sansaridou-Hendrickx Thekla, Encyclopaedic Prosopographical Lexicon of Byzantine History and Civilization. Vol.1. Turnhout: Brepols, 2007, pp. 81-82.

³¹ Waltz, P. (ed.), Anthologie Greque I, Paris, 1928.

³² Hendrickx, “Agathias se epigramme”, p. 68:

“□σκοπον □γγελ□αρχον □σ□ματον ε□δεϊ μορφ□ς,
□μ□γα τολμ□εις, κηρ□ς □πεπλ□σατο.
□μης ο□κ □χάριστον, □πε□βροτ□ς ε□κ□να λε□σσων θυμ□ν □πιθ□νει κρ□σσονι φαντασ□□· ο□κ□τι δ' □λλοπρ□σαλλον □χει σ□βας, □λλ' □ν □αυτ□ τ□τ□πον □γγρ□ψας □ς παρε□ντα τρ□μει· □μματα δ' □τρ□νουσι βαθ□ν ν□ον· ο□δε δ□τ□χνη χρ□μασι πορθμε□σαι τ□ν φρεν□ς □κεσ□ην.”

hoe om die smeking van die gees weer te gee.

*Anthologia Palatina i.35:*³³

- 1 Aemilianus van Karië en saam met hom Johannes, Rufinus van Pharos (en) Agathias van Asië, wat – o aartsengel – hul vierde jaar regstudies voltooi het, het aan u, geluksalige, hul eie portret opgedra,
- 5 (en) vra voorspoed vir later. Mag u tog hul verwagtings vir die toekomstige lewe ondersteun.

*Anthologia Palatina i.36*³⁴

- 1 *Laat toe om 'n vorm te kry, o aartsengel: want u gelaat is onsigbaar, maar so is geskenke van sterflinge.
Want van u het Theodoros die gordel van magistratos ontvang en (deur u toedoen) wen hy twee maal die ereplek van proconsul,*
- 5 en die skildery is getuie van sy dankbaarheid: want dit gee met kleure die beeltenis van u welwillendheid weer.

It has been argued that the disguising of worldly power in religious terms – labelled celestilisation – “depicts a universe which is closed, eternal, and supernaturally ordained. In defining earthy realities in cosmic terms, it disguises political power in terms of sacredness”³⁵. In agreement with this viewpoint, the depiction of the angelic

³³ Hendrickx, B., “Agathias se epigramme”, p.68:

“Καρικὸς Ἀμυλιανὸς ὠννῆς τέσιν ἀτῶ, οὐφῶνος Φαρῶης, γαθῶης σῶης, τῶτρατον, γγελῶρχε, νῶμων λυκῶβαντα λαχῶντες, νθεσαν εῶς σῶ, μῶκαρ, τῶν σφετῶρην γραφῶδα, αῶτοῶντες τῶν πειτα καλῶν χρῶνον. ἄλλῶ φανεῶης λπῶδας ἰθῶνων ὀσομῶνου βιῶτου.”

³⁴ Hendrickx, B., “Agathias se epigramme”, p. 68:

“ἄλαθι μορφωθεῶς, ῶρχῶγγελε· σῶ γῶρ ὀπωπῶ σκοπος, ἄλλῶ βροτῶν δῶρα πῶλουσι τῶδε.
κῶ σῶ ο γῶρ Θεόδωρος ῶχει ζῶστῶρα μαγῶστρου καῶ δῶς ῶεθλεῶει πῶς θῶνον νῶθυπατῶν, τῶς δῶ εῶγνωμοσῶνης μῶρτυς γραφῶς· μῶτερον γῶρ χῶμασι μιμηλῶν νῶτετῶπωσε χῶριν.”

³⁵ For an analysis of the phenomenon, see Keesing, R. M., Cultural Anthropology, Canberra, 1981, p. 296.

groups in the Byzantine iconography could be interpreted as a reflection of the hierarchical way political power was organised in Byzantium.³⁶

Archangel Michael was not only venerated by soldiers but also by young students who looked at Michael for support during their exams. Line three and four, of Anthologia Palatina i.35, for example, refers to an ex voto portrait which was dedicated to the Archangel ‘in the hope of heavenly support’ for the students’ examination.³⁷ In 551 onwards Agathias was a student in Constantinople. Agathias and his friends dedicated an ex voto to Archangel Michael and is referred to ‘a practising Christian while a student’.³⁸

3. Paganism and Christianity and the attitude of the Church fathers

In early Byzantium, the process of transition from paganism to Christianity was a slow one. Christian beliefs and practices that resulted from cultural accommodation were the outcome of diverse dominant cultures in Byzantium which included many Jewish, Hellenistic and pagan cultural elements. It is therefore important to see how certain pagan elements have been absorbed into the religious traditions and beliefs of the Orthodox Byzantine society.³⁹

Alexiou points out that the change in the position of the Orthodox Church was perhaps one factor in the process of assimilation. Many pagan elements were absorbed into the Christian culture, for example, ancient cult sites were transformed into Christian shrines of similar association. Byzantium’s official policy towards paganism was cautious and tolerant resulting in many pagan elements and ancient superstitions being absorbed into the Christian faith.⁴⁰

John Chrysostom’s homilies are proof of the persistence of ritual lamentation⁴¹ in early Byzantine period. In his homilies, Chrysostom condemned violent practices of ³⁶ For an analysis of the political ideology in Byzantium from a historic anthropological point of view, see Ahrweiler, H., Ιστορία της Οθωμανικής Αυτοκρατορίας, 1280-1924, Το Βυζαντινό κράτος, Η πολιτική Ιδεολογία της Βυζαντινής Αυτοκρατορίας. Translated by T. Drakopoulou, Athens, 1977.

³⁷ Cameron, A., Agathias, Oxford, 1970, p.1 – Hendrickx, “Agathias,” p. 68.

³⁸ Hendrickx, “Agathias,” p. 68.

³⁹ Hyperidis, “Αυτοκράτορες”, Εγκυκλοπαιδικόν λεξικόν Ελευθερουδάκη, vol. 8, Athens, 1930, p. 376-7. The phenomena of syncretism, synthesis and parallelism will be explored fully in another chapter.

⁴⁰ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 24.

⁴¹ On lamentation and Greek funeral rites see especially chapter five.

lamentation and described them as ‘blasphemies’. He is horrified at the pagan character of the scene since he believed it would be fatal to the Church as it was in its initial stages of establishment. Also, in the homily of Gregory of Nyssa, he attempts to persuade the lamenters to moderate their grief. Alexiou questions the Christian ideal, as the popular lament was condemned as pagan. In answering this, she refers to Gregory’s account on Makrina’s funeral:

*“But Gregory ensured that order was maintained by separating the men from the women, whom he wisely placed next to the holy sisters: ‘I took care that the chants should be sung with due rhythm and harmony, by arranging the two groups of singers on opposite sides, as in the liturgy, so that the chanting was properly blended with the sound of all the people joining in.’”*⁴²

The Church objected to the pagan associations and not the custom itself. Gregory of Nazianzen (329-89) described in his homilies a conflict between the official psalm singing of the Church and the spontaneous lamentation of the crowd at the funeral of Basil of Caesarea.⁴³

*“There were crowds of people everywhere, in the marketplaces, arcades and buildings two and three storeys high, all attending his funeral and walking behind, in front and alongside, trampling on one another. Thousands of people of every race and age, not known before, psalms giving way to lamentations, and philosophy overcome by passion. It was a struggle between followers and the outsiders – Greeks, Jews and immigrants...and the body itself only just escaped their clutches.”*⁴⁴

4. The Post–Byzantine Period

Post–Byzantine (or in Greek : meta – Byzantine) refers for the Greek Orthodox to the period after 1453, ending – in a certain sense – with the Greek revolution of 1821 and the birth of the new Greek state. In this sense, the Post–Byzantine period coincides with the so-called Tourkokratia, the epoch of Turkish Ottoman rule in Greece (and the previously ⁴² Alexiou, 1974, pp. 28 & 29.

⁴³ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 30.

⁴⁴ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 30.

Byzantine territory). In a wider sense, dictated by geo-political, military and cultural reality, the chronological range of the term can be extended into the 20th century.⁴⁵

The Greeks of Tourkokratia, were organised in the millet of the Rum (ethnic-religious group of the ‘Romans’), under their Patriarch and with their own institutions. In this millet Byzantine culture survived, but was influenced by cultural Turkish (Moslem) elements. Moreover, especially in the Western parts and the islands, of which some remained in Italian hands, Italian cultural (and artistic) influence was strong.⁴⁶

The Post-Byzantine Period is thus a continuation of the Byzantine Period for the Orthodox Christians who continued their traditions unabatedly within the framework of their Orthodox millet.

It can thus be said, in conclusion, that the Byzantine as well as the Post-Byzantine Periods were strongly conducive to the use of iconography and hagiography, and to the use of ‘supernatural’ figures, such as Michael, for the expression of their ideology as well as their world view and piety.

⁴⁵ Clogg, R., A Concise History of Greece, Cambridge, 1992, pp. 7-46. For the period after 1821, see Ibidem, pp. 47-99. For the Orthodoxy during the Tourkokratia, see especially Zachariadou, E., “The Great Church in captivity, 1453 – 1586”, in Angold, M., (ed.) The Cambridge History of Christianity. Eastern Christianity. Cambridge, 2006, pp. 169-186, and Kitromilides, P.M., “Orthodoxy and the west: Reformation to Enlightenment”, Ibidem, pp. 187-209.

⁴⁶ Kitsikis, D., Ιστορία της Οθωμανικής αυτοκρατορίας, 1988, pp. 42-44.

Chapter 3

Archangel Michael represented as an ‘icon’ in the pure Byzantine and Post–Byzantine Orthodox context of a ‘theological art picture’

This chapter will mainly focus on the iconographic representation of Archangel Michael in the Byzantine and Post–Byzantine periods and therefore we will examine Dionysius of Fourná’s works, referring to the artistic and symbolic representation of Michael in the Byzantine traditional iconography. Dionysius of Fourná (εκ Φουρνά) is considered to be the great theoretician of the Orthodox-ecclesiastic iconography.¹ He was a monk and iconographic painter at Mount Athos during the Post–Byzantine period (the so-called Tourkokratia). His famous work, a manual entitled Ερμηνεία της βυζαντινής ζωγραφικής τέχνης (Interpretation of the Byzantine Art of Painting) was regarded as having played a considerable role in safeguarding the Byzantine Orthodox tradition, which was – at the time – under pressure, because of the Ottoman occupation of Greece and the impoverishment of the church in both a material as well as a spiritual sense.²

1. Dionysius of Fourná

The man and his work

The first part of Dionysius’ manual is based on older (now lost) handbooks on Byzantine art, while the second part presents his original thoughts on Orthodox iconography.³ In this field, Dionysius was mainly influenced by the Macedonian (13th and 14th centuries) and Cretan traditional schools (15th-16th centuries) but he added to his work prescriptions about Old Testament scenes, which seem to be entirely personal.⁴ Chatziphoti⁵ has thereby warned the reader that Dionysius was not a Byzantine, but a Post–Byzantine (in its historical meaning, thus a Greek-Orthodox, living in the Ottoman Empire, but following Byzantine traditions). Consequently, Dionysius has incorporated in his work not only the Byzantine technique and iconographic theology, but also that of other Post–

¹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, A. (ed.), Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά: Ερμηνεία της ζωγραφικής τέχνης, Thessaloniki, 2004, See also Chatziphoti, I.M., Από το Βυζάντιο στον Νέο Ελληνισμό, Vol. 2. Thessaloniki, 2001, pp. 93-111.

² Chatziphoti, Από το Βυζάντιο, pp. 93-95.

³ Papadopoulou- Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, pp. Kz ff.

⁴ Xyggopoulos, A., Σχεδιάσμα ιστορίας της θρησκευτικής ζωγραφικής μετά την Άλωσιν, Athens, 1957, p. 303.

⁵ Chatziphoti, Από το Βυζάντιο, p. 96.

Byzantines such as Damaskinos of Ioannina (fl.1728-33), and three other painters from Ioannina (in Epiros), Ioannikios, Kosmas and Seraphim (fl. Middle 18th century). Western influence is minimal in Dionysius' work, except perhaps in his vocabulary. In this respect too, Dionysius greatly influenced later Greek treatises on iconography; his work has been styled as “μάθημα μέγιστον ἠθνικῆς ἀποσυνειδησίας” (a very great lesson in ethnic self-consciousness).⁶

2. Representation of the Angels in the Early Christian Art

Early Christian art depicted an angel as a messenger clad in a simple tunic. Almost everything within the image has a symbolic aspect. The Christian angels of the first six centuries were illustrated without wings. The messengers of God of which the Bible tells us, were depicted as ordinary people. In old representations of the three young men in the furnace, the angel for example, cannot be distinguished from the other three.⁷ In later works, angels (and often John the Baptist - God's messenger) are represented with wings. Figures on icons have consistent facial appearances and hold attributes personal to them.⁸ Christ, the saints, and the angels all had halos:

*“De eenvoudige staf die de engel als bode op vroegere voorstellingen droeg werd veranderd in een kruisstaf. Vaak droegen zij ook een nimbus.”*⁹

The following example clearly illustrates to what extent Christian art was indebted to the classical art. In the Monastery of St. Catherine, Mount Sinai is a mosaic scene from the Early Christian period depicting the ‘Transfiguration of Christ on Mount Tabor’. On the triumphal arch above Christ, two angels offer sceptre and orb to Him. Identical gear to the Emperor's is found on a Roman triumphal arch. It is furthermore stated that: “underneath the flying angels are the medallion busts of John the Baptist whose face has the configurations of a tragic mask, a style befitting this tragic prophet, and the virgin. The two represent the Old and the New Dispensation, being the intercessors who together

⁶ Chatziphoti, p. 104.

⁷ Hendrix P., 143.

⁸ Hendrix, et al., - Theunissen, Ikonen, – compare also Anonymous, Angels: all about angels, Archangels, Archangel Michael <http://angelstoday.net/index.php?lang=en&way=2Archangels/1michael> 2007/11/13.

⁹ Hendrix, et al., p. 143.

with Christ form what is called the Deesis, i.e. the Supplication. It is the earliest representation of this subject, which became very central in later Byzantine art."¹⁰

3. Symbolic Representation of Icons

Colours are used with symbolic meanings in icons. Gold, for example, symbolises the glory of Heaven, green is the colour of creation, red the divine life and blue is the colour of human life itself. In the icon of Jesus and Mary, where Jesus wears a red undergarment and a blue outer garment, red stands for God being divine first and then human, which is symbolised by the blue outer garment; then, Mary clad in a blue undergarment with a red outer garment which symbolises the opposite: a human being first and then becoming like God.¹¹ The colour white represents the uncreated essence of God i.e. the resurrection and transfiguration of Christ.¹²

Most icons include some letters (epigrammata) which depict an event or name of a person and are often calligraphically written.¹³

If we accept that in iconographic art the aim is to create a close communication between religious figures and believers, both pragmatic and symbolic, then Dionysius' interpretation of biblical scenes and religious concepts should lead us to a better understanding of the collective world view of the Byzantines in general. Mutatis mutandis, each of the following descriptions of the way Archangel Michael was conceptualised and portrayed in the Byzantine art should bring us closer to those reasons, conjunction of circumstances and dynamics which established his creation as an eternal supernatural model.

¹⁰ Galey, J., Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine, Massada Publishing Ltd, Israel, 1980, p. 85.

¹¹ Holweck, F.G., St. Michael the Archangel <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm> 2007/11/16. It has been argued that this symbolic representation conveys the doctrine of deification by means of icons.

¹² Holweck, St. Michael the Archangel. On symbolism and colours, see Hendrix, et al, pp.16, 17, 27 & 112. - Lianouridis, V., "Bemerkinge oor Ikonografie" Apollonia, 1988, pp. 53-61.

¹³ "Symbolism in icons" from "<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Icon>".

4. Representation of Archangel Michael in the Arts in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine periods

Archangel Michael is generally illustrated with sword in one hand¹⁴ and a shield, spear, date tree branch, or white banner in the other. He is almost always dressed in red and portrayed as Israel's protector, trampling on the dragon (Satan).¹⁵ Occasionally he is represented with a pair of scales with which he weighs the souls of the departed.¹⁶ The representations of Michael are very similar to those of St. George but with one difference: Michael has wings.¹⁷

4.1 The illustrations of Archangel Michael in Byzantine churches according to Dionysius of Fournia

In instructing students the technique of drawing in churches¹⁸ and the position of the angels, Dionysius of Fournia explains their hierarchical order as follows: Inside the bema in the midst of the eastern arch, under the referred prophets, picture the Virgin sitting on a throne and holding Christ as Baby and over her write the following epigraph: “Μ□τηρ Θεο□ □ □ψηλοτ□ρα τ□ν Ο□ραν□ν”. At her sides (□ψηλοτ□ρα), picture two Archangels, Michael and Gabriel, as leaders and thereafter starting from her left, picture the twelve principal Holy days and the Passion of Christ as well as the events which follow the Resurrection; picture these all around in the temple, under the images of the prophets till the right side of the Virgin (□ψηλοτ□ρα), forming thus the first rank of the hierarchical order¹⁹.

At another instant²⁰ he instructs his students to picture Michael on the first σταυροθ□λιον, out of the bema above the diaconica, in the midst of clouds supported by four angels and holding a paper with the following words: “□γ□ □κ το□ Θεο□ □ξ□λθον κα□ □κω· ο□δ□ γ□ρ □π□ □μαντο□ □λ□λυθα, □λλ□ □κε□ν□ς με □π□στειλε”. Write also another epigraph as follows: “□ησο□ς Χριστ□ς □ Μεγ□λης ¹⁴ Grabar, Byzantine Painting, p.186, compare also Hendrix, et al., pp.16, 17, 27 & 112.

¹⁵ Angels: all about angels, Archangels, Archangel Michael

<http://angelstoday.net/index.php?lang=en&way=2Archangels/1michael> 2007/11/13.

¹⁶ Finney, D. Archangels and Guardian Angels, <http://www.greatdreams.com/archangels.htm> 2007/09/18.

¹⁷ Kiefer, J. Michael and All Angels, <http://satucket.com/lectionary/Michael.htm>, 2007/11/16.

¹⁸ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, pp. 215 ff.

¹⁹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 216.

²⁰ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 217.

Βουλῆς ἰγγελος”. At the third σταυροθῆλιον picture the Archangel Michael holding in his right hand a sword and in his left hand a paper with the following words:

“Τοῖς μὲν καθαροῖς προστρῶχουσι καρδῶν ἐν τῷ καθαρῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ θεῶν δὲ συμπαθῶς μου τὸν σπῆθιν κτείνω”.

According to further instructions by Dionysius of Fourná, regarding the inner space of the temple, Michael should be represented at the right side of the main entrance door.²¹ In his hands, he should keep a sword and a paper with the following text:

“Θεοῦ στρατηγῶς ἐμὶ τὸν σπῆθιν φέρων καὶ τοῖς ἁγίοις ἐσιν ἡμῶν φέρων φρουρῶν, προμαχῶν, περμαχῶν καὶ τοῖς δὲ καρδῶν ὑπαρῶν ἐσιν ἡμῶν πικρῶς κτείνω ἐν τῷ ρομφαῶν τῷ δεξιῷ

Referring to epigrams, Dionysius explains in detail the way each of them ought to be formulated regarding structure and content. With regard to Archangels,²² he instructs that in icons known as Theotokion (the so-called Rodon) where the two Archangels are represented at the sides of Mother of God holding Christ as a baby, Michael should hold a paper with the following words:

“Ἰσθρὸς φαίνει, χαρεῖ μὲν τῷ”.

As for Archangel Gabriel, his text should read as follows:

“Στῆθιν βαστῶσα τὸν θεόν”,

On a paper held by both of them, according to Dionysius, the following greeting should appear:

“Ἰδὼν τὸ μῦσαντον, χαρεῖ μὲν βλαστῶσα”

In the case where Michael is painted on the portal of the temple,²³ the epigram accompanying him should read as follows:

“Βροτῶν βλάπτοντες τὸ ζῆλον τεταμῶνον, σοὶ ββηλοὶ καὶ θυμοὶ τὸν τρῶπον, συσταλέτε πρὸς μετνοίαν τῆς χειρὸς, ἐδὲ μὲν προσψάητε τὸ θεῶν πᾶν.
γὰρ γὰρ πρὸν τῶν παλαιῶν προστῆς τῆς χθινῆς τῆς νῆας δὲ μὲν φλάξ.

²¹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 219: On the left side should appear Gabriel holding also a paper with this message:

“Ἰξυρῶν κλάμον τῆς χειρὸς φέρων τὸν ἐσιν ἡμῶν συνταγῶν πορῶν φρουρῶν, στργοντας· ἐδὲ μὲν, φθερῶν τῆς χειρὸς.

²² Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 229 § 22.

²³ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 231.

If Michael is represented on horseback the following lines should appear on the epigram:

φ□ ππον ρ□ τ□ με ο□ προσι□ ντες δ□ στομον κατ□ χοντα χειρ□ □ ομδα□ αν· στ□ φη βαρβ□ ρων □ κδι□ κω κα□ πλ□ ττω· □ μο□ δ□ ναο□ □ π□ ρχει Θε□ ς μ□ γας· τ□ δειν□ ν α□ τ□ □ στις βουληθ□ πρ□ ζαι, πατ□ ζω τ□ □ ομφα□ □ ν τ□ χει.

Finally, in icons which represent the Judgement Day,²⁴ Michael should appear on horse riding through the Universe and above the Sea holding the message: “□ γε□ ρεσθε ο□ καθε□ δοντες”, “□ ποδιδο□ σα □ γ□ κα□ □ θ□ λασσα το□ ς □ αυτ□ ν νεκρο□ ς.”

4.2 Byzantine illustrations of miracles narrated in the Old Testament

In the following section we shall present a detailed description of the way miracles referring to Archangel Michael have been visually illustrated in the Byzantine iconography following their interpretation of Old Testament (Septuagint)²⁵ testimonials as related by Dionysus of Fournā.

4.3 The nine orders²⁶

Based on the interpretation of Dionysius the Areopagite's hierarchic structure of the angelic orders, Dionysius of Fournā explains that the nine orders of angels are classified in three classes and placed accordingly in the Byzantine iconography:

- a) As seen through the eyes of the prophet Isaiah (Septuagint 6: 1-3), in this class belongs Thrones, Cherubim and Seraphim. The Thrones are illustrated as flaming wheels, which are circled by wings bearing eyes and interwoven as to form a royal throne. The Cherubim appear with one head and two wings whilst the Seraphim have six wings two of which cover their faces, two other their feet and the other two open to support their flight while they hold in their hands the following inscription:

“□ γιος □ γιος □ γιος”.

As for the ‘tetramorphes’ these are painted as described by the prophet Ezekiel (Septuagint 1: 5-13): angel-faced figures, with six wings and a crown on their ²⁴ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 288.

²⁵ The Septuagint's numbering and names do not correspond to the English Bible and are not uniformly identical.

²⁶ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, pp. 45-46, § 1.

head holding the Gospel against their chest with their two hands, while an eagle is placed over their head between their two open wings; furthermore, two painted animals, namely a lion on the right wing and a calf on the left wing are facing upwards holding Gospels in their feet.

- b) In the second class, called 'decorative' (διακόσμησις), belong 'Κυριότητες', 'Δυνάμεις', 'Εξουσίες'. They are represented dressed in long fine clothes (στιχάρια) with golden-green belts (ωράρια), holding golden sticks in their right hand and in their left a stamp shaped x.
- c) The third class consists of 'Leaders', 'Archangels' and 'Angels': dressed in army clothes with golden belts they hold sticks topped with axes and spears.

4.4 The fall of Lucifer (Εωσφόρος)²⁷

As we read in the description of this icon by Dionysius, amidst sky Christ is sitting as a king on a throne, holding the Gospel and saying (as narrated in Luke 10: 18):

'I saw Satan fall like lightning from heaven'; and around him the orders of angels standing with fear; and Michael standing in the middle and pointing at Christ for the other orders to see, he says on a paper:

“Στ□μεν καλ□ς, στ□μεν μετ□ φόβου. Δε□τε προσκυνήσωμεν □ βασιλε□ □μ□ν Θε□”, and beneath them mountains and amidst them a great opening (χάσμα) and over it is written “Ο Τάρταρος” whilst the order of Lucifer (Εωσφόρος) appears falling from the sky. The higher standing angels are splendid and the lower are darker and those beneath still darker and the others lower are black and the others placed a degree lower are very black, and those who stand very low are half angels, and other creatures again black and dark are demons and beneath all these, in the Tartarus, Lucifer as the darkest and holiest of all, lying on his stomach and staring upwards (Isaiah 14:12).

4.5 Balaam departing and prevented by the angels to bring a curse upon the Hebrews²⁸

In this icon there are two vineyards and in the midst of these Balaam is mounting a mule and beating it with a small stick, while the mule, on its knees, with its head turned is ²⁷ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, pp. 46, § 2.

²⁸ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 58, § 59.

facing Balaam; and Archangel Michael stands in front of him with his bare sword, and further the Archangels of the king mounted on horses between two mountains (Numbers 22: 23-35).

4.6 Jesus of Naui looking at the Lord's general in chief²⁹

In this icon, Archangel Michael dressed in military outfit is holding a bare sword and Jesus of Naui with greyish hair is kneeling in front of him looking at him while he is untying the angel's shoes (Jesus of Naui 5:13-15).

4.7 Gideon is harvesting and the Angel of the Lord who looks at him empowers him against Madiam³⁰

In a field people are harvesting wheat, an altar is on fire and Archangel Michael holding in his hand a staff touches with it the altar; kneeling in front of him, Gideon expends his hands towards him with a sickle placed near him (Judges 6: 20-22).

4.8 The three children thrown in the furnace for not having venerated the icon are being cooled by the Angel³¹

The icon illustrates a furnace and the three children inside it with their clothes on, having their hands and eyes turned towards the sky and Archangel Michael amidst them; outside the furnace there are corpses of soldiers burned to death by the fire with the golden icon of the king nearby (Daniel 3: 10-23).

4.9 Daniel in the pit of lions accepts food from Abbakoum³²

In a dark pit Daniel, surrounded by seven lions, is lifting his face and hands upwards, while above him Archangel Michael is holding by his hair the prophet Abbakoum who carries a basket of bread and meal and giving them to Daniel (Daniel 12: 31-39). The movement holding the prophet by his hair indicates power and authority attributed to Archangel Michael both by his believers and artists.

²⁹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 59, § 63.

³⁰ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 59, § 64.

³¹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 69, § 113.

³² Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, pp. 70-71, §119.

4.10 How the miracles of the Archangel Michael are recorded in the Byzantine iconography³³

i) Michael is showing the water to Agar

This icon illustrates:

Abraham at the door of a house and in front of him Agar holding by his hand Ishmael, as a little child, and carrying a water container made of skin and a basket with bread on her shoulders; a little further on the mountain, Ishmael is lying under a tree; and a little further again Agar and the archangel pointing with his finger at water on the earth for her to see.

The archangel's pointing finger stresses the authority administered to Michael by his believers

ii) *Michael prevents Abraham from slaughtering Isaac*³⁴

Here the believers are looking at:

Abraham on a mountain having placed Isaac - as a little child - on wood, is holding a knife ready to slaughter him; above him there is an angel who is showing him a ram whose horns are tied to a plant and saying in writing on a paper:

“Αβραάμ, Αβραάμ, μὴ πῖθῃς τὸν χεῖρα σου πρὸ τοῦ παιδίου”.

At the feet of the mountain there stand two youngsters holding a saddled donkey (Genesis 22: 9-13).

iii) *Michael prevents Balaam on the road*³⁵: Icon description as above: 8.5.3.

iv) *Michael warns Satan not to enter the body of sleeping Moses*³⁶

In this icon Moses is lying fast asleep on a mountain, with Satan bent on his feet and the archangel Michael standing near (Moses's) head; with his hands extended towards Satan the Archangel is warning him with his sword (Deuteronomy 34:5).

v) *Michael appears in front of Nani and orders him to untie his shoe*³⁷:

Description as above in 8.5.4.

³³ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 174, § 42.

³⁴ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 52, § 33.

³⁵ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 58, § 59.

³⁶ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 59, § 61.

³⁷ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 59, § 63.

- vi) *Michael appearing to Gideon empowers him against Madiam*³⁸:

Description as above in 8.5.5

- vii) *Michael announces the birth of Samson*³⁹

Here Manoe, as an old bald man, with his wife next to him are pictured on their knees with their hands turned upwards and their eyes looking up; in front of them there is an altar with a lamb in flames and above it the Archangel raising together with the flames to heaven (Judges 13:2-25).

- viii) *Michael appears in front of David, and the killing of the people stops by means of sacrifice*⁴⁰

In this icon the Archangel is represented in the middle of a threshing floor with his arm extended and holding his sword; he is surrounded by fields where on human corpses are scattered. In one corner of the threshing floor there is an altar where plough parts, wheat and two oxen are in flames; in front of the altar on his knees is David with his face turned towards the angel; at the other side of the altar there are two soldiers; standing between David and the angel is the prophet Gad who, with his face turned towards David, is inviting David to look at the angel that he is pointing at; close by is the castle of Jerusalem (II Kings 24: 15-24).

- ix) *Semichirim fighting in Jerusalem while the descended from heaven Lord's angel beats 185 000 soldiers*⁴¹

A castle stands on a mountain and beneath it one sees a group of soldiers, some of them are killed, others are falling from their horses and others, looking back with fear in their eyes, are fleeing. From above, amidst the clouds, Archangel Michael is holding in his right hand a fiery sword drawn in great splendour (Septuaginta, Kings IV, 19:35).

- x) *Michael saves the three children thrown in the furnace for not having venerated the icon*⁴² : Description as above in 8.5.6.

³⁸ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 59, § 64.

³⁹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 60, § 66.

⁴⁰ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 63, § 82.

⁴¹ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 67, § 104.

xi) *Michael brings food to Daniel by Abbakoum*⁴³: Description as above in 8.5.7.

xii) *Michael freeing Constantinople from the Persian occupation*⁴⁴:

Here stands a great and beautiful castle and beneath it there are tents and a group of soldiers on foot and on horses slaughtering each other; others are holding ladders against the walls of the castle whilst over their heads, with immense splendour, Michael stands amidst clouds holding a fiery sword.

xiii) *Michael rescuing his temple in Chonae from flooding*⁴⁵:

In the middle of Chonae-temple there stands Saint Archippos, as an old man, with pointed beard, praying while in front of him Michael is standing beating at the foundation of the temple with a spear, tearing a stone. From the mountains above, two rivers are descending, unite in front of the church and enter the opening of the stone; on the mountains people are cleaning the route of the rivers with spades and spuds.

xiv) *Archangels Michael and Gabriel rescue the child from drowning in the sea*⁴⁶:

In the middle of the sea is a sailing boat and in it three monks. One of them is holding the wheel while the others two, having tied a big stone around the neck of a child, are throwing it head first into the sea; on both sides of the child two archangels in flying position are receiving it; out of the sea there is a monastery with a church inside and in the midst of it the same child is asleep, having the stone at his neck and the father superior of the monastery standing beside it touching it with a stick; behind the father superior a gathering of monks are standing in wonder and admiration.

⁴² Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 69, § 113.

⁴³ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, pp. 70-71, §119.

⁴⁴ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 174.

⁴⁵ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 175.

⁴⁶ Papadopoulou-Kérameus, Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά, p. 175.

5. Archangel Michael represented on Byzantine coinage and stamps and used as propaganda in Byzantine politics

Today – as well as in the Greek past – one can define propaganda as an ideology that tries to promote a belief system or dogma which can be religious, political or economical. It is also believed that propaganda uses mass communication to establish an ideology: “Postage stamps, coins, paper currency, music, art, and drama have all been used for propaganda.”⁴⁷ Also, Koetzle comments in his book ‘Photo Icons’ that “photographs, pictures from films, television, video and digital media all fight to catch our attention” and “they try to seduce us, to manipulate, eroticise and even at times to inform us.”⁴⁸ Finally, Larson concludes that propaganda also aims at uniformity in the beliefs, attitudes, and behaviours of its receivers.⁴⁹

Hendrickx writes that in antiquity, during the first century, propaganda was used in politics and the ‘prosperity-idea’ found on coins is an example of this. He adds: “In ‘n tydperk, waar media soos ons ken, totaal ontbreek het, het die munte se boodskap ‘n primêre rol gespeel. Hulle, en nie skrifte en boeke nie, is algemeen versprei en gebruik, en was dus ‘n allereerste kommunikasiemiddel van boodskappe en idees.”⁵⁰

In this modern day and age, coins are still used for propaganda as stated: “*...the secondary side (the reverse)*⁵¹ is seldom wasted; various pieces of information directly relating to its role as medium of exchange can occur there (if not provided for on the obverse), and additional space is likely to be used propagandistically, evoking some treasured aspect of the state’s territory, its philosophy of governing, or its people’s culture...”⁵²

⁴⁷ Larson, C. U., Persuasion, Reception and Responsibility, Wadsworth Publishing Company, California, 1989, p. 360.

⁴⁸ Koetzle, H., Photo icons, The story behind the picture 1827-1991, Singapore, 2005, p. 6.

⁴⁹ For further reading on the definition of propaganda see Larson, Persuasion, p. 360.

⁵⁰ Hendrickx, Geskiedenis van die Romeins-Hellenistiese Beskawing (ca 330-30 v.C.), Johannesburg, 1993, pp. 407-409.

⁵¹ “The term obverse, and its opposite, reverse, describe the two sides of units of currency and many other kinds of two-sided objects, most often in reference to coins...”

"http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Obverse_and_reverse".

⁵² "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_V".

With regard to the above, it is very likely that Byzantine Emperor, Michael V,⁵³ in his sudden seize of sole power, would have issued coins in his own name both to advertise his new position and to gain support.⁵⁴ In fig. 1 Michael V is represented with Archangel Michael next to him on a gold coin (histamenon nomisma), but the emperor's identity is disputed.⁵⁵

Grierson associates it with Michael V the Caulker or Kalphates,⁵⁷ whilst Fagerlie and Hendy argue that it is Michael IV because in Ancient Greece, for example, the head of a god or goddess, often called the obverse, was the larger image whilst the smaller image of a king was on the reverse. In the Hellenistic period, the head of the ruler was on the one side, which is almost always regarded as the obverse. The change happened in the coinage of Alexander the Great, which continued to be minted long after his death. After his occupation of Egypt he portrayed his face on the obverse as a god-king. This was ⁵³ "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Obverse_and_reverse". Michael V (1015-1042) was Byzantine Emperor for four months in 1041-1042, successor and nephew of Michael IV. Shortly before his death, Michael IV granted his nephew and adopted son of his wife Zoe, Michael V, the title of Kaiser. Michael V succeeded to the throne on 10 Dec 1041 with the help of his other uncle, John the Eunuch. After a disagreement he banished his uncle John the Eunuch to a monastery; later banished his adopted mother Zoe and became sole Emperor. A mob surrounded the palace and demanded Zoe's restoration as co-ruler with her sister Theodora, who in turn declared the emperor deposed. Michael V fled to a monastery, where he was arrested, blinded and castrated. He died as a monk on 24 August 1042.

⁵⁴ "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Histamenon_nomisma-Micael_V-sb1776.jpg": This argument is disputed as it is believed that timeframe is a problem - Zoe was exiled on 18 April and Michael's downfall was on 21 April 1041.

⁵⁵ "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Histamenon_nomisma-Micael_V-sb1776.jpg".

⁵⁶ CNG coins <http://www.wildwinds.com/coins/sb/sb1826.html>.

⁵⁷ "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Histamenon_nomisma-Micael_V-sb1776.jpg": Michael V's father was a caulker, hence his nickname Michael V Kalaphates.

done to secure the allegiance of the Egyptians, who had regarded the Pharaohs as divine.⁵⁸

The opposite situation occurred in Byzantine coinage, where the head of Christ became the obverse and the head of the Emperor the reverse. This religious image or symbol on the obverse, usually an image of Christ for larger denominations, with the head of the Emperor on the reverse, reinforced the bond of the state and the divine order. Justinian II used this style in the gold coins from 695 which initiated the Islamic Caliph Abd al-Malik who had previously copied Byzantine designs, to replace Christian symbols with Islamic equivalents. At the end of the Iconoclasm, the Justinian II type was revived - with variations which remained the norm until the end of the Empire.⁵⁹

Fagerlie and Hendy argue that it is Michael IV and not Michael V who stands next to Archangel Michael, (as Grierson initially stated)⁶⁰ since it was minted in Thessaloniki, the headquarters of Michael IV, during his Bulgarian campaign of AD 1040-1041.⁶¹ They furthermore affirm that it is a reverse type as the emperor is placed on the reverse instead of the obverse, a type which inspired the iconography of later coins of Thessaloniki under Alexius I.⁶²

As Archangel Michael was the protector of the Angeloi House, he as such, also appeared on the coins of the Emperors Isaac II and Alexios III and on coins of the despots of Epirus. The old coins which were cut for the Komnenoi and Angelos Emperors were taken as model by the Emperors of Thessaloniki.⁶³

On a bronze coin Emperor Manuel of Thessaloniki (1230-1237) is represented together with Saint Constantine. Between them is a cross and behind them the half figure of Archangel Michael with open wings holding a sword. Then, on another rather unusual ⁵⁸ Cormack, R., Writing in Gold, Byzantine Society and its Icons, 1985, George Philip, London, ISBN 054001085-5. "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Obverse_and_reverse".

⁵⁹ "<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Icon>" and "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Obverse_and_reverse".

⁶⁰ "Grierson was persuaded by Hendy's argument, but others have been reluctant to declare the matter settled": retrieved from "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Histamenon_nomisma-Micael_V-sb1776.jpg" 2007/09/20.

⁶¹ "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Histamenon_nomisma-Micael_V-sb1776.jpg" 2007/09/20.

⁶² "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Histamenon_nomisma-Micael_V-sb1776.jpg" 2007/09/20.

⁶³ Nicol, D., To Δεσποτάτον της Ηπείρου, transl. P. Leutia, Ioannina, 1974, pp. 173 - 176.

type of coin, Emperor Manuel is represented together with Saint Demetrius sitting on thrones holding between them a building with three towers on which an epigram reads as follows:

ΠΟΛΙΣ ΘΕΣΣΑΛΟΝΙΚΗΣ ΜΑΝΟΥΗΛ ΔΕΣΠΟΤΗ(Σ) Ο ΑΓΙΟΣ ΔΗΜΗΤΡΙΟΣ. On the other side of the coin, Archangel Michael stands with open wings. It has been argued that Emperors of the Angelos house were not really flattered to be associated with Angels.⁶⁴

Then there are two stamps⁶⁵ made of lead and silver plated representing Archangel Michael on the one side and the figure of the Emperor on the other. On the one side of this stamp (found in Corfu) Michael is holding in both hands the Earth and the sceptre. On the other stamp Archangel Michael is holding the sword and the sceptre.⁶⁶

⁶⁴ Nicol, To Δεσποτάτον, p. 176.

⁶⁵ Nicol, To Δεσποτάτον, p. 174: Michael I (1204-15) and Michael II (1231-71), both Emperors of Epiros.

⁶⁶ Nicol, To Δεσποτάτον, p. 176.

Chapter 4

The characteristics and functions of Michael in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Periods

The vast popularity of Michael, especially among the youth in the Byzantine period, but also in general throughout the whole spectrum of society, invites us to examine the characteristics and functions of Michael in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Periods. Michael's functions continued into the Post-Byzantine period and beyond into the modern era in Greece, but more specifically in the role of angel of death i.e. the angel who brings the souls of the dying into the supernatural world. As a result, characteristics of the Biblical, Apocalyptical and Apocryphal Archangel were intermingled with ancient mythological figures (e.g. Charon and Hades)¹, Roman military traditions and contemporary Byzantine fashion.² (These elements of syncretism, synthesis and parallelism will be discussed in chapter six.)

1. Characteristics of the Archangel Michael:

The origin and nature of an angel is that of a pure spirit, created by God: "Are not all angels ministering spirits sent to serve those who will inherit salvation?"³ This means that the angelic nature is entirely spiritual⁴ and thus to abridge Archangel Michael's characteristics would purely be associated with human characteristics.

Archangel Michael is widely known and characterised as the 'Warrior Archangel'; as one of the chief princes of all the other Angels. He furthermore stands for justice and truth and lives from his integrity.⁵ He is portrayed as the leader of the celestial armies of the Lord who fight against Satan's wicked forces:

¹ Hendrickx, "Die dood van Digenis – mistifikasie van 'n Bisantynse held," Literator 14, 1 (1993), pp. 99-106 – Alexiou, The Ritual Lament.

² Gale, Sinai and the Monastery, p. 85 – Hendrickx, "Die dood van Digenis" pp. 99-106.

³ Heb 1:14.

⁴ "<http://www.catholic-forum.com/saints/ncd00538.htm>" 2007/11/16.

⁵ Dn.10:13,21 – King, M. Chief Rainbow Warrior: Archangel Michael 2006 King, M., "Chief Rainbow Warrior: Archangel Michael", <http://www.americanchronicle.com/articles/viewArticle.asp?articleID=5580> 2007/11/16.

*“And there was war in heaven. Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon and his angels fought back.”*⁶

According to Jewish writings, Michael was considered to be the ‘Viceroy of Heaven’. This was a title applied to the great rival Lucifer before his fall.⁷

2. Functions of the Archangel Michael Archangel Michael was given four major offices/ titles according to Christian tradition.⁸

- i. To fight Satan (Michael is the supreme enemy of Satan and the fallen angels).
- ii. To rescue the souls of the faithful from the power of the enemy, especially at the hour of death. It is believed that Michael gives each soul the chance to redeem itself at the hour of death – disconcerting the devil and his demons.
- iii. To protect and be the advocate or champion of God’s people. (Michael is the patron of the chosen people in the Old Testament and guardian of the church as revered by the military orders of knights during the middle ages).
- iv. To call away from earth and bring souls to judgement⁹ (Michael is the Christian angel of the dead as he carries the souls of the dead to heaven).

According to Rabbinic Jewish tradition and the Midrash,¹⁰

- i. Michael also acted as the advocate of Israel at the time of the Exodus, when Satan accused the Israelites of idolatry. He also declared that the Israelites were deserving of death by drowning in the Red Sea. It is said that the angel of Egypt, Uzza, called upon Michael to plead before God but Michael remained silent, and it was God Himself who defended Israel.¹¹
- ii. Michael had to fight the princes of other nations as well as the angel Samael, whose enmity dated from the time Samael was thrown out of heaven. It is said

⁶ Rv. 12:7.

⁷ Anonymous, “Michael”, <http://www.answers.com/topic/michael> 2007/09/19.

⁸ St. Michael the Archangel <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm> 2007/11/16;
http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\))

⁹ Compare also Graham, Angels: God’s Secret Agents, London, 1976, p.55.

¹⁰ Midrash: the term “midrash” is a Hebrew word which refers to a method of exegesis of a Biblical text. This term can also refer to a collection of Midrashic teachings, in the form of legal, exegetical or homiletical commentaries on the Tanakh - Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

¹¹ Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”, http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

that Samael grabbed the wings of Michael, to bring him down with him as he fell; but Michael was saved by God.¹²

As seen, Archangel Michael is characterised as a warrior Archangel due to his most primary function, which also distinguishes him from the other entire heavenly host. This primary function is to battle Satan and his demons.¹³ Not only is he portrayed as a warrior Angel, but also as Israel's protector, according to Jewish tradition and the Bible. This is the reason for the belief that Michael gave victory in war to his clients. He was thus also regarded as patron of the Church and orders of knights during the Middle Ages.¹⁴ Within an African Christian Orthodox context, the Armenian Chronographer Abu Salih (end 12th century AD) wrote that "all the kings of Abyssinia are crowded with the royal crown in the Church of the Angel Michael or the Church of the Angel Michael or the Church of Saint George, beneath their pictures," thus underlining their equal prestige and value in Orthodoxy.¹⁵

It must be noted, however, that although St. Michael is regarded as a patron in war, early Christians regarded St. George, St. Theodore, St. Demetrius, and St. Serguis as their military patrons, whilst they gave St. Michael the care of the sick.¹⁶

Apart from these functions, Archangel Michael answers Daniel's prayer by helping angel Gabriel in his contest with the angel of Persia, Dobiël.¹⁷ In Jewish tradition and in The Bible, the prophet Daniel experiences a vision after having undergone a period of fasting. In his article 'Opstanding, en Daniël 12:1-4', Nel¹⁸ states that the genre of this part is that of an apocalypse which can be categorised into two subgenres, those with otherworldly experiences and those which offer an historical overview. He furthermore states that the periscope of this part – of the Book of Daniel – offers for an apocalypse: "a genre of ¹² Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

¹³ King, M., "Chief Rainbow Warrior: Archangel Michael", <http://www.americanchronicle.com/articles/viewArticle.asp?articleID=5580> 2007/11/16.

¹⁴ Finney, D., "Archangels" <http://www.greatdreams.com/Archangels.htm> 2007/09/18.

¹⁵ Vantini, G. (ed.), Oriental Sources Concerning Nubia, Heidelberg and Warsaw, 1975, pp. 339-340.

¹⁶ Retrieved from <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm> 2007/11/16 & Finney, D., "Archangels" <http://www.greatdreams.com/Archangels.htm> 2007/09/18. Greek tradition has it that Michael's apparition took place in the first century. Today, a feast in commemoration of it on 6 September is celebrated.

¹⁷ Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)), 2007/11/16.

¹⁸ Nel, M., "Opstanding, en Daniël 12:1-4", Ekklesiastikos Pharos 88 (2006) (N.S. 17), pp. 15-29.

revealed literature with a narrative framework, in which a revelation is mediated by an otherworldly being to a human recipient, disclosing a transcendent reality which is both temporal, insofar as it envisages eschatological salvation, and spatial, insofar as it involves another, supernatural world."¹⁹

In Daniel's vision, an angel names Michael as the protector of Israel.²⁰ Michael arrives to answer Daniels' prayers after being withstood by the Prince of Persia for 21 days:

*"But the prince of the Persian kingdom resisted me twenty-one days. Then Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me, because I was detained there with the king of Persia. '... but first I will tell you what is written in the Book of Truth. (No one supports me against them except Michael, your prince. And in the first year of Darius the Mede, I took my stand to support and protect him.)"*²¹

Daniel is informed that Michael also appears as Israel's representative and guardian angel to gain the victory on behalf of Israel. Archangel Michael will stand for Israel during the Tribulation to come: *"At that time Michael, the great prince who protects your people, will arise."*²² It is believed²³ that Michael's role as leader may be seen as both military and judicial as it is described in Zephaniah 3:1. Here, he represents Israel in the celestial court and executes God's judgement when the decision is made in favour of Israel. According to Nel, this description serves as parallel to the scene of judgement in Daniel 7:9-10: he proposes that Michael's role should be seen as both military and judicial – since he represents Israel in the heavenly court and carries out God's judgement in favour of Israel.²⁴ Nel describes Melchisedek as the one who executes the divine judgement whilst the angels execute it according to Henoch 2:11-13. Therefore, Daniel's visions 9-12 can be classified as epiphany visions, whilst Daniel 7 and 8 are symbolic visions. Nel ¹⁹ Nel, "Opstanding, en Daniël", pp. 15-29.

²⁰ Dn 10:13, 21.

²¹ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael– Compare also Dn 10:13 & 21.

²² Dn 12:1, see also Nel, "Opstanding, en Daniël", p. 18.

²³ Nel, "Opstanding, en Daniël", pp. 15-29.

²⁴ Nel, "Opstanding, en Daniël", pp. 17, 24-25, Nel says that the author of Daniel 12 projects the final battle wherein Antiochus IV will be brought to a fall from heaven to show that God is involved in everything. He furthermore states that Michael appears as Israel's representative and guardian angel to gain the victory on behalf of Israel. Then, Michael shall stand up on behalf of Israel – he is the one who stands against Antiochus IV, i.e. the one that guards the Jews. This image takes the reader behind the scenes, to see what happens in heaven, which is the determining factor in the outcome of the battle which is happening on earth, leading thus to a state of suffering which is worst than what the Jews have ever experienced.

says that the structure of Daniel 9 -12 shows various resemblances. According to Daniel 10:1-19, a heavenly being appears on the scene in order to prepare the listener for the visions. Thereafter, the revelation is described in Daniel 10:20-12:3. This is regarded as the climax of the book of Daniel – Daniel twice receives revelations which are difficult to understand.²⁵

According to Rabbinic Jewish²⁶ tradition, other functions of Michael include the prevention of the sacrifice of Abraham's son Isaac and the rescue of Abraham from the furnace into which he had been thrown by Nimrod. Then there is the episode where Michael saved Jacob, while still in his mother's womb, from being killed by Samael. He is said to be the patron of Adam as he was there when Adam and Eve were expelled from the Garden of Eden and taught Adam how to farm. Also, it is said that when Adam died, Michael helped convince God to clean Adam's soul from sin and allow it to be brought to heaven.²⁷

Also, Michael is said to have been the teacher of Moses; the reason why the Israelites are indebted to their advocate for the supreme good of the Torah. It is furthermore said that Michael declined to bring Moses' soul to God because he had been Moses' teacher.²⁸ Michael confronts Satan over Moses' right of proper burial by disputing over the dead body of Moses.²⁹ It is believed that the angel who intermediated between God and Moses on Mount Sinai was Michael.

3. Functions of the Archangel Michael in Islam

In Islamic tradition (Arabic literature and the Qur'an³⁰), Michael is called Mikha'il, Meeka'eel or Mikhal. He is portrayed as the angel who carries out Allah's Commands concerning the rains etc., and the provisions for mankind. Meeka'eel is in charge of the ²⁵ Nel, "Opstanding, en Daniël", pp. 15-29.

²⁶ "Michael (archangel)", http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/12; compare also Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

²⁷ "Michael (archangel)", http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/12; compare also Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

²⁸ Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

²⁹ Jude 9.

³⁰ In the Qur'an Michael is mentioned only once, in Sura 2: 98.

food and the rain whilst other angels who are in charge of the clouds, seas, rivers and the winds work under him. Michael gets the order from Allah and then orders the others under his command.³¹ Furthermore, in the Islamic faith, Michael appears as second to Gabriel. During the creation of Adam, God first send Gabriel and then Michael to fetch clay to form man. When Adam and Eve were banned from paradise, it is said that Gabriel was sent to Adam whilst Michael to Eve to pass on comfort.³²

³¹ Najaar, A, I am a Muslim, no ISBN or date of publication, p. 158 - Also compare Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

³² Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

Chapter 5

Funeral laments and death rites in the Orthodox Greek society and the role of Archangel Michael

In this chapter we shall examine survivals of death rites and laments in Christian Orthodox Greece with special attention to the rites of passage (i.e. passage from the state of life to the state of death, where the Archangel Michael is involved). In doing so, we shall focus on the transition through the process of acculturation from paganism in late antiquity to early Christianity and answer the following questions:

- a) To which degree were the ancient rites of passage integrated with the Christian ones?
- b) Is there an analogy between Charon and Archangel Michael?

1. Greek cultural survival

In order to explain the phenomenon of Greek cultural survival and its uninterrupted evolution through centuries in terms of language, traditions and collective historical memory, Greek historians applied the theory of cultural exchange and integration (acculturation) in a diachronic way. This methodological approach has led to the conclusion that the Byzantine civilisation forms one of three main stages of its evolution – namely Ancient Greece-Rome-Byzantium, and that these three stages created a ‘Post-Byzantine’ culture on which Modern Greek culture has been built.¹

Regarding religious survivals of beliefs and concepts during the so called Roman-Byzantine period, due to the cautious and tolerant official policy towards paganism, many pagan elements and ancient superstitions were absorbed into the Christian faith.²

¹ For an historical analysis of the cultural evolution and its various stages in Greece, see Sansaridou-Hendrickx, T., “The awakening of Greek national consciousness during the 13th C”, Anno Domini II (2005), 137-181, pp. 153-164.

² For more on the transition from paganism to Christian beliefs, see Boak, A.E.R., & Sinnigen, W. G., A History of Rome to A.D. 565, London 1957, pp. 431-436, 501-502: Constantine the Great (280-337 A.D.) was the founder of the new Eastern Roman capital, Constantinople. Constantine favoured Christianity although he was by tradition pagan. As a result, the infrastructure of Constantinople consisted both of Christian churches as well as pagan temples, institutions, a Senate and a palace. It was during his reign that Sunday was celebrated both as the ‘Day of the Lord’ and as the ‘day of the Sun-god’. This seems to have united Christians and pagans.

To these integrated cultural practices belong the Greek funeral laments, which are death songs with features traceable from antiquity to the present day. Performed and passed on by word of mouth from ancient and medieval times to this day, these funeral laments remain part of a living folk tradition that incorporates the vernacular language, the shared symbols³ and a collective cultural code for the verbal expression of personal grief. To explain the challenge between life and death, these funeral laments, together with death rituals, have been mostly⁴ performed by women mourners (μοιρολογήτρες) during public performances.⁵ Laments and literary material from ancient tragedies offer valuable insight into the practice of lamentation in antiquity while formal laments in the Byzantine period are mostly found in learned poetry and prose and reflect influences of old and new forms.⁶

2. Death rituals

Traditional Greek rituals and beliefs related to lamentation are much fuller at the present time than at any other time in Greek history. Indeed, they give vital insight into the cultural and social characteristics which form part of this evolution and continuity. In light of this, the relationship between ritual customs and lamentation in Ancient, Byzantine and Modern Greek traditions needs to be seen from a historical perspective which could also reflect the social and political life respectively.⁷

As for Modern Greece, Danforth's analysis of death rituals and lamentations, as practiced in the village of Potamia in the late 70's, contributes greatly to the understanding of ritual, cultural and religious life in rural Greece. Despite certain differences, these rites were quite similar to those performed in other parts of rural Greece.

³ Jung, Man and his Symbols, p. 21: Jung writes that "a word or an image is symbolic when it implies something more than its obvious and immediate meaning." Also: "Because there are innumerable things beyond the range of human understanding, we constantly use symbolic terms to represent concepts that we cannot define or fully comprehend. This is one reason why all religions employ symbolic language or images."- Jung, 1979, pp.20-21. He furthermore states that man not only consciously produces symbols but does so - on an unconscious level, resulting in the form of dreams.

⁴ On laments performed by men, see Sansaridou-Hendrickx, T., "The Lament of Carlo Tocco for his brother's death (1418 A.D.)", Acta Patristica et Byzantina 18 (2007), pp. 128-144.

⁵ Alexiou, The ritual lament, pp. xi, 3 - Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 71-72.

⁶ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. xii.

⁷ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. xii.

3. Rites of passage

Danforth defines rites of passage as the crossing from life to death by means of a slow social process and not by an immediate physical event. Furthermore, as he explains, all rites of passage (including birth, marriage and death) share a general tripartite structure as follows:

1. Rites of separation (when a person changes from a previously occupied state to another).
2. Rites of transition (when a person is neither in one occupied state nor in the other (e.g. between world of the living and world of the dead).
3. Rites of incorporation (when a person changes into a new state).⁸

The goal of the funeral rites of passage is for:

- a. the dead to be properly disposed of;
- b. the soul to reach its final destination;
- c. the mourners to resume their normal social life.⁹

Danforth¹⁰ uses Van Gennep's¹¹ structure of different periods in order to explain the universal structural logic of rites of passage within a specific cultural group, especially when symbolic communication, through religion¹², myth and ritual¹³ is used. Although funerals as rites of passage would generally be expected to fall under the initial state, (rite of separation) Danforth points out that Van Gennep believed that rite of transition dominated the other rites. Even though the period of transition does not fit into any category in the social structure, the funeral ceremony is the most important element of the journey as it is the part when the person is neither in one nor in the other state. Consequently, things which are associated with this state are often regarded as impure and dangerous. Danforth symbolically associated the Greek mourners, corpses and souls

⁸ Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 35-36, 75.

⁹ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 38.

¹⁰ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 37.

¹¹ Van Gennep, A., The Rites of Passage: Chicago, 1960, p. 146.

¹² According to Geertz, C., The Interpretation of Cultures, New York, 1973, p. 90: "religion is a system of symbols which acts to establish powerful, pervasive, and long-lasting moods and motivations in men by formulating conceptions with such an aura of factuality that moods and motivations seem uniquely realistic".

¹³ On myth and ritual, see Keesing, R. M., Cultural Anthropology, A Contemporary Perspective, Canberra, 1981, pp. 329-345.

respectively with three periods of the rite of passage: i) Separation; ii) Transition, and iii) Incorporation.

1. Separation period:

In this initial stage the soul is separated from the body.

A smooth and painless departure of the soul is symbolically interpreted as a life well lived, whilst a delayed death is linked to a troubled soul due to sins not confessed during that person's lifetime.¹⁴ This may be compared to Margaret Alexiou's comment that: "In Plato's view it was the sinful soul which was reluctant to depart from life."¹⁵ Then, weeping and lamenting is forbidden in the presence of the dying person as it is believed that it may hinder the soul from reaching its final destination.¹⁶

Also, in antiquity, it was regarded a bad omen to weep for someone who was still alive, as dying involved the struggle of the soul to break free. This was known as ψυχορραγία.¹⁷ The soul could not depart easily if any family obligations were not met.¹⁷ There is an important parallel to be drawn between the dying and the living, as well as the body and soul.¹⁸

As for the Modern Greek concept of separation, many traditional and popular beliefs held by Greek villagers relating to the afterlife are in fact a phenomenon of syncretism of Orthodox Christian teachings and ancient Greek concepts.¹⁹ For instance, when a person lies at home seriously ill and signs of death appear, the priest is urgently summoned to the house to carry out prayers known as the Anointing of the Sick. These prayers heal the body and purify the soul through the forgiveness of sins.

¹⁴ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 39 – Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 341: "The Bible does not clearly specify what happens to the soul when the body dies, but a predominant Protestant belief is that the soul of the believer passes immediately to heaven (2 Corinthians 5:8). The Roman Catholic understanding is that most souls destined for heaven go first to Purgatory."

¹⁵ Alexiou, The ritual lament, pp. 4-5.

¹⁶ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 39 – Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 5.

¹⁷ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 5.

¹⁸ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 39.

¹⁹ Danforth The death rituals, p. 45: On Tradition and change in antiquity to modern survivals see Alexiou The ritual lament, p. 4 – 51.

It is believed that at the moment of death, when the last breath leaves the body, the soul is departing from the body.²⁰

*“That is why you can hear the common people tell of fearful sights and dreadful visions at this moment...because the soul is forcing herself down, reluctant to be torn away from the body and unable to bear the sight of the approaching angels.”*²¹

After death, the corpse is washed, dressed in new clothes and laid down on a bed in the reception room. The feet, jaw and the hands are tied; the hands crossed over the chest holding a large white candle. The eyes are closed; the body covered up to the waist and an icon placed at the legs. These preparations for the funeral are always carried out by females. People, who come to pay their last respects, light a candle, place some coins on the deceased's chest, kiss the forehead and kiss the icon.²² In ancient Greece, on the other hand, just after death occurred, the body was prepared for the próthesis, or wake. The body was washed and dressed, usually in white, by the women of the house.²³ The eyes and mouth were closed by the next of kin. “First came the closing of the eyes and mouth, still known by the ancient term καλύπτειν. Sometimes, a coin was placed on the mouth.”²⁴ One cannot but compare this formal ancient ritual to the one performed in the village of Potamia. Alexiou points out that this detail is similar to many scenes found on ancient vases and not found in the Byzantine sources.²⁵

The priest arrives, performs the Trisayion whereupon the body is taken out of the house and placed in a wooden coffin. The funeral procession to the church is led by a group of women and some boys who carry a cross and staffs crowned with metal images of Cherubim. At the church, the coffin is placed in the centre of the church with the feet toward the altar. The Orthodox funeral service is then performed which ²⁰ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 38 - Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 37.

²¹ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 25.

²² Danforth, The death rituals, p. 39.

²³ The próthesis, is where the formal lamentation of the dead began: Alexiou, The ritual lament, pp. 5-6.

²⁴ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 27, see also p. 39: “The coin which is still placed on the forehead or on the mouth is believed to serve as a charm against evil spirits, although one folk song has it that it is the fee for Charos to ferry the soul across the river of death.”

²⁵ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 39.

allows for the departure of the soul from the body as well as the dead from the living. During this transitional period, it is believed, the soul leaves the body at the moment of death when it is ‘set out on the road to God’. It is also believed that the soul is taken away by Charon who is associated with the Angel of the Lord (Ἄγγελος Κυρίου), the Archangel Michael, or a helper of the Archangel and a messenger of God.²⁶ Hendrickx points out that the description of Charon in this instance refers to the Archangel Michael as represented in icons:

“Τῶρα εἶδα ἵναν ζυπλοτο καὶ λαμπροφορεμένο, πῶχει τοῦ σου²⁷ τῶ πλουμι, τῶς στραπῶς τῶ μάτια.”²⁸

“Ο θάνατος του Διγενή” (Il. 19-20).

Finally and equally important is to understand the symbolic relationship between the mourner, corpse and soul, the corpse must be purified from its decaying flesh, the soul from its sins and finally the mourners from their impure contact with the dead. In ancient Greece, for example, a series of purification rites were performed after a burial. This involved the thorough cleansing of the household with sea-water hyssop as well as the washing of the women who were involved with the dead.²⁹

2. Transition period

In Greece, during the slow period of transition, the corpse falls into a process of decomposition which is linked to the journey of the soul en route to its final destination into the other world.

According to popular belief, the soul remains in the house for three days, then wanders on earth until the fortieth day after death as in the life of Christ.³⁰ Others

²⁶ Danforth, The death rituals, p.45-46 – Jn 5:22, Ac 10:42 and 2 Ti 4:1.

²⁷ The term risos is important. There are two possible translations: eagle or lynx. Eagle refers to the wings of Charon/ Michael. According to Politis, the image of the mighty lynx fits in with Michael as on some icons, Michael is represented wearing a cape, decorated with the head of a wild cat/lion/lynx. Politis, N.G., Εκλογαί από τα τραγούδια του Ελληνικού λαού, Athens, 1932, pp.104-105: text and commentary of poem).

²⁸ Hendrickx, “Die dood van Digenis”, pp. 99-105. (Vertaling Hendrickx, p.101: “Nou het ek iemand gesien, kaalvoet en met glasend gewaad, wat die vere van die arend het, die oë van die weerlig.).

²⁹ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 10 – Danforth, pp. 38, 42 & 43.

³⁰ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 45: “According to Greek tradition, during the forty days after his resurrection Christ appeared to his disciples many times until on the fortieth day he ascended into heaven.” See also Holy Bible, NIV, Lk 24: 9-49, Jn 20: 1-29 and Ac 1:9-11. In Kabbani’s book, Angels Unveiled, it is interesting to note, during a conversation between Abraham and the Archangel Azrail, (the believe that for the first forty days, the soul wanders close to earth visiting people it regularly saw during its life, and on the fortieth day Charon represents the soul to the Angel of the Lord, who finally takes it to heaven for judgement. It is also said that it is the Angel of the Lord or Christ who gives judgement.³¹ Archangel Michael is God's messenger of law and judgement as he appears in this capacity in The New Testament. In the following prayer, from the text of the funeral service, one sees how the Greek funeral service acknowledges the theme of separation:

*“Alas! What an agony the soul endures when from the body it is parting....
Brethren, come, and let us a farewell kiss give to him whom death has taken, and offer thanks to God. For he has departed from the bosom of his kin...”*³²

At this point in the church service, all pass the open coffin and place some coins on the body, kiss again the forehead of the deceased and the icon. Thereafter, the coffin is taken to the graveyard, where the hands, jaw and feet are untied³³ (it is believed that the corpse will not decompose if tied up).³⁴ The priest recites the last section of the service whereupon the family returns home. Before entering, everyone purifies themselves from the impurities associated with death.³⁵ These funeral rites mark the beginning of the long transition period which normally concludes five years later. These rites indicate the agony of the absorption of the soul into paradise, its final destination, the body into the earth and the re-entry of the mourners into the world of the living.³⁶

Traditional beliefs held by Greek villagers concerning the soul and afterlife are also similar to those of ancient Greece. It is believed that the soul continues to exist in human form, i.e. the soul of the dead either ends up in heaven (which may be paradise or hell as both places are vaguely located somewhere there) or in the lower world, the angel of death in Islam) that a forty day period, is linked to a person's life: “This event happens forty days before the actual death of that person. We are informed forty days in advance of his impending death. That ... and from the fortieth day before his death he begins to consume his leaf from the Tree of Life without knowing it. Only forty days then remain of his life in this world, and after that there is no provision for him in it.” Kabbani, S. H., Angels Unveiled, A Sufi Perspective, Cape Town, 2000, p. 163.

³¹ Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 45-46 – Jn 5:22, Ac 10:42 and 2 Ti 4:1.

³² Danforth, The death rituals, p. 41.

³³ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 42.

³⁴ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 52 refers to Synkollitis 1934: 401-402: “Τα λύνουν γιατί αν είναι δεμένος ο νεκρός, δεν μπορεί να λιώσει”.

³⁵ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 10 – Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 42-45.

³⁶ Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 45-46.

world of Hades.³⁷ The latter is where the souls lead a pitiful life and is deprived of daily necessities for survival and depends on the living for that.³⁸ The following is a widow's remarks during an exhumation':

*"At death the soul emerges in its entirety, like a man. It has the shape of a man, only it's invisible. It has a mouth and hands and eats real food just like we do. When you see someone in your dreams, it's the soul you see. People in your dreams eat, don't they? The souls of the dead eat too."*³⁹

There is a common awareness that the souls of the dead are able to see and hear the living. For this very reason memorial services are held during the transition period as it benefits the souls which are unable to care for themselves in the other world. The souls of the deceased are believed to have the same needs as human beings. Amongst these needs are water, food, light and clothing, but they are unable to satisfy these without help. Alexiou points out that the association of the thirsty ones (οι διψασμένοι) is synonymous with the dead (οι πεθαμένοι) as they depend on the living to provide for them. Constantly candles and lamps are lit in churches and graveyards throughout Greece in the belief that it helps the dead as they are lit for the souls to have light. In addition to these needs, some believe that memorial services⁴⁰ are performed to also assist the souls in obtaining forgiveness and to reach paradise. Others believe that there is no repentance for the soul after death.⁴¹

³⁷ According to Taylor, in the New Testament, the Greek word Hades refers to the place of the dead. He furthermore states that in the King James Version, three different words of hell in biblical reference is given: the Hebrew word Sheol and the Greek word Hades both refer to a place where the dead have a shadowy existence. Also, these words are often translated as 'death' or 'destruction' in modern translations whilst the Greek word Gehenna is associated with 'hell' as it refers to the fires of hell. Taylor, The Complete Book, pp. 323 & 324.

³⁸ Compare Taylor's definition of the term Purgatory: Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 337 - Danforth, The Death Rituals, pp. 45-46.

³⁹ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 46.

⁴⁰ During memorial services, food distribution takes place 'so that the dead may eat'. As it is passed and eaten by the living, so it is believed that it will reach the dead. This is parallel to the relationship between human beings and the earth. In death, the body is destroyed or eaten by the earth in order for it to pass into the other world and for the soul to enter paradise. The body of Christ is also symbolised by the bread of communion, which is eaten by Christians in His memory: Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 105- 106. Compare: Mt 26:2-29 and Taylor, The Complete Book, p. 337 on 'purgatory'.

⁴¹ Danforth, The death rituals s, p. 47.

*“Therefore I beg you all, and implore you to offer prayer unceasingly for me to Christ our God, that I be not assigned for my sins to the place of torment, but that He assign (sic!) me to the place where there is light of life”.*⁴²

Traditions that were followed in antiquity are similar to those practised in rural Greece. On a vase-painting is a detailed picture of a female mourner at a tomb with her oil-flasks (λίκυθοι) containing oil, wine, perfumes and baskets and clothes bundles with food. Not only were the offerings part of a feast for the dead but also part of offerings to repay the earth for the gift of life, so fertility could be promoted.⁴³

Regarding the colour black at times of mourning, Alexiou explains that throughout the transition period the dress code of the close relatives is restricted to black because it symbolises the underground colour of the earth where the corpse lies buried. The period of mourning is determined by the relationship the woman had to the deceased. As opposed to men there is quite an amount of pressure exerted by society on women who are related to the deceased.⁴⁴ According to Danforth's interpretation about women in mourning, they are literally separated from the world of the living. This separation takes place because of their contact with the world of the dead and also as a reflection of the solitude of the body lying buried in the ground. Thus they remain socially dead until the rite of exhumation takes place which also marks the end of the transition period.⁴⁵ This passage is a move from a negative position to a positive one as it unites the survivors with society again. The last rite is the final resting place which varies in different regions and is marked as the final point of separation between the dead and the living. The exhumation is seen as the return of the deceased from the earth where they have been completely incorporated into the other world. As we can see in the following lament the deceased (Eleni) is questioned about her

⁴² Danforth, The death rituals, p. 48.

⁴³ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 8.

⁴⁴ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 16. In chapter 1: “Traditions and change in antiquity”, she points out, that: “From the third century B.C. there is a law from Gambreion in Asia Minor which is sufficiently different to be considered independent of the earlier legislation: it contains none of the restrictions on expense and numbers, and the time limit for mourning is more generous, three months for men and four for women. It specifies that the dress worn by woman at funerals should be dark, not the usual white, and that it should not be torn.”

⁴⁵ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 54.

experience in the underworld and also her desire to return home. In the second lament the deceased needs the help of her relative to return, in her struggle with Charon.⁴⁶

α) *“My partridge, my little partridge with whom were you arguing yesterday?”
I was arguing with my mother.
I was struggling with Haros.
Let me go, Haros! Let me go!
So that I can go to my mother,
so that I can see her again.”*

β) *A partridge stands and sings.
Eleni stands and sings.
She cries out to her brothers:
“Where are you, brothers? Come here!
Fire your rifles, all of you!
Fire your rifles, all of you!
Rescue me from Haros!”
“Don’t be afraid, Eleni!
We are near you.
We are all weeping for you.”⁴⁷*

As seen above, during the transition period, the soul gradually leaves the world of the living to enter the world of the dead. This process takes place in a parallel way to the changes the body of the deceased undergoes; as the soul starts its journey to paradise, so the body starts its decomposition to return to dust. Decomposition of the deceased must take its natural course and for this reason the Orthodox Church has disapproved of cremation.⁴⁸ As Danforth states:

⁴⁶ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 60.

⁴⁷ Funeral lament songs: Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 62 – 63:

*Πέρδικα, περδικούλα μου, με ποιόν εμάλωνες εψές;
-Με τη μανούλα μάλωνα,
και με το Χάρο δέρνομαν,
Ν’ άφ’σες με, Χάρε μ’, ν’ άφ’σες με, να πάω στη μανούλα μου,
να τη δω.*

*-Πέρδικα στέκει και λαλεί, Ελένη μ’ στέκει και λαλεί, και τ’ αδελφούλια της φωνάζει:
-Πού ‘στε αδερφούλια; ‘Λάτε ‘δω.
Ν-όλοι τουφέκια ρίξετε.*

Απ’ το Χάρο να μ’ αρπάζετε.

-Μη φοβάσαι, Ελένη.

Ν’όλοι τριγύρω είμαστε.

Ν-όλοι για σένα κλαίγομε.

⁴⁸ Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 48-49.

*“Let the body indeed be dissolved into the elements [out of which it has been compounded], and let the soul be appointed a place in the Choir of the Just.”*⁴⁹

3. Incorporation period

The transitional period is terminated by rites of a “secondary burial”, where the bones of the deceased are recovered and permanently re-located. Throughout this process, i.e. the removal and inspection of the condition of the corpse, the ceremony is linked to the condition of the soul. Not only the association with it, but also linkage to the process of the mourners who are separated from the rest of society at the moment of death and re-enter society after they have passed through the transitional period.

The exhumation can be seen as a ritual process to symbolically overcome death but never to bring the dead back to life. The possibility of overcoming death is an official teaching of the Orthodox Church. It is believed that the bodily resurrection of Christ and of the faithful Christians will take place at the Second Coming of Christ. The souls of the dead will be reunited with their bodies whereupon the dead as well as the living will be judged at the Last Judgement. This resurrected body and soul is not a physical body but a spiritual one that will enjoy eternal life in the Kingdom of God.⁵⁰

On substantiation, the following verses from the Bible refer:

*“it is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body.”*⁵¹ And also *“who, by the power that enables him to bring everything under his control, will transform our lowly bodies so that they will be like his glorious body.”*⁵²

The condition of the bones provides visible evidence, in a public milieu, of the final destiny of the soul. During the rite of exhumation, the pure white bones offer visible evidence that the soul of the deceased has entered paradise, its final destination. The whiteness of the bones metaphorically refers to the purity of the soul. Throughout this rite, the priest pours wine in the shape of the cross over the bones reciting “you shall ⁴⁹ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 49.

⁵⁰ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 68.

⁵¹ 1 Co 15:43-53. See also 1 Jn 3:2, Col 3:4.

⁵² Ph 3:21.

wash me and I shall be whiter than snow”⁵³ which finally coalesces the two elements (body and soul) into one structure of the belief. It is also at this final stage that the dead cease to exist as individuals as their dry, white bones are transferred to the communal village ossuary.⁵⁴

There are other occasions where the body doesn't decompose fully and is symbolised with “the soul that did not find its way to paradise.”⁵⁵ In such a case additional services are performed where the body is reburied and the transition period is extended in the hope that the body will decompose completely so that the soul may find its way to paradise. In the past, a partly decomposed body was a sign that the soul had not yet completely separated from the body and the world of the living. In a case like this it was also believed that the body might be kept alive either by the soul or by the devil.⁵⁶

Summers explains that the Greek Orthodox believed that a person, who was excommunicated or whose sins were unpardoned (i.e. who had not received absolution for his sins by a priest), would retain – when buried – an incorrupt, not decomposed body, and live on as a vrykolakas, a kind of vampire.⁵⁷ This also explains the tradition of exhumation, a custom which existed in Ancient Greece and was connected with washing the bones in wine. On the other hand, the belief in vrykolakes was also strongly influenced by Slavic traditions.⁵⁸ To put an end to the state of vrykolakas, a priest had to perform a special rite, after which the body could decompose and the soul could find rest. One may thus infer that where a person became a vrykolakas, Archangel Michael or Charon had not ‘helped’ the soul to reach its destiny. Although almost all testimonies come from Post-Byzantine Greece, one can be certain that the belief in vrykolakes and the performance of a rite to undo this curse existed in Byzantium itself. The best proof for this argument is the fact that the Byzantine monk Scholarios/Gennadios, who immediately after the fall of ⁵³ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 49.

⁵⁴ Danforth, The death rituals, pp. 48- 49.

⁵⁵ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 53.

⁵⁶ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 53.

⁵⁷ Summers, M., The Vampire in Europe, London, 1996, pp. 218 ff & 228 – 229.

⁵⁸ Summers, The Vampire, p. 217.

Constantinople in 1453 to the Turks became Patriarch, himself, performed such a rite of passage.⁵⁹

In the New Testament, the Archangel Michael, fights and wins the battle with Lucifer over the body of Moses:

*“But even the Archangel Michael, when he was disputing with the devil about the body of Moses, did not dare to bring a slanderous accusation against him, but said, ‘The Lord rebuke you!’”*⁶⁰

One is tempted to compare the disputing which took place between the devil, Michael and Moses to the following fight Heracles had with Thanatos⁶¹: “... Herakles challenged Thanatos to a fight and rescued Alkestis’ soul just as it was being snatched away.”⁶²

In view of all the previous parallelisms, the question can be asked whether the ‘Heracles–Thanatos’ theme has had any impact on the Greek image of Michael.⁶³ We will come back to it at a later stage. Alexiou points out⁶⁴ that in Greek funeral laments, the time of the ‘struggle of the soul’ is a time of danger⁶⁵ as the appointed *daimon*⁶⁶ who looks after each person in his lifetime attempts to lead away his soul.

⁵⁹ Summers, The Vampire, pp. 227-228 – Original Greek source: Emanuel Malaxos, Historia Patriarcharum Constantinopolitanorum, whose lost testimony was preserved in later works (e.g. Crusius, Turco-Grecia (Basle, 1584) and C. Angelus, De statu hodiernorum Graecorum, (Lipsiae, 1676) – see Summers, p.277, note 35).

⁶⁰ New Testament, Jude 9.

⁶¹ Thanatos: “the Greek word for death (Thanatos) conveys the idea of separation”: Rhodes, R., Find It Quick, p. 23.

⁶² Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 5:

⁶³ Also, Alexiou The ritual lament, p. 26, points out that many popular dialogues between Charon and Man were written and that similar ideas have survived regardless of the changes of deity, Hades, Charon and God.

⁶⁴ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 5.

⁶⁵ 1 Cor 15:26: “The last enemy to be destroyed is death.” Also, Graham, 1976, p. 138: “Death is a battle, a profound crisis event and he refers to Paul who calls it ‘the last enemy...” In Rev 6:8 one reads the following: “I looked, and there before me was a pale horse! Its rider was named Death, and Hades was following close behind him.”

⁶⁶ Alexiou, The ritual lament, p. 26. Apart from the reason that angels and demons argue about the possession of the soul, there is also another reason for fearing death, being the belief that the dying man’s soul was weighed on the scale of justice. Hendrickx also comments that: “Die beeld van die marmer dorsvloer in die slot (r.21,23) bevestig die simboliek: op die dorsvloer word die kaf van die koring geskei (en dis Michael wat die siele weeg).”: Hendrickx, “Die dood van Digenis” p. 104. Compare also Hebrews 2:14-15: “...so that by his death he might destroy him who holds the power of death – that is, the devil – and free those who all their lives were held in slavery by their fear of death.”

comments that the angel appointed to guard a person at his baptism “ὁ ἄγγελος ὁ πρὸ τοῦ βαπτίσματος δοθεὶς αὐτῷ ἐς παραφυλακὴν”, is exactly parallel to Plato’s daimon to whom each man is allotted during his lifetime: “ὁ κῆστος δαίμων ὁ σπερζντα ἐλχεῖ”. This divine guarding created by the ritual of baptism, reassures the reconciliation of every man’s duality through repentance at his deathbed, leading thus his soul to its liberation from the hold of the evils. In the same way, the ritual of clay vessel breaking, which follows the wake, had as its aim the chasing away of evil spirits floating around to seize the souls.⁶⁷

The Second Coming will thus bring to a close the transition period as it reunites the body with the soul into the spiritual world. It is believed that Archangel Michael will accompany Christ at His Second Coming and will speak the word of life to all who are dead in Christ.⁶⁸ This view is based on the following verse in the New Testament:

*“For the Lord himself will come down from heaven, with a loud command, with the voice of the Archangel and with the trumpet call of God, and the dead in Christ will rise first.”*⁶⁹

Further, in the book of Daniel, God speaks of Michael as the great prince that protects and defends His people:

*“At that time Michael, the great prince who protects your people, will arise. There will be a time of distress such as has not happened from the beginning of nations until then. But at that time your people – everyone whose name is found written in the book – will be delivered. Multitudes who sleep in the dust of the earth will awake: some to everlasting life, others to shame and everlasting contempt. Those who are wise will shine like the brightness of the heavens, and those who lead many to righteousness, like the stars for ever and ever. But you, Daniel, close up and seal the words of the scroll until the time of the end. Many will go here and there to increase knowledge.”*⁷⁰

⁶⁷ Alexiou, The ritual lament, pp. 26-27.

⁶⁸ Graham, Angels: God’s, p. 56.

⁶⁹ 1 Th 4:16.

⁷⁰ Dn 12: 1-4.

The following diagram schematically represents the mystical belief of passage, purification and transformation:

* * * * *

In conclusion, the dogma of the Orthodox Church denies the ultimate power of death as it promises a complete transformation of the body from the material world into the spiritual world. Also, what takes place at the rite of exhumation is an imperfect resurrection – in other words, a partial victory over material death. Total victory over death will only be achieved at the resurrection of the dead at the Second Coming.⁷¹

⁷¹ Danforth, The death rituals, p. 69.

Chapter 6

The Aspects of Syncretism, Synthesis and Parallelism in Archangel Michael's icon status in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Society

In chapter two of this study we saw that the Byzantine society did not consist of a single people but of several ethnic groups who shared a more or less similar culture.¹ Chapter four and five briefly touched on the elements of mythological figures (i.e. Charon, Hades and Thanatos), that blended in with the Biblical and apocalyptic depiction of Archangel Michael. It is therefore important to include all material from the different cultures and religions (i.e. Ancient Greek, Roman Civilization, Judaism, Christianity, Islam) related to the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Periods as certain aspects of these have been absorbed into the religious traditions and beliefs of the Orthodox Byzantine society by means of syncretism and synthesis and thus contributed to the popularity of Michael.

The main focus will be on two different aspects of syncretism. Firstly, on the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox context and, secondly, on the role it played in the blending of pagan elements with the Biblical and Christian traditions and its influence on Michael's 'icon' status. To be able to understand syncretism, synthesis and parallelism with reference to the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Society we must first look at the definitions of these words.

1. Syncretism, synthesis and parallelism

Syncretism derived from the Greek Συνκρητισμός meaning “the developmental process of historical growth within a religion by accretion and coalescence of different and often orig. conflicting forms of belief and practise through the interaction with or supersession of other religions”.²

Syncretism attempts to merge different or sometimes contradictory beliefs or practices. Syncretism often occurs in music, literature, art, politics, religion and other cultural expressions and attempts to reconcile paradoxical beliefs but is also sometimes seen as a distortion of original beliefs, principles, practices or religions.³ Syncretism is thus the blending of different beliefs or practises in religion or the combination of different philosophical ideas/ stories/ symbols etc. with others. This also agrees with the anthropological definition of syncretism by Seymour-Smith: “a term usually applied to religious phenomena or movements, though it may be applied to cultural change in general.”⁴

¹ Yanagi, et al., Byzantium, p. 7.

² Webster's Third New International Dictionary, Vol III. S-Z. Encyclopaedia Britannica, Chicago a.o., 1981, p. 2319.

On synthesis and parallelism, Hendrickx explains that ‘synthesis’ refers to the “vorming van ‘n saamvattende geheel uit dele of onderdele, op verbinding dus en saamvoeging”,⁵ while he points to an evolution of equal value, development or succession of elements or happenings in two different situations.⁶

To fully appreciate syncretism in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine context, a close look at religious syncretism as much as cultural syncretism is required. Also, many scholars prefer to restrict ‘syncretism’ to religious interactions.⁷ It is stated that religious syncretism occurs (consciously or not) when a less powerful group of people encounters the religion of a more powerful group. The result is “adaption and self-preservation among the weaker group”.⁸ Religious syncretism joins two or more religious belief systems into a new system, or it is the absorption of beliefs from diverse traditions into a religious tradition.⁹ Seymour-Smith explains that the term is mainly used to refer to situations of cultural contact. This contact produces religious systems which consist of a mixture of Christian and native beliefs¹⁰ and fits the definition which Keesing offers to describes religious syncretism: “The synthesis of old and borrowed elements – syncretism – has been most striking in the realm of religion, where Christianity has been spread to ³ <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism> - www.yourdictionary.com/syncretism 2007/11/15 - Van Rheen, G., “Worldview and Syncretism”, <http://missiology.org/mongolianlectures/worldviewandsyncretism.htm>.

⁴ Seymour-Smith, Macmillan Dictionary, p. 274.

⁵ Hendrickx, Geskiedenis van die Romeins, p. 269.

⁶ Hendrickx, Geskiedenis van die Romeins, p. 269.

⁷ Lindenfield, D. Syncretism www.historycooperative.org/journals/whc/4.1/lindenfeld.html 2007/11/15.

⁸ Lindenfield, Syncretism, www.historycooperative.org/journals/whc/4.1/lindenfeld.html.

⁹ Anonymous, “Syncretism”, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism> 2007/11/15.

¹⁰ Seymour-Smith, Macmillan Dictionary, p. 274.

every continent.” On synthesis Keesing adds that *“in religion, new belief and traditional ones are blended or coexist...”*¹¹

Supporters of belief systems that demonstrate an exclusivist approach in religious systems, sometimes see syncretism as a betrayal of their pure truth as it corrupts the original religion. Also, critics of a specific syncretistic trend may use the term ‘syncretism’ as a ‘disapproving label’ – implying that those who wish to integrate a new view, belief, or practice into a religious system actually bend the original faith. On the other hand, non-exclusivist supporters may incorporate other traditions into their own or sometimes create new religions to reduce inter-religious tension and antagonism. The resultant effect is often the offending of the original religions in question. These religions, on the other hand, preserve some appeal to a less exclusivist spectator.¹²

Finally, Van Rheenen describes that “religious syncretism occurs when churches are not equipped to become the nurturing communities”.¹³

She argues that a transplanted church will almost at all times be a replica of the church in the sending culture in contrast to a contextualised church. A transplanted church will transfer the original culture/religion to the new culture/religion where it will reproduce exactly as it did. In contrast, a contextualised church *“is like planting ‘God’s seed’ in new soil and allowing the seed to grow naturally adapting to the language, thought processes, and rituals of the new culture without losing its eternal meanings.”*¹⁴

Hence, the conclusion is that in Byzantium, the church in Constantinople became a contextualised church and not a transplanted church (Rome was first the nurturing capital to the capital of Byzantium but was later replaced by Constantinople). In this connexion it is worthwhile mentioning that “by being largely freed from the incubus of the Roman state and of the closely associated cultural heritage of Greece and Rome, the kind of ¹¹ Keesing, Cultural Anthropology, pp. 394 & 395.

¹² Lindenfield, D. “Syncretism” www.historycooperative.org/journals/whc/4.1/lindenfield.html.

¹³ Van Rheenen, G. “Worldview and Syncretism”

<http://missiology.org/mongolianlectures/worldviewandsyncretism.htm>, 2007/11/15.

¹⁴ Van Rheenen, “Worldview and Syncretism”.

power which was of the essence of the Gospel was given freer course than it had been accorded under the professedly Christian Emperors."¹⁵

2. Syncretism, Synthesis and Parallelism in the Hellenistic, Roman and Judaic World

To be able to appreciate the above terms in their Orthodox and Byzantine and Post-Byzantine context, we should consider them first in their Hellenistic – Roman- and Judaic contexts. Syncretism and synthesis functioned as an essential feature of Ancient Greek religion, especially during Alexander the Great's reign. Elements within the Hellenistic rule blended in with Persian, Anatolian, Egyptian and Etruscan-Roman elements.¹⁶

Hendrickx says that syncretism in the Hellenistic context refers often to the religious coalescence and to the identification of gods and religious content by association to the ancient world. On synthesis, he adds "in die Hellenistiese konteks gebruik ons die term met hierdie selfde betekenis: 'n saamvoeging of saamvattende verbinding van verskillende dele op kulturele, wetenskaplike, godsdienstige, en artistieke gebied."¹⁷

On the influences that Judaism and Hellenism had on Christianity, Latourette¹⁸ explains that "the course of events made it clear that Christianity was not to lose its distinctive message by absorption into the parent Judaism when the faith was confronted with an even greater menace." He cautions that the danger here was that as the Gospel moved out into the non-Jewish world it was at risk of losing its pure original faith. He furthermore writes that "The threat was especially acute from Hellenism and the atmosphere of the Hellenistic world, for, as we have seen, it was in the portions of the population of the Empire where Hellenistic influences were especially strong that Christianity had its first major spread." Latourette also explains that the confidence in Greek philosophy was a threat and describes it as "the incorporation of some of the attitudes of the Hellenistic mind". He then adds that Platonism and Neo-Platonism moulded the thinking and approach of Christian converts from a Hellenistic milieu which often came with and continued in their thought, performance and worship.

¹⁵ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 257.

¹⁶ Anonymous, "Syncretism", <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism>.

¹⁷ Hendrickx, Geskiedenis van die Romeins, p. 269.

¹⁸ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 122.

Hendrickx describes parallelism in the Hellenistic period as follows:

*“Inderdaad het hierdie Hellenistiese periode op verskillende plekke gelykwaardige problem voortgebring, en die mense, bewoë deur ‘n uniforme of algemeen ooreenkomstige tydsgees, het dikwels “ewewydige” oplossings uitgewerk vir “gelykwaardige” probleme, of “ewewydige” simptome geopenbaar in “gelykwaardige” situasies: militêr, politiek, ekonomies, religieus, ens.”*¹⁹

Without copying the cult practises, the Romans incorporated the Olympian deities with similar images in the Etruscan-Roman tradition. Greek gods which were introduced to the Roman Civilization were Zeus (Jupiter), Artemis (Diane) and Dionysus (Bacchus), just to name a few. Examples of syncretic gods of the Hellenistic epoch and of the East Mediterranean are Serapis, Isis, Mithras and Cybele.²⁰

The Roman civilization had an open-minded attitude towards all religions. The historian Gibbon says that the *“various modi of worship which prevailed in the Roman world were all considered by the people equally useful.”*²¹ Indeed, Emperor Alexander Severus added a statue of Jesus to his private collection of numerous pagan gods.²²

To understand the beginnings of Christianity and the nature and characteristics of its faith, one needs to also examine the features of Judaism. Judaism, which is one of the sources of Christian Orthodoxy, fought on the one hand against syncretistic inclinations²³ (e.g. the Ten Commandments, the golden calf, the railing of prophets against temple prostitution, witchcraft and local fertility cults); whilst on the other hand, other scholars believed that Judaism developed its concept of monotheism and took on characteristics such as eschatology, angelology and demonology through contacts with Zoroastrianism.²⁴

¹⁹ Hendrickx, Geskiedenis van die Romeins, p. 269.

²⁰ Anonymous, “Syncretism”, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism>.

²¹ Cassels, L. 1965 “What’s the Difference? A Comparison of the Faiths Men Live By”

<http://www.religion-online.org/showchapter.asp?title=1623&C=1572>.

²² Cassels, L. 1965 1965 “What’s the Difference? A Comparison of the Faiths Men Live By”

<http://www.religion-online.org/showchapter.asp?title=1623&C=1572>.

²³ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 11.

²⁴ Zoroastrianism is a religion based on the philosophy credited to the prophet Zoroaster, which was long official in Persia. See Latourette, 1975, pp. 4, 7 and Boyce, M., “Zoroastrianism: A Shadowy but Powerful Presence in the Judeo – Christian World”, London, 1987, “<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Zoroastrianism>”.

They regarded their god, Yahweh, as the God of the universe, the maker and ruler of the universe. In spite of the Jewish veto on polytheism and idolatry, quite a few blends of Judaism with other religions have taken place.²⁵

It is said that much of the late Midrash detail about Archangel Michael was conveyed to Christian mythology through the book of Enoch and was hence further elaborated. In spite of the rabbinical prohibition against appealing to angels to act as intermediaries between God and His people, Michael occupied a certain place in Jewish liturgy.²⁶ In Rabbinic Jewish tradition for example, Michael is the advocate of Israel, fighting with the princes of other nations and with the angel Samael, Israel's accuser. There were two prayers written pleading with Michael to intervene in favour of Israel as he was the prince of mercy.²⁷

Also, many modern commentators believe that all the specific names for the angels were brought back by the Jews from Babylon and that Michael is one of the principal angels in Abrahamic tradition.²⁸ Reference is made to Rabbi Simeon Ben Lakish (AD 230-270) who states that all the names for the angels were brought back from Babylon.²⁹ Then there is a legend, which seems to be of Jewish origin and adopted by the Copts, which has it that Michael was first sent by God to bring Nebuchadnezzar against Jerusalem, and later freed his nation from Babylonian captivity. It is also believed that the legend of Michael's fight with angel Samael, gave rise to the legend of Michael fighting the dragon³⁰ (Satan) as described in the book of Revelations.³¹ This legend is not found in Jewish sources but reference is made in the Kabbalah of Samael being called "the primitive serpent".³²

²⁵ Anonymous, "Syncretism", <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism>.

²⁶ Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)).

²⁷ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

²⁸ <http://angelstoday.net/index.php?lang=en&way=2archagels/1michael> 2007/11/13.

²⁹ Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)).

³⁰ Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\))

³¹ Rv. 12:7.

³² Anonymous, "Michael (archangel)", http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)).

3. Syncretism, Synthesis and Parallelism in Orthodox Byzantium

As understood, religious syncretism usually occurs in areas where various religious traditions exist in closeness and function actively in the culture. Therefore, syncretism of Christian beliefs and practices through cultural accommodation was the outcome of diverse dominant cultures in Byzantium. As a result, emerging Christianity appeared to have incorporated many Jewish, Hellenistic and pagan cultural elements.³³

Alexiou points out that the change in the position of the Orthodox Church was perhaps one factor in the process of assimilation. She also states that the transition from paganism in late antiquity to Christianity in early Byzantium was a slow process. Byzantium's official policy towards paganism was cautious and tolerant resulting in many pagan elements and ancient superstitions being absorbed into the Christian faith.³⁴

On pagan mystery cults Campbell writes: *“and not only the mythic motifs but even the festival dates of the contemporary pagan mystery cults were openly adopted by the Christian Fathers.”*³⁵

He furthermore states that *“we learn from the fourth-century saint and churchman Epiphanius (ca.315-402), for example, of an annual festival observed in Alexandria on January 6, the date assigned to the Epiphany and (originally) the Nativity of Christ, and to this Baptism as well. The pagan occasion was in celebration of the birth of the year-god Aion to the virgin goddess Kore, a Hellenized transformation of Isis.”*³⁶

4. Syncretism, Synthesis and Parallelism in Islam (Post-Byzantium)

As a result of the Arab Invasion, in the seventh century, a part of the Byzantine world came under Islamic rule. I therefore, found it necessary to also include information on Archangel Michael that relate to Islam and the Byzantine Society.³⁷

³³ Anonymous, “Syncretism”, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism>.

³⁴ Margaret Alexiou, The ritual lament in Greek tradition, Cambridge, 1974, p. 24.

³⁵ Campbell, J., The Mythic Image, Princeton University Press, New Jersey, 1974, p. 34.

³⁶ Campbell, The Mythic Image, p. 34.

³⁷ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 284.

The Empire had hoped, in vain, to set up a common Christian front against the invasion. An attempt was thus made to bring Orthodox and Monophysites together, but this brought another wave of controversy.³⁸ Hussey comments that *“Islam borrowed freely from the way of life found in conquered Byzantine provinces, or from the resources of Greek scholarship which lay at its doors. And the Byzantines did likewise. One particularly noticeable instance of this cross-fertilization is found in Byzantine monasticism and in its Vitae sanctorum. Non-Hellenic elements were frequently introduced into Byzantine hagiology and hagiography, and there was constant interchange of ideas owing to factors such as polyglot monastic centres, oriental colonies within the Christian world...”*³⁹

Islam, on the other hand, claimed to be the rejuvenation of original teaching of monotheism.⁴⁰ On syncretism, Muslims do not regard the incorporation of many beliefs from other religions such as Judaism and Christianity as syncretic, but rather as disclosure of divine revelations through the Prophet Muhammad that Allah began with other prophets and all those from the descendants of Abraham. However, it is said that these revelations in time became corrupted due to the lack of written manuscripts or ongoing translations from one language to another.⁴¹

5. Syncretism, Synthesis and Parallelism in Orthodox Greek Rituals

Concerning the death-related practices in ancient Greece, Danforth states that “the traditional beliefs held by Greek villagers concerning the soul and the afterlife are an interesting syncretism of Orthodox Christian teachings and various popular beliefs that are remarkable similar to those known to have existed in ancient Greece”.⁴² Hendrickx also confirms that many other traditional and popular beliefs of the Orthodox Christian teachings, relating to the afterlife, had parallelisms with Greece.⁴³

According to Alexiou, many customs and beliefs changed little since antiquity. Also in the countryside of Greece, reference is made to pagan ritual which is found in various ³⁸ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 284.

³⁹ Hussey, The Byzantine World, p. 166.

⁴⁰ Quran 3:3-3:4 see also Anonymous, “Syncretism”, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism>.

⁴¹ Anonymous, “Syncretism”, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism>.

⁴² Danforth, The Death Rituals, p. 45.

⁴³ Hendrickx, “Die dood van Digenis”, pp. 99-106.

sources from the seventh to the twelfth centuries. From the homilies of the Christian fathers, works of Emperor Konstantinos Porphyrogennetos and handbook of Symeon, Archbishop of Thessaloniki, it is understood that the correct observation of funeral ritual was a matter of concern throughout the Byzantine period. Alexiou cautions us that as the evidence for survival of the ritual lament mainly comes from homilies, chronicles and commentaries and are mentioned only with disapproval, it cannot be taken as a true reflection of popular tradition.⁴⁴ She also states that there is a discrepancy between the official attitudes of the early fathers of the Church and of those practised by the village priests today who display certain pagan elements in these practises.⁴⁵

Alexiou argues that paganism is no longer a threat nor regarded as a powerful force to the Church as the two practises are coalesced and the Church consents to what it once condemned. Pagan customs function in unison with Orthodox Christianity.⁴⁶ Moreover, she points out that there is continuity in the general pattern of the ritual in detail, practices and terminology of Greek tradition. Relating to the ancient and Byzantine material, also, Alexiou explains that some practises in Modern Greek tradition can be regarded as parallel to the ancient ritual, though not recorded in Byzantine tradition.⁴⁷

Hendrickx, on the other hand, writes that the archives of the Ancient as well as the Hellenistic and Byzantine East were lost or misplaced. Ancient epigraphic documents may be found anywhere in Europe but not at the place of their origin. The preserved documents constitute a small minority only, and are restricted in their use by virtue of their analytical, direct, fragmentary and often propagandistic character.⁴⁸ This finding makes it difficult to trace back the factual origin of certain cultural survivals regarding death rituals.

⁴⁴ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 25.

⁴⁵ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 49.

⁴⁶ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 49.

⁴⁷ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 49.

⁴⁸ Hendrickx, Geskiedenis van Romeinse, p. 48. Hendrickx furthermore says that the Ancient and Byzantine archives and/or documents are haphazardly published in any possible (or impossible) magazine or publication and often remain inaccessible or unknown. In the past the classicist – and Byzantinist – were more literate, philological than socio-historically orientated and therefore over attention was given to the authors and thus epigraphical and papirological documents received less attention. The study of the mentioned became a speciality on its own and is not necessarily part of the scientific equipment of the classicist – historian.

6. The role of Syncretism, Synthesis and Parallelism in the blending of pagan elements

There was a common interest in the relationship humans had with the supernatural in ancient Greek religion, Judaism, Islam and Christianity. This common interest is still prevalent today. This relationship is thought to engage divine messengers (angels) sent to man to inform, instruct or command him. In Greek mythology for example, Hermes, the son of Zeus, was the herald of the Olympian gods. He conducted the souls of the dead to the underworld.⁴⁹ It was believed that the souls of the deceased were led to the gates of Hades⁵⁰ by Hermes. Hermes had a winged hat and sandals, bore a caduceus, entwined with snakes, overpowered by wings. He was known as the ‘psycho-pomp’ (soul –guide) and his staff acquired wings (above the serpents), becoming the caduceus or winged staff of Mercury, and the god himself became the ‘flying man’ with his winged hat and sandals.⁵¹ Once at the gates of Hades, Charon, the ferryman of the dead, took the souls with his boat across the River Acheron from the living world to the Underworld. In Greek, Charon means ‘causer of joy’.⁵²

In Greek folklore, it is believed that Michael assumed Hermes’ role as the psycho-pomp who leads the souls to Hades.⁵³ It is also believed that Michael performs the role of weighing of the souls on Judgement day. However, Alexiou points out that during the twelfth century, Eustathios of Thessaloniki referred to the phrase εἰς τὴν Αἰδου κέσθαι ζυγῶν (to lie on Hades’ scales) and again, three centuries later, in one of the popular dialogues between man and Charon: In my hand I hold the scales of Mercy,

*To weigh out what you’ve done...*⁵⁴

⁴⁹ Servi, K., Greek Mythology, Athens, 2001, pp. 44 & 45.

⁵⁰ On the gates of Hades see Lindsay, G., Life after Death or Where are the dead? Texas, 1956: Hades is the Greek word for the Hebrew word ‘Sheol’, both mean ‘the abode of the dead.’

⁵¹ Examples of combined symbols are the winged horse and the winged dragon which unite the transcendent symbol of the snake and the bird. The horned serpent appears in 16th century Latin alchemy as the quadricornutus serpents (four-horned serpent), a symbol of Hermes: see Henderson, J., “Ancient myths and modern man’ pp. 154 & 155 – Harris & Platzner, Classical Mythology, pp. 119 & 122.

⁵² Servi, Katerina, Greek Mythology, 2001, Ekthotike Athenon, pp. 44 & 45.

⁵³ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁵⁴ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 26:

“Ζῆτι κρατῶ στο χῶρι μου ελεημοσῶνης γιῶ να ζῶάσω τα ’καμες

Alexiou adds that the idea of the weighing of the dying man's soul has survived in spite of the changes of deity, Hades, Charon and God. It is incorporated into the funeral service of the Orthodox Church: *"Have mercy on me, all-holy angels... for I have no good deed to balance the burden of my evil ones."*⁵⁵

Orthodox mortals honoured Michael as the guardian of Paradise and collector of souls as he took the role of the angel of death, i.e. the angel who brought the souls of dying people into the supernatural world.⁵⁶ In the Epistle of Jude,⁵⁷ Michael argues with Satan over the dead body of Moses: *"But even the Archangel Michael, when he was disputing with the devil about the body of Moses..."*⁵⁸ As such Michael was represented as a hero warrior who fought for the possession of the soul, or as a rather good personage who supported and comforted the dying.⁵⁹

Alexiou points out that great importance is attached to the way the soul leaves the body. An agonised death, for example, is seen as struggle with Charon (also known as χαροπάλεμα) or a premature lament which was risky as it was believed that it scared away the angels and spirits which had to escort the soul, leaving it to the mercies of Charon. This is called ἄγγελόκομμα (angel-cutting) *"a belief not unlike those described by the Church fathers, except that it is Charon and not the devil that seizes the soul."*⁶⁰

She furthermore says that the fight with death is described as being literal: a dying man may call out that he can see Charon approaching him, armed with a sword, dressed in black, sometimes winged, like the image of ancient Hades.⁶¹ In the following ballad a young man faces Thanatos; the fight between them is described as a heroic act as it reflects the expressions for the last struggle of survival of the soul:

*"– Young man, God has sent me to take your soul.
– Without force or sickness, I will not give up my soul.
Come, and let us wrestle on the marble threshing floor.*

⁵⁵ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 26.

⁵⁶ Hendrickx, "Agathias se epigramme oor 'ikone'," – Danforth, The Death Rituals, p. 45.

⁵⁷ Jude 9.

⁵⁸ Jude 9.

⁵⁹ Danforth, The Death Rituals, pp. 45 & 46.

⁶⁰ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 38.

⁶¹ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, pp. 37 & 38.

*And if you win, Charondas, you can take my soul, and if it is I who win, you must go and leave me.”*⁶²

And also “my soul is fighting, struggling, I tremble and go out, I wrestle with Charon, I tremble at, fight with, the angel.”⁶³ Hendrickx states that Digenis was not slain by an earthly enemy but confronted by the supernatural Charon. This offered two advantages:

- i) it gives the narrator/poet the opportunity to allow Digenis to die in a tragic dual with an unconquerable hero, and
- ii) Digenis completes his quest on a metaphysical level.⁶⁴

But not all believe that Michael assumed Charon’s role as the psycho-pomp who leads the souls to Hades. There is some controversy about the role Michael took concerning the souls. Danforth states that various traditional beliefs concerning death held by Greek villagers are a form of syncretism of Orthodox Christian teachings and beliefs which are similar to those in ancient Greece. They believe that it is Charon who takes the soul of the dying person:

*“when the soul leaves the body at death it is said to have ‘set out on the road to God’ (kinise ya to dhromo tou theou). It has been taken away by Haros, a personification of death, who is either identified with the Angel of the Lord (Angelos Kiriou), the Archangel Michael, or is believed to be a subordinate of the Archangel and a messenger of God.”*⁶⁵

According to Alexiou, the ancient figure of Hades has disappeared and his successor is not God or Archangel Michael but Charon. Charon is responsible for escorting the dead to the Underworld. This place is known as Hades and is more similar to its ancient concept than its Christian idea of hell.⁶⁶

⁶² Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 38. Also, in another funeral lament from Tsakonia, a dying girl sees Charon approach and begs her mother to hide her in a cage, in a chest, among the basil and balsam plants; but her mother replies sternly that she will give her over to Charon: p. 122.

⁶³ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 38.

⁶⁴ Hendrickx, “Die dood van Digenis”, pp. 99 – 106.

⁶⁵ Danforth, The Death Rituals, p. 45.

⁶⁶ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 49.

However, many Christians accept that it is Michael who takes up the role of Charon. It is believed that this idea is common among Christians and is not found in Jewish sources although his role of being in charge of the souls appears in many Jewish writings. This is evident in the type of offerings which Michael brings to the altar. These offerings are sometimes believed to be the souls of the just and have become widespread in Jewish mystical writings which also explain the important position which Michael occupies in Jewish eschatology.⁶⁷

In the book of Revelation,⁶⁸ parallelisms of the end of Hades and Death (Thanatos) are found: *“The sea gave up the dead that were in it, and death and Hades gave up the dead that were in them, and each person was judged according to what he had done. Then death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. The lake of fire is the second death. If anyone’s name was not found written in the book of life, he was thrown into the lake of fire.”*⁶⁹

In the following verse, reference is made to Christ who conquers Hades and Death (Thanatos): *“... Do not be afraid. I am the First and the Last. I am the Living One; I was dead, and behold I am alive for ever and ever! And I hold the keys of death and Hades.”*⁷⁰

We accept Alexiou’s findings that Charon occasionally finds his way to Paradise, assuming the role of Saint Peter as keeper of the gate. It is also clear that some aspects of pagan ritual received official recognition; Charon has survived because he is the servant of God. Mourners address their prayers to him to release the dead from their graves on the Christian festivals as recorded in the following folk song:⁷¹

*“I will go down to Hades and to Paradise,
To find Charos and say a few words to him.”*⁷²

In the earlier ballad of the young man’s fight with death, Charon states that he was sent by God: *“Young man, God has sent me to take your soul...”*⁷³

⁶⁷ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁶⁸ Rv 20: 13-15.

⁶⁹ Rv 20: 13-15.

⁷⁰ Rv 1: 17-18. Also compare Lindsay, G., Life After Death, Texas, 1956, pp. 48-51.

⁷¹ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, pp. 49 & 50.

⁷² Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 50.

Also, Hendrickx states that the ‘Death of Digenis’ is a psychomachia, as it is a fight for Digenis’s soul and the possible identification of Charon to Archangel Michael is therefore important. Charon portrays a tragic, negative and horrible figure who brings the souls to the underworld and who shares death and sorrow. Michael is the commander of God’s army and although he calls upon the souls – these conquered souls are brought to an immortal, celestial army of God. “Die oorwinning van Charon-Michael op Digenis bring dus weliswaar die fisiese dood van Digenis mee, maar hy word opgeneem onder die onsterflike hemelse wagters.”⁷⁴

* * * * *

Thus, we may conclude that the Christian ‘promise of paradise’ altered the negative images of mythological figures such as Thanatos, Hades and Charon into (a) positive figure(s) which is either Charon, Archangel Michael or Christ Himself, capable of bridging earthly life with the eternal one.

⁷³ Alexiou, The Ritual Lament, p. 38.

⁷⁴ Hendrickx, “Die dood van Digenis”, pp. 99 – 106.

Chapter 7

Michael's Byzantine and Post-Byzantine iconographic identity as understood and/or revealed in the interpretation of 'icon' in its contemporary meaning

Firstly, one needs to examine to what extent the correlation between the meanings of 'icon' in the Byzantine, Post-Byzantine and today's context may be compared. In order to do this comparative approach, a few famous contemporary 'icons' will be selected and the characteristics found in these 'iconic' figures will be analysed; then similar patterns found in each case will be highlighted and compared to those found in Michael's Byzantine and Post-Byzantine icon. Lastly, the way Michael is represented in a modern-day society will be looked at.

1. What elevates an ordinary person to the status of an 'icon'?

At first, the term icon was only used for an image of a spiritual being or a sacred person. As indicated in chapter one, an icon has a modern-day meaning of "someone greatly admired", often seen as a perfect example, an "idealised role model".¹

Another description of a modern-day 'icon' is "...a larger-than-life image, inherent glamour and eventual flamboyance, strength through adversity..."² Then there are also 'Patron Saints' who "are chosen as special protectors or guardians over areas of life" and "are often chosen today because an interest, talent, or event in their lives overlaps with the special area."³

Indeed, when a person is greatly admired in society(s), that person is adored and even elevated to a messianic role or religious icon to which many look up to with high regard and respect. In the following three cases, it is clear that only a particular section of the society in which they functioned, elevated these ordinary people to the status of 'icon' in modern society.

¹ Collins, Today's English Dictionary, p. 388; see also Eco, U., On Beauty, pp. 418 – 430.

² "Modern examples: in sports", "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gay icon", 2007/12/13.

³ Anonymous, "Patron Saints", "<http://www.catholic.org/saints/patron.php>" 2007/11/16.

2. The example of David Beckham as a ‘modern icon’

David Beckham is seen as an icon in the field of international soccer. Brick is of the opinion that David Beckham was a “post-modern ersatz religious icon” who has been elevated to a messianic role by the public. He further states that the public seeks meaning “in an apparently meaningless world disillusioned with traditional social markers once provided by politics, royalty and religion”; Beckham was thus a “modern Christ” figure. “What happens is that society seeks to elevate particular figures, like Beckham, whom we can then read values into and say, look, this is how we should behave. It’s an ersatz spirituality. We want to believe that what we invest in David Beckham will see us through things in our lives.”⁴

Jardine gave his personal view of Beckham as the “21st century equivalent of King Arthur” and adds: “For many people around the world Beckham today represents the contemporary equivalent of what Arthur and his knights have traditionally stood for as the dominant male heroic ideal, the virile male body pushed to extremes, bringing fame and adulation, held up as the prime example of the best a man can do.”⁵

Another source describes David Beckham as a ‘gay icon’: “in Beckham’s case, it is his combination of athletic prowess, good looks and flamboyant private life”.⁶

3. The example of Coretta Scott King as a ‘modern icon’

Others achieved iconic status for devoting their lives to the eradication of social injustice and the restoration of human dignity. Coretta Scott King, widow of Dr Martin Luther King Jr. was such a person. At an early age she was exposed to the injustices of life in a racially segregated society. These occurrences led her to strive for equality and pursue the cause of justice for all. She attained iconic status for the role she played in the fight for the civil liberties of black Americans, equality for all, freedom from racism, exploitation, oppression and discrimination not only in the United States but throughout the world. She was referred to as “an icon for justice” and “an icon to whom many looked up with deep ⁴ Sunday Times “Christ-like meaning found in Beckham”, p. 5, September 18, 2005.

⁵ Sunday Times “Christ-like meaning”, p. 5.

⁶ “Modern examples: in sports”, "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gay icon".

reverence and respect.”⁷ Also, a “warrior figure pushing aside male-dominated leadership to perpetuate Dr King’s legacy...” as well as “Coretta behaved with the dignity of royalty, a quality also misunderstood.” She was seen as “a woman of substance, a partner in ‘the dream,’ a freedom fighter in her own right who helped institutionalise the memory of Dr King for all people for generations to come.”⁸

4. The example of Ernesto ‘Che’ Guevara as a ‘modern icon’

Argentine born, Ernesto ‘Che’ Guevara, known as the “poster boy of Marxist revolution,”⁹ is regarded today as a global icon. Che became a symbol of revolutionary zeal. After travelling throughout Latin America, he concluded that armed revolution was the only solution to the continent’s cruel social inequities.¹⁰ He was a celebrated guerrilla fighter who helped Fidel Castro seize power in Cuba.¹¹ Che Guevara is described as “a symbol of a time when people died heroically for what they believed in” and whose “iconic status was assured because he failed”.¹²

Campbell says that the cult of Che is thriving today, as he was recently voted as ‘Argentina’s greatest historical figure’.¹³ Che was later described by Campbell and other authors as “the most complete man of his epoch”. He has become ever more fashionable and his bearded visage is an icon which is seen on many facets of media such as T-shirts, clocks, wall art, tattoos and even bikinis. He is furthermore described as a ‘Romantic hero’¹⁴ to legions of fans throughout the world¹⁵ – “to endure as a romantic icon, one must not just die young, but die hopelessly.”¹⁶

⁷ The Star, 31 January, 2006.

⁸ The Star, 8 February, 2006.

⁹ “Icons”, Sunday Times: Lifestyle, 23 September, 2007, p. 9.

¹⁰ <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Che>.

¹¹ “Icons”, Sunday Times, Lifestyle, 23 September, 2007, p. 9.

¹² O’ Hagan, S. Just a Pretty Face? The Observer, 11 July, 2004 – <http://observer.guardian.co.uk/review/story> 2007/11/19.

¹³ “Icons”, Sunday Times, Lifestyle, 23 September, 2007, p. 9.

¹⁴ “Icons”, Sunday Times, Lifestyle, 23 September, 2007, p. 9. <http://observer.guardian.co.uk/review/story> – see also Henderson, “Ancient myths”, p. 73: “The hero figure is an archetype, which has existed since time immemorial” & p. 123: “The myth of the typical hero – his capacity to save or protect beautiful women from terrible danger. (The damsel in distress was a favorite myth of medieval Europe.)”.

¹⁵ “Icons”, Sunday Times, Lifestyle, 23 September, 2007, p. 9. <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Che> 13/12/2007.

¹⁶ <http://observer.guardian.co.uk/review/story>.

According to Machover,¹⁷ the attribution around Che which made him a global icon, was a French creation which became international with time. He says that French intellectuals fell under the charm of the only ‘comandante’ who could speak their language.¹⁸ There is another possibility of how he became an international icon. Usborne believes that Che’s attribution possibly gave him iconic status because of the picture taken by Alberto Korda.

This picture is said to be the most reproduced image of all time; it was taken up as a symbol of leftist rebellion - a symbol of protesting students in 1968 and later adopted by subsequent generations.²⁰ Che was later executed, his face was washed, hair and beard tidied, and then his corpse was photographed. To his enemies' dismay, the image that was circulated throughout the world recalled countless Renaissance paintings of the dead Christ taken down from the cross- and so Che attained iconic status for the second time. The ‘Christ-like’ image prevailed. In death, he was frozen forever; had he lived, the myth of Che would have long since died.²¹

¹⁷ Machover was a Cuban exiled in France since 1963 as well as the author of The Hidden Face of Che: Sunday Times Lifestyle, 23 Sept, 2007, “Icons”, p. 9.

¹⁸ “Intellectuals such as Debray who became an acolyte of Guevara and professor of philosophy at Havana’s university in the 60’s”: “Icons”, Sunday Times, Lifestyle, 23 September, 2007, p. 9.

¹⁹ "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Che_Guevara_in_popular_culture".

²⁰ Usborne, D. “Who was Che Guevara, and does he deserve his iconic status?” The Independent, 6 June, 2006 http://findarticles.com/p/articles/mi_qn4158/is_20060606/ai_n16453878.

²¹ O’ Hagan, S. “Just a Pretty Face?” "http://observer.guardian.co.uk/review/story", 2007/11/19.

5. Characteristics and/or functions of today's icons

In all three mentioned cases it is understood that only a part of society, and not all, elevated these figures to 'iconic' status and for that reason society has an icon for nearly everything – an icon for acting such as Charlize Theron,²² an icon for soccer such as David Beckham,²³ an icon for reggae such as Lucky Dube.²⁴

6. Comparison of characteristics and functions of the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox Michael to modern-day icons

In our examples, David Beckham, though a global brand, is seen as an icon by the soccer fraternity; Coretta Scott King, though admired globally, was elevated to iconic status by Black Americans; and Ernesto 'Che' Guevara, though regarded as a most enduring global icon, achieved cult status as an 'icon of revolution' and emerged as a 'sacred' figure. He was a political figure but was extensively used in pop art and that kept his legacy even after his death.

In considering the question, 'what elevates an ordinary person to an iconic status in modern society?' one has to start by conceding that a definite transformation took place. These icons differ 'enormously' in detail, but the more closely one examines them the more one sees similar patterns, even though they were developed by groups without any direct cultural contact. In mythology, romantic heroes often fight dragons or monsters, to rescue 'maidens in danger'. Examples are found in Greek mythology – when Perseus fought the dragon to rescue Andromeda and Theseus who slew the Minotaur and rescued Ariadne. Then there is also the case of St. George who is portrayed in a similar role of the typical romantic hero; St. George is represented in Byzantine and Post-Byzantine icons fighting the dragon and rescuing the beautiful maiden from terrible danger.²⁵

In late medieval Christianity, Saint Michael, as well as Saint George, became the patron of chivalry, and the patron of the first chivalric order of France which is known as the ²² The Star, "News", September 22, 2005, p. 10.

²³ Sunday Times "Christ-like", p. 5.

²⁴ Ntuli, D., "Rastas never die...", "News and Opinion", Sunday Times, 21 October, 2007 - "News and Opinion", Sunday Times, 10 October, 2007.

²⁵ Servi, Greek Mythology, – Harris & Platzner, Classical Mythology – Campbell, The Mythic Image – Henderson, "Ancient myths", pp. 104 - 157.

Order of Saint Michael of 1469. Many Christians associate Michael with the patron saint of the warrior, police officers, soldiers and paratroopers.²⁶ Saint Michael's association with Saint George as patrons proves to be significant as these two 'romantic' heroes had something in common: They both had to slay the dragon (Satan) to liberate a maiden. The heroic rescue remains the same; St. George killed the dragon to free a maiden in a physical sense and St. Michael killed the dragon to free a maiden in a symbolic sense. This symbolic form of the maiden refers to God's chosen people known also as "the bride of Christ"²⁷ as well as "the wife of the Lamb"²⁸ or "a pure virgin"²⁹ or "a chosen people".³⁰ Latourette confirms that Paul spoke of the body of Christ as being the Church of Christ, "The Epistle to the Ephesians states that Christ is the head of the Church and dreams of the Church as ultimately being without spot, wrinkle, or blemish. The Christian fellowship, so the New Testament held, was to be a new Israel, a chosen people, but it was to be drawn from all mankind. In Christ both Jews and Gentiles were to be members of 'the household of God,' growing into 'an holy temple.' Not only was the Church to embrace both Jews and Gentiles, but in it there was also to be no distinction on the basis of race, nation, cultural status, servitude, freedom, or sex."³¹

Guevara was, as seen in the case study, a romantic role model, insofar as he behaved and acted within the framework of the 'revolutionary spirit' that he represented. Guevara also fought a dragon (symbolically, the dragon of capitalism) to liberate the 'maiden' (symbolically the oppressed) and died for his beliefs. (During his travel, Guevara, came across the poverty and suffering of the lower classes of society while the rich lived ignorantly in their high life-styles away from problems.)³²

Regarding the 'hero-image' Henderson believes that the pattern of the hero has a psychological meaning not only for the individual, who endeavours to discover and assert his personality, but also for the whole society which has an equal need to establish its ²⁶ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

²⁷ Eph 5:25-32.

²⁸ Rv 21:9-10.

²⁹ 2 Co 11:2.

³⁰ 1 Pt 2:9.

³¹ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p.114 – Mt 18:17 and 2 Co 1:1.

³² D:\The Motorcycle Diaries (film) - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia.htm.

collective identity.³³ He adds that “the battle between the hero and the dragon is the more active form of this myth, and it shows more clearly the archetypal theme of the ego’s triumph over regressive trends. For most people the dark or negative side of the personality remains unconscious. The hero, on the contrary, must realize that the shadow exists and that he can draw strength from it. He must come to terms with its destructive powers if he is to become sufficiently terrible to overcome the dragon – i.e. before the ego can triumph, it must master and assimilate the shadow.”³⁴

The following diagram shows Archangel Michael’s weighed against the modern-day icons as represented by society in which they have functioned:

³³ Henderson, “Ancient myths”, p. 110.

³⁴ Henderson, “Ancient myths”, pp. 120-121.

Regarding the elements found in the Orthodox Byzantine icon, which are also found in present-day icons, there is, however, a fundamental difference concerning Byzantine and Post-Byzantine icon Archangel Michael. We may state that there is a three dimensional representation of modern-day figures namely Mind, Body and Soul becoming:

a) Intellectual = mind

b) Physical = body

c) Spiritual = soul

On Greek philosophy and Christianity, Latourette states that: “...it has been suggested that Christian thinkers solved the problems of order and change, reason and emotion, the physical and the intellectual with which classical philosophy had wrestled, and did so without denying the validity of the changing, the emotional, or the physical. They thereby provided a basis for individual salvation in a world of dislocated individuals and a principle on which a stable but not a rigid society might be based.”³⁵

a) The ‘Intellectual Icon’

The ‘icons’ that fall into this category are those that fit certain criteria which symbolise the human rationale or intellect. This quality is found in those ‘who devoted their lives to the eradication of social injustices and the restoration of human dignity’. This element is found in Coretta Scott King and is thus elevated to an iconic status too. She was also referred to “an icon for justice” and an “icon to whom many looked up with deep reverence and respect.”³⁶ Other modern-day icons who fit into this category are Chris Barnard, Nelson Mandela and many others.³⁷

b) The ‘Physical Icon’

The ‘icons’ that fall into this category are those who have ‘skills, abilities and talents’. This category epitomises the human physical excellence found for example in David Beckham’s “post-modern ersatz religious” iconic status. He has been elevated to a messianic role known as a “modern Christ figure” by the public³⁸ perhaps because of his combination of athletic prowess, good looks and ³⁵ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 261.

³⁶ The Star, 31 January, 2006.

³⁷ Cape Times, News, Business Report, 24 October, 2007, p. 28.

³⁸ Sunday Times “Christ-like”, p. 5.

flamboyant private life.³⁹ Similar ‘icons’ that fit into this category are of Shahar Peer, “an iconic figure in Israel”⁴⁰, who was awarded “outstanding athlete status”,⁴¹ Sebastien Chabal, known as “the caveman”, who is described as “the most naturally powerful athlete in world rugby” and “an iconic figure of the World Cup”⁴² and also Charlize Theron who has been honoured as the “film icon of Benoni”.⁴³ Then, lastly:

b) The ‘Spiritual Icon’

The ‘icons’ that fall into this category are those who ‘paid with their lives for their beliefs’. The ‘Spiritual Icon’ epitomises the human spiritual sacrifice. An example of a ‘Spiritual Icon’ is ‘Che’ Guevara. According to Castañeda,

*“the Christ-like image prevailed” and “it’s as if the dead Guevara looks on his killers and forgives them, and upon the world, proclaiming that he who dies for an idea is beyond suffering.”*⁴⁴

Other ‘icon’ that fit this profile is Mahatma Gandhi who Salgado feels conjure up “perceptions of saintliness”.⁴⁵ He adds that “Ghandhi and Guevara were assassinated long before the commercialisation of their brands began in earnest.”⁴⁶

What makes these icons unique is the fact that they all died in a certain way and that phenomenon enhanced their iconic status. This also coincides with the example of the Byzantine hero, Digenis Akritas and his fatal dual with death.⁴⁷ Hendrickx explains that Digenis’s heroic isolation in contrast to the crowd was not enough to make him a ‘folk hero’. The true Digenis – epic is illustrated as a hero who dies as an old man in his bed! Such an ordinary death does not suit the hero as it is not idealised. Hendrickx furthermore elucidates that: “Digenis, wat nie deur ‘n aardse vyand neergevel word nie, word met die bonatuurlike Charon self gekonfronteer. Dit bied twee voordele: (i) dit skenk aan die

³⁹ “Modern examples: in sports”, “http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gay icon”.

⁴⁰ The Star, 21 September, 2007.

⁴¹ The Star, 21 September, 2007.

⁴² The Times, Rugby, 12 October, 2007, p. 31.

⁴³ The Star, News, 22 September, 2005, p. 10.

⁴⁴ O’ Hagan, S. “Just a Pretty Face?”

⁴⁵ Cape Times, News, Business Report, October 24, 2007, p. 28.

⁴⁶ Cape Times, News, Business Report, October 24, 2007, p. 28.

⁴⁷ Hendrickx, “Die dood van Digenis”, p. 103.

volksdigter die geleentheid om Digenis tóg te laat sterf in 'n tragiese tweegeveg met 'n oorwinlike held, en (ii) op metafisiese vlak kan Digenies sy taak voltooi."⁴⁸

As such, 'Che' Guevara was executed, Mahatma Gandhi was assassinated and Lucky Dube was senselessly gunned down in a botched hijacking.⁴⁹ Lucky Dube fits the profile of the 'Spiritual Icon' because ironically, he paid with his life through the same violence he sang about. In the lyrics of 'Crime and Corruption' he laments the scourge of crime:⁵⁰

*"Do you ever worry about your house being broken into Do you ever worry about your car being taken away from you in broad daylight down Highway 54
Do you ever worry about your wife becoming the women in black
Do you ever worry about leaving home and coming back in a coffin with a bullet through your head
So join us and fight this crime and corruption"*

Dube wanted a "new world that was a 'kingdom of the children'", writes Ntuli, and "where there was genuine spiritual liberation, not a substitution of commercial exploitation for political oppression"⁵¹.

All three dimensions found in these 'iconic' figures fit into the profile of a single Orthodox Byzantine icon. The 'physical' excellence found in Archangel Michael for example, was represented in his beautiful, physical appearance. Grabar comments that "the central authority at Byzantium... also controlled the aesthetic of the figural arts; above all, after it was enacted that religious images were to be venerated as sacred objects..." and further adds that "it also indicated the manner in which the artist was to handle religious themes – and these were in the vast majority."⁵² Also, in the Renaissance period, Michael is illustrated as young, strong, and handsome.⁵³

⁴⁸ Hendrickx, "Die dood van Digenis", p. 103.

⁴⁹ The Times, News, October 22, 2007, p. 4 - Sunday Times, News and Opinion, October 10, 2007, pp. 20, 28.

⁵⁰ The Times, News, p. 4 - Sunday Times, News and Opinion.

⁵¹ The Times, News, p. 4 - Sunday Times, News and Opinion.

⁵² Grabar, Byzantine Painting, p. 31.

⁵³ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

In the ‘intellectual’ dimension found in Coretta Scott King’s as ‘icon for justice’, doesn’t Michael also stand for ‘justice and truth’?⁵⁴ It is believed that Michael acted as ‘advocate of Israel’⁵⁵ and his function is ‘to open gates also of justice to the just’.⁵⁶ Last, but not least, the ‘spiritual’ dimension i.e. ‘paid with their lives for their beliefs’ is also parallel to Michael’s iconic status. Archangel Michael, field commander of the Army of God fights with his life against Satan for his belief in God’s purpose for humanity.

7. Archangel Michael represented in the arts in modern-day society

Archangel Michael is represented as an angelic warrior clad with shield, helmet and sword. He often stands over the dragon, which he sometimes pierces with a lance. Another attribute of Michael is a pair of scales in which he weighs the souls of the departed or holds the Book of Life to show his role in the judgment.⁵⁷

In Greek folklore it is said that some folk icons depicted Michael without a face; reason being that Michael’s face can only be seen by the dead and those about to die. It is also believed that he has assumed the role of the mythological figure Hermes as the psychopomp in his role of weigher of souls on Judgment Day.⁵⁸

Milton’s epic poem ‘Paradise Lost’ describes Michael as the commander of God’s army of angels against the rebel forces of Satan. He is armoured with a sword and in a personal battle, strikes Satan, wounding his side.⁵⁹

Father Raymond Bishop’s diary was used by William Blatty to write his book, The Exorcist, and later used by Thomas B. Allen, for his book, Possessed: the True Story of an Exorcism where a 13-year old boy saw a vision of Satan and ten of his helpers fighting against Archangel Michael.⁶⁰

⁵⁴ “Michael (archangel)”, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)) 2007/09/18.

⁵⁵ “Michael (archangel)”, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)).

⁵⁶ King, M. “Chief Rainbow Warrior: Archangel Michael”, 7 February, 2006.

<http://www.americanchronicle.com/articles/viewArticle.asp?articleID=5580> 2007/11/16.

⁵⁷ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁵⁸ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁵⁹ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁶⁰ “Michael (archangel)”, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)).

John Travolta performed as the Archangel Michael who lived as an ‘unconventional angel’ on Earth in the 1996 film called Michael. Then, in the 2007 movie, Ghost Rider, Johnny’s study of heaven and hell leads him to St. Michael and the fallen angels of Air, Water and Earth. Ghost Rider is Fire, the element attributed to Michael. He combats with the other three elements to save the world from an oncoming apocalypse, led by Blackheart, the Prince of Hell.⁶¹

8. Michael in angelology and the occult in modern-day society

Today, modern occultists associate Michael with the Fire element (in contrast to the Kabbalistic work, the Bahir, which states that his element is Water), the direction South and the colour Red. Michael rules over the Tree of Life Sepirah (Tephirah), the ‘Alchemical Metal Gold, Harmony and Beauty’. It is believed that Michael has been given divine qualities such as Protection, Faith, Will of God, Power, Omnipotence of God and Perfection. In angelology today, Archangel Michael protects our consciousness, being and world and is said to be associated with motivation, activation, ambition, achievement, patience and life tasks.⁶² In other forms of occultism, Archangel Michael is believed to be the spirit of the planet Mercury or the Sun, being also the ruler of Sunday and Thursday.⁶³ Also, according to another source, each of the seven Archangels are associated with Saturn and Uriel, the Ptolemaic system being the sun, the moon, Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn.⁶⁴

In Voodoo,⁶⁵ for example, prayers (called ‘oraisons’) are written on sheets of paper and sewn into clothes, bedding, or pillows in order to increase fortune and help fulfil desires. The prayers are sold in Haiti (at Port-au-Prince) at the market. One of the prayers, ⁶¹ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁶² Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael also compare “Michael (archangel)”, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)).

⁶³ Virtue, Archangels and Ascended Masters, pp. 38 & 45– Also compare notes on Michael in angelology Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael – Finney, D., Archangels and Guardian Angels www.greatdreams.com/Archangels.htm 2007/09/18.

⁶⁴ Kiefer, J., “Michael and All Angels”, satucket.com/lectionary/Michael.htm 2007/11/16.

⁶⁵ For example, syncretism in the Caribbean consists of the interaction of shared histories of the European Imperialism and African slaves: Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael. The result was the production of the establishment of a society that exists today in the Caribbean. One of the syncretised religions of the Caribbean is voodoo which consists of elements of Western African, native Caribbean and Christian (Roman Catholic) beliefs. Other syncretised religions that include the New World religions are Candomblé, Vodoun and Santería: Anonymous, “Syncretism”, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism> 2007/11/15.

considered to have particular potency, is devoted to Michael, patron saint of sea sickness sufferers.⁶⁶ In the Voodoo religion, (Latin American Santeria) as practised in Cuba, the Voodoo God Aganyú–Solá has been identified with Archangel Michael as a result of syncretism,⁶⁷ while in other countries, with St. Christopher. Aganyú, represented as a huge man, wild and untamed, is a symbol of all earth forces, particularly the centre of earth and volcano.

9. The survival of Michael in modern religions

In Latter-day Saint theology, Archangel Michael is believed to have lived his mortal life as Adam; thus, the belief that Michael and Adam are the same being. Adam is his mortal name and Michael his pre-mortal/post mortal name, thus all Adam's descendents are the earthly descendents of Michael. Adam's angelic name, Michael ('who is like God?'), describes man's appearance; how he was created in the image of God.⁶⁸

Jehovah's Witnesses believe that Jesus and Archangel Michael is the same individual. It is furthermore believed that Jehovah first created Jesus as the Archangel Michael, through whom he made the universe, the angels and mankind: "In this pre-human existence he was known as the word of God. He later took the human form as Jesus and led a life without sin. "Michael gave up his existence as a spirit creature (angel) when his ⁶⁶ Gordon, L., The Book of Voodoo, London, 2000, p.105.

⁶⁷ Wippler, M.G., Powers of the Orishas, Santeria and the Worship of Saints, New York, 1992, pp. 61-64: "Initiation into Aganyú's mysteries is connected with places such as a cemetery, an old house, a hill, a dead tree, a river, a stone wall." Read also: Charlotte Seymour-Smith, Macmillan Dictionary of Anthropology, Macmillan Press Ltd, 1986 – and Lindenfield, "Syncretism", www.histrycooperative.org/journals/whc/4.1/lindenfeld.html: One of the perils of syncretism (see chapter six) is 'confusion' – what might seem to be a syncretic combination to an observer, might have a complete different meaning to the person actually practicing it. An example of this is when the West African Aladura churches arose; many different traumatic events took place between the period of the First and Second World Wars. During those years, numeral Christian charismatic leaders came forward promising healing through prayer resulting in crowds of people breaking away from the mainstream Christian churches. Healing through prayer involved a rejection of Western medicine, which might appear as a return to traditional ways. The Aladuras rejected the healing rituals of the orishas and insisted that their followers destroy any signs of idolatry. Also, when certain aspects of worship such as dream interpretation and visions appeared to be more African than Christian, they would endorse such practices by referring to several verses in the Old Testament. This shows a general feature of cross-cultural relationships, i.e. how one society will adopt or absorb elements from other traditions in varying degrees, and thus leave a misleading label known as 'syncretism'.

⁶⁸ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

life force was transferred into Mary's womb by Jehovah."⁶⁹ After his death on a torture stake, Jesus was resurrected in his previous spiritual form (Michael).⁷⁰

The Seventh-day Adventist considers the term 'Archangel' to indicate Michael's and Jesus' position as chief of the angels and not the angel himself. The Seventh-day Adventist views Michael as a 'type' of Christ. Both are uncreated and viewed as a person of the Godhead – maintaining a Trinitarian Christology.⁷¹

It is said that in Germany, the Christian tradition replaced the pre-Christian god Wotan, to whom many mountains were sacred, therefore the many mountain shrines and chapels of St. Michael over Germany.⁷² Some scholars claimed that the building of Saint Michael's sanctuaries on hilltops was to replace the pagan cult shrines of the god Wotan but actually this practise came from the Eastern Oriental Church.⁷³ He is also known as the patron saint of Germany. Today, many Christians believe that St. Michael is the patron saint of the warrior, police officers, soldiers and paratroopers.⁷⁴

10. The modern-day veneration of Michael

Michael's feasts are still celebrated all over the world. These feasts originated as follows:

- Michael is honoured for his appearance on Monte Gargano, Italy, on 8 May. A special feast in honour of the Archangel, known as 'Apparitio S. Michaelis' does not actually commemorate the Archangel's apparition but rather the victory of the Lombards of Sipontum over the Greek Neapolitans. Here, Michael's original status as 'patron in war' was restored to him.⁷⁵
- June 9, is celebrated in commemoration of the appearance of Michael, sword in hand, to the Emperor Constantine at the church in Sosthenion. It is said that he intervened in battles in apparent answer to the prayers of Pope St. Gregory I the ⁶⁹ Rhodes, Find It Quick, p. 101.

⁷⁰ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁷¹ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁷² Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁷³ <http://web2.airmail.net/Carlsch/MaterDei/Saints/michael.htm>.

⁷⁴ Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁷⁵ Holweck, "St. Michael the Archangel" – Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael.

Great. He was regarded as the great heavenly physician. The sick slept in the church at night, waiting upon the manifestation of Michael.⁷⁶

- 12 June - Christians of Egypt adopted the Greek feast kept on 12 November. Here, they placed the Nile under the protection of Michael. On the 12th day of each month, they celebrated a special commemoration of Archangel Michael. On June 12, when the water starts to rise, a special holiday is kept for Michael, known as the 'rising of the Nile'.⁷⁷
- 18 June – Feast of Michael at the Church of St. Julian at the Forum, Constantinople
- 6 September - today, a feast in commemoration of Michael is celebrated. In the earliest ages already, it was believed that Michael caused a medical spring to spout at Chairotopa, where all the sick who bathed there, were cured. Also, the spring at Colossae (Chonae) is believed to have holy waters. It is said that pagans directed a stream against the sanctuary of Michael to destroy it, but the Archangel split the rock by lightning which resulted in a new stream.⁷⁸
- On 29 September, the feast of Michaelmas is celebrated in honour of Michael together with the other Archangels. It is the anniversary of the dedication of a Roman basilica to him.⁷⁹ *“Waldorf schools celebrate the Michaelmas Festival (the festival of strong will) during the Autumnal Equinox.”*⁸⁰

Latourette shares that “there were also feasts in honour of the apostles and others who were revered as saints, one for the Maccabees, and, at least as early as the sixth century, one for the Angel Michael”.⁸¹

⁷⁶ Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel” compare also Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁷⁷ Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel” compare also Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁷⁸ Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel” – Greek tradition has it that Michael’s apparition took place in the first century. Today, a feast in commemoration of it on 6 September is celebrated.

⁷⁹ Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁸⁰ www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

⁸¹ Latourette, A History of Christianity, p. 206.

- 18 October – a universal feast known as ‘S. Michaelis in perculo maris’; Michael is regarded as the patron of mariners at Mont-Saint-Michel, in the Diocese of Coutances, Normandy. On 16 October 710, the first church was dedicated to him.⁸²
- 27 October – feast of Michael in the ‘Promotu’ church, Constantinople.⁸³
- 8 November, a feast which, spread over the Greek, Syrian, Armenian and Coptic churches, became the principal feast of Michael in the Eastern Orthodoxy. Greek churches keep the feast on 8 November and celebrate a second festival on 8 September⁸⁴. At the famous baths of the Emperor Arcadius, the synaxis of the Archangel was celebrated.⁸⁵
- 12 November, see feast on June 12.
- 10 December, Feast of Michael at Athaea.⁸⁶
- In 1818, a chivalric order according to the British honour system was founded and named after Saint George and Saint Michael.⁸⁷

The above analysis brings us to the conclusion that a modern-day icon can be a historical figure, a celebrity or a public figure who is embraced by many in society. In particular, they are figures who perceive to be strong or brave and have struggled with political, social and/ or economical issues. These figures all have something in common i.e. they physically or psychologically fight a demon and suffer publicly or sometimes meet an early tragic end.

Finally, modern-day icons are created by society – in the hope of bringing substance where there is none. In doing so, the public seeks meaning ‘in an apparently meaningless world’, and thus they can then read values into these iconic figures. In light of this, one ⁸² Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel” – Anonymous, “Michael”, www.answers.com/topic/michael.

⁸³ Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel”.

⁸⁴ <http://web2.airmail.net/Carlsch/MaterDei/Saints/michael.htm>.

⁸⁵ Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel”.

⁸⁶ Holweck, “St. Michael the Archangel”.

⁸⁷ www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

needs to look at the circumstances that necessitate the transformation. Modern-day society, ravaged by diminished spirituality, moral decay and the absence of role models and leaders of eminence in all spheres of life, desperately needed this transformation. These ‘iconic’ figures are in fact symbolic representations of the whole psyche. Their ‘iconic’ status suggests the essential function of the individual’s ego-consciousness – his awareness of his own strengths and weaknesses.⁸⁸ They are one dimensional, and because of that, as the needs of society change, so their relevance will diminish accordingly. It is inevitable that they will be replaced (death is inevitable) by others who will be expected to play the same role.

⁸⁸ Compare also Henderson, “Ancient myths”, p. 112.

Conclusion

The combination of socio-historical, anthropological and literary approaches applied in this study on the figure of Archangel Michael as an 'icon' in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine periods, has led to the following conclusions:

In early Byzantium, Christianity incorporated many Jewish, Hellenistic and pagan cultural elements. This resulted in syncretism through the transition from paganism to Christianity. Consequently, mythological figures such as Hades and Charon, were replaced, absorbed or incorporated into the Orthodox Byzantine traditions by means of gradual transformation. The tragic and negative figure of Charon, who in ancient times brought the souls to the underworld, was now replaced by the positive figure of Archangel Michael, even Christ Himself. At the same time, many different 'roles' attributed to Michael were, in fact, those defining the ancient Charon. As a result of this positive image, Michael (although he still calls upon the souls) brings them now to a celestial, eternal world. This fits in with the dogma of the Orthodox Church that denies the ultimate power of death as it promises a complete transformation of the body from the material world into the spiritual world. Through this expected metaphysical transformation, Christian believers have a concept of a partial victory over material death and prepare for a total victory over death at the resurrection of the dead in the Second Coming.

Depending on his activities, the nature of the functions of Archangel Michael has been defined as defensive, protective, judicial and submissive, while the impact of his actions and decisions as an army leader should be understood in military terms.

Moreover, sentiments of subordination, faith and fear of the authority of the Byzantine Emperor were manipulated by rulers and leaders by means of propaganda. Based on racial, religious, and linguistic factors, this propaganda of authority made use of the figure of Archangel Michael. Indeed, some Byzantine emperors, in order to promote their powerful 'iconic status' as 'Archistrategoi' on earth, placed their images next to that of Archangel Michael on nomismata.

Based on this fact, this study drew a parallel between the means of communication of the Byzantine period and today's circumstances. For instance, means of communication in Byzantium, in terms of space, would be considered the church, the market and the hippodrome. As it is understood, mutatis mutandis, instead of advertisements which are used by the mass media in present times mainly for commercial or political propaganda, icons, murals and coins were used for propaganda of political power and authority at that time.

By means of parallelism, which helped in the distant past to create 'icons' or to elevate real or mythical figures to the level of Saints, today mass-media helps society create and elevate certain people to iconic status. Yet, these modern 'icons', despite their differences in terms of detail to the Orthodox Byzantine icons, contain essential similarities in terms of cultural function and aims. Though they were developed by groups without any direct cultural contact, the media undoubtedly played an important role in elevating these historical/social/public figures to their iconic status. In the same way, Byzantine iconographers and clergy promoted iconic figures at the time. Concerning the way Archangel Michael was represented in Byzantium and Post-Byzantium, we saw in chapter seven how similar patterns found in the creation of Michael's 'eternal supernatural model' are found in a modern-day 'icon'.

Thus, we may conclude that in cultural terms today, as in Byzantium, the aim is to create a close communication, both pragmatic and symbolic – between 'religious / iconic figures and believers / followers.

ABSTRACT

Byzantine culture and art were essentially religious in character and the primary aim of Byzantine art was to capture that which was holy and mysterious in a concrete form such as icons. Due to Archangel Michael's popularity among the Judeo-Christian angels in Greek society, we specifically examined the functions and status of Michael as 'icon' in a Greek Orthodox context.

The subject of this study, therefore, focused on the perception of Archangel Michael as an 'icon' in the pure Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox context of a 'theological art picture; a religious, sacred image', subject to the theological and artistic Byzantine prescriptions. Moreover, the object, nature and problems of the research (such as its meaning, aim, and method) have been presented and examined.

In our Introduction, general information about the nature of the study, methodology, aims and justification on Archangel Michael with reference to why and how Archangel Michael became the main 'icon' in Greek society was given.

In the first chapter, the terms 'εἰκὼν' (image, a likeness, portrait' or 'similitude) and 'ἄγγελος' (messenger) have been analysed with special attention on the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine religious association especially in their historical and socio-cultural context. In the process of this analysis, emphasis was placed on the hierarchical order of angels as to establish Michael's position in it.

Chapter two gave a historical overview of the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox society and the importance of iconography and hagiography within this framework. Religious, social, cultural and political influences with special attention to influences and transformation of pagan themes on early Christian art were examined.

Under the title "Archangel Michael represented as an 'icon' in the pure Byzantine and Post-Byzantine Orthodox context of a 'theological art picture'", the third chapter presents the main theories and writings (Ερμηνεία της βυζαντινής ζωγραφικής τέχνης) of Dionysius of Fourni, referring to the artistic and symbolic representation of Michael in the Byzantine traditional iconography. It mainly examined the artistic and symbolic iconographic representation of Archangel Michael in the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine periods.

In chapter four we analysed the conceptualisation, characteristics and functions of Archangel Michael in the Post-Byzantine Period but more specifically in the role of angel of death i.e. the angel who brings the souls of the dying into the supernatural world. Because the Byzantine society did not consist of a single people but of several ethnic groups who shared a more or less similar culture, as a result, characteristics of the Biblical, Apocalyptical and Apocryphal Archangel were intermingled with ancient mythological figures (e.g. Charon and Hades), Roman military traditions and contemporary Byzantine fashion. This led us therefore to examine, in chapter six, the results of syncretism, synthesis and parallelism. This chapter will include various elements found on Archangel Michael in Ancient Greek, Roman, Judaic, Christian and Islamic civilisations.

In the final chapter we compared the parallelisms found in the Post-Byzantine 'icon' with those in the modern-day society. As the public admired and adored certain figures in society, this resulted in the elevation of these figures to a messianic role or religious icon to which many looked up to with high regard and respect. It was found that society invested and read certain values into these 'iconic' figures. Three examples of 'modern icons' were selected and analysed. This analysis focused on the characteristics and attitudes found in these 'iconic' figures. Thereafter similar patterns found in each case were highlighted and compared to the icons of Michael found during the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine periods. It has been shown that all these modern-day icons were created by society – in the hope of bringing substance where there is none. The bonds between people and icons, with which they are identified, play a significant role in the development of a collective stereotype identity. The public seeks meaning 'in an apparently meaningless world' through 'iconic' figures that in fact symbolically represent the whole psyche.

Finally, it is hoped, that this study will contribute greatly to the understanding of the Byzantine and Post-Byzantine value system, mentality and worldview.

Bibliography

- Ahrweiler H, Η πολιτική Ιδεολογία της Βυζαντινής Αυτοκρατορίας, Athens, 1973.
- Alexiou, M., The Ritual Lament In Greek Tradition, Great Britain, Cambridge University Press 1974.
- Angold, M., (ed.) The Cambridge History of Christianity. Eastern Christianity. Cambridge, 2006.
- Ankerberg, J., & Weldon, J., The Facts On Angels, Harvest House Publishers, Oregon, 1977.
- Babiniotis G., Λεξικό της Νέας ελληνικής γλώσσας, Athens, 2002.
- Boak, A.E.R. & Sinnigen, W. G., A History of Rome to A.D. 565, London, 1957.
- Brenton, L. L., The Septuagint Version of the Old Testament and Apocrypha with an English Translation, London, 1976.
- Cameron, Averil, Agathias, Oxford, 1970.
- Campbell, J., The Mythic Image, Princeton University Press, New Jersey, 1974.
- Chapian, Marie, Angels In Our Lives, Destiny Image Publishers, Inc., U.S.A., 2006.
- Chatziphoti, I. M., Από το Βυζάντιο στον Νέο Ελληνισμό, Vol. 2. Thessaloniki, 2001.
- Clogg, R., A Concise History of Greece, Cambridge, 1992.
- Collins, Today's English Dictionary, London, 1995.
- Cormack, R., "Writing in Gold, Byzantine Society and its Icons", 1985, George Philip, London, 1985.
- Danforth L. M., The Death Rituals of Rural Greece, Princeton University Press, New Jersey, 1982.
- Davidson, F., Stibbs, A.M., & Kevan, E.F., The New Bible Commentary, London, 1963.
- Eco, U., On Beauty, Secker & Warburg, London, 2004.
- Ellwood, C. A., "Patriarchal Family", in Encyclopedia Americana, vol. 21, New York, 1972.
- Erickson, M.J., Christian Theology, Barker Books, Michigan, 2001.
- Fotiadis, T., Γυναικοκρατία (μητριαρχία), Athens, 1980.
- Galey J, Sinai and the Monastery of St. Catherine, Massada Publising Ltd, Israel, 1980.

- Gardner's Art through the Ages*, revised by De la Croix, H., & Tansey, R.G., USA, 1980.
- Geertz C., The Interpretation of Cultures, New York, 1973.
- Gordon, L., The Book of Voodoo, London, 2000.
- Grabar, A., Byzantine Painting, Macmillan London, 1979.
- Graham, B., Angels: God's Secret Agents, London, 1976.
- Halsey, W.D., (ed), Collier's Encyclopedia, Macmillan Educational Company, New York, Vol 8, 1989.
- Harris, S. L. & Platzner Gloria. Classical Mythology: Images and Insights. California: Mayfield Publishing Company, 1998.
- Henderson, J., "Ancient myths and modern man" in Jung, C.G. Man and his Symbols, Aldus Books Limited, London, 1979.
- Hendrickx B., "The Byzantine Icon: Some aspects of its Historical and Theological Significance" Apollonia, 1982, pp. 77-96.
- Hendrickx B., "The politico-ideological concepts of 'Oikonomia' & 'Taxis' as illustrated in the Epistle to Diognetos", Ekkles. Pharos 73 (New Series 2), 1991.
- Hendrickx, B., "Die dood van Digenis – mistifikasie van 'n Bisantynse held," Literator 14,1 (1993), pp. 99-106.
- Hendrickx, B., Geskiedenis Van Die Romeins-Hellenistiese Beskawing (ca 330-30 v.C.), Johannesburg, 1993.
- Hendrickx, B., "Agathias se epigramme oor 'ikone'," in Acta Patristica et Byzantina (5)1994, pp. 66-75.
- Hendrickx, B., Review of 'Angold, M., (ed.) The Cambridge History of Christianity. Eastern Christianity. Cambridge, 2006', in Neotestamentica 41. .2 (2007), pp. 437-444.
- Hendrix, P., Skrobucha, H., & Janssens, A. M., Ikonen, Amsterdam/Brussels, 1960.
- Huges, L., "Art and Liturgy in Russia: Rublev and his successors", pp. 276-301– in Angold, M., (ed.) The Cambridge History of Christianity, Eastern Christianity, Cambridge, 2006.
- Hussey, J.M; The Byzantine World, London, 1970.
- Hyperides, G., "Αυτοκράτορες", Εγκυκλοπαιδικόν λεξικόν Ελευθερουδάκη. Athens, 1930, vol. VIII, pp. 376-377.
- Hyperidis, G., "Αδης", Εγκυκλοπαιδικόν λεξικόν Ελευθερουδάκη. Athens, 1927, vol. I, pp. 215-216.

- Jung, C. (ed.) Man and his Symbols, Aldus Books Limited, London, 1979.
- Kabbani S.H., Angels Unveiled, A Sufi Perspective, Cape Town, 2000.
- Karayannopoulos, I., To Βυζαντινό κράτος, Thessaloniki, 1996.
- Kasser, R.O., Meyer, M., & Wurst. G., The Gospel of Judas with addit. Commentary by B. D. Ehrman, Washington, 2006.
- Keesing R.M., Cultural Anthropology, A Contemporary Perspective, Canberra, 1981.
- Kitromilides, P.M., “Orthodoxy and the west: Reformation to Enlightenment”, in Angold, M., (ed.) The Cambridge History of Christianity. Eastern Christianity. Cambridge, 2006, pp. 187-209.
- Kitsiki, D., Ιστορία της Οθωμανικής Αυτοκρατορίας, 1280 – 1924, Athens, 1988.
- Kitzinger, E., “The cult of images in the age before iconoclasm”, Dumbarton Oaks Papers VIII (1954), p.147.
- Koetzle, H., Photo Icons, The Story Behind the Pictures 1827-1991, Singapore, 2005.
- Larson, C. U., Persuasion, Reception and Responsibility, Wadsworth Publishing Company, California, 1989, p. 360.
- Larousse Encyclopedia of Byzantine & Medieval Art*, Hamlyn, 198.
- Latourette, K.S., A History of Christianity: volume 1: Beginnings to 1500, Harper & Row Publishers, New York, 1975.
- Lianouridis, V., “Bemerkinge oor Ikonografie“ Apollonia, (1988) pp. 53-61.
- Liddell & Scott, Greek English Lexicon, Oxford, 1978.
- Lindsay, G., Life After Death or where Are The dead? Voice of Healing Publishing Company, Texas, 1956.
- Louw, J.P., & Nida, E. A. (ed.), Greek – English Lexicon of the New Testament, vol. I, New York, 1989.
- Methodios (Archbishop), Ο Χριστιανισμός και ο Ιουδαϊσμός εν Αιθιοπία, Νουβία και Μερόι, vol. II. Athens, 1982.
- Najaar, A., I am a Muslim (no date of publication).
- Nel, M., “Opstanding, en Daniël 12:1-4”, Ekklesiastikos Pharos 88 (2006) (N.S. 17), 15-29.
- Papadopoulos-Kérameus, A., Διονυσίου του εκ Φουρνά: Ερμηνεία της ζωγραφικής τέχνης. Thessaloniki, 2004.
- Politis, N.G., Εκλογαί από τα τραγούδια του ελληνικού λαού, Athens, 1932.

- Romaos C", Anno Domini II (2005), 137-181, pp. 153-164.
- Romaos, K., Κοντά στις ρίζες, Hestia, Athens, 1980.
- Rhodes, R., Find It Quick Handbook on Cults and New Religions, Harvest House Publishers, Oregon, 2005.
- Robinson, C. E., A History of Greece, Barnes & Noble Inc. 1970.
- Sansaridou-Hendrickx, Thekla, "The Lament of Carlo Tocco for his brother's death (1418 A.D.)", Acta Patristica et Byzantina 18 (2007), 128-144.
- Sansaridou-Hendrickx, Thekla, "The conception of Death in the Anonymous Chronicle of the Tocco (14th-15th centuries)", Acta Patristica et Byzantina 12, 2001.
- Sansaridou-Hendrickx, Thekla, "The awakening of Greek national consciousness during the 13th Nicol, D., Το Δεσποτάτον της Ηπείρου, Transl. P. Leftia, Ioannina, 1974.
- Savvides, A & Hendrickx, B., Introducing Byzantine History, Paris, 2001.
- Savvides, A., "Agathias", in Savvides, A., Hendrickx, B., Simpon Alicia & Sansaridou-Hendrickx Thekla, Encyclopaedic Prosopographical Lexicon of Byzantine History and Civilization. Vol.1. Turnhout: Brepols, 2007, pp. 81-82.
- Servi, Katerina, Greek Mythology, Ekdotike Athenon S.A., Athens, 2001.
- Seymour-Smith, Charlotte, Macmillan Dictionary of Anthropology, Macmillan Press Ltd, 1986.
- Shepard J, "The Byzantine Commonwealth 1000-1550", in Angold (ed.), Cambridge History of Christianity, pp. 3-52.
- Summers, M., The Vampire in Europe, London, 1996.
- Taylor M. D., The Complete Book of Bible Knowledge, Tyndale House Publishers, Inc., Illinois, 1992.
- The Holy Bible*, New International Version, Christian Art Publishers, 1999.
- Theunissen W. P., Ikonen, Den Haag (no date).
- Tsakiridis, L., Παμμέγιστοι Ταξιάρχαι Μιχαήλ και Γαβριήλ (Οι Αρχάγγελοι), Κατερίνη (2nd ed.), 2001.
- Van der Watt, J., (ed.) et al, Die Bybel A-Z, China, 2003.
- Van Gennep, A., The Rites of Passage, Chicago, 1960.
- Vantini, G., (ed.), Oriental Sources Concerning Nubia, Heidelberg and Warsaw, 1975.
- Vine, W.E., An Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, Riverside Book and Bible House, USA (no date of publication).

- Virtue, Doreen, Archangels and Ascended Masters, USA, 2006.
- Waltz, P., (ed.), Anthologie Greque I, Paris, 1928.
- Webster's Third New International Dictionary*, Vol III. S-Z., Chicago a.o., 1981.
- Wippler, M. G., Powers of the Orishas, Santeria and the Worship of Saints, New York, 1992.
- Xyggopoulos, A., Σχεδιάσμα ιστορίας της θρησκευτικής ζωγραφικής μετά την Άλωσιν, Athens, 1957.
- Yanagi, M. – Takahashi, E. – Tsusuka, S – Nagatsuka, Y., Byzantium, Cassell, London, 1978.
- Zachariadou, E., “The Great Church in captivity, 1453 – 1586”, in Angold, M., (ed.) The Cambridge History of Christianity. Eastern Christianity. Cambridge, 2006.
- Zografidis, G., Βυζαντινή φιλοσοφία της εικόνας (2nd ed.), Athens, 1997.
-

Newspaper articles

- Anonymous, Sunday Times “Christ-like meaning found in Beckham”, p. 5, September 18, 2005.
- Cape Times, News, Business Report, October 24, 2007, p. 28.
- Ntuli, D., “Rastas never die...”, Sunday Times, News and Opinion, October 21, 2007.
- Sunday Times, News and Opinion, October 10, 2007, pp. 20, 28.
- The Star*, 21 September, 2007.
- The Times, News, October 22, 2007, p. 4.
-

Websites

- Angels: all about angels, Archangels, Archangel Michael* <http://angelstoday.net/index.php?lang=en&way=2Archangels/1michael> 2007/11/13.
- Anonymous, “Angels today: all about angels”,
<http://angelstoday.net/index.php?lang=en&way=2Archangels/1michael> 2007/11/13.
- Anonymous, “Michael (archangel)”,
http://www.reference.com/browse/wiki/Michael_\(archangel\)) 2007/11/16.

Anonymous, "Michael", www.answers.com/topic/michael 2007/09/19.

Anonymous, "Patron Saints", "<http://www.catholic.org/saints/patron.php>" 2007/11/16.

Anonymous, "Syncretism", <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Syncretism> 2007/11/15.

Boyce, M., "Zoroastrianism: A Shadowy but Powerful Presence in the Judeo – Christian World", London, 1987, "<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Zoroastrianism>".

Cassels, L. 1965 1965 "What's the Difference? A Comparison of the Faiths Men Live By", <http://www.religion-online.org/showchapter.asp?title=1623&C=1572>.

Cormack, R., "Writing in Gold, Byzantine Society and its Icons", 1985, George Philip, London, ISBN 054001085-5 "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Obverse_and_reverse"

Finney, D., "Archangels" www.greatdreams.com/Archangels.htm 2007/09/18.

Holweck, F.G., "St. Michael the Archangel" <http://www.newadvent.org/cathen/10275b.htm> 2007/11/16.

"http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Histamenon__nomisma-Micael_V-sb1776.jpg" 2007/09/20.

Kiefer, J. "Michael and All Angels" <http://satucket.com/lectionary/Michael.htm> 2007/11/16.

King, M., "Chief Rainbow Warrior: Archangel Michael", <http://www.americanchronicle.com/articles/viewArticle.asp?articleID=5580> 2007/11/16.

Lindenfield, D. Syncretism www.historycooperative.org/journals/whc/4.1/lindenfeld.html 2007/11/15.

"Michael (archangel)", http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Michael_\(Archangel\)) 2007/09/18.

"Modern examples: in sports", "http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gay icon", 2007/12/13.

O' Hagan, S. "Just a Pretty Face?", The Observer, July 11, 2004 "<http://observer.guardian.co.uk/review/story>" 2007/11/19.

"Symbolism in icons" from "<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Icon>"

Usborne, D. "Who was Che Guevara, and does he deserve his iconic status?" The Independent, June 6, 2006, http://findarticles.com/p/articles/mi_qn4158/is_20060606/ai_n16453878.

Van Heerden, G., <http://missiology.org/monolianlectures/worldviewandsyncretism.htm> 2007/11/15.

Van Rheenen, G., “Worldview and Syncretism”, Mongolia 1993, <http://missiology.org/mongolianlectures/worldviewandsyncretism.htm>,
2007/11/15.

Books By YAHWEH's Sword

PDF Book 2 Of BARUCH

Chapters 1 through 87

2 BARUCH 1

Yerusalem will be destroyed

2 BARUCH 1:1

And it happened in the twenty-fifth year of YeconiYah (Jeconiah), the king of Yahudah, that the Word of YAHWEH came to Baruch, the son of Neriah,

2 BARUCH 1:2

And said to him: Have you seen all that this people are doing to ME, the evil things which the two tribes which remained have done more than the ten tribes which were carried away into captivity?

2 BARUCH 1:3

For the former tribes were forced by their kings to sin, but these two have themselves forced and compelled their kings to sin.

2 BARUCH 1:4

Behold, therefore, I shall bring evil upon this city and its inhabitants. And it will be taken away from before MY presence for a time. And I shall scatter this people among the nations that they may be beneficial to the nations.

2 BARUCH 1:5

And MY people will be chastened, and the time will come that they will look for that which can make their times prosperous.

2 BARUCH 2

2 BARUCH 2:1

This, then, I have said to you that you may say to YermeYah(Jeremiah) and all those who are like you that you may retire from this city. For your works are for this city like a firm pillar and your prayers like a strong wall.

2 BARUCH 3

2 BARUCH 3:1

And I said:

2 BARUCH 3:2

O YAHWEH, Sovereign Master, have I therefore come into the world to see the evil things of my mother?

2 BARUCH 3:3

No, Sovereign Master. If I have found free unmerited favor and pardon in YOUR eyes, take away my ruach first that I may go to my fathers and I may not see the destruction of my mother.

2 BARUCH 3:4

For from two sides I am hard pressed: I cannot resist YOU, but my soul also cannot behold the evil of my mother. But one thing I shall say in YOUR presence, O YAHWEH: Now, what will happen after these things?

2 BARUCH 3:5

For if YOU destroy YOUR city and deliver up YOUR country to those who hate us, how will the name of Yisrael be remembered again?

2 BARUCH 3:6

Or how shall we speak again about YOUR splendid deeds? Or to whom again will that which is in YOUR Torah be explained?

2 BARUCH 3:7

Or will the universe return to its nature and the world go back to its original silence?

2 BARUCH 3:8

And will the multitude of the souls be taken away and will not the nature of man be mentioned again?

2 BARUCH 3:9

And where is all that which YOU said to Mosheh about us?

2 BARUCH 4

The New Yerusalem

2 BARUCH 4:1

And YAHWEH said to me:

This city will be delivered up for a time,

And the people will be chastened for a time,

And the world will not be forgotten.

2 BARUCH 4:2

Or do you think that this is the city of which I said: On the palms of MY hands I have carved you?

2 BARUCH 4:3

It is not this building that is in your midst now; it is that which will be revealed, with ME, that was already prepared from the moment that I decided to create Paradise. And I showed it to Adam before he sinned. But when he transgressed the commandment, it was taken away from him - as also Paradise.

2 BARUCH 4:4

After these things I showed it to MY servant Abraham in the night between the portions of the victims.

2 BARUCH 4:5

And again I showed it also to Mosheh on Mount Sinai when I showed him the likeness of the tabernacle and all its vessels.

2 BARUCH 4:6

Behold, now it is preserved with ME - as also Kingdom Paradise.

2 BARUCH 4:7

Now go away and do as I command you.

2 BARUCH 5

Preparation made by the malakim before the enemies arrive

2 BARUCH 5:1

And I answered and said:

So then I shall be guilty in Zion, that YOUR haters will come to this place and pollute YOUR sanctuary, and carry off YOUR heritage into captivity, and rule over them whom YOU love.

And then they will go away again to the land of their idols, and boast before them.

And what have YOU done to YOUR great NAME?

2 BARUCH 5:2

And YAHWEH said to me:

MY NAME and MY splendor shall last unto eternity.

MY judgment, however, shall assert its rights in its own time.

2 BARUCH 5:3

And you shall see with your eyes that the enemy shall not destroy Zion and burn Yerusalem, but that they shall serve the Judge for a time.

2 BARUCH 5:4

You, however, go away and do all which I have said to you.

2 BARUCH 5:5

And I went away and took with me YermeYah and Adu and SeraiYah and Jabish and GedaliYah and all the nobles of the people. And I brought them to the valley of Kidron and told them all which had been said to me.

2 BARUCH 5:6

And they raised their voices and they all lamented.

2 BARUCH 5:7

And we sat there and fasted until the evening.

2 BARUCH 6

2 BARUCH 6:1

Now it happened on the following day that, behold, an army of the Chaldeans surrounded the city. And in the evening I, Baruch, left the people, went outside, and set myself by an oak.

2 BARUCH 6:2

And I was grieving over Zion and sighed because of the captivity which had come upon the people.

2 BARUCH 6:3

And behold, suddenly a strong ruach lifted me and carried me above the wall of Yerusalem.

2 BARUCH 6:4

And I saw, and behold, there were standing four malakim at the four comers of the city, each of them with a burning torch in his hands.

2 BARUCH 6:5

And another malak came down from heaven and said to them, "Hold your torches and do not light them before I say it to you.

2 BARUCH 6:6

Because I was sent first to speak a Word to the earth and then to deposit in it what YAHWEH, the Most High, has commanded me."

2 BARUCH 6:7

And I saw that he descended in the Kodesh of HaKodesh and that he took from there the veil, the kodesh ephod, the mercy seat, the two tables, the kodesh raiment of the kohenim, the altar of incense, the forty-eight precious stones with which the kohenim were clothed, and all the kodesh vessels of the tabernacle.

2 BARUCH 6:8

And he said to the earth with a loud voice:
Earth, earth, earth, hear the Word of the ALMIGHTY YAHWEH, and receive the things which I commit to you,
and guard them until the last times,
so that you may restore them when you are ordered,
so that strangers may not get possession of them.

2 BARUCH 6:9

For the time has arrived when Yerusalem will also be delivered up for a time, until the moment that it will be said that it will be restored forever.

2 BARUCH 6:10

And the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them up.

2 BARUCH 7

2 BARUCH 7:1

And after these things I heard this malak saying to the malakim who held the torches:

2 BARUCH 7:2

Now destroy the walls and overthrow them to their foundations so that the enemies do not boast and say, "We have overthrown the wall of Zion and we have burnt down the place of the ALMIGHTY YAHWEH." And they restored me to the place where I once stood.

2 BARUCH 8

The Enemies Enter the City

2 BARUCH 8:1

Now the malakim did as he had commanded them; and when they had broken up the comers of the wall, a voice was heard from the midst of the Great Tabernacle after the wall had fallen, saying:

2 BARUCH 8:2

Enter, enemies, and come, adversaries, because he who guarded the house has left it.

2 BARUCH 8:3

And I, Baruch, went away.

2 BARUCH 8:4

And it happened after these things that the army of the Chaldeans entered and seized the house and all that is around it.

2 BARUCH 8:5

And they carried away the people into captivity and killed some of them. And they put King ZedekiYah in irons and sent him to the king of Babylon.

2 BARUCH 9

2 BARUCH 9:1

And I, Baruch, came with YermeYah, whose heart was found to be pure from sins, and who was not captured during the seizure of the city;

2 BARUCH 9:2

And we rent our garments, and wept and mourned, and fasted for seven days.

2 BARUCH 10

Baruch's lamentation

2 BARUCH 10:1

And it happened after seven days that the Word of YAHWEH came to me and said to me:

2 BARUCH 10:2

Tell YermeYah to go away in order to support the captives unto Babylon.

2 BARUCH 10:3

You, however, stay here in the desolation of Zion and I shall show you after these days what will happen at the end of days.

2 BARUCH 10:4

And I spoke to YermeYah as YAHWEH commanded me.

2 BARUCH 10:5

He, then, went away with the people, but I, Baruch, came back and sat in front of the doors of the Great Tabernacle, and I raised the following lamentation over Zion and said:

2 BARUCH 10:6

Blessed is he who was not born, or he who was born and died.

2 BARUCH 10:7

But we, the living, woe to us, because we have seen those afflictions of Zion, and that which has befallen Yerusalem.

2 BARUCH 10:8

I shall call the Sirens from the sea, and you, Lilin, come from the desert, and you, demons and dragons from the woods. Awake and gird up your loins to mourn, and raise lamentations with me, and mourn with me.

2 BARUCH 10:9

You, farmers, sow not again. And you, O earth, why do you give the fruit of your harvest? Keep within you the sweetness of your sustenance.

2 BARUCH 10:10

And you, vine, why do you still give your wine? For an offering will not be given again from you in Zion, and the firstfruits will not again be offered.

2 BARUCH 10:11

And you, heaven, keep your dew within you, and do not open the treasures of rain.

2 BARUCH 10:12

And you, sun, keep the light of your rays within you. And you, moon, extinguish the multitude of your light. For why should the light rise again, where the light of Zion is darkened?

2 BARUCH 10:13

And you, bridegrooms, do not enter, and do not let the brides adorn themselves.

2 BARUCH 10:14

And you, wives, do not pray to bear children, for the barren will rejoice more. And those who have no children will be glad, and those who have children will be sad.

2 BARUCH 10:15

For why do they bear in pains only to bury in grief?

2 BARUCH 10:16

Or why should men have children again? Or why should the generation of their kind be named again, where this mother is lonely, and her children have been carried away in captivity?

2 BARUCH 10:17

Henceforth, do not speak anymore of beauty, and do not talk about comeliness.

2 BARUCH 10:18

You, kohanim, take the keys of the sanctuary, and cast them to the highest heaven, and give them to YAHWEH and say, "Guard YOUR house YOURSELF, because, behold, we have been found to be false stewards."

2 BARUCH 10:19

And you, virgins who spin fine linen, and silk with gold of Ophir, make haste and take all things, and cast them into the fire, so that it may carry them to HIM who made them. And the flame sends them to HIM who created them, so that the enemies do not take possession of them.

2 BARUCH 112 BARUCH 11:1

Now this I, Baruch, say to you, O Babylon: If you had lived in happiness and Zion in its splendor, it would have been a great sorrow to us that you had been equal to Zion.

2 BARUCH 11:2

But now, behold, the grief is infinite and the lamentation is unmeasurable, because, behold, you are happy and Zion has been destroyed.

2 BARUCH 11:3

Who will judge over these things? Or to whom shall we complain about that which has befallen us?

2 BARUCH 11:4

O YAHWEH, how have YOU borne it? Our fathers went to rest without grief and, behold, the righteous sleep at rest in the earth.

2 BARUCH 11:5

For they did not know this anguish nor did they hear that which has befallen us.

2 BARUCH 11:6

Would that you had ears, O earth and would that you had a heart, O dust, so that you might go and announce in the realm of death and say to the dead,

2 BARUCH 11:7

"You are more happy than we who live."

2 BARUCH 12

2 BARUCH 12:1

But I shall say as I think and I shall speak to you, O land, that which is happy.

2 BARUCH 12:2

The afternoon will not always burn nor will the rays of the sun always give light.

2 BARUCH 12:3

Do not think and do not expect that you will always have happiness and joy, and do not raise yourself too much and do not oppress.

2 BARUCH 12:4

For surely wrath will arise against you in its own time, because long-suffering is now held back, as it were, by reins.

2 BARUCH 12:5

And having said these things, I fasted for seven days.

2 BARUCH 13

The nations will be judged

2 BARUCH 13:1

And after these things, it happened that I, Baruch, was standing on Mount Zion and, behold, a voice came from the high heavens, saying to me:

2 BARUCH 13:2

Stand upon your feet, Baruch, and hear the Word of the ALMIGHTY YAHWEH.

2 BARUCH 13:3

Because you have been astonished at that which has befallen Zion, you will surely be preserved until the end of times to be for a testimony.

2 BARUCH 13:4

This means that if these happy cities will ever say, "Why has the ALMIGHTY YAHWEH brought upon us this retribution?",

2 BARUCH 13:5

You and those who are like you, those who have seen this evil and retribution coming over you and your nation in their own time, may say to them that the nations will be thoroughly punished."

2 BARUCH 13:6

And this they may expect.

2 BARUCH 13:7

And when they say in that time, "When?", you will say to them:

2 BARUCH 13:8

You who have drunk the clarified wine, you now drink its dregs, for the judgment of YAHWEH the Most High is impartial.

2 BARUCH 13:9

Therefore, HE did not spare HIS own sons first, but HE afflicted them as HIS enemies because they sinned.

2 BARUCH 13:10

Therefore, they were once punished, that they might be forgiven.

2 BARUCH 13:11

But now, you nations and tribes, you are guilty, because you have trodden the earth all this time, and because you have used creation unrighteously.

2 BARUCH 13:12

For I have always benefited you, and you have always denied the beneficence.

2 BARUCH 14

What is the profit of being righteous?

2 BARUCH 14:1

And I answered and said: Behold, YOU have shown me the course of times, and that which will happen after these things.

2 BARUCH 14:2

And YOU have told me that the retribution of that which has been spoken by YOU will come upon the nations. And now, I know there are many who have sinned and who have lived in happiness and who have left the world, but there will be few nations left in those times to which those Words can be spoken which YOU said.

2 BARUCH 14:3

For what is the advantage (of this), or what evil worse than that which we have seen befall us can we expect to see?

2 BARUCH 14:4

But I will continue to speak before YOU.

2 BARUCH 14:5

What have they profited who have knowledge before YOU, and who did not walk in vanity like the rest of the nations, and who did not say to the dead: "Give life to us," but always feared YOU and did not leave YOUR ways?

2 BARUCH 14:6

And, behold, they have been diligent and, nevertheless, YOU had no mercy on Zion on their account.

2 BARUCH 14:7

And if there are others who did evil, Zion should have been forgiven on account of the works of those who did morally right works and should not have been overwhelmed because of the works of those who acted unrighteously.

2 BARUCH 14:8

O YAHWEH, Sovereign Master, who can understand YOUR judgment? Or who can explore the depth of YOUR way?

2 BARUCH 14:9

Or who can discern the majesty of YOUR path? Or who can discern YOUR incomprehensible counsel? Or who of those who are born has ever discovered the beginning and the end of YOUR Wisdom?

2 BARUCH 14:10

For we all have been made like breath.

2 BARUCH 14:11

For as breath ascends without human control and vanishes, so it is with the nature of men, who do not go away according to their own will, and who do not know what will happen to them in the end.

2 BARUCH 14:12

For the righteous justly have excellent hope for the end and go away from this habitation without fear because they possess with YOU a store of morally right works which is preserved in treasuries.

2 BARUCH 14:13

Therefore, they leave this world without fear and are confident of the world which YOU have promised to them with an expectation full of joy.

2 BARUCH 14:14

But woe to those of us who have also now been treated shamefully and who await evils at that time.

2 BARUCH 14:15

But YOU know exactly what YOU have made of YOUR servants, for we are not able to understand that which is excellent like YOU, YAHWEH our Creator.

2 BARUCH 14:16

I shall continue to speak before YOUR presence, O YAHWEH, Sovereign Master.

2 BARUCH 14:17

When in the beginning the world did not exist with its inhabitants, YOU devised and spoke by means of YOUR Word and at the same time the works of YOUR creation stood before YOU.

2 BARUCH 14:18

And YOU said that YOU would make a man for this world as a guardian over YOUR works that it should be known that he was not created for the world, but the world for him.

2 BARUCH 14:19

And now, I see that the world which was made for us, behold, it remains; but we, for whom it was made, depart.

2 BARUCH 15

2 BARUCH 15:1

And YAHWEH answered and said to me: You are rightly astonished about man's departure, but your judgment about the evils which befell those who sin is incorrect.

2 BARUCH 15:2

And with regard to what you say about the righteous who are taken away and the wicked ones who are happy,

2 BARUCH 15:3

And with regard to what you say that man does not know your judgment,

2 BARUCH 15:4

For this reason, now, listen and I shall speak to you; pay attention and I shall let MY Words be heard.

2 BARUCH 15:5

It is true that man would not have understood MY judgment if he had not received the Torah and if he were not instructed with understanding.

2 BARUCH 15:6

But now, because he trespassed, having understanding, he will be punished because he has understanding.

2 BARUCH 15:7

And with regard to the righteous ones, those whom you said the world has come on their account, yes, also that which is coming is on their account.

2 BARUCH 15:8

For this world is to them a struggle and an effort with much trouble. And that accordingly which will come, a crown with great splendor.

2 BARUCH 16

2 BARUCH 16:1

And I answered and said: O YAHWEH, Sovereign Master, behold, the present years are few and evil, and who can inherit that which is unmeasurable in this short time?

2 BARUCH 17

2 BARUCH 17:1

And YAHWEH answered and said to me: With the Most High no account is taken of much time and of few years.

2 BARUCH 17:2

For what did it profit Adam that he lived nine hundred and thirty years and transgressed that which he was commanded?

2 BARUCH 17:3

Therefore, the multitude of time that he lived did not profit him, but it brought death and cut off the years of those who were born from him.

2 BARUCH 17:4

Or what did it harm Mosheh that he lived only one hundred and twenty years and, because he subjected himself to HIM who created him, he brought the Torah to the descendants of Yacob and he lighted a lamp to the generation of Yisrael?

2 BARUCH 18

2 BARUCH 18:1

And I answered and said: He who lighted took from the light, and there are few who imitated him.

2 BARUCH 18:2

But many whom he illuminated took from the darkness of Adam and did not rejoice in the light of the lamp.

2 BARUCH 19

2 BARUCH 19:1

And HE answered and said to me: Therefore he appointed a covenant for them at that time and said, "Behold, I appoint for you Life and death," and HE called heaven and earth as a witness against them.

2 BARUCH 19:2

For he knew that his time was short, but that heaven and earth will stay forever.

2 BARUCH 19:3

They, however, sinned and trespassed after his death, although they knew that they had the Torah to reprove them and that Light in which nothing could err, apart from the spheres, which witnessed, and ME. And I judge everything that exists.

2 BARUCH 19:4

You, however, should not think about this in your heart and you should not be afflicted because of the things which have been.

2 BARUCH 19:5

For now the end of times is at stake whether it be property, happiness, or shame; and not its beginning.

2 BARUCH 19:6

For when a man is happy in his youth and is treated badly in his old age, he forgets all happiness he possessed.

2 BARUCH 19:7

And further, when a man is badly treated in his youth but will be happy in the end, he does not remember his unhappiness anymore.

2 BARUCH 19:8

And further, listen: Even if everyone had been happy continually since the day death was decreed against those who trespassed, but was destroyed in the end, everything would have been in vain.

2 BARUCH 20

2 BARUCH 20:1

Therefore, behold, the days will come and the times will hasten, more than the former, and the periods will hasten more than those which are gone, and the years will pass more quickly than the present ones.

2 BARUCH 20:2

Therefore, I now took away Zion to visit the world in its own time more speedily.

2 BARUCH 20:3

Now, however, remember everything which I commanded you and seal it in the interior of your mind.

2 BARUCH 20:4

And then I shall show you MY strong judgment and MY unexplorable ways.

2 BARUCH 20:5

Therefore, go away and sanctify yourself for seven days and do not eat bread and do not drink water and do not speak to anybody.

2 BARUCH 20:6

And after this time come to this place, and I shall reveal MYSELF to you, and I shall speak to you true things, and I shall command you with regard to the course of times, for they will come and will not tarry.

2 BARUCH 21

Prayer of Baruch, the Son of Neriah

2 BARUCH 21:1

I went from there and sat in the valley of Kidron in a cave of the earth and sanctified myself there and ate no bread, but I was not hungry; I drank no water, but I was not thirsty. And I stayed there until the seventh day as YAHWEH had commanded me.

2 BARUCH 21:2

And after this I came to the place where HE had spoken with me.

2 BARUCH 21:3

And it happened at sunset that my soul received many thoughts, and I began to speak in the presence of YAHWEH the Mighty One, and said:

2 BARUCH 21:4

O hear me, YOU who created the earth, the one who fixed the firmament by the Word and fastened the height of heaven by the Ruach, the one who in the beginning of the world called that which did not yet exist and they obeyed YOU.

2 BARUCH 21:5

YOU who gave commandments to the air with YOUR sign and have seen the things which are to come as well as those which have passed.

2 BARUCH 21:6

YOU who reign with great thoughts over the powers which stand before YOU, and who rules with indignation the countless kodesh beings, who are flame and fire, whom YOU created from the beginning, those who stand around YOUR throne.

2 BARUCH 21:7

For YOU alone (all) this exists so that YOU may create at once all that YOU want.

2 BARUCH 21:8

YOU are the one who causes the rain to fall on earth with a specific number of raindrops. YOU alone know the end of times before it has arrived. Hear my prayer.

2 BARUCH 21:9

For only YOU can sustain those who exist, those who have gone and those who will come, those who sin and those who have proved themselves to be righteous, since YOU are the Living One, the Inscrutable One.

2 BARUCH 21:10

For YOU are the only Living One, the Immortal One and the Inscrutable One, and YOU know the number of men.

2 BARUCH 21:11

And while many have sinned once, many others have proved themselves to be righteous.

2 BARUCH 21:12

YOU know where YOU have preserved the end of those who have sinned or the fulfillment of those who have proved themselves to be righteous.

2 BARUCH 21:13

For if only this life exists which everyone possesses here, nothing could be more bitter than this.

2 BARUCH 21:14

For of what help is strength which changes into weakness, or food in abundance which changes into famine, or beauty which changes into ugliness?

2 BARUCH 21:15

For the nature of men is always changeable.

2 BARUCH 21:16

For as we were once, we are no longer, and as we are now, we shall not remain in the future.

2 BARUCH 21:17

For if an end of all things had not been prepared, their beginning would have been senseless.

2 BARUCH 21:18

But let me know all that which comes from YOU, and regarding that which I ask YOU, enlighten me.

2 BARUCH 21:19

How long will corruption remain, and until when will the time of mortals be happy, and until when will those who pass away be polluted by the great wickedness in this world?

2 BARUCH 21:20

Therefore, command mercifully and confirm all that YOU have said that YOU would do so that YOUR Power will be recognized by those who believe that YOUR long-suffering means weakness.

2 BARUCH 21:21

And now show it to them, those who do not know, but who have seen that which has befallen us and our city, up to now, that it is in agreement with the long-suffering of YOUR Power, because YOU called us a beloved people on account of YOUR NAME.

2 BARUCH 21:22

From now, therefore, everything is in a state of dying.

2 BARUCH 21:23

Therefore, reprove the malak of death, and let YOUR splendor appear, and let the greatness of YOUR beauty be known, and let the realm of death be sealed so that it may not receive the dead from this time, and let the treasures of the souls restore those who are enclosed in them.

2 BARUCH 21:24

For as many years have passed as those which passed since the days of Abraham, Yitschaq, and Yacob and all those who were like them, who sleep in the earth-those on whose account YOU have said YOU have created the world.

2 BARUCH 21:25

And now, show YOUR splendor soon and do not postpone that which was promised by YOU.

2 BARUCH 21:26

And it happened that when I had ended the words of this prayer, I became very weak.

2 BARUCH 22

2 BARUCH 22:1

And afterward it happened that, behold, the heaven was opened, and I saw and strength was given to me, and a Voice was heard from on high which said to me:

2 BARUCH 22:2

Baruch, Baruch, why are you disturbed?

2 BARUCH 22:3

Who starts on a journey and does not complete it? Or who will be comforted making a sea voyage unless he can reach a harbor?

2 BARUCH 22:4

Or he who promises to give a present to somebody; is it not a theft, unless it is fulfilled?

2 BARUCH 22:5

Or he who sows the earth; does he not lose everything unless he reaps its harvest in its own time?

2 BARUCH 22:6

Or he who plants a vineyard; does the planter expect to receive fruit from it, unless it grows until its appointed time?

2 BARUCH 22:7

Or a woman who has conceived; does she not surely kill the child when she bears untimely?

2 BARUCH 22:8

Or he who builds a house, can it be called a house, unless it is provided with a roof and is finished? Tell this to ME first.

2 BARUCH 23

2 BARUCH 23:1

And I answered and said: No, YAHWEH, the Sovereign Master.

2 BARUCH 23:2

And HE answered and said to me: Why, then, are you disturbed about that which you do not know, and why are you restless about that of which you do not possess any knowledge?

2 BARUCH 23:3

For as you have not forgotten men who exist and who have passed away, I remember those who will come.

2 BARUCH 23:4

For when Adam sinned and death was decreed against those who were to be born, the multitude of those who would be born was numbered. And for that number a place was prepared where the living ones might live and where the dead might be preserved.

2 BARUCH 23:5

No creature will live again unless the number that has been appointed is completed. For MY Ruach creates the living, and the realm of death receives the dead.

2 BARUCH 23:6

And further, it is given to you to hear that which will come after these times.

2 BARUCH 23:7

For truly, MY yashuah (salvation) which comes has drawn near and is not as far away as before.

2 BARUCH 24

2 BARUCH 24:1

For behold, the days are coming, and the scrolls will be opened in which are written the sins of all those who have sinned, and moreover, also the treasures in which are brought together the righteousness of all those who have proven themselves to be righteous.

2 BARUCH 24:2

And it will happen at that time that you shall see, and many with you, the long-suffering of YAHWEH the Most High, which lasts from generation to generation, who has been long-suffering toward all who are born, both those who sinned and those who proved themselves to be righteous.

2 BARUCH 24:3

And I answered and said: But, behold, O YAHWEH, a man does not know the number of things which pass away nor those which come.

2 BARUCH 24:4

For behold, I also know what has befallen me; but that which will happen with our enemies, I do not know, or when YOU will command YOUR works.

2 BARUCH 25

2 BARUCH 25:1

And YAHWEH answered and said to me: You also will be preserved until that time, namely until that sign which YAHWEH the Most High will bring about before the inhabitants of the earth at the end of days.

2 BARUCH 25:2

This then will be the sign:

2 BARUCH 25:3

When horror seizes the inhabitants of earth, and they fall into many tribulations and further, they fall into great torments.

2 BARUCH 25:4

And it will happen that they will say in their thoughts because of their great tribulations, "YAHWEH the Mighty One does not anymore remember the earth"; It will happen when they lose hope, that the time will awake.

2 BARUCH 26

The apocalypse of the twelve calamities and the coming of the Messiah

2 BARUCH 26:1

And I answered and said: That tribulation which will be will it last a long time; and that distress, will it embrace many years?

2 BARUCH 27

2 BARUCH 27:1

And YAHWEH answered and said to me: That time will be divided into twelve parts, and each part has been preserved for that for which it was appointed.

2 BARUCH 27:2

In the first part: the beginning of commotions.

2 BARUCH 27:3

In the second part: the slaughtering of the great.

2 BARUCH 27:4

In the third part: the fall of many into death.

2 BARUCH 27:5

In the fourth part: the drawing of the sword.

2 BARUCH 27:6

In the fifth part: famine and the withholding of rain.

2 BARUCH 27:7

In the sixth part: earthquakes and terrors.

2 BARUCH 27:8

In the eighth part: a multitude of ghosts and the appearances of demons.

2 BARUCH 27:9

In the ninth part: the fall of fire.

2 BARUCH 27:10

In the tenth part: rape and much violence.

2 BARUCH 27:11

In the eleventh part: injustice and unchastity.

2 BARUCH 27:12

In the twelfth part: disorder and a mixture of all that has been before.

2 BARUCH 27:13

These parts of that time will be preserved and will be mixed, one with another, and they will minister to each other.

2 BARUCH 27:14

For some of these parts will withhold a part of themselves and take from others and will accomplish that which belongs to them and to others; hence, those who live on earth in those days will not understand that it is the end of times.

2 BARUCH 28

2 BARUCH 28:1

But everyone who will understand will be wise at that time.

2 BARUCH 28:2

For the measure and the calculation of that time will be two parts: weeks of seven weeks.

2 BARUCH 28:3

And I answered and said: It is excellent that man should come so far and see, but it is better that he should not come so far lest he fall.

2 BARUCH 28:4

But I shall also say this:

2 BARUCH 28:5

Will he who is incorruptible despise those who are corruptible, and will he despise what happens with those who are corruptible so that he might only look to those who are not corruptible?

2 BARUCH 28:6

But when, YAHWEH, these things will surely come of which YOU spoke to me before, let me also know this, if I have found free unmerited favor and pardon in YOUR eyes:

2 BARUCH 28:7

Is it in one place or in one part of the earth that these things will come or will they be noticed by the whole earth?

2 BARUCH 29

2 BARUCH 29:7

And YAHWEH answered and said to me: That which will happen at that time bears upon the whole earth. Therefore, all who live will notice it.

2 BARUCH 29:2

For at that time I shall only protect those found in this land at that time.

2 BARUCH 29:3

And it will happen that when all that which should come to pass in these parts has been accomplished, the Anointed One will begin to be revealed.

2 BARUCH 29:4

And Behemoth will reveal itself from its place, and Leviathan will come from the sea, the two great monsters which I created on the fifth day of creation and which I shall have kept until that time. And they will be nourishment for all who are left.

2 BARUCH 29:5

The earth will also yield fruits ten thousand fold. And on one vine will be one thousand branches, and one branch will produce one thousand clusters, and one cluster will produce one thousand grapes, and one grape will produce a cor of wine.

2 BARUCH 29:6

And those who are hungry will enjoy themselves and they will, moreover, see marvels every day.

2 BARUCH 29:7

For winds will go out in front of ME every morning to bring the fragrance of aromatic fruits and clouds at the end of the day to distill the dew of health.

2 BARUCH 29:8

And it will happen at that time that the treasury of manna will come down again from on high, and they will eat of it in those years because these are they who will have arrived at the consummation of time.

2 BARUCH 30

2 BARUCH 30:1

And it will happen after these things when the time of the appearance of the Anointed One has been fulfilled and He returns with splendor, that then all who sleep in hope of Him will rise.

2 BARUCH 30:2

And it will happen at that time that those treasures will be opened in which the number of the souls of the righteous were kept, and they will go out and the multitudes of the souls will appear together, in One assemblage, of one mind. And the first ones will enjoy themselves and the last ones will not be sad.

2 BARUCH 30:3

For they know that the time has come of which it is said that it is the end of times.

2 BARUCH 30:4

But the souls of the wicked will the more waste away when they shall see all these things.

2 BARUCH 30:5

For they know that their torment has come and that their perditions have arrived.

2 BARUCH 31

Baruch speaks to the people

2 BARUCH 31:1

And it happened after these things, that I went to the people and said to them: Assemble to me all our elders and I shall speak words to you.

2 BARUCH 31:2

I And they all assembled in the valley of the Kidron.

2 BARUCH 31:3

And I began to speak and said to them: Hear, O Yisrael, and I shall speak to you, and you, O seed of Yacob, pay attention, and I shall teach you.

2 BARUCH 31:4

Do not forget Zion but remember the distress of Yerusalem.

2 BARUCH 31:5

For, behold, the days are coming, that all that has been will be taken away to be destroyed, and it will become as though it had not been.

2 BARUCH 32

2 BARUCH 32:1

You, however, if you prepare your minds to sow into them the fruits of the Torah, YAHWEH shall protect you in the time in which YAHWEH the Mighty One shall shake the entire creation.

2 BARUCH 32:2

For after a short time, the building of Zion will be shaken in order that it will be rebuilt.

2 BARUCH 32:3

That building will not remain; but it will again be uprooted after some time and will remain desolate for a time.

2 BARUCH 32:4

And after that it is necessary that it will be renewed in splendor and that it will be perfected into eternity.

2 BARUCH 32:5

We should not, therefore, be so sad regarding the evil which has come now, but much more (distressed) regarding that which is in the future.

2 BARUCH 32:6

For greater than the two evils will be the trial when YAHWEH the Mighty One will renew HIS creation.

2 BARUCH 32:7

And now, do not draw near to me for some days and do not call upon me until I shall come to you.

2 BARUCH 32:8

And it happened after having said all these words to them that I, Baruch, went my way. And when the people saw that I went away, they raised their voices and lamented and said:

2 BARUCH 32:9

Where are you going from us, Baruch, and do you leave us as a father who leaves his children as orphans and goes away from them?

2 BARUCH 33

2 BARUCH 33:1

These are the commands which your friend YermeYah, the prophet, gave to you. And he said to you,

2 BARUCH 33:2

"Look to this people during the time I am absent, while I help the rest of our brothers in Babylon, against whom has been declared the sentence that they should be carried away into captivity."

2 BARUCH 33:3

And now, if you abandon us too, it would have been better for all of us that we shall die first, and that then you should abandon us.

2 BARUCH 34

2 BARUCH 34:1

And I answered and said to the people:

Heaven forbid that I should abandon you or that I should go away from you. But I shall go to the Kodesh of Ha Kodeshim to ask from YAHWEH the Mighty One on behalf of you and Zion so that I may receive in some ways more Light, and after that I shall return to you.

2 BARUCH 35

The apocalypse of the forest, the vine, the fountain, and the cedar

2 BARUCH 35:1

And I, Baruch, went to the Kodesh place and sat on the ruins and wept and said:

2 BARUCH 35:2

O that my eyes were springs, and my eyelids, that they were a fountain of tears.

2 BARUCH 35:3

For how shall I be sad over Zion, and lament over Yerusalem?

2 BARUCH 35:4

For at the place where now I am prostrate, the high kohenim used to offer Kodesh sacrifices, and placed thereon incense of fragrant spices.

2 BARUCH 35:5

Now, however, that of which we are proud has become dust, and that which our soul desired is ashes.

2 BARUCH 36

2 BARUCH 36:1

And when I had said this, I fell asleep at that place and saw a vision in the night.

2 BARUCH 36:2

And behold there was a forest with trees that was planted on the plain and surrounded by high mountains and rugged rocks. And the forest occupied much space.

2 BARUCH 36:3

And behold, over against it a vine arose, and from under it a fountain (ran) peacefully.

2 BARUCH 36:4

And that fountain came to the forest and changed into great waves, and those waves submerged the forest and suddenly uprooted the entire forest and overthrew all the mountains which surrounded it.

2 BARUCH 36:5

And the height of the forest became low, and that top of the mountains became low. And that fountain became so strong that it left nothing of the great forest except one cedar.

2 BARUCH 36:6

When it had also cast that one down, it destroyed the entire forest and uprooted it so that nothing was left of it, and its place was not even known anymore. Then that vine arrived with the fountain in shalom and in great tranquillity and arrived at a place which was not far away from the cedar, and they brought to him that cedar which had been cast down.

2 BARUCH 36:7

And I saw, and behold, that vine opened its mouth and spoke and said to the cedar, "Are you not that cedar which remained of the forest of wickedness? Because of you, wickedness remained and has been done during all these years, but never goodness.

2 BARUCH 36:8

And you possessed power over that which did not belong to you; you did not even show compassion to that which did belong to you. And you extended your power over those who were living far from you, and you keep those who are close to you in the nets of your wickedness, and you uplift your soul always like one who could not be uprooted.

2 BARUCH 36:9

But now your time has hastened and your hour has come.

2 BARUCH 36:10

Therefore O cedar, follow the forest which has departed before you and become ashes with it, and let your earth be mixed together.

2 BARUCH 36:11

And now, sleep in distress and rest in pain until your last time comes in which you will return to be tormented even more."

2 BARUCH 37

2 BARUCH 37:1

And after these things I saw that the cedar was burning and the vine growing, while it and all around it became a valley full of unfading flowers. And I awoke and arose.

2 BARUCH 38

Interpretation of the apocalypse

2 BARUCH 38:1

And I prayed and said: O YAHWEH, the Sovereign Master, YOU are the ONE who has always enlightened those who conduct themselves with understanding.

2 BARUCH 38:2

YOUR Torah is Life, and YOUR wisdom is the right way.

2 BARUCH 38:3

Now, show me the explanation of this vision.

2 BARUCH 38:4

For YOU know that my soul has always been associated with YOUR Torah, and that I did not depart from YOUR wisdom from my earliest days.

2 BARUCH 39

2 BARUCH 39:1

And YAHWEH answered and said to me: Baruch, this is the explanation of the vision which you have seen.

2 BARUCH 39:2

As you have seen the great forest surrounded by high and rocky mountains, this is the world:

2 BARUCH 39:3

Behold, the days will come when this kingdom that destroyed Zion once will be destroyed and that it will be subjected to that which will come after it.

2 BARUCH 39:4

This again will also be destroyed after some time. And another, a third, will rise and also that will possess power in its own time and will be destroyed.

2 BARUCH 39:5

After that a fourth kingdom arises whose power is harsher and more evil than those which were before it, and it will reign a multitude of times like the trees on the plain, and it will rule the times and exalt itself more than the cedars of Lebanon.

2 BARUCH 39:6

And the Truth will hide itself in this and all who are polluted with unrighteousness will flee to it like the evil beasts flee and creep into the forest.

2 BARUCH 39:7

And it will happen when the time of its fulfillment is approaching in which it will fall, that at that time the dominion of MY Anointed One which is like the fountain and the vine, will be revealed. And when it has revealed itself, it will uproot the multitude of its host.

2 BARUCH 39:8

And that which you have seen, namely the tall cedar, which remained of that forest, and with regard to the words which the vine said to it which you heard, this is the meaning.

2 BARUCH 40

2 BARUCH 40:1

The last ruler who is left alive at that time will be bound, whereas the entire host will be destroyed. And they will carry Him on Mount Zion, and MY Anointed One will convict him of all his wicked deeds and will assemble and set before him all the works of his hosts.

2 BARUCH 40:2

And after these things He will kill him and protect the rest of MY people who will be found in the place that I have chosen.

2 BARUCH 40:3

And His dominion will last forever until the world of corruption has ended and until the times which have been mentioned before have been fulfilled.

2 BARUCH 40:4

This is your vision, and this is its explanation.

2 BARUCH 41

About the apostates and the believers

2 BARUCH 41:1

And I answered and said: For whom and for how many will these things be? Or who will be worthy to live in that time?

2 BARUCH 41:2

I shall now say before YOU everything that I think, and I shall ask YOU about the things of which I meditate.

2 BARUCH 41:3

For behold, I see many of YOUR people who separated themselves from YOUR statutes and who have cast away from them the yoke of YOUR Torah.

2 BARUCH 41:4

Further, I have seen others who left behind their vanity and who have fled under YOUR wings.

2 BARUCH 41:5

What will, therefore, happen with those? Or how will that last time receive them?

2 BARUCH 41:6

Their time will surely not be weighed exactly, and they will certainly not be judged as the scale indicates?

2 BARUCH 42

2 BARUCH 42:1

And YAHWEH answered and said to me:

2 BARUCH 42:2

Also these things I shall show you. As for what you said: "To whom and to how many will these things be?" The tov that was mentioned before will be to those who have believed, and the opposite of these things will be to those who have despised.

2 BARUCH 42:3

And as for that which you said with regard to those who have drawn near and to those who have withdrawn, this is the explanation.

2 BARUCH 42:4

As for those who have first subjected themselves and have withdrawn later and who mingled themselves with the seed of the mingled nations, their first time will be considered as mountains.

2 BARUCH 42:5

And those who first did not know Life and who later knew it exactly and who mingled with the seed of the people who have separated themselves, their first time will be considered as mountains.

2 BARUCH 42:6

And times will inherit times, and periods periods, and they will receive from one another. And then, with a view to the end, all will be compared according to the length of times and the hours of periods.

2 BARUCH 42:7

For corruption will take away those who belong to it, and Life those who belong to it.

2 BARUCH 42:8

And dust will be called, and told, "Give back that which does not belong to you and raise up all that you have kept until its own time."

2 BARUCH 43

2 BARUCH 43:1

You, however, Baruch, strengthen your heart with a view to that which has been said to you, and understand that which has been revealed to you because you have many consolations which will last forever.

2 BARUCH 43:2

For you will go away from this place and leave the regions which are now before your eyes. And you shall forget that which is corruptible and not again remember that which is among the mortal ones.

2 BARUCH 43:3

Go away, therefore, and command your people and come to this place and afterward fast seven days. And then I shall come to you and speak with you.

2 BARUCH 44

Baruch speaks to the people

2 BARUCH 44:1

And I, Baruch, went from there and came to my people and called my first-born son and the Gedaliahs, my friends, and seven of the elders of the people and said to them:

2 BARUCH 44:2

Behold, I go to my fathers in accordance with the way of the whole earth.

2 BARUCH 44:3

You, however, do not withdraw from the way of the Torah, but guard and admonish the people who are left lest they withdraw from the commandments of YAHWEH the Mighty One.

2 BARUCH 44:4

For you see that HE whom we serve is righteous and that our Creator is impartial.

2 BARUCH 44:5

And see what has befallen Zion and what happened to Yerusalem,

2 BARUCH 44:6

that the judgment of YAHWEH the Mighty One will be made known, as well as HIS ways which are inscrutable and right.

2 BARUCH 44:7

For when you endure and persevere in HIS fear and do not forget HIS Torah, the time again will take a turn for the better for you. And they will participate in the consolation of Zion.

2 BARUCH 44:8

For that which is now is nothing. But that which is in the future will be very great.

2 BARUCH 44:9

For everything will pass away which is corruptible, and everything that dies will go away, and all present time will be forgotten, and there will be no remembrance of the present time which is polluted by evils.

2 BARUCH 44:10

For he who runs now runs in vain and he who is happy will fall quickly and be humiliated.

2 BARUCH 44:11

For that which will be in the future, that is what one will look for, and that which comes later, that is what we shall hope for. For there is a time that does not pass away.

2 BARUCH 44:12

And that period is coming which will remain forever; and there is the new world which does not carry back to corruption those who enter into its beginning, and which has no mercy on those who come into torment or those who are living in it, and it does not carry to perdition.

2 BARUCH 44:13

For those are the ones who will inherit this time of which it is spoken, and to these is the heritage of the promised time.

2 BARUCH 44:14

These are they who prepared for themselves treasures of wisdom. And stores of insight are found with them. And they have not withdrawn from mercy and they have preserved the Truth of the Torah.

2 BARUCH 44:15

For the coming world will be given to these, but the habitation of the many others will be in the fire.

2 BARUCH 45

2 BARUCH 45:1

You, therefore, admonish the people as much as you can. For this is our work.

2 BARUCH 45:2

For, when you instruct them, you will make them alive.

2 BARUCH 46

2 BARUCH 46:1

And my son and the elders of the people said to me: Did YAHWEH the Mighty One humiliate us to such an extent that HE will take you away from us quickly?

2 BARUCH 46:2

And shall we truly be in darkness, and will there be no Light anymore for that people who are left?

2 BARUCH 46:3

For where shall we again investigate the Torah, or who will distinguish between death and Life for us?

2 BARUCH 46:4

And I said to them: I cannot resist the throne of YAHWEH the Mighty One. But Yisrael will not be in want of a wise man, nor the tribe of Yacob, a son of the Torah.

2 BARUCH 46:5

But only prepare your heart so that you obey the Torah, and be subject to those who are wise and understanding with fear. And prepare your soul that you shall not depart from them.

2 BARUCH 46:6

If you do this, those pleasant tidings will come to you of which I spoke to you earlier, and you will not fall into the torment of which I spoke to you earlier.

2 BARUCH 46:7

But with regard to the word that I shall be taken up, I did not let it be known to them at that time, not even to my son.

2 BARUCH 47

2 BARUCH 47:1

And after I had left, having dismissed them, I returned from there and said to them: Behold, I go to Hebron, for to there YAHWEH the Mighty One has sent me.

2 BARUCH 47:2

And I arrived at that place where the Word was spoken to me, and I sat there and fasted seven days.

2 BARUCH 48

Prayer of Baruch

2 BARUCH 48:1

And it happened after seven days that I prayed before YAHWEH the Mighty One and said:

2 BARUCH 48:2

O YAHWEH, YOU summon the coming of the times, and they stand before YOU. YOU cause the display of power of the worlds to pass away and they do not resist YOU. YOU arrange the course of the periods, and they obey YOU.

2 BARUCH 48:3

Only YOU know the length of the generations, and YOU do not reveal YOUR secrets to many.

2 BARUCH 48:4

YOU make known the multitude of the fire, and YOU weigh the lightness of the wind.

2 BARUCH 48:5

YOU investigate the end of the heights, and YOU scrutinize the depths of darkness.

2 BARUCH 48:6

YOU command the number which will pass away, and which will be preserved. And YOU prepare a house for those who will be.

2 BARUCH 48:7

YOU remember the beginning which YOU created, and YOU do not forget that destruction which will come.

2 BARUCH 48:8

With signs of fear and threat YOU command the flames, and they change into winds. And with the Word YOU bring to Life that which does not exist, and with great Power YOU hold that which has not yet come.

2 BARUCH 48:9

YOU instruct the creation with YOUR understanding, and YOU give wisdom to the spheres so that they minister according to their positions.

2 BARUCH 48:10

Innumerable hosts stand before YOU, and serve peacefully YOUR sign according to their positions.

2 BARUCH 48:11

Hear YOUR servant, and regard my appeal.

2 BARUCH 48:12

For we are born in a short time, and in a short time we return.

2 BARUCH 48:13

With YOU, however, the hours are like times, and the days like generations.

2 BARUCH 48:14

Be, therefore, not angry at man because he is nothing; and do not take count of our works; for what are we?

2 BARUCH 48:15

For behold, by YOUR gift we come into the world, and we do go not of our own will.

2 BARUCH 48:16

For we did not say to our parents: "Beget us," nor have we sent to the realm of death saying: "Receive us."

2 BARUCH 48:17

What therefore is our strength that we can bear YOUR wrath, or what are we that we can endure YOUR judgment?

2 BARUCH 48:18

Protect us in YOUR free unmerited favor and pardon, and in YOUR mercy help us.

2 BARUCH 48:19

Look at the small ones who submit to YOU, and deliver all those who come to YOU. And do not take away the hope of our people, and do not make short the times of our help.

2 BARUCH 48:20

For these are the people whom YOU have elected, and this is the nation of which YOU found no equal.

2 BARUCH 48:21

But I shall speak to YOU now, and I shall say as my heart thinks.

2 BARUCH 48:22

In YOU we have put our trust, because, behold, YOUR Torah is with us, and we know that we do not fall as long as we keep YOUR statutes.

2 BARUCH 48:23

We shall always be blessed; at least, we did not mingle with the nations. For we are all a people of the NAME; we, who received one Torah from YAHWEH the One.

2 BARUCH 48:24

And that Torah that is among us will help us, and that excellent wisdom which is in us will support us.

2 BARUCH 48:25

And when I had prayed these things I became very weak.

2 BARUCH 48:26

And HE answered and said to me: You have prayed honestly, Baruch, and all your words have been heard.

2 BARUCH 48:27

But MY judgment asks for its own, and MY Torah demands its right.

2 BARUCH 48:28

For from your words I shall answer you, and from your prayer I shall speak with you.

2 BARUCH 48:29

Because it is as follows: There is nothing that will be destroyed unless it acted wickedly, if it had been able to do something without remembering MY goodness and accepting MY long-suffering.

2 BARUCH 48:30

For this reason surely you will be taken up, as I said to you before.

2 BARUCH 48:31

And the time will come of which I spoke to you and that true is appearing which brings affliction. For it will come and pass away with enormous vehemence; and arriving in the heat of indignation, it will be turbulent.

2 BARUCH 48:32

And it will be in those days that all inhabitants of the earth will live with each other in shalom, because they do not know that MY judgment has come near.

2 BARUCH 48:33

For in that time there will not be found many wise men and there will also be not many intelligent ones, but, in addition, they who know will be silent more and more.

2 BARUCH 48:34

And there will be many tidings and not a few rumors, and the works of the phantoms will be visible, and not a few promises will be told, some idle and others affirmed.

2 BARUCH 48:35

And honor will change itself into shame, and strength will be humiliated to contempt, and the strong one will be broken down, and beauty will become contemptible.

2 BARUCH 48:36

And many will say to many in that time, "Where did the multitude of intelligence hide itself and where did the multitude of wisdom depart?"

2 BARUCH 48:37

And when one thinks about these things, jealousy will arise in those who did not think much of themselves; and passion will take hold of those who were peaceful; and many will be agitated by wrath to injure many; and they will raise armies to shed blood; and they will perish with those in the end.

2 BARUCH 48:38

And it will happen in that time that a change of times will reveal itself openly for the eyes of everyone because they polluted themselves in all those times and caused oppression, and each one walked in his own works and did not remember the Torah of YAHWEH the Mighty One.

2 BARUCH 48:39

Therefore, a fire will consume their thoughts, and with a flame the meditations of their kidneys will be examined. For the Judge will come and will not hesitate.

2 BARUCH 48:40

For each of the inhabitants of the earth knew when he acted unrighteously, and they did not know MY Torah because of their pride.

2 BARUCH 48:41

But many will surely weep at that time-more, however, because of the living ones than of the dead.

2 BARUCH 48:42

And I answered and said: O Adam, what did you do to all who were born after you? And what will be said of the first Eve who obeyed the serpent,

2 BARUCH 48:43

so that this whole multitude is going to corruption? And countless are those whom the fire devours.

2 BARUCH 48:44

But again I shall speak before YOU.

2 BARUCH 48:45

YOU, O YAHWEH, Sovereign Master, YOU know that which is in YOUR creation,

2 BARUCH 48:46

for YOU commanded the dust one day to produce Adam; and YOU knew the number of those who are born from him and how they sinned before YOU, those who existed and who did not recognize YOU as their Creator.

2 BARUCH 48:47

And concerning all of those, their end will put them to shame, and YOUR Torah which they transgressed will repay them on YOUR day.

2 BARUCH 48:48

And HE answered and said to me: But now, let us cease talking about the wicked and inquire about the righteous.

2 BARUCH 48:49

And I will tell about their blessedness and I shall not be silent about their splendor which is kept for them.

2 BARUCH 48:50

For surely, as you endured much labor in the short time in which you live in this passing world, so you will receive great Light in that world which has no end.

2 BARUCH 49

2 BARUCH 49:1

But further, I ask YOU, O YAHWEH the Mighty One; and I shall ask free unmerited and pardon from YOU who created all things.

2 BARUCH 49:2

In which shape will the living live in YOUR day? Or how will remain their splendor which will be after that?

2 BARUCH 49:3

Will they, perhaps, take again this present form, and will they put on the chained members which are in evil and by which evils are accomplished? Or will you perhaps change these things which have been in the world, as also the world itself?

2 BARUCH 50

2 BARUCH 50:1

And HE answered and said to me: Listen, Baruch, to this Word and write down in the memory of your heart all that you shall learn.

2 BARUCH 50:2

For the earth will surely give back the dead at that time; it receives them now in order to keep them, not changing anything in their form. But as it has received them so it will give them back. And as I have delivered them to it so it will raise them.

2 BARUCH 50:3

For then it will be necessary to show those who live that the dead are living again, and that those who went away have come back.

2 BARUCH 50:4

And it will be that when they have recognized each other, those who know each other at this moment, then MY judgment will be strong, and those things which have been spoken of before will come.

2 BARUCH 51

2 BARUCH 51:1

And it will happen after this day which I appointed is over that both the shape of those who are found to be guilty as also the splendor of those who have proved to be righteous will be changed.

2 BARUCH 51:2

For the shape of those who now act wickedly will be made more evil than it is (now) so that they shall suffer torment.

2 BARUCH 51:3

Also, as for the honor and splendor of those who proved to be righteous on account of MY Torah, those who possessed intelligence in their life, and those who planted the root of wisdom in their heart; their honor and splendor will then be magnified by transformations, and the shape of their face will be changed into the Light of their beauty so that they may acquire and receive the undying world which is promised to them.

2 BARUCH 51:4

Therefore, especially they who will then come will be sad, because they despised MY Torah and stopped their ears lest they hear wisdom and receive intelligence.

2 BARUCH 51:5

When they, therefore, will see that those over whom they are exalted now will then be more exalted and magnified than they, then both these and those will be changed, these into the honor and splendor of malakim and those into startling visions and horrible shapes; and they will waste away even more.

2 BARUCH 51:6

For they will first see and then they will go away to be tormented.

2 BARUCH 51:7

Miracles, however, will appear at their own time to those who are saved because of their works and for whom the Torah is now a hope, and intelligence, expectation, and wisdom a trust.

2 BARUCH 51:8

For they shall see that world which is now invisible to them, and they will see a time which is now hidden to them.

2 BARUCH 51:9

And time will no longer make them older.

2 BARUCH 51:10

For they will live in the heights of that world and they will be like the malakim and be equal to the stars. And they will be changed into any shape which they wished, from beauty to loveliness, and from light to the splendor of honor.

2 BARUCH 51:11

For the extents of Kingdom Paradise will be spread out for them, and to them will be shown the beauty of the majesty of the living beings under the throne, as well as all the hosts of the malakim, those who are held by MY Word now lest they show themselves, and those who are withheld by MY command so that they may stand at their places until their coming has arrived.

2 BARUCH 51:12

And the excellence of the righteous will then be greater than that of the malakim.

2 BARUCH 51:13

For the first will receive the last, those whom they expected; and the last, those of whom they had heard that they had gone away.

2 BARUCH 51:14

For they have been saved from this world of affliction and have put down the burden of anguishes.

2 BARUCH 51:15

Because of which men lost their life and for what have those who were on the earth exchanged their soul?

2 BARUCH 51:16

For once they chose for themselves that time which cannot pass away without afflictions. And they chose for themselves that time of which the end is full of lamentations and evils. And they have denied the world that does not make those who come to it older. And they have rejected the time which causes splendor so that they are not coming to the splendor of which I spoke to you before.

2 BARUCH 52

2 BARUCH 52:1

And I answered and said: How shall we forget those for whom at that time woe is preserved?

2 BARUCH 52:2

And why are we again sad for those who die? Or why do we weep for those who go into the realm of death?

2 BARUCH 52:3

The lamentations should be kept for the beginning of that coming torment; let the tears be laid down for the coming of that destruction which will then come.

2 BARUCH 52:4

But with a view of these things, I shall also speak.

2 BARUCH 52:5

And concerning the righteous ones, what will they do now?

2 BARUCH 52:6

And HE answered and said: Enjoy yourselves in the suffering which you suffer now. For why do you look for the decline of your enemies?

2 BARUCH 52:7

Prepare your souls for that which is kept for you, and make ready your souls for the reward which is preserved for you. And when HE had said this I fell asleep there.

2 BARUCH 53

The apocalypse of the clouds

2 BARUCH 53:1

And I saw a vision. And behold, a cloud was coming up from the great sea. And I was looking at it, and behold, it was entirely filled with black water and there were many colors in that water. And something like great lightning appeared at its top.

2 BARUCH 53:2

And I saw that the cloud was rapidly passing in a quick run and covering the whole earth.

2 BARUCH 53:3

And it happened after this that the cloud began to pour the water that it contained upon the earth.

2 BARUCH 53:4

And I saw that the water which descended from it was not of the same likeness.

2 BARUCH 53:5

For at first, it was very black until a certain time. And then, I saw that the water became bright, but there was not much of it. And after this, I saw black water again, and after this bright again, and black again and bright again.

2 BARUCH 53:6

This, now, happened twelve times, but the black were always more than the bright.

2 BARUCH 53:7

And it happened at the end of the cloud that, behold, it poured black water and it was much darker than all the water that had been before. And fire was mingled with it. And where that water descended, it brought about devastation and destruction.

2 BARUCH 53:8

And after this I saw how the lightning which I had seen at the top of the cloud seized it and pressed it down to the earth.

2 BARUCH 53:9

That lightning shone much more, so that it lighted the whole earth and healed the regions where the last waters had descended and where it had brought about destruction.

2 BARUCH 53:10

And it occupied the whole earth and took command of it.

2 BARUCH 53:11

And after this I saw, behold, twelve rivers came from the sea and surrounded the lightning and became subject to it.

2 BARUCH 53:12

And because of my fear I awoke.

2 BARUCH 54

Prayer of Baruch

2 BARUCH 54:1

And I asked YAHWEH the Mighty One and said: YOU alone, O YAHWEH, knew the heights of the world beforehand and that which will happen in the times which YOU bring about by YOUR Word. And against the works of the inhabitants of the earth YOU hasten the beginnings of the times. And the ends of the periods YOU alone know.

2 BARUCH 54:2

YOU are the one for whom nothing is hard; but YOU are, however, the one who easily accomplishes all by a sign.

2 BARUCH 54:3

YOU are the one to whom both the depths and the heights come together, and whose Word the beginnings of the periods serve.

2 BARUCH 54:4

YOU are the one who reveals to those who fear that which is prepared for them so that YOU may comfort them.

2 BARUCH 54:5

YOU show YOUR mighty works to those who do not know. YOU pull down the enclosure for those who have no experience and enlighten the darkneses, and reveal the secrets to those who are spotless, to those who subjected themselves to YOU and YOUR Torah in faith.

2 BARUCH 54:6

YOU showed this vision to YOUR servant; open to me its exposition also.

2 BARUCH 54:7

For I know that I have received the answer regarding the subjects about which I asked YOU, and that YOU gave me a revelation about that which I asked, and that YOU have let me know with what voice I should honor YOU or from which members I should cause honor and praise to go up to YOU.

2 BARUCH 54:8

For if my members should be mouths and the hairs of my head voices, even so I should not be able to honor YOU properly; and I should not be able to utter YOUR splendor or to express the excellence of YOUR beauty.

2 BARUCH 54:9

For who am I among men or what is my significance among those who are more excellent than I that I have heard all these marvelous things from YAHWEH the Most High and innumerable promises from HIM who created me?

2 BARUCH 54:10

Blessed is my mother among those who bear, and praised among women is she who bore me.

2 BARUCH 54:11

For I shall not be silent in honoring YAHWEH the Mighty One but with the voice of reverence I shall narrate HIS marvelous works.

2 BARUCH 54:12

For who is able to imitate YOUR miracles, O YAHWEH, or who understands YOUR deep thoughts of Life?

2 BARUCH 54:13

For with YOUR counsel, YOU reign over all creation which YOUR right hand has created, and YOU have established the whole fountain of Light with YOURSELF, and YOU have prepared under YOUR throne the treasures of wisdom.

2 BARUCH 54:14

And those who do not love YOUR Torah are justly perishing. And the torment of judgment will fall upon those who have not subjected themselves to YOUR Power.

2 BARUCH 54:15

For, although Adam sinned first and has brought death upon all who were not in his own time, yet each of them who has been born from him has prepared for himself the coming torment. And further, each of them has chosen for himself the coming splendor.

2 BARUCH 54:16

For truly, the one who believes will receive reward.

2 BARUCH 54:17

But now, turn yourselves to destruction, you unrighteous ones who are living now, for you will be visited suddenly, since you have once rejected the understanding of YAHWEH the Most High.

2 BARUCH 54:18

For HIS works have not taught you, nor has the artful work of HIS creation which has existed always persuaded you.

2 BARUCH 54:19

Adam is, therefore, not the cause, except only for himself, but each of us has become our own Adam.

2 BARUCH 54:20

YOU, however, O YAHWEH, explain to me what YOU have revealed to me. And inform me about that which I asked YOU.

2 BARUCH 54:21

For at the end of the world, a retribution will be demanded with regard to those who have done wickedly in accordance with their wickedness, and YOU will honor the faithful ones in accordance with their faith.

2 BARUCH 54:22

For those who are among YOUR own, YOU rule; and those who sin, YOU blot out among YOUR own.

2 BARUCH 55

Interpretation of the apocalypse

2 BARUCH 55:1

And it happened that when I had finished the words of this prayer, I sat down there under a tree to rest in the shadow of its branches.

2 BARUCH 55:2

And I was surprised and astonished, and I pondered in my thoughts about the multitude of the goodness which the sinners who are on earth have rejected from them, and about the great punishment which they have despised, when they knew that they should be punished because of the sins they have committed.

2 BARUCH 55:3

And while I was pondering these and similar things, behold, Ramael, the malak who is set over true visions, was sent to me and said to me:

2 BARUCH 55:4

Why does your heart trouble you, Baruch, and why are you disturbed by your thought?

2 BARUCH 55:5

For if you are already disturbed, only hearing about the judgment, what about when you see it with your eyes openly?

2 BARUCH 55:6

And if you are already so disturbed by the expectation with which you expect the day of YAHWEH the Mighty One, what about when you arrive at its coming?

2 BARUCH 55:7

And if you are so fully terrified by the Words of the announcement of the punishment of those who have transgressed, how much more when this event itself will reveal marvelous things?

2 BARUCH 55:8

And if you have heard the names of the tov and evil things which will come at that time, and if you are grieved, what about when you will see what the Majesty will reveal, who will convince some and cause others to rejoice?

2 BARUCH 56

2 BARUCH 56:1

But now, since you have asked YAHWEH the Most High to reveal to you the explanation of the vision which you have seen,

2 BARUCH 56:2

I have been sent to say to you that YAHWEH the Mighty One has let you know the course of times, namely those which have passed and those which in HIS world will come to pass, from the beginning of HIS creation until the end, (the times) which are known by deceit and by Truth.

2 BARUCH 56:3

For as you saw a great cloud which came up from the sea and went and covered the earth; this is the length of the world which YAHWEH the Mighty One has created when HE took counsel in order to create the world.

2 BARUCH 56:4

And it happened when the word had gone out from HIM, that the length of the world was standing as something small, and it was established in accordance with the abundance of the intelligence of HIM who let it go forth.

2 BARUCH 56:5

And as you first saw the black waters on the top of the cloud which first came down upon the earth; this is the transgression which Adam, the first man, committed.

2 BARUCH 56:6

For when he transgressed, untimely death came into being, mourning was mentioned, affliction was prepared, illness was created, labor accomplished, pride began to come into existence, the realm of death began to ask to be renewed with blood, the conception of children came about, the passion of the parents was produced, the loftiness of men was humiliated, and goodness vanished.

2 BARUCH 56:7

What could, therefore, have been blacker and darker than these things?

2 BARUCH 56:8

This is the beginning of the black waters which you have seen.

2 BARUCH 56:9

And from these black waters again black were born, and very dark darkness originated.

2 BARUCH 56:10

For he who was a danger to himself was also a danger to the malakim.

2 BARUCH 56:11

For they possessed freedom in that time in which they were created.

2 BARUCH 56:12

And some of them came down and mingled themselves with women.

2 BARUCH 56:13

At that time they who acted like this were tormented in chains.

2 BARUCH 56:14

But the rest of the multitude of malakim, who have no number, restrained themselves.

2 BARUCH 56:15

And those living on earth perished together through the waters of the flood.

2 BARUCH 56:16

Those are the first black waters.

2 BARUCH 57

2 BARUCH 57:1

And after these you saw the bright waters; that is the fountain of Abraham and his generation, and the coming of his son, and the son of his son, and of those who are like them.

2 BARUCH 57:2

For at that time the unwritten Torah was in force among them, and the works of the commandments were accomplished at that time, and the belief in the coming judgment was brought about, and the hope of the world which will be renewed was built at that time, and the promise of the Life that will come later was planted.

2 BARUCH 57:3

Those are the bright waters which you have seen.

2 BARUCH 58

2 BARUCH 58:1

And the third black waters you have seen; that is the mingling of all sins which the nations committed afterward, after the death of those righteous men, and the wickedness of the land of Egypt, in which they acted wickedly in the oppression with which they oppressed their sons.

2 BARUCH 58:2

But also these perished at the end.

2 BARUCH 59

2 BARUCH 59:1

And the fourth bright waters which you have seen; that is the coming of Mosheh, and of Aaron, and of Miriam, and of Joshua, the son of Nun, and of Caleb, and all those who are like these.

2 BARUCH 59:2

For at that time the lamp of the eternal Torah which exists forever and ever illuminated all those who sat in darkness. This (lamp) will announce to those who believe the promise of their reward and to those who deny the punishment of the fire which is kept for them.

2 BARUCH 59:3

But also the heaven will be shaken from its place at that time; that is, the heavens which are under the throne of YAHWEH the Mighty One were severely shaken when HE took Mosheh with HIM.

2 BARUCH 59:4

For HE showed him many warnings together with the ways of the Torah and the end of time, as also to you; and then further, also the likeness of Zion with its measurements which was to be made after the likeness of the present sanctuary.

2 BARUCH 59:5

But HE also showed him, at that time, the measures of fire, the depths of the abyss, the weight of the winds, the number of the raindrops,

2 BARUCH 59:6

the suppression of wrath, the abundance of long-suffering, the Truth of Judgment,

2 BARUCH 59:7

the root of wisdom, the richness of understanding, the fountain of knowledge,

2 BARUCH 59:8

the height of the air, the greatness of Kingdom Paradise, the end of the periods, the beginning of the day of judgment,

2 BARUCH 59:9

the number of offerings, the worlds which have not yet come,

2 BARUCH 59:10

the mouth of hell, the standing place of vengeance, the place of faith, the region of hope,

2 BARUCH 59:11

the picture of the coming punishment, the multitude of the malakim which cannot be counted, the powers of the flame, the splendor of lightnings, the voice of the thunders, the orders of the Chief malakim, the treasures of the Light, the changes of the times, and the inquiries into the Torah.

2 BARUCH 59:12

These are the fourth bright waters you have seen.

2 BARUCH 60

2 BARUCH 60:1

And the fifth black waters which you have seen poured down; those are the works which the Amorites have done, and the invocations of their incantations which they wrought, and the wickedness of their mysteries, and the mingling of their pollutions.

2 BARUCH 60:2

But even Yisrael was polluted with sins in these days of the judges, although they saw many signs which were from HIM who created them.

2 BARUCH 61

2 BARUCH 61:1

And the sixth bright waters which you have seen; this is the time in which David and Solomon were born.

2 BARUCH 61:2

And at that time the building of Zion took place, and the dedication of the sanctuary, and the shedding of much blood of the nations which sinned at that time, and the many offerings which were offered at that time at the inauguration of the sanctuary.

2 BARUCH 61:3

And rest and shalom reigned at that time.

2 BARUCH 61:4

And wisdom was heard in the assembly, and the richness of understanding was magnified in the congregations.

2 BARUCH 61:5

And the Kodesh festivals were fulfilled in happiness and much joy.

2 BARUCH 61:6

And the judgment of the rulers was seen at that time without deceit, and the righteousness of the commandments of YAHWEH the Mighty One was accomplished in Truth.

2 BARUCH 61:7

And the land which then received mercy, since its inhabitants did not sin, was praised above all countries, and the city of Zion ruled over all countries and regions at that time.

2 BARUCH 61:8

These are those bright waters you have seen.

2 BARUCH 62

2 BARUCH 62:1

And the seventh black waters you have seen; that is the perversion of the ideas of Jeroboam who planned to make two golden calves,

2 BARUCH 62:2

and all the iniquities accomplished by the kings who succeeded him,

2 BARUCH 62:3

and the curse of Jezebel, and the idolatry which Yisrael practiced at that time, and the withholding of rain, and the famines of such a kind that the women ate the fruits of their womb,

2 BARUCH 62:4

2 BARUCH 62:5

and the time of their exile which befell the nine and a half tribes because they lived in many sins.

2 BARUCH 62:6

And Salmanassar, the king of the Assyrians, came and carried them away into captivity.

2 BARUCH 62:7

And concerning the nations much could be said: how they acted unrighteously and wickedly, and how they never proved themselves to be righteous.

2 BARUCH 62:8

These are those seventh black waters you have seen.

2 BARUCH 63

2 BARUCH 63:1

And the eighth bright waters you have seen; that is the righteousness and the integrity of Hezekiah, King of Yahudah, and the free unmerited favor and pardon which came upon him.

2 BARUCH 63:2

For at that time Sennacherib was moved to destroy, and his wrath roused him, and also the multitude of the nations which were with him in order to destroy;

2 BARUCH 63:3

when Hezekiah the king heard that which the Assyrian king devised, namely, to come and seize him and destroy his people; the two and a half tribes which were left -and that he also wanted to destroy Zion, then Hezekiah trusted upon his works and hoped upon his righteousnesses, and spoke with YAHWEH the Mighty One and said;

2 BARUCH 63:4

"Pay attention, behold, Sennacherib is ready to destroy us, and he will boast and be uplifted when he has destroyed Zion."

2 BARUCH 63:5

And YAHWEH the Mighty One heard him for Hezekiah was wise, and he paid attention to his prayers for he was righteous.

2 BARUCH 63:6

And YAHWEH the Mighty One then commanded Rameel, his malak who speaks with you.

2 BARUCH 63:7

And I went away and destroyed their multitude, of which the number of the chiefs alone was one hundred and eighty-five thousand, and each of them had an equal number.

2 BARUCH 63:8

And at that time I burned their bodies within, but I preserved their clothes and their arms on the outside so that still more of the marvelous works of YAHWEH the Mighty One might be seen, and so that HIS NAME might be mentioned throughout the entire earth.

2 BARUCH 63:9

Thus Zion was saved, and Yerusalem was delivered from its tribulations.

2 BARUCH 63:10

And all those who were in the kodesh land rejoiced, and the NAME of YAHWEH the Mighty One was praised so that it was spoken of.

2 BARUCH 63:11

These are those bright waters which you have seen.

2 BARUCH 64

2 BARUCH 64:1

And the ninth black waters you have seen; that is, the wickedness that existed in the days of Manasseh, the son of Hezekiah.

2 BARUCH 64:2

For he acted very wickedly, and killed the righteous, and perverted judgment, and shed innocent blood, and violently polluted married women, and overturned altars, and abolished their offerings, and drove away the kohenim lest they minister in the sanctuary.

2 BARUCH 64:3

And he made a statue with five faces: Four of them looked into the direction of the four winds, and the fifth was on the top of the statue so as to challenge the zeal of YAHWEH the Mighty One."

2 BARUCH 64:4

And then the wrath of YAHWEH the Mighty One went out so that Zion should be uprooted as has also happened in your days.

2 BARUCH 64:5

But also the judgment went out against the two and a half tribes so that they also should be carried away into captivity as you have now seen.

2 BARUCH 64:6

And the impiety of Manasseh increased to such a degree that the splendor of YAHWEH the Most High removed itself from the sanctuary.

2 BARUCH 64:7

Therefore, Manasseh was called the impious one in that time, and finally his habitation was in the fire.

2 BARUCH 64:8

For although YAHWEH the Most High had heard his prayer, in the end when he fell into the brazen horse and the brazen horse was melted, it became to him as a sign regarding the hour (which was to come).

2 BARUCH 64:9

For he had not lived perfectly since he was not worthy, but (the sign was given to him) that he might know henceforth by whom he should be punished at the end.

2 BARUCH 64:10

For HE who is able to benefit is also able to punish.

2 BARUCH 65

2 BARUCH 65:1

This Manasseh sinned and he thought in his time that YAHWEH the Mighty One would not call account for these things.

2 BARUCH 65:2

These are those ninth black waters you have seen.

2 BARUCH 66

2 BARUCH 66:1

And the tenth bright waters you have seen; that is the purity of the generation of YoshiYah, the king of Yahudah, who was the only one in his time who subjected himself to YAHWEH the Mighty One with his whole heart and his whole soul.

2 BARUCH 66:2

He purified the country from the idols, sanctified all the vessels which were polluted, restored the offerings to the altar, raised the horn of the Kodesh, exalted the righteous, and honored all those who were wise with understanding. He brought the kohenim back to their ministry, and destroyed and removed the magicians, enchanter, and diviners from the land.

2 BARUCH 66:3

And he not only killed the impious who were living, but also the bones were taken from the graves of the dead and burned with fire.

2 BARUCH 66:4

And he established the Festivals and the Shabbats with their kodesh practices, and he burned the polluted with fire, and as for the lying prophets who deceived the people, also these he burned with fire. He cast the people who obeyed them, as long as they lived, into the Kidron valley, and heaped stones upon them.

2 BARUCH 66:5

And he was zealous with the zeal of YAHWEH the Mighty One with his whole soul, and he alone was strong in the Torah at that time so that he left no one un-circumcised or anyone who acted wickedly in the whole country all the days of his life.

2 BARUCH 66:6

He, then, is one who shall receive reward forever and ever and be honored with YAHWEH the Mighty One more than many in the last time.

2 BARUCH 66:7

For on his account and on account of those who are like him, the precious splendors have been created and prepared which were spoken to you earlier.

2 BARUCH 66:8

These are those bright waters which you have seen.

2 BARUCH 67

2 BARUCH 67:1

And the eleventh black waters you have seen; that is the disaster which has befallen Zion now.

2 BARUCH 67:2

Do you think that there is no mourning among the malakim before YAHWEH the Mighty One, that Zion is delivered up in this way? Behold, the nations rejoice in their hearts, and the multitudes are before their idols and say, ..She who has trodden others down for such a long time has been trodden down; and she who has subjugated has been subjugated."

2 BARUCH 67:3

Do you think that YAHWEH the Most High rejoices in these things or that HIS NAME has been magnified?

2 BARUCH 67:4

But how will it be with HIS righteous judgment?

2 BARUCH 67:5

But after these things those scattered among the nations will be taken hold of by tribulations and live in shame in every place.

2 BARUCH 67:6

For so far as Zion has been delivered up and Yerusalem laid waste, the idols in the cities of the nations are happy and the flavor of the smoke of the incense of the righteousness of the Torah has been extinguished everywhere in the region of Zion; behold, the smoke of the impiety is there.

2 BARUCH 67:7

But the king of Babylon will arise, the one who now has destroyed Zion, and he will boast over the people and speak haughtily in his heart before YAHWEH the Most High.

2 BARUCH 67:8

And he too will fall finally.

2 BARUCH 67:9

These are those black waters.

2 BARUCH 68

2 BARUCH 68:1

And the twelfth bright waters which you have seen; this is the word.

2 BARUCH 68:2

For there will come a time after these things, and your people will fall into such a distress so that they are all together in danger of perishing.

2 BARUCH 68:3

They, however, will be saved, and their enemies will fall before them.

2 BARUCH 68:4

And to them will fall much joy one day.

2 BARUCH 68:5

And at that time, after a short time, Zion will be rebuilt again, and the offerings will be restored, and the kohenim will again return to their ministry. And the nations will again come to honor it.

2 BARUCH 68:6

But not as fully as before.

2 BARUCH 68:7

But it will happen after these things that there will be a fall of many nations.

2 BARUCH 68:8

These are the bright waters you have seen.

2 BARUCH 69

2 BARUCH 69:1

With regard to the last waters you have seen which are blacker than all those preceding which came after the twelfth, those which were brought together; they apply to the whole world.

2 BARUCH 69:2

For YAHWEH the Most High made a division at the beginning for only HE knows what will happen in the future.

2 BARUCH 69:3

For with regard to the evils of the coming impieties which occurred before HIM, he saw six kinds.

2 BARUCH 69:4

And of the morally right works of the righteous which would be accomplished before HIM, he foresaw six kinds, with the exclusion of that which HE should accomplish HIMSELF at the end of the world.

2 BARUCH 69:5

These are, therefore, not black waters with black, nor bright with bright. For that is the end.

2 BARUCH 70

2 BARUCH 70:1

Therefore, hear the exposition of the last black waters which will come after the black waters. This is the Word.

2 BARUCH 70:2

Behold, the days are coming and it will happen when the time of the world has ripened and the harvest of the seed of the evil ones and the tov ones has come that YAHWEH the Mighty One will cause to come over the earth and its inhabitants and its rulers confusion of the ruach and amazement of the heart. And they will hate one another and provoke one another to fight.

2 BARUCH 70:3

And the despised will rule over the honorable, and the unworthy will raise themselves over the illustrious.

2 BARUCH 70:4

And many will be delivered to the few, those who were nothing will rule over the strong, the poor will be greater in number than the rich, and the impious will exalt themselves over the brave.

2 BARUCH 70:5

The wise will be silent, and the foolish will speak. And the thought of men will not be realized then, nor the counsel of the strong, and the hope of those who hope will not be realized.

2 BARUCH 70:6

Then it will happen when those things occur which have been said before will come to pass, that confusion will fall upon all men. And some of them will fall in war, and others will perish in tribulations, and again others of them will be troubled by their own.

2 BARUCH 70:7

YAHWEH the Most High will then give a sign to those nations which HE has prepared before, and they will come and wage war with the rulers who will then remain.

2 BARUCH 70:8

And it will happen that everyone who saves himself from the war will die in an earthquake, and he who saves himself from the earthquake will be burned by fire, and he who saves himself from the fire will perish by famine.

2 BARUCH 70:9

And it will happen that everyone who will deliver himself and escape from all things which have been said before; both those who have won and those who have been overcome; that all will be delivered into the hands of MY Servant, the Anointed One.

2 BARUCH 70:10

For the whole earth will devour its inhabitants.

2 BARUCH 71

2 BARUCH 71:1

And the kodesh land will have mercy on its own and will protect its inhabitants at that time.

2 BARUCH 71:2

This is the vision which you have seen, and this is its explanation. For I have come to tell you these things since your prayer has been heard by YAHWEH the Most High.

2 BARUCH 72

2 BARUCH 72:1

Now, hear also about the bright waters which come at the end after these black ones. This is the Word.

2 BARUCH 72:2

After the signs have come of which I have spoken to you before, when the nations are moved and the time of MY Anointed One comes, He will call all nations, and some of them He will spare, and others He will kill.

2 BARUCH 72:3

These things will befall the nations which will be spared by Him.

2 BARUCH 72:4

Every nation which has not known Yisrael and which has not trodden down the seed of Yacob will live.

2 BARUCH 72:5

And this is because some from all the nations have been subjected to your people.

2 BARUCH 72:6

All those, now, who have ruled over you or have known you, will be delivered up to the sword.

2 BARUCH 73

2 BARUCH 73:1

And it will happen that after He has brought down everything which is in the world, and has sat down in eternal shalom on the throne of the Kingdom, and then joy will be revealed and rest will appear.

2 BARUCH 73:2

And then health will descend in dew, and illness will vanish, and fear and tribulation and lamentation will pass away from among men, and joy will encompass the earth.

2 BARUCH 73:3

And nobody will again die untimely, nor will any adversity take place suddenly.

2 BARUCH 73:4

Unjust judgment, condemnations, contentions, revenges, blood, passions, zeal, hate, and all such things will go into condemnation since they will be uprooted.

2 BARUCH 73:5

For these are the things that have filled this earth with evils, and because of them life of men came in yet greater confusion.

2 BARUCH 73:6

And the wild beasts will come from the wood and serve men, and the asps and dragons will come out of their holes to subject themselves to a child.

2 BARUCH 73:7

And women will no longer have pain when they bear, nor will they be tormented when they yield the fruits of their womb.

2 BARUCH 74

2 BARUCH 74:1

And it will happen in those days that the reapers will not become tired, and the farmers will not wear themselves out, because the products of themselves will shoot out speedily, during the time that they work on them in full tranquility.

2 BARUCH 74:2

For that time is the end of that which is corruptible and the beginning of that which is incorruptible.

2 BARUCH 74:3

Therefore, the things which were said before will happen in it. Therefore, it is far away from the evil things and near to those which do not die.

2 BARUCH 74:4

Those are the last bright waters which have come after the last dark waters.

2 BARUCH 75

2 BARUCH 75:1

And I answered and said: Who can equal YOUR tov, O YAHWEH? for it is incomprehensible.

2 BARUCH 75:2

Or who can fathom YOUR free unmerited favor and pardon which is without end?

2 BARUCH 75:3

Or who can understand YOUR intelligence?

2 BARUCH 75:4

Or who can narrate the thoughts of YOUR Ruach?

2 BARUCH 75:5

Or who of those born can hope to arrive at these things, apart from those to whom YOU are merciful and kind?

2 BARUCH 75:6

For if YOU were not merciful to men, those who are under YOUR right hand, they were not able to come to them, apart from those who are named among the famous number."

2 BARUCH 75:7

But we who exist, when we know why we have come, and then subject ourselves to YOU who brought us out of Egypt, we shall come again and remember those things which have passed away, and rejoice with regard to the things which have been.

2 BARUCH 75:8

But if we do not know now why we have come, and do not recognize the sovereignty of YOU who brought us up from Egypt, we will come again and ask for that which has now occurred, and shall be severely grieved because of that which has happened.

2 BARUCH 76

2 BARUCH 76:1

And he answered and said to me: Since the revelation of this vision has been explained to you as you prayed for, hear the Word of YAHWEH the Most High that you know that which will happen to you after these things.

2 BARUCH 76:2

For you will surely depart from this world, nevertheless not to death but to be kept unto (the end) of times.

2 BARUCH 76:3

Therefore, go up to the top of this mountain, and all countries of this earth will pass before you, as well as the likeness of the inhabited world, and the top of the mountains, and the depths of the valleys, and the depths of the seas, and the number of rivers, so that you may see that which you leave and where you go.

2 BARUCH 76:4

This will happen after forty days.

2 BARUCH 76:5

Go, therefore, now during these days and instruct the people as much as you can so that they may learn lest they die in the last times, but may learn so that they live in the last times.

2 BARUCH 77

Baruch speaks to the people

2 BARUCH 77:1

And I, Baruch, went away from there and came to the people, and assembled them from the greatest to the smallest and said to them:

2 BARUCH 77:2

Hear, O children of Yisrael, behold how many are left from the twelve tribes of Yisrael.

2 BARUCH 77:3

To you and to your fathers YAHWEH gave the Torah above all nations.

2 BARUCH 77:4

And because your brothers have transgressed the commandments of YAHWEH the Most High, HE brought vengeance upon you and upon them and did not spare the ancestors, but HE also gave the descendants into captivity and did not leave a remnant of them.

2 BARUCH 77:5

And, behold, you are here, with me.

2 BARUCH 77:6

If, therefore, you will make straight your ways, you will not go away as your brothers went away, but they will come to you.

2 BARUCH 77:7

For HE is merciful whom you honor, and kind in whom you hope, and True so that HE will do tov to you and not evil.

2 BARUCH 77:8

Have you not seen what has befallen Zion?

2 BARUCH 77:9

Or do you think that the place has sinned and that it has been destroyed for this reason, or that the country has done some crime and that it is delivered up for that reason?

2 BARUCH 77:10

And do you not know that because of you who sinned the one who did not sin was destroyed, and that because of those who acted unrighteously, the one who has not gone astray has been delivered up to the enemies?

The people invite Baruch to write a letter

2 BARUCH 77:11

And the whole people answered and they said to me: Everything which we can remember of the excellent things which YAHWEH the Mighty One has done to us we shall remember, and that which we do not remember HE knows in HIS free unmerited favor and pardon.

2 BARUCH 77:12

But do this for us, YOUR people: Write also to our brothers in Babylon a letter of doctrine and a roll of hope so that you might strengthen them also before you go away from us.

2 BARUCH 77:13

For the shepherds of Yisrael have perished, and the Lamps which gave Light are extinguished, and the fountains from which we used to drink have withheld their streams.

2 BARUCH 77:14

Now we have been left in the darkness and in the thick forest and in the aridness of the desert.

2 BARUCH 77:15

And I answered and said to them: Shepherds and lamps and fountains came from the Torah and when we go away, the Torah will abide.

2 BARUCH 77:16

If you, therefore, look upon the Torah and are intent upon wisdom, then the lamp will not be wanting and the shepherd will not give way and the fountain will not dry up.

2 BARUCH 77:17

Nevertheless, I shall also write to your brothers in Babylon as you have said to me, and I shall send it by means of men. Also I shall write to the nine and a half tribes, and send it by means of a bird.

2 BARUCH 77:18

And it happened on the twenty-first day of the ninth month that I, Baruch, came and sat down under the oak in the shadow of the branches, and nobody was with me; I was alone.

2 BARUCH 77:19

And I wrote two letters. One I sent by means of an eagle to the nine and a half tribes, and the other I sent by means of three men to those who were in Babylon.

2 BARUCH 77:20

And I called an eagle and said to him these words:

2 BARUCH 77:21

You have been created by YAHWEH the Most High that you should be higher than any other bird.

2 BARUCH 77:22

But now go and do not stay in any place, do not go into a nest, do not sit on any tree until you have flown over the breadth of the many waters of the river Euphrates and have come to the people that live there and cast down to them this letter.

2 BARUCH 77:23

Remember that Noah at the time of the flood received the fruit of the olive tree from a dove when he sent it away from the ark.

2 BARUCH 77:24

And also the ravens served EliYah when they brought food to him as they were commanded.

2 BARUCH 77:25

Also Solomon, in the time of his kingship, commanded a bird where he wanted to send a letter and in whatever he was in need of and it obeyed him as he commanded it.

2 BARUCH 77:26

And do not be reluctant and do not deviate to the right nor to the left, but fly and go straight away that you may preserve the command of YAHWEH the Mighty One as I said to you.

2 BARUCH 78

The letter to the nine and a half tribes

2 BARUCH 78:1

The letter of Baruch, the son of Neriah which he wrote to the nine and a half tribes. These are the words of the letter which Baruch, the son of Neriah' sent to the nine and a half tribes which were across the rivers in which were written the following things:

2 BARUCH 78:2

Thus speaks Baruch, the son of Neriah, to the brothers who were carried away in captivity:

2 BARUCH 78:3

Free unmerited favor and pardon and shalom be with you. I remember, my brothers, the love of HIM who created me, who loved us from the beginning and who never hated us but, on the contrary, chastised us.

2 BARUCH 78:4

And truly I know: Are we not all, the twelve tribes, bound by one captivity as we also descend from one father?

2 BARUCH 78:5

Therefore, I have been the more diligent to leave you the words of this letter before I die so that you may be comforted regarding the evils which have befallen you, and you may also be grieved with regard to the evils which have befallen your brothers, and then further, so that you may consider the judgment of HIM who decreed it against you to be righteous, namely, that you should be carried away into captivity, for what you have suffered is smaller than what you have done, in order that you may be found worthy of your fathers in the last times.

2 BARUCH 78:6

Therefore, if you think about the things you have suffered now for your excellence so that you may not be condemned at the end and be tormented, you shall receive hope which lasts forever and ever, particularly if you remove from your hearts the idol error for which you went away from here.

2 BARUCH 78:7

For if you do these things in this way, HE shall continually remember you. HE is the one who always promised on our behalf to those who are more excellent than we that HE will not forever forget or forsake our offspring, but with much mercy assemble all those again who were dispersed."

2 BARUCH 79

2 BARUCH 79:1

Therefore, my brothers, learn first what befell Zion, namely, that Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, came up against us.

2 BARUCH 79:2

For we had sinned against YAHWEH who created us, and had not observed the commandments which HE ordered us.

2 BARUCH 79:3

And yet HE has not chastised us as we deserved.

2 BARUCH 79:4

For what befell you, we suffered even more, for it befell us also.

2 BARUCH 80

2 BARUCH 80:1

And now, my brothers," when the enemies had surrounded the city, malakim were sent from YAHWEH the Most High. And they demolished the fortification of the strong wall, and HE destroyed their solid iron comers which could not be loosened.

2 BARUCH 80:2

Nevertheless, they hid the Kodesh vessels lest they be polluted by the enemies.

2 BARUCH 80:3

And when they had done these things, they left the demolished wall, the looted house, the burned Great Tabernacle, and the people who were overcome to the enemies, for they were delivered up lest the enemies should boast and say, "We have overcome to such an extent that we have even destroyed the house of YAHWEH the Most High."

2 BARUCH 80:4

They have also bound your brothers and carried them away to Babylon and have caused them to live there.

2 BARUCH 80:5

And we have been left here with very few.

2 BARUCH 80:6

That is the affliction about which I write to you.

2 BARUCH 80:7

For truly I know that the inhabitants of Zion were a comfort to you. As long as you knew that they were happy, this was more important than the affliction you endured being separated from them.

2 BARUCH 81

2 BARUCH 81:1

But also hear the word of consolation.

2 BARUCH 81:2

For I mourned with regard to Zion and asked free unmerited favor and pardon from YAHWEH the Most High and said,

2 BARUCH 81:3

"Will these things exist for us until the end?

2 BARUCH 81:4

And will these evils befall us always?" And YAHWEH the Mighty One did according to the multitude of HIS free unmerited favor and pardon, and YAHWEH the Most High according to the magnitude of HIS mercy, and HE revealed to me a Word that I might be comforted, and showed me visions that I might not be again sorrowful, and made known to me the mysteries of the times, and showed me the coming of the periods.

2 BARUCH 82

2 BARUCH 82:1

My brothers, therefore I have written to you that you may find consolation with regard to the multitude of tribulations."

2 BARUCH 82:2

But you ought to know that our Creator will surely avenge us on all our brothers according to everything which they have done against us and among us; in particular that the end which YAHWEH the Most High prepared is near, and that HIS free unmerited favor and pardon is coming, and that the fulfillment of HIS judgment is not far.

2 BARUCH 82:3

For now we seed the multitude of the happiness of the nations although they have acted wickedly; but they are like a vapor.

2 BARUCH 82:4

And we behold the multitude of their power while they act impiously; but they will be made like a drop.

2 BARUCH 82:5

And we see the strength of their power while they resist YAHWEH the Mighty One every hour; but they will be reckoned like spittle.

2 BARUCH 82:6

And we will ponder about the splendor of their majesty while they do not keep the statutes of YAHWEH the Most High; but as smoke they will pass away.

2 BARUCH 82:7

And we think about the beauty of their splendor while they go down in impurities; but like grass which is withering, they will fade away.

2 BARUCH 82:8

And we ponder about the strength of their cruelty while they themselves do not think about the end; but they will be broken like a passing wave.

2 BARUCH 82:9

And we notice the pride of their power while they deny the tov of YAHWEH by whom it was given to them; but as a passing cloud they will vanish.

2 BARUCH 83

2 BARUCH 83:1

For YAHWEH the Most High will surely hasten HIS times, and HE will certainly cause HIS periods to arrive.

2 BARUCH 83:2

And HE will surely judge those who are in HIS world, and will truly inquire into everything with regard to all their works which were sins.

2 BARUCH 83:3

HE will certainly investigate the secret thoughts and everything which is lying in the inner chambers of all their members which are in sin. And HE will make them manifest in the presence of everyone with blame.

2 BARUCH 83:4

Therefore, nothing of the present things should come into your heart, but they should, on the contrary, be expected, since that which was promised will come.

2 BARUCH 83:5

And we should not look upon the delights of the present nations, but let us think about that which has been promised to us regarding the end.

2 BARUCH 83:6

For the ends of the times and the periods will surely pass away and all which is in them together.

2 BARUCH 83:7

The end of the world will then show the great power of YAHWEH our Ruler since everything will come to judgment.

2 BARUCH 83:8

You should, therefore, prepare your hearts for that which you have believed before, lest you should be excluded from both worlds, namely, that you were carried away into captivity here and tormented there.

2 BARUCH 83:9

For that which exists now or that which has passed away or that which will come, in all of that, neither the evil in it is fully evil, nor the tov is even fully tov.

2 BARUCH 83:10

For all sorts of health which exist now changes into illnesses.

2 BARUCH 83:11

And every might which exists now changes into weakness, and every power that exists now changes into miseries, and every youthful energy changes into old age and consummation.

2 BARUCH 83:12

And every beauty of elegances which exists now changes into withering and ugliness.

2 BARUCH 83:13

And every infantile pride which exists now changes into lowliness and shame. And every boast of haughtiness which exists now changes into the shame of silence.

2 BARUCH 83:14

And every delight and all splendor which exists now changes into ruin of silence.

2 BARUCH 83:15

And every joy and every delight which exist now change into rejection and ruin.

2 BARUCH 83:16

And every clamor of pride changes into silent dust.

2 BARUCH 83:17

And every possession of richness which exists now changes into the realm of death alone.

2 BARUCH 83:18

And every seizing desire which exists now changes into involuntary death, and every desire of lust! changes into the judgment of punishment.

2 BARUCH 83:19

And every capability of deceit which exists now changes into refutation by truth.

2 BARUCH 83:20

And every sweetness of ointments which exists now changes into judgment and condemnation.

2 BARUCH 83:21

And every friendship changes into silent defamations.

2 BARUCH 83:22

Since all these things happened now, do you think that they will not be avenged?

2 BARUCH 83:23

But the end of everything will come to Light.

2 BARUCH 842 BARUCH 84:1

Now, I gave you knowledge, while I still live. For I have said that you should particularly learn my mighty commandments which HE has instructed you. And I shall set before you some of the commandments of HIS judgment before I die.

2 BARUCH 84:2

Remember that once Mosheh called heaven and earth to witness against you and said, "If you trespass the Torah, you shall be dispersed. And if you shall keep it, you shall be planted."

2 BARUCH 84:3

And also other things he said to you when you were in the desert as twelve tribes together.

2 BARUCH 84:4

And after his death you cast it away from you and, therefore, that which has been said before has come upon you.

2 BARUCH 84:5

And now, Mosheh spoke to you before it befell you and, behold, it has befallen you for you have forsaken the Torah.

2 BARUCH 84:6

Also I, behold, I say to you after you suffered that if you obey the things which I have said to you, you shall receive from YAHWEH the Mighty One everything which has been prepared and has been preserved for you.

2 BARUCH 84:7

Therefore, let this letter be a witness between me and you that you may remember the commandments of YAHWEH the Mighty One, and that it also may serve as my defense in the presence of HIM who has sent me.

2 BARUCH 84:8

And remember Zion and the Torah and the kodesh land and your brothers and the covenant and your fathers, and do not forget the Festivals and the Shabbats.

2 BARUCH 84:9

And give this letter and the doctrine of the Torah to your children after you as also your fathers handed down to you.

2 BARUCH 84:10

And ask always and pray seriously with your whole soul that YAHWEH the Mighty One may accept you in mercy and that HE may not reckon the multitude of your sinners, but remember the integrity of your fathers.

2 BARUCH 84:11

For if HE judges us not according to the multitude of HIS free unmerited favor and pardon, woe to all us who are born.!

2 BARUCH 85

2 BARUCH 85:1

Further, know that our fathers in former times and former generations had helpers, righteous prophets and kodesh men."

2 BARUCH 85:2

But we were also in our country, and they helped us when we sinned, and they intervened for us with HIM who has created us since they trusted in their works. And YAHWEH the Mighty One heard them and purged us from our sins.

2 BARUCH 85:3

But now, the righteous have been assembled, and the prophets are sleeping. Also we have left our land, and Zion has been taken away from us, and we have nothing now apart from YAHWEH the Mighty One and HIS Torah.

2 BARUCH 85:4

Therefore, if we direct and dispose our hearts, we shall receive everything which we lost again by many times.

2 BARUCH 85:5

For that which we lost was subjected to corruption, and that which we receive will not be corruptible.

2 BARUCH 85:6

We also have written to our brothers in Babylon so that I may attest to them these things also.

2 BARUCH 85:7

And these things which I have said earlier should be before your eyes always, since we are still in the ruach of the power of our liberty.

2 BARUCH 85:8

And further, YAHWEH the Most High is also long-suffering to us here and has shown to us that which comes and has not concealed from us what will happen at the end.

2 BARUCH 85:9

Therefore, before HIS judgment exacts HIS own and Truth of that which is its due, let us prepare ourselves that we may possess and not be possessed, and that we may hope and not be put to shame, and that we may rest with our fathers and not be punished with those who hate us.

2 BARUCH 85:10

For the youth of this world has passed away, and the power of creation is already exhausted, and the coming of the times is very near and has passed by. And the pitcher is near the well, and the ship to the harbor, and the journey to the city, and life to its end.

2 BARUCH 85:11

Further, prepare yourselves so that, when you sail and ascend from the ship, you may have rest and not be condemned when you have gone away.

2 BARUCH 85:12

For behold, YAHWEH the Most High will cause all these things to come. There will not be an opportunity to repent anymore, nor a limit to the times, nor a duration of the periods, nor a change to rest," nor an opportunity to prayer, nor sending up petition, nor giving knowledge, nor giving love, nor opportunity of repentance, nor supplicating for offenses, nor prayers of the fathers, nor intercessions of the prophets, nor help of the righteous.

2 BARUCH 85:13

There is the proclamation of judgment to corruption,' regarding the way! to the fire and the path that leads to the glowing coals."

2 BARUCH 85:14

Therefore, there is one Torah by One, one world and an end for all those who exist.

2 BARUCH 85:15

Then HE will make alive those whom HE has found, and HE will purge them from sins, and at the same time HE will destroy those who are polluted with sins.

2 BARUCH 86

2 BARUCH 86:1

When you, therefore, receive the letter,' read it carefully in your assemblies. And think about it, in particular, however, on the days of your fasts. And remember me by means of this letter in the same way as I remember you by means of this, and always.

2 BARUCH 87

2 BARUCH 86:1

And" it happened when I had finished all the words of this letter and had written it carefully until the end, I folded it, sealed it cautiously, and bound it to the neck of the eagle. And I let it go and sent it away.

The end of the letter of Baruch, the son of Neriah.

Shalom

Blessed are they that do the word of YAHWEH.

YAHWEH's Sword

Library of Wellesley

College.

Purchased from

Sweet Fund

Nº 64955

Other Works by the same Author.

The Book of Enoch. Translated from Dillmann's Ethiopic Text (emended and revised) with Introduction, Notes, Appendices, and Indices. 8vo, 16s.

The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees.

Edited from four Manuscripts, and critically revised, emended and restored in accordance with the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek and Latin Fragments of this Book, by R. H. CHARLES, M.A. 4to, 12s. 6d.

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

New York

MACMILLAN & CO., 112 FOURTH AVENUE

THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH

TRANSLATED FROM THE SLAVONIC

BY

W. R. MORFILL, M.A.

READER IN RUSSIAN AND THE OTHER SLAVONIC LANGUAGES

AND

EDITED, WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES AND INDICES

BY

R. H. CHARLES, M.A.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN, AND EXETER COLLEGE, OXFORD

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1896

Oxford

PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

BY HORACE HART, PRINTER TO THE UNIVERSITY

Sw

64955

229

602

3

Bills O.S. Pseudographia Each

BS

1830

.E8A3

1896

PREFACE

THE Book of the Secrets of Enoch cannot fail to be of interest to students of Apocalyptic literature and of the origins of Christianity. It is with a view to help such that this the first edition of the book has been undertaken. In certain respects it will appeal also to specialists in Assyriology. So far indeed as it does so, I have been able to do little more than refer to the leading scholars in this department, as my knowledge of such subjects is very slight, and all secondhand.

This book has had a peculiar history. For more than 1200 years it has been unknown save in Russia, where acquaintance with it goes several centuries back. Further, by its present name it was never known in any literature save the Slavonic. Even in Slavonic the name was not quite constant, if we may trust one of the MSS. (B): for there it appears as 'The Secret Books of God which were shown to Enoch.' And yet the book was much read in many circles in the first three centuries of the Church, and has left more traces of its influence than many a well-known book of the same literature (see § 5), and it is undoubtedly of much greater importance in respect of exegesis. In its Greek form it passed current probably under the general designation of Enoch. Occasionally we find that it was not distinguished by those who used it from the older book which has come down to us through the Ethiopic. We have, in fact, in this book another fragmentary survival of the literature that once circulated under the name of Enoch.

That such a book had ever existed was not known in Western Europe till 1892, when a writer in a German review stated that there was a Slavonic version of the Ethiopic Book of Enoch. By Mr. Morfill's help it soon became clear that there was no foundation whatever for such a statement, and subsequent study showed that we had recovered therein an old and valuable pseudepigraph. The next step was naturally to secure its publication, and this was soon made possible through the kindness of the Delegates of the Press.

It will be generally understood that great difficulties beset such an undertaking, and particularly in the case of a book of whose existence there had never been even a surmise in the world of scholarship, and to which there was not a single unmistakable allusion in all ancient literature. The editor in such a case has to pursue untravelled ways, and if, in his efforts to discover the literary environment, the religious views, the date, and language of his author, he has fallen once and again into errors of perception or judgement, he can therein but throw himself on the indulgence of his critics.

The first edition of such a work must have many shortcomings. The editor will be grateful for corrections and further elucidations of the text.

In order to appreciate the value of this book in elucidating contemporary and subsequent religious thought, the reader should consult pp. xxix-xlvii of the Introduction.

In conclusion, I must express my gratitude to Mr. Morfill for his great kindness in undertaking the translation of the Slavonic texts, and for his unfailing courtesy and unwearying energy in the prosecution of the task. It is to him that I am indebted for the account of the Slavonic MSS. in § 2.

R. H. C.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	xi-xlvii
§ 1. Short Account of the Book (pp. xi, xii). § 2. The Slavonic MSS. (pp. xii-xiv). § 3. The Text followed in the Translation (pp. xiv-xvi). § 4. The Language and Place of Writing—main part of the Book written originally in Greek at Alexandria, but some sections originally in Hebrew in Palestine (pp. xvi, xvii). § 5. Relation of the Book to Jewish and Christian Literature. Authors and Writings influenced directly or indirectly by this Book:—Book of Adam and Eve, Apoc. of Moses, the pseudo-Cyprian De Montibus Sina et Sion, Apoc. of Paul, St. Augustine, Sibylline Oracles, Irenaeus, Origen, Clement of Alex., Ascension of Isaiah, Ep. of Barnabas, New Testament, Tests. of the Twelve Patriarchs (pp. xvii-xxiv). § 6. Integrity and Critical Condition of the Book (pp. xxiv, xxv). § 7. Date and Authorship. Originally Hebrew sections—pre-Christian: the rest 1-50 A. D. The author—an orthodox Hellenistic Jew of Alexandria (pp. xxv, xxvi). § 8. Some of the author's views on Creation, Anthropology, and Ethics (pp. xxvii-xxix). § 9. The value of this Book in elucidating contemporary and subsequent religious thought—1. Sin the cause of death. 2. The Millennium. 3. The Creation of Man with freewill and the knowledge of good and evil. 4. The Seraphim. 5. The Intercession of Saints. 6. The Seven Heavens—an early Jewish and Christian belief (pp. xxix-xlvii).
THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH. Translation and Notes	1-84
APPENDIX. Melchizedekian Fragment	85-93
ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE PHOENIXES	94
INDEX I. Passages from the Scriptures and ancient writers	95-97
INDEX II. Names and Subjects	98-100

INTRODUCTION

§ I. SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE BOOK.

THE Book of the Secrets of Enoch has, so far as is yet known, been preserved only in Slavonic. It will suit our convenience to take advantage of this fact, and call it shortly 'the Slavonic Enoch,' in contradistinction to the older book of Enoch. As the latter has come down to us in its entirety through the Ethiopic alone, it will be no less convenient to designate it as 'the Ethiopic Enoch.'

This new fragment of the Enochic literature has only recently come to light through certain MSS. which were found in Russia and Servia. My attention was first drawn to this fact when editing the Ethiopic Enoch by an article by Kozak on Russian Pseudepigraphic Literature in the Jahrb. f. Prot. Theol. pp. 127-158 (1892). As it was stated in this article that there was a Slavonic Version of the Book of Enoch hitherto known through the Ethiopic Version, I at once applied to Mr. Morfill for help, and in the course of a few weeks we had before us printed copies of two of the MSS. in question. It did not take much study to discover that Kozak's statement was absolutely devoid of foundation. The Book of the Secrets of Enoch was, as it soon transpired, a new pseud-epigraph, and not in any sense a version of the older and well-known Book of Enoch. In many respects it is of no less value, as we shall see in the sequel.

The Slavonic Enoch in its present form was written somewhere about the beginning of the Christian era. Its author or final editor was an Hellenistic Jew, and the place of its composition was Egypt.

Written at such a date, and in Egypt, it was not to be expected that it exercised a direct influence on the writers of the New Testament. On the other hand, it occasionally exhibits striking parallelisms in diction and thought, and some of the dark passages of the latter are all but inexplicable without its aid.

Although the very knowledge that such a book ever existed was lost for probably twelve hundred years, it nevertheless was much used both by Christian and heretic in the early centuries. Thus citations appear from it, though without acknowledgement, in the Book of Adam and Eve, the Apocalypses of Moses and Paul (400–500 A.D.), the Sibylline Oracles, the Ascension of Isaiah and the Epistle of Barnabas (70–90 A.D.). It is quoted by name in the Apocalyptic portions of the Testaments of Levi, Daniel, and Naphtali (circ. 1 A.D.)¹. It was referred to by Origen and probably by Clement of Alexandria, and used by Irenaeus, and a few phrases in the New Testament may be derived from it.

§ 2. THE SLAVONIC MANUSCRIPTS.

The Slavonic redaction of the text of the Book of Enoch, which is now for the first time translated into English, has come down to us mainly in two versions. It will be clear from the evidence in § 4 that they are translations from a lost Greek original. The manuscripts may be thus classified. I. First those in which we find the complete text, and of these two have been preserved; (a) a MS. in the possession

¹ The grounds for this date of the Testaments cannot be stated here, nor yet for the assumption some pages later that they sprang from a Hebrew original. These I hope to give at length in an edition of these Testaments.

of Mr. A. Khludov ; this is a South Russian recension. The MS. belongs to the second half of the seventeenth century, and is found in a Sbornik or volume of miscellanies containing also lives of the Saints and other religious treatises. This text was published by Mr. A. Popov in the Transactions of the Historical and Archaeological Society of the University of Moscow, vol. iii. (Moscow 1880). It is unfortunately in many places very corrupt. It forms the basis of the present text, but where it is corrupt attempts have been made to supply a sounder text from other MSS. It is marked by the letter A in the critical notes to the present translation.

(b) A MS. discovered by Prof. Sokolov of Moscow in the Public Library of Belgrade in the year 1886. This is a Bulgarian recension, and the orthography belongs to the middle Bulgarian period. This MS. is probably of the sixteenth century. It contains the account of the priesthood of Methuselah and Nir, the birth of Melchizedek and the Deluge. Though this legend does not belong to this Book of Enoch, it is added as an Appendix. II. There is also a shortened and incomplete redaction of the text of which three MSS. are known ; (a) that preserved in the Public Library of Belgrade ; a Serbian redaction, which was printed by Novaković in the sixteenth volume of the literary magazine Starine (Agram, 1884). Many of the readings of this MS. are very interesting. It is of the sixteenth century, and is cited as B. (b) That in the Vienna Public Library, which is almost identical with the preceding ; (c) a MS. of the seventeenth century in the possession of Mr. E. Barsov of Moscow.

Of the above MSS. I have direct acquaintance only with A and B : of the other MSS. I have only an indirect knowledge through the text prepared by Prof. Sokolov, which is based on all the above MSS. Unfortunately, however, this text has not fully discriminated these sources. Accordingly, to avoid misconceptions, this text which is designated as Sok, is to be understood as representing all authorities other than A and B.

Other fragments of the Book of Enoch are to found in Tikhonravov's Memorials of Russian Apocryphal Literature (Памятники отреченной русской литературы), and Рурин's Memorials of Old Russian Literature (Памятники старинной русской литературы). By allusions and citations in early Slavonic literature, we can see that these late manuscripts are only copies of much earlier ones, which have perished. Thus Tikhonravov cites from a fourteenth century MS.

The duty of the translator has been a comparatively simple one—to present a text which would be of service to the Western students of apocryphal literature. To this end all philological questions have been subordinated, and therefore my Slavonic friends must not blame me for not going more into linguistic matters. These would be out of place on the present occasion; certainly the time for such a work has not yet come in England. My translation will have served its purpose by enabling my friend, the Rev. R. H. Charles, to treat the subject as fully and learnedly as he has done from the standpoint of Biblical apocryphal literature. In conclusion, I must say that I am glad in however small a way to be able to contribute to such studies through the agency of Mr. Charles. I wish also to express my thanks to Professors Sokolov and Pavlov of the University of Moscow; to the former for allowing me the use of his emendated text and furnishing me with valuable notes on some obscure passages; and to the latter for the kind interest which he has taken in the book.

W. R. M.

§ 3. THE TEXT FOLLOWED IN THE TRANSLATION.

The formation of the text has been a matter of great difficulty. As I have no knowledge of Slavonic, Mr. Morfill has been so good as to furnish me with literal translations of A, B and of Prof. Sokolov's text. The number of variations which was unduly great at the outset has to some extent been diminished by Mr. Morfill's critical acumen. This careful scholar, however, I should remark, has conscientiously refrained from all but obvious corrections of the text. Starting then from his translations of the Slavonic MSS. and of Sokolov's text, I resolved after due examination to follow A in the main. B of course is followed when it preserves the obviously better reading, and that it does frequently. When both A and B are corrupt, I have fallen back on the text of Sokolov. Occasionally I have been obliged to follow one reading to the rejection of the others, in cases where all the readings were equally probable or improbable. In only two or three passages have I emended the text, and that in the case of numbers, which are frequently corrupted in tradition through MSS. In all cases the rejected variants are given in the critical notes below, so that, in the event of the discovery of fresh critical materials, the reader can revise the text for himself, and in the process will reverse, no doubt, many of the editor's judgements.

As regards the relative merits of A and B, though the former is very corrupt, it is nevertheless a truer representative of the original than B. B is really a short résumé of the work—being about half the length of A. In the process of abbreviation its editor or scribe rejected in some instances and in others recast entire sections with capricious rearrangements of the text. For an example of the method pursued occasionally in B the reader can consult the critical notes on xl.

In A we find many interpolations. Thus in xx. 3 there is a mention of the tenth heaven, and in xxi-xxii. 3 a description of the eighth, ninth and tenth heavens, though the rest of the work directly speaks of and indirectly implies only seven heavens. B omits all reference to this addition in A. The reader will find many other like additions which have as a rule been relegated to the critical notes or given in the text in square brackets.

The titles at the head of the chapters are given by A. I have enclosed them in square brackets, as they have no claim to antiquity. They are not given in Sokolov's text, nor are they found in B. A few titles do appear in B, but with one exception these consist merely of Entry of Enoch into the first heaven, Entry of Enoch into the second heaven, &c., &c., Entry of Enoch into the seventh heaven.

§ 4. THE LANGUAGE AND PLACE OF WRITING.

1. The main part of this book was written for the first time in Greek. This is shown by such statements, (1) as xxx. 13, 'And I gave him a name (i.e. Adam) from the four substances: the East, the West, the North, and the South.' Adam's name is here derived from the initial letters of the Greek names of the four quarters, i.e. ἀνατολή, δύσις, ἄρκτος, μεσημβρία. This fancy was first elaborated in Greek, as this derivation is impossible in Semitic languages. (2) Again, the writer follows the chronology of the LXX. Enoch is 165 years old when he begat Methuselah. According to the Hebrew and Samaritan chronologies he was 65. Josephus also (Ant. i. 3. 3), it is true, adopts the LXX chronology. (3) In l. 4 the writer reproduces the LXX text of Deut. xxxii. 35 against the Hebrew. (4) The writer frequently uses Ecclesiasticus, and often reproduces it almost word for word: cf. xliii. 2, 3—Ecclus. xxiii. 7; x. 20, 22, 24: also xlvii. 5—Ecclus. i. 2: also li. 1, 3—Ecclus. vii. 32; ii. 4: also lxi. 2—Ecclus. xxxix. 25: also lxv. 2—Ecclus. xvii. 3, 5. (5) lxv. 4 seems to be derived from the Book of Wisdom vii. 17, 18. So far as we can judge, it was the Greek Versions of Ecclesiasticus and Wisdom that our author used.

Some sections of this book were written originally in Hebrew. (See p. xxiv.)

2. This book was written in Egypt, and probably in Alexandria. This is deducible from the following facts. (1) From the variety of speculations which it holds in common with Philo and writings which were Hellenistic in character or circulated largely in Egypt. Thus the existent was created from the non-existent, xxiv. 2; xxv. 1: cf. Philo, de Justit. 7; souls were created before the foundation of the world, xxiii. 5: cf. Philo, de Somno, i. 22; de Gigantibus 3; Wisdom viii. 19, 20. Again, man had seven natures or powers, xxx. 9: cf. Philo, de Mundi Op. 40. Man could originally see the angels in heaven, xxxi. 2: cf. Philo, Quaest. in Gen. xxxii. There is no resurrection of the body, l. 2; lxxv. 6: so the Book of Wisdom and Philo taught. Finally swearing is reprobated by both, xlix. 1, 2: cf. Philo, de Spec. Leg. ii. 1. (2) The whole Messianic teaching of the Old Testament does not find a single echo in the work of this Hellenized Israelite of Egypt, although he shows familiarity with almost every book of the Old Testament. (3) The Phoenixes and Chalkydries, xii—monstrous serpents with the heads of crocodiles—are natural products of the Egyptian imagination. (4) The syncretistic character of the account of the creation, xxv–xxvi, which undoubtedly betrays Egyptian elements.

We should observe further that the arguments that make for a Greek original tend to support the view that the book was written in Egypt, especially when we take them in conjunction with the date of its composition.

§ 5. RELATION OF THE BOOK TO JEWISH AND CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

The discoveries regarding the planets, &c., which Joel (circ. 1200 A.D.) in his Chronography assigns to Seth are, as we have shown on p. 37, most probably derived ultimately from this Book of Enoch. In like manner the statements regarding the sabbath and the duration of the world, which according to Cedrenus (circ. 1050 A.D.) were drawn from Josephus and the Book of Jubilees are likewise to be assigned to this book; for nothing of this nature appears either in Josephus or the Book of Jubilees. Cedrenus, we should remember, is largely dependent on Syncellus, and Syncellus is very often wrong in his references in the case of Apocalyptic literature (see xxxiii. 1, 2 notes). It is natural that these late writers should err regarding all facts derived from this book, inasmuch as it was already lost to all knowledge many centuries before their day. Let us now pass over these intervening centuries to a time when this book was still in some measure known. Now in the Book of Adam and Eve of the fifth century we find two passages drawn from our book which are quotations in sense more than in words. Thus in I. vi we read: 'But the wicked Satan . . . set me at naught, and sought the Godhead, so that I hurled him down from heaven.' This is drawn from xxix. 4, 5: 'One of these in the ranks of the Archangels (i.e. Satan, cf. xxxi. 4) . . . entertained an impossible idea that he should make his throne higher than the clouds over the earth, and should be equal in rank to My power. And I hurled him from the heights.' Again in the Book of Adam and Eve, I. viii: 'When we dwelt in the garden . . . we saw his angels that sang praises in heaven.' This comes from xxxi. 2: 'I made for him the heavens open that he should perceive the angels singing the song of triumph.' See notes on xxxi. 2 for similar view in Philo and St. Ephrem. Again in I. xiv of the former book the words: 'The garden, into the abode of light thou longest for, wherein is no darkness,' and I. xi: 'That garden in which was no darkness,' are probably derived from Slav. En. xxxi. 2: 'And there was light without any darkness continually in Paradise.'

Next in the Apocalypse of Moses (ed. Tischend. 1866), p. 19, we have a further development of a statement that appears in our text regarding the sun: see xiv. 2-4 (notes).

In the anonymous writing De montibus Sina et Sion 4, we have most probably another trace of the influence of our text in this century. In this treatise the derivation of Adam's name from the initials of the four quarters of the earth is given at length. This derivation appears probably for the first time in literature in xxx. 13 (see note).

In the fourth century there are undoubted indications of its use in the Apocalypse of Paul (ed. Tischend. 1866). Thus the statement, p. 64, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ παράδεισος, ἔνθα . . . δένδρον παμμεγέθη (sic) ὥραϊον, ἐν ᾧ ἐπανεπαύετο τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον is beyond the possibility of question a Christian adaptation of the Slavonic Enoch viii. 3: 'And in the midst (of Paradise is) the tree of life, in that place, on which God rests, when He comes into Paradise.' Again the words, p. 64, ἐκ τῆς ῥίζης αὐτοῦ ἐξήρχετο . . . ὕδωρ, μεριζόμενον εἰς τέσσαρα ὀρύγματα, and p. 52, ποταμοὶ τέσσαρες . . . ῥέοντες μέλι καὶ γάλα καὶ ἔλαιον καὶ οἶνον, are almost verbal reproductions of our text, viii. 5: 'From its root in the garden there go forth four streams which pour honey and milk, oil and wine, and are separated in four directions.' With two characteristic features of hell in this Apocalypse, i.e. οὐκ ἦν ἐκεῖ φῶς and ὁ πυριῶς ποταμός (pp. 57, 58), we may compare x. 1 of our text: 'And there was no light there . . . and a fiery river goes forth.'

The peculiar speculation of St. Augustine in the De Civ. xxii. 30. 5 seems to be derived ultimately from xxxiii. 2 (see notes). Compare with xxxiii. 2 especially the words: 'Haec tamen septima erit sabbatum nostrum cuius finis non erit vespera, sed dominicus dies velut octavus aeternus.'

In the early part of the third and in the second century there is the following evidence of the existence of our text. Thus in the Sibylline Oracles, ii. 75 ὀρφανικοῖς χήραις τ' ἐπιδευομένοις τε παράσχον, and 88 σὴν χεῖρα περητεύουσιν ὄρεξον are too closely parallel to l. 5—li. 1, 'Stretch out your hands to the orphan, the widow [and the stranger, B om.]. Stretch out your hands to the poor,' to be accidental.

In Irenaeus contra Haer. v. 28. 3 we have the Jewish speculation in our text, xxxiii. 1, 2, reproduced to the effect that as the work of creation lasted six days so the world would last 6,000 years, and that there would be 1,000 years of rest corresponding to the first sabbath after creation. See text, xxxiii. 1, 2 (notes).

In Origen (according to Methodius; see Lommatzsch edition, xxi. p. 59) we find a reference to this speculation: χιλίων γὰρ ἑτῶν περιοριζομένων εἰς μίαν ἡμέραν ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς θεοῦ, ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενέσεως μέχρι καταπαύσεως μέχρις ἡμῶν, ὥς οἱ περὶ τὴν ἀριθμητικὴν φάσκουσι δεινοί, ἐξ ἡμέραι συμπειραιοῦνται. Ἐξακισχιλιοστὸν ἄρα ἔτος φανὲν ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ εἰς δεῦρο συντείνειν· τῇ γὰρ ἑβδομάδι τῷ ἑπτακισχιλιοστῷ ἔτει κρίσιν ἀφίξεσθαι φασιν. Whether this passage argues a direct knowledge of the Slavonic Enoch is doubtful. There can be no doubt, however, with regard to the direct reference in the de Princip. i. 3. 2 ‘Nam et in eo libello . . . quem Hermas conscripsit, ita refertur: Primo omnium crede, quia unus est Deus, qui omnia creavit atque composuit: qui cum nihil esset prius, esse fecit omnia. . . . Sed et in Enoch libro his similia describuntur.’ Now since there is no account of the creation in the Ethiopic Enoch, Origen is here referring to the Slav. Enoch xxiv–xxx; xlvii. 3, 4.

The fragment of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah preserved in Clement, Strom. v. 11. 77, is likewise to be traced to our text: cf. xviii. (notes).

During the years 50–100 A.D. our text seems not to be without witness in the literature of that period. Thus in the Ascension of Isaiah, viii. 16, we read with regard to the angels of the sixth heaven: ‘Omnium una species et gloria aequalis,’ whereas the difference between the angelic orders in the lower heavens is repeatedly pointed out. Now in our text, xix. 1, it is said of the seven bands of angels present in the sixth heaven that ‘there is no difference in their countenances, or their manner, or the style of their clothing.’

In 4 Ezra [vi. 71] the words ‘ut facies eorum luceant sicut sol’ are found in i. 5 ‘Their faces shone like the sun.’

With the Apocalypse of Baruch, iv. 3 ‘Ostendi eam (i.e. Paradisum) Adamo priusquam peccaret,’ compare xxxi. 2.

In the Epistle of Barnabas xv. 4 τί λέγει τό “συντελέσειν ἐν ἑξ ἡμέραις.” τοῦτο λέγει ὅτι ἐν ἑξακισχιλίοις ἔτεσιν συντελέσει Κύριος τὰ σύνπαντα. ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα παρ’ αὐτῷ σημαίνει χίλια ἔτη, we have an exposition of the rather confused words in our text, xxxii. 2—xxxiii. In xv. 5–7, however, the writer of this Epistle does not develop logically the thought with regard to the seventh day; for the seventh day on which God rested from His works should in accordance with the same principle of interpretation as in xv. 4 have been taken as a symbol of a thousand years of rest, i.e. the millennium. In xv. 8, however, this writer shows his return to our text by his use of the peculiar phrase ‘the eighth day’: οὐ τὰ νῦν σάββατα [ἐμοὶ] δεκτά, ἀλλὰ ὁ πεποίηκα, ἐν ᾧ καταπαύσας τὰ πάντα ἀρχὴν ἡμέρας ὀγδόης ποιήσω, ὅ ἐστιν ἄλλου κόσμου ἀρχή. It may not be amiss here to point out that in the next chapter, in verse 5, the Ethiopic Enoch (lxxxix. 56, 66) is quoted as Scripture. The fact, therefore, that Barnabas does not quote our text as Scripture may point to his discrimination between the two books of Enoch to the detriment of the latter. Again in this Epistle, xviii. 1, the words ὁδοὶ δύο εἰσὶν . . . ἥ τε τοῦ φωτὸς καὶ ἡ τοῦ σκοτὸς are derived from our text, xxx. 15, ‘I showed him the two ways, the light and the darkness.’ Though the Two Ways are often described in early literature (see note on xxx. 15), only in Barnabas are they described in the same terms as in our text.

In the New Testament the similarity of thought and diction is sufficiently large to establish a close connexion, if not a literary dependence. With St. Matt. v. 9, ‘Blessed are the peacemakers,’ compare lii. 11, ‘Blessed is he who establishes peace.’ With St. Matt. v. 34, 35, 37, ‘Swear not at all: neither by the heaven . . . nor by the earth . . . nor by Jerusalem, . . . but let your speech be, Yea, yea : Nay, nay,' compare xlix. 1, 'I will not swear by a single oath, neither by heaven, nor by earth, nor by any other creature which God made. . . . If there is no truth in men, let them swear by a word, yea, yea, or nay, nay.' (See notes.)

With St. Matt. vii. 20, 'By their fruits ye shall know them,' compare xlii. 14, 'By their works those who have wrought them are known.' The words 'Be of good cheer, be not afraid,' St. Matt. xiv. 27, are of frequent occurrence in our text, i. 8 ; xx. 2 ; xxi. 3, &c. With St. Matt. xxv. 34, 'Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world,' compare ix. 1, 'This place (i.e. Paradise) O Enoch, is prepared for the righteous . . . as an eternal inheritance.' Next with St. Luke vi. 35 μηδὲν ἀπελπίζοντες, compare xlii. 7, 'Expecting nothing in return' Next with John xiv. 2, 'In my Father's house are many mansions,' compare lxi. 2, 'For in the world to come . . . there are many mansions prepared for men, good for the good, evil for the evil.' With Acts xiv. 15, 'Ye should turn from these vain things unto the living God, who made the heaven and the earth,' compare ii. 2, 'Do not worship vain gods who did not make heaven and earth.' In the Pauline Epistles there are several parallels in thought and diction. With Col. i. 16, 'Dominions or principalities or powers,' compare xx. 1, 'Lordships and principalities and powers': with Eph. iv. 25, 'Speak ye truth each one with his neighbour,' compare xlii. 12, 'Blessed is he in whom is the truth that he may speak the truth to his neighbour.' For other Pauline parallels with our text see pp. xxxix-xli. With Heb. xi. 3, 'The worlds have been framed by the word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear,' compare xxv. 1, 'I commanded . . . that visible things should come out of invisible,' and xxiv. 2, 'I will tell thee . . . what things I created from the non-existent, and what visible things from the invisible.' For two other parallels of Hebrews with our text see p. xli. With Rev.

i. 16, 'His countenance was as the sun shineth,' compare i. 5, 'Their faces shone like the sun': with ix. 1, 'There was given to him the key of the pit of the abyss,' compare xlii. 1, 'Those who keep the keys and are the guardians of the gates of hell.' With Rev. iv. 6, 'A glassy sea,' compare iii. 3, 'A great sea greater than the earthy sea.' This sea in the first heaven, however, may be merely 'the waters which were above the firmament' (Gen. i. 7). With Rev. x. 5, 6, 'And the angel . . . sware . . . that there shall be time no longer,' compare lxxv. 7, 'Then the times shall perish, and there shall be no year,' &c.: xxxiii. 2, 'Let there be . . . a time when there is no computation and no end; neither years, nor months,' &c.

Finally, in the Apocalyptic portions of the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, which were written probably about the beginning of the Christian era we find our text quoted directly or implied in several instances. In Levi 3 we have an account of the Angels imprisoned in the second heaven: ἐν αὐτῷ εἰςὶ πάντα τὰ πνεύματα τῶν ἐπαγωγῶν εἰς ἐκδίκησιν τῶν ἀνόμων. This must be rendered 'In it are all the spirits of the lawless ones who are kept bound unto (the day of) vengeance.' With this statement compare our text vii. 1, where the fallen angels in the second heaven are described as 'the prisoners suspended, reserved for (and) awaiting the eternal judgement.' Again, in the same chapter of Levi, there are said to be armies in the third heaven, οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλάνης. With these compare the angels of punishment in the third heaven in x. 3. The statement from Enoch in Test. Dan. 5 τῶν πνευμάτων τῆς πλάνης. 'Ἀνέγνω γὰρ ἐν βίβλῳ Ἐνώχ τοῦ δικαίου, ὅτι ὁ ἀρχὼν ὑμῶν ἐστὶν ὁ Σατανᾶς is drawn from xviii. 3, 'These are the Grigori (i.e. Ἐγρηγοροί) who with their prince Satanail rejected the holy Lord.' In the Test. Napht. 4 the authority of Enoch is claimed by the writer as follows: Ἀέγνω ἐν γραφῇ ἁγία Ἐνώχ, ὅτι καὶ γε καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀποστήσεσθε ἀπὸ κυρίου, πορευόμενοι κατὰ πᾶσαν ποιηρίαν ἐθνῶν, καὶ ποιήσετε κατὰ πᾶσαν ἀνομίαν Σοδόμων. καὶ ἐπάξει ὑμῖν κύριος αἰχμαλωσίαν . . . ἕως ἂν ἀναλώσῃ κύριος πάντας ὑμᾶς. This is a loose adaptation to later times of xxxiv. 2, 3, 'And they will fill all the world with wickedness and iniquity and foul impurities with one another, sodomy. . . . And on this account I will bring a deluge upon the earth, and I will destroy all.' The quotation in Test. Sim. 5 is probably derived from the same source, and that in Test. Benj. 9 ὑπονοῶ δὲ καὶ πράξεις ἐν ὑμῖν οὐ καλὰς ἔσεσθαι, ἀπὸ λόγων Ἐνὼχ τοῦ δικαίου· πορνεύσετε γὰρ πορνείαν Σοδόμων, καὶ ἀπώλησθε ἕως βραχύ, may confidently be traced to it. The words in Test. Juda 18 ἀνέγνω ἐν βίβλοις Ἐνὼχ τοῦ δικαίου, ὅσα κακὰ ποιήσετε ἐπ' ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις. φυλάξασθε οὖν, τέκνα μου, ἀπὸ τῆς πορνείας may likewise be founded upon it. The loose and inaccurate character of the quotations may in part be accounted for as follows.

Although it is a matter of demonstration that the main part of the book was written originally in Greek, it seems no less sure that certain portions of it were founded on Hebrew originals. Such an hypothesis is necessary owing to the above Enochic quotations which appear in the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs. For the fact that the latter work was written in Hebrew obliges us to conclude that its author or authors drew upon Hebrew originals in the quotations from Enoch. I have not attempted in the present work to discriminate the portions derived from Hebrew originals. For such a task we have not sufficient materials, and what we have, moreover, have not been preserved with sufficient accuracy.

§ 6. INTEGRITY AND CRITICAL CONDITION OF THE BOOK.

In its present form this book appears to be derived from one author. We have in the notes called attention from time to time to certain inconsistencies, but these may in part be due to inaccurate tradition; for the book in this respect has suffered deplorably. There are of course occasional interpo-lations—of these some are Jewish, and one or two are Christian: xxxvii seems foreign to the entire text.

The text, further, has suffered from disarrangement. Thus xxviii. 5 should be read after xxix, and, together with that chapter, should be restored before xxviii.

§ 7. DATE AND AUTHORSHIP.

The question of the date has to a large extent been determined already. The portions which have a Hebrew background are at latest pre-Christian. This follows from the fact of their quotation in the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs. As I have remarked above (p. xxiv) it is impossible to define the exact extent of such sections.

Turning, therefore, to the date of the rest of the book, we can with tolerable certainty discover the probable limits of its composition. The earlier limit is determined by the already existing books from which our author has borrowed. Thus Ecclesiasticus is frequently drawn upon: see xliii. 2, 3 (notes); xlvii. 5 (note); lii. 8 (note); lxi. 2, 4 (notes), &c. The Book of Wisdom also seems to have been laid under contribution: see lxxv. 4 (note). With this book our author shares certain closely related Hellenistic views. Again, as regards the Ethiopic Enoch, our author at times reproduces the phraseology and conceptions of that book: see vii. 4, 5 (notes); xxxiii. 4 (note), 9, 10 (notes); xxxv. 2 (note), &c.; at others he gives the views of the former in a developed form: see viii. 1, 5, 6 (notes); xl. 13 (note); lxiv. 5; at others he enunciates views which are absolutely divergent from the former: see xvi. 7 (note); xviii. 4 (note). It is noteworthy also that our author claims to have explained certain natural phenomena, but the explanations in question are not to be found in his writings but in the Ethiopic Enoch: see xl. 5, 6, 8, 9 (notes). Finally we observe the same advanced view on Demonology appearing in the Slavonic Enoch and in the latest interpolation in the Ethiopic Enoch; see xviii. 3 (note).

Ecclesiasticus, the Book of Wisdom (?), and the Ethiopic Enoch (in its latest and present form) were thus at our author's service. The earlier limit of composition, accordingly, lies probably between 30 B. C. and the Christian era.

We have now to determine the later limit. This must be set down as earlier than 70 A. D. For, (1) the temple is still standing; see lix. 2 (notes). (2) Our text was probably known to some of the writers of the New Testament (see pp. xxi-xxiii; xxxix-xliii). (3) It was known and used by the writers of the Epistle of Barnabas and of the latter half of the Ascension of Isaiah.

We may, therefore, with reasonable certainty assign the composition of our text to the period 1-50 A. D. The date of the Hebrew original underlying certain sections of our text is as we have already seen pre-Christian.

The author was a Jew who lived in Egypt, probably in Alexandria. He belonged to the orthodox Hellenistic Judaism of his day. Thus he believed in the value of sacrifices, xlii. 6; lix. 1, 2; lxvi. 2; but he is careful to enforce enlightened views regarding them, xlv. 3, 4; lxi. 4, 5; in the law, lii. 8, 9; and likewise in a blessed immortality, l. 2; lxv. 6, 8-10; in which the righteous shall wear 'the raiment of God's glory,' xxii. 8. In questions affecting the origin of the earth, sin, death, &c., he allows himself the most unrestricted freedom and borrows freely from every quarter. Thus, Platonic (xxx. 16, note), Egyptian (xxv. 2, note), and Zend (lviii. 4-6 notes) elements are adopted into his system. The result is naturally syncretistic.

The date (1-50 A. D.) thus determined above makes our author a contemporary of Philo. We have shown above (p. xvii) that they share many speculations in common, but in some they are opposed. Thus our author protests against the Jewish belief in the value of the intercession of departed saints for the living; see liii. 1 (note). Philo undoubtedly taught this, De Exsecrat. 9.

§ 8. SOME OF THE AUTHOR'S VIEWS ON CREATION, ANTHROPOLOGY, AND ETHICS.

God in the beginning created the world out of nothing, xxiv. 2¹. (For a detailed account of each day's creations see xxv-xxx.) In this creation He made seven heavens, xxx. 2, 3², and all the angelic hosts—the latter were created on the first day—and all animal and plant life, and finally man on the sixth day. After His work on the six days God rested on the seventh. These six days of work followed by a seventh of rest are at once a history of the past and a forecasting of the future. As the world was made in six days, so its history would be accomplished in 6,000 years, and as the six days of creation were followed by one of rest, so the 6,000 years of the world's history would be followed by a rest of 1,000 years, i. e. the millennium³. On its close would begin the eighth eternal day of blessedness when time should be no more, xxxii. 2—xxxiii. 2.

As regards man, all the souls of men were created before the foundation of the world, xxiii. 5, and also a future place of abode in heaven or hell for every individual soul, xlix. 2; lviii. 5; lxi. 2. The world was made for man's sake, lxv. 3. When Wisdom made man of seven substances, xxx. 8, at God's command, God gave him the name Adam from the four quarters of the earth—ἀνατολή, δύσις, ἄρκτος, μεσημβρία—xxx. 13. Man's soul was created originally good, while in the garden he could see the angels in heaven, xxxi. 2. Free-will was bestowed upon him, and the knowledge of good and evil. He was likewise instructed in the Two Ways of light and darkness, and then left to mould his own destiny, xxx. 15.

¹ Or else formed it out of pre-existing elements, xxv. 1, where we have an adaptation of the egg theory of the universe.

² Hell was in the north of the third heaven. It is possible, however, that there were also seven hells; see xl. 12 (note).

³ This millennium seems to be identical with a Messianic age, xxxv. 3 (note).

But the incorporation of the soul in the body with its necessary limitations biassed its preferences in the direction of evil, and death came in as the fruit of sin, xxx. 16. Men and angels will be judged and punished for every form of sin¹, xl. 12, 13; xlv. 3; lxxv. 6; but the righteous will escape the last judgement, lxxv. 8; lxxvi. 7; and will be gathered in eternal life, lxxv. 8, and will be seven times brighter than the sun, lxxvi. 7, and they will have no labour, nor sickness, nor sorrow, nor anxiety, nor need, and an incorruptible paradise shall be their protection and their eternal habitation, lxxv. 9, 10. As for sinners there is no place of repentance after death, xlii. 2, but hell is prepared for them as an eternal inheritance, x. 4, 6. And there is no intercession of departed saints for the living, liii. 1.

In an ethical regard there are many noble sentiments to be found in our author, but generally in a very unliterary form. The Slavonic Version is, no doubt, partially to be blamed here. I will append here an outline of a man's ethical duties with sundry beatitudes according to our author. Every man should work; for blessed is he who looks to raise his own hand for labour, but cursed is he who looks to make use of another man's labour, lii. 7, 8. And men, likewise, should be unselfishly just; for blessed is he who executes a just judgement, not for the sake of recompense, but for the sake of righteousness, expecting nothing in return, xlii. 7. And men should also practice charity and beneficence. They should not hide their silver in the earth, but assist the honest man in his affliction, li. 2, and stretch out their hands to the orphan, the widow and the stranger, l. 5, and give bread to the hungry, and clothe the naked, and raise the fallen, and walk without blame before the face of the Lord, ix. Furthermore, men should not swear either by heaven or earth or by any other creature which God made, but by a word, yea, yea, or nay, nay, xlix. 1 ; neither should they avenge themselves, l. 4, nor abuse and calumniate their neighbour, lii. 2 ; but endure every affliction and every evil word and attack for the sake of the Lord, l. 3 ; li. 3. Moreover, they should shun pride : for God hates the proud, lxiii. 4 ; and walk in long-suffering, in humility, in faith and truth, in sickness, in abuse, in temptation, in nakedness, in deprivation, loving one another till they depart from this world of sickness, lxvi. 6. Finally, whereas one man is more honourable than another, either on the ground of cunning or of strength, of purity or wisdom, of comeliness or understanding, let it be heard everywhere that none is greater than he who fears God, xliii. 2, 3. /

¹ Observe that men will be specially punished for ill-treatment of animals, lviii. 4-6.

§ 9. THE VALUE OF THIS BOOK IN ELUCIDATING CONTEMPORARY AND SUBSEQUENT RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

On the value of this book in elucidating contemporary and subsequent religious thought I shall be brief, save in the case of the doctrine of the seven heavens. This doctrine is set forth by our author with a fullness and clearness not found elsewhere in literature. Thus many gaps in our knowledge of this doctrine have been filled up. It will not be surprising, therefore, if we are thus enabled to explain certain mysterious allusions bearing on this conception in the Bible and elsewhere, which have hitherto been doubtful or inexplicable.

Some of the beliefs which appear in our text, and which in some instances are either partially or wholly elucidated, are as follows :

1. Death was caused by Sin. This was a comparatively late view : see notes on pp. 43, 44.

2. The millennium. This Jewish conception is first found in this book, xxxii. 2—xxxiii. 2, and the rationale of its origin is clear from this passage when taken together with statements on the same subject in later writers (see notes in loc., and p. xxvii). Its origin was as follows. The account in Genesis of the first week of creation came in pre-Christian times to be regarded not only as a history of the past, but as a forecast of the future history of the world so created. Thus as the world was created in six days, so its history was to be accomplished in 6,000 years; for 1,000 years are with God as one day (cf. Ps. xc. 4; Jub. iv. 30; 2 Pet. iii. 8; Barnabas, Ep. xiv. 4; Iren. contra Haer. v. 28. 2; Justin M., Dial. c. Tryph. 80), and as God rested on the seventh day, so at the close of the 6,000 years there would be a rest of 1,000 years, i. e. the millennium.

3. On the creation of man with freewill and the knowledge of good and evil, see xxx. 15 (notes).

4. The Seraphim. In the Chalkidri¹, xii. 1, we have in all probability the serpents who are mentioned in the Ethiopic Enoch xx. 7 along with the Cherubim. They are a class of heavenly creatures, and like the Cherubim are formed by a combination of the members of different animals. The serpent-like form, however, predominated, and hence they were δρακόντες in Greek (Eth. En. xx. 7), and Seraphim (שרפים) in Hebrew. How the peculiar name Chalkidri (= Χαλκύδραι brazen serpents?) arose I cannot say, as it is by no means appropriate. The main objection to identifying the Chalkidri with the Seraphim of the Old Testament is the fact that our author only mentions them here in connexion with the sun, xii. 1; xv. 1; and speaks directly of Seraphim elsewhere, xx. 1. However this may be, the passage in the Eth. Enoch xx. 7 is conclusive as to the serpent-like forms of the Seraphim. By this interpretation the word receives the meaning which it naturally has in the Hebrew.

5. On the intercession of Saints, see liii. 1 (note).

6. The seven Heavens—an early Jewish and Christian belief.

Various conceptions of the seven heavens prevailed largely in the ancient world, alike in the far east and in the west. With these we shall deal only in so far as they influenced or were in any degree akin to the views that prevailed on this subject among the Jews and early Christians.

¹ Various spelt in the MSS. as Chalkadri, Chalkidri, Chalkedry.

For the sake of clearness it may be well to indicate the direction our investigations will take. We shall first set forth or merely mention the beliefs of this nature that prevailed among the Babylonians and the followers of Zoroaster in the East and the speculations of certain Greek philosophers in the West. We shall next touch briefly on certain indications in the Old Testament that point in the direction of a plurality of the heavens, and show that Israel was not unaffected by the prevailing traditions of the ancient world.

That we have not misinterpreted such phenomena in the Old Testament, we are assured, when we descend to Jewish Apocalyptic writings, such as the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, the Slavonic Enoch, 4 Ezra, and to the Talmud, and the Mandaic Religion. Having thus shown that speculations or definitely formulated views on the plurality of the heavens were rife in the very cradle of Christendom and throughout its entire environment, we have next to consider whether Christian conceptions of heaven were shaped or in any degree modified by already existing ideas on this subject. We shall find that there is undoubted evidence of the belief in the plurality or sevenfold division of the heavens in the Pauline Epistles, in Hebrews, and in the Apocalypse.

In early Christian literature such ideas soon gained clearer utterance in Christian Apocalypses, such as the Ascension of Isaiah, the Apocalypses of Moses, Ezra, John, Isaac, Jacob, and the Acts of Callistratus. Such writers also as Clement of Alexandria and Origen are more or less favourably inclined to such conceptions. But shortly after this date these views fell into the background, discredited undoubtedly by the exaggerations and imbecilities with which they were accompanied. And thus though a Philastrius declares disbelief in a plurality of the heavens a heresy, Chrysostom is so violently affected against such a conception that he denies any such plurality at all. Finally such conceptions, failing in the course of the next few centuries to find a home in Christian lands, betook themselves to Mohammedan countries, where they found a ready welcome and a place of authority in the temple of Moslem theology. We shall now proceed as we have above indicated.

Among the Babylonians we find that hell was divided into seven parts by seven concentric walls (see Sayce, Babylonian Religion, 1887, pp. 221-227; Jensen, Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, Strasburg, 1890, pp. 232-3¹). Hence, we may here observe, this view passed over into the Talmud (Feuchtwang, Zeitschr. f. Assyr., iv. 42, 43).

This sevenfold division of things in general was a familiar one among this people². Thus the cities, Erech and Ecbatana, were each surrounded by seven walls, modelled, no doubt, as Jensen conjectures, on their conception of the seven world-zones (op. cit. 172). For the world was held to be divided in this fashion according to the Gudia (op. cit. 173). This division was due either to the overwhelming importance of the sacred number seven, or else specifically to the number of the planets (op. cit. 174). We should observe also that the temple of Erech was called the temple of the seven divisions. Since, therefore, both earth and hell were divided into seven zones, it is only reasonable to infer that a similar conception was entertained regarding the heavens. Jensen, indeed, says that he can find no trace of such a division in the inscriptions. But since the sevenfold division of the planets gave birth to the sevenfold division of earth and hell, it is next to impossible to avoid the inference with Sayce and Jeremias that this same division must have been applied to the heavens through which the planets moved.

In Parseeism we find the doctrine of the seven heavens. This does not appear in the earliest writings, but in the Ardâi-virâf-nâme there is an account of the seven heavens through which Sosiash made a progress in seven days. In the first heaven are men who feel heat and cold simultaneously. (If we might infer from corresponding ideas in the Slavonic Enoch, and other apocalypses, we should conclude this heaven to be an abode of the wicked, and not of the good. There is, however, a hell independently of this.) The inhabitants of the second heaven shine as the stars; of the third as the moon; of the fourth as the sun. The blessedness of endless light is reserved for heroes, lawgivers, and the preeminently pious. In the seventh heaven Zarathustra sits on a golden throne. As we have already remarked, there is only one hell mentioned in the Ardâi-virâf-nâme. On the influence which such ideas had on the Talmud see Kohut, Zeitschrift D M G, xxi. 562.

¹ See also Jeremias, Die babyl.-assur. Vorstellungen vom Leben nach dem Tode, 1887, pp. 34-45.

² Cf. Sayce, Babylonian Religion, p. 82 note.

If we now turn from the East to the West, we meet first of all with the Pythagorean tenfold division of the universe. In the centre there was the central fire around which revolved from west to east the ten heavenly bodies. Furthest off was the heaven of fixed stars; next came the five planets; then the sun, the moon, the earth, and finally the counter earth¹. According to the Timæus of Plato the universe is shaped as a sphere at the centre of which is placed the earth. Next follow the sun, the moon, and the five other planets, revolving round the earth in orbits separated from each other by distances corresponding to the intervals of the harmonic system. The outermost circle is formed of the heaven of fixed stars.

When we turn to the Stoics we find kindred conceptions; in the centre of the universe the earth is placed in a state of repose. Nearest to the earth revolves the moon, and next in their appropriate orbits the Sun, Venus, Mercury, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn.

We have thus seen that speculations were rife throughout the ancient world on the plurality of the heavens. It is clear further that these speculations were based mainly on astronomical considerations. That ancient Judaism was not unaffected by such views we may reasonably conclude from certain passages in the Old Testament. The plural form of the word for 'heaven' in Hebrew probably points to a plurality of heavens. Such phrases as 'the heaven of heavens,' Deut. x. 14; 1 Kings viii. 27; Ps. cxlviii. 4, cannot be adequately interpreted unless in reference to such a belief. In Job i. 6, 7; ii. 1, 2, 7 we find a further peculiar feature in the ancient conception of heaven. Satan there presents himself along with the angels in the presence of God. The place indicated by the context is heaven. Similarly in 1 Kings xxii. 19-22 an evil spirit presents himself among the heavenly hosts before the throne of God. The presence of evil in heaven, though offensive to the conscience of later times, seems to have caused no offence in early Semitic thought.

¹ For further details see the English translation of Zeller's Pre-Socratic Philosophy, i. 444-5.

We shall find in the course of our investigations that this peculiar idea reasserted itself from time to time in Judaism and Christianity till finally it was expelled from both.

The probability of an Old Testament belief in the plurality of the heavens is heightened, if we consider the fact that the Jews were familiar with and attached names to the planets. Thus Kronos, Aphrodite, Ares, Zeus, Hermes are mentioned respectively in Amos v. 26; Is. xiv. 12; 2 Kings xvii. 30; Is. lxv. 11; xlv. 1. The Jews were acquainted also with the signs of the Zodiac (Job xxxviii. 32), and offered them an idolatrous worship (2 Kings xxiii. 5).

Since, therefore, we have seen that in the East astronomical considerations, i. e. the sevenfold division of the planets led in due course to a similar division of the heavens, it is not unlikely that this knowledge gave birth to a like result among the Jews.

However this may be, the reasonable probability we have already arrived at is converted into a certainty when we come down to the Apocalyptic and other writings of the Jews. Of these, the Slavonic Enoch and the Apocalyptic sections of the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs were written about or before the beginning of the Christian Era. As the description of the seven heavens in the latter is very brief we shall deal with it first. The rendering that follows presupposes an emendation of Dr. Sinker's text, which I cannot justify here, but hope to do so later in an edition of this work.

The third chapter of the Testament of Levi runs: 'Hear then concerning the seven heavens. The lowest is the gloomiest, because it witnesses every iniquity of men. The second has fire, snow, ice, ready against the day of the ordinance of the Lord, in the righteous judgement of God. In it are all the spirits of the lawless ones which are confined for punishment. (Cf. Slav. Enoch vii.) In the third are the hosts of the armies (cf. Slav. Enoch xvii) which are appointed against the day of judgement to execute vengeance on the spirits of deceit and of Beliar. . . . In the highest of all the Great Glory dwells, in the holy of holies. . . . In the heaven next to it (i. e. the sixth) are the angels of the presence of the Lord, who minister and make propitiation to the Lord for all the sins of ignorance of the righteous. . . . And in the heaven below this (i. e. the fifth) are the angels who bear the answers to the angels of the presence of the Lord. And in the heaven next to this (i. e. the fourth) are thrones, authorities, in which hymns are ever offered to God.' In chapter ii of the same Testament there is a short reference to the first three heavens: 'And I entered from the first heaven into the second, and I saw there water hanging between the two. And I saw a third heaven brighter than these two.'

We cannot pause here to deal with the details of the above account. We shall only draw attention to the description of the denizens of the second heaven. These are the fallen angels who are reserved for punishment. Although the description of the seven heavens just given is short, it is too definitely conceived to have appeared thus for the first time in Judaism. In the Slavonic Enoch, whose evidence we shall presently briefly summarize, we have, so far as I am aware, the most elaborate account of the seven heavens that exists in any writing or in any language. 'The Book of the Secrets of Enoch,' as it is named in the Slavonic MSS. in which it is alone preserved, but which for the sake of brevity I call 'the Slavonic Enoch,' was written in the main in Greek, at Alexandria, although portions of it are merely reproductions of a Hebrew original. In the first heaven there is 'a very great sea, greater than any earthly sea.' (Cf. Rev. iv. 6.) This sea seems to be described in the Testaments of the XII Patriarchs as 'water hanging between the first and second heavens.' (See above.) In this heaven also are 'the elders and the rulers of the orders of the stars.' Although the number of these is not given, it is either twelve (and then we have here an account related to Eth. En. lxxxii. 9-18, 20) or possibly it is twenty-four, and thus there may be a remote connexion on the one hand between this class of 'elders and rulers . . . of the stars' and the twenty-four elders in Rev. iv. 4, and on the other between it and the Babylonian idea set forth in Diodorus Siculus, ii. 31 μετὰ δὲ τὸν ζωδιακὸν κύκλον εἴκοσιν καὶ τέτταρας ἀφορίζουσιν ἀστέρας, ὧν τοὺς μὲν ἡμίσεις ἐν τοῖς βορείοις μέρεσι, τοὺς δὲ ἡμίσεις ἐν τοῖς νοτίοις τετάχθαι φασί, καὶ τούτων τοὺς μὲν ὀρωμένους τῶν ζώντων εἶναι καταριθμοῦσι, τοὺς δ' ἀφανεῖς τοῖς τετελευτηκόσι προσωρίσθαι νομίζουσιν, οὓς δικαστὰς τῶν ὅλων προσαγορεύουσιν (quoted by Gunkel, Schöpfung und Chaos, p. 308, who establishes a connexion between Rev. iv. 4 and this Babylonian idea). The first heaven, further, contains treasures of snow, ice, clouds, and dew.

In the second heaven (chap. vii) Enoch saw the prisoners suspended reserved for and awaiting the eternal judgement. 'And these angels were gloomy in appearance, . . . they had apostatized from the Lord and transgressed together with their prince.' For a similar account see Test. Levi, above.

In the third heaven (chap. viii) we have the garden of Eden and the tree of life, and likewise 'an olive tree always distilling oil,' i.e. the arbor misericordiae (cf. Evang. Nicodemi, ii. 3). We should observe that the location of Paradise in this heaven agrees with the Pauline account 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3.

But (chap. x) in the northern region of this heaven Enoch sees the place of the damned. 'That place has fire on all sides and on all sides cold and ice, thus it burns and freezes.' When Enoch exclaims, 'Woe, woe! how terrible is this place!' his escort replies: 'This place, Enoch, is prepared for those who did not honour God; who commit evil deeds on earth, sodomy, witchcraft, enchantments, . . . stealing, lying, calumnies, envy, evil thoughts, fornication, murder. (Chap. x. 4.)

In the fourth heaven (chap. xi-xv) Enoch sees the course of the sun and moon, and the angels and the wonderful creatures, the phoenixes and the chalkidri, which wait upon the sun. In the midst of this heaven (chap. xvii) are 'the armed host serving the Lord with cymbals and organs and unceasing voice.' Cf. Test. Levi on third and fourth heavens above.

In the fifth heaven (chap. xviii) are the watchers whose fallen brethren Enoch had already seen undergoing torments in the second heaven. These are troubled and silent on account of their brethren.

In the sixth heaven (chap. xix) are 'seven bands of angels, very bright and glorious,' who arrange and study the revolutions of the stars and the changes of the moon and the revolutions of the sun, &c.; 'And the angels over all the souls of men who write down all their works and their lives before the face of the Lord. In their midst are seven phoenixes and seven cherubim and seven six-winged creatures.'

In the seventh heaven (chap. xx) Enoch sees all the heavenly hosts, the ten great orders of angels standing before the Lord in the order of their rank, and the Lord sitting on His lofty throne.

With regard to this scheme, I will content myself with calling attention to the fact that a preliminary Tartarus is situated in the second heaven (cf. second heaven in the Test. Levi); and that hell is placed in the north of the third heaven, and that evil in various forms is found in the second and third heavens, and dissatisfaction and trouble in the fifth.

In 4 Ezra (vi. 55-74) there is a detailed description of the seven ways of the wicked and the seven ways of the righteous. These ways are represented in a form so essentially abstract, that as Gunkel rightly remarks (op. cit. p. 309), they must be derived from what were originally concrete conceptions such as the seven heavens and the seven hells. To the latter conception there is no reference in the Slavonic Enoch: yet see xl. 12 (note).

Passing onward we come to the Talmud. In the Talmud the views of the Rabbis waver. Some thought as the Rabbi Jehuda that there were two heavens, Chagiga 12^b, but Rabbi Simeon ben Lakish enumerated seven. This latter view was the usual one. In the Beresh. rabba c. 6 and the Chagiga 12^b, the seven heavens are as follows. The lowest which is called vilun is empty. In the second, named rak'ia, are the sun, moon, and stars. In the third, named shechagim, are the mills which grind the manna for the righteous. In the fourth heaven, zebul, are the heavenly Jerusalem, the temple, the altar, and Michael. In the fifth, maon, are the angels who sing by night, but are silent by day in order that God may hear the praises of Israel. In the sixth, machon, are the treasures of the snow, hail, rain, and dew. In the seventh, aravoth, are judgement and righteousness, the treasures of life, peace, and blessing, the souls of the departed pious as well as the spirits and souls yet to be born, and the dew wherewith God will awake the dead. Finally there are the seraphim, ophannim, chayyoth and other angels of service, and God Himself sitting on a throne. See Weber, Die Lehren des Talmud, pp. 197-8; Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, i. 467; Wetstein on 2 Cor. xii.

It is well to observe here that, though the Talmudic description of the seven heavens is puerile in the extreme, its character attests the influence of a growing ethical consciousness.

To such a consciousness the presence of evil in heaven could not but seem incongruous. In banishing evil, however, from the precincts of the heavens, the Rabbis weakened the vigour of the old conceptions; for they were not masters of sufficient imagination to fill up adequately the gaps brought about by their righteous zeal. In connexion with Jewish evidence on this subject, we might point out that the same division of the heavens probably prevailed in the Mandaic Religion, since at all events one of its dogmas was the sevenfold division of hell (Brandt, Die Mandäische Religion, p. 182).

We have now found that among the Babylonians, the later followers of Zoroaster, the Greeks, in all probability in ancient Judaism, and certainly in Judaism generally from before the Christian Era onward, speculations, and as a rule clearly defined conceptions, were rife on the plurality of the heavens. We have seen also that the prevailing view was that of the sevenfold division of the heavens, and we have observed further that a feature impossible in modern conceptions of heaven shows itself from time to time in pre-Christian religious conceptions, i.e. the belief in the presence of evil in the heavens.

We have now to consider whether Christian conceptions of heaven were shaped, or in any degree influenced, by already existing views of that nature. A knowledge of ancient thought on this subject would naturally lead us to expect such an influence at work, and we find on examination that our expectations are in certain respects fully realized. First from 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3 we learn that St. Paul believed in a plurality of the heavens. 'I know a man in Christ fourteen years ago . . . such a one caught up even to the third heaven. And I know such a man . . . how that he was caught up into Paradise.'

Heretofore exegetes have been divided as to whether St. Paul believed in the existence of three heavens or of seven. Owing to the fresh evidence on the subject furnished by the Slavonic Enoch there is no longer room for reasonable doubt on the question. In the Slavonic Enoch we have presented to us a scheme of the seven heavens which in some of its prominent features agrees with that conceived by St. Paul. Thus in the Slavonic Enoch Paradise is situated in the third heaven as in 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3, whereas according to later Judaism it belonged to the fourth heaven (see above). In the next place the presence of evil in some part of the heavens is recognized. Thus in Eph. vi. 12 we meet with the peculiar statement 'Against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavens,' πρὸς τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις. The phrase ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις occurs only in Ephesians of the Pauline Epistles. It is found five times i. 3, 20; ii. 6; iii. 10; and vi. 12, and always in a local sense. It is thus in fact = ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.

This phrase is then capable of two interpretations. The 'hosts' in question are the fallen angels in the second heaven, or else the powers of Satan, the prince of the air (cf. Eph. ii. 2). For the latter interpretation the Slavonic Enoch xxix. 4, 5 might be quoted as a parallel: 'One of the ranks of the archangels, having turned away with the rank below him, entertained an impossible idea, that he should make his throne higher than the clouds over the earth, and should be equal in rank to My power. And I hurled him from the heights with his angels. And he was flying in the air continually above the abyss.' The latter explanation of ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις is probably right. In Col. i. 20, however, we must, if we deal honestly with the context, suppose some such a view of the heavens as that given in the Slavonic Enoch to underlie the words: 'To reconcile all things unto Himself, whether things upon the earth or things in the heavens.' That 'things upon earth' need to be reconciled to God is universally intelligible; but so far as I am aware no exegete has hitherto recognized any such necessity on the part of 'things in the heavens.' Yet this is the obvious meaning of the words. Hence 'the things in the heavens' that are to be reconciled to God must be either the fallen angels imprisoned in the second heaven, or else the powers of Satan whose domain is the air. Though to some universalistic aspects of Paulinism the conversion of Satan is not impossible, it is nevertheless unlikely to be his thought here. Hence we seem to be restricted to the other interpretation, and thus we have therein an indirect parallel to 1 Pet. iii. 19, 'He went and preached to the spirits in prison.' Another statement in Eph. iii. 10 belongs to the same plane of thought: 'To the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavens (ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις) might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of God.' These 'principalities and powers' may also be taken as the fallen angels in the second heaven; but it is more likely that they are the rulers of the various lower heavens which are mentioned in iv. 10: 'He . . . that ascended far above all the heavens.' This thought of the seven heavens through which Christ passed or above which he was exalted twice recurs in Hebrews iv. 14: 'Having then a great high priest, who hath passed through the heavens' (διεληλυθότα τοὺς οὐρανοῦς); vii. 26: 'Made higher than the heavens' (ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν γενόμενος). Before we pass on to the consideration of the Apocalypse, we should observe that Paul used *οὐρανός*¹ frequently (cf. Rom. i. 18; x. 6; 1 Cor. viii. 5; xv. 47), though he believed in a plurality of the heavens.

In the twelfth chapter of Revelation we have a record of the war in heaven between Michael and his angels against Satan and his angels, with the subsequent overthrow and expulsion of the latter. These events spiritually interpreted symbolize, it is true, the victory of good over evil, but when studied in reference to their origin, they mark a revolutionizing of the old Semitic conception of heaven. Evil can no longer be conceived as possible in the abode of righteousness, nor can its place be any more found in heaven. And thus Satan and his angels are cast down to the earth. When once evil in all its forms is driven forth from heaven, the rationale of a sevenfold division of it disappears. There are then no longer conflicting elements which must be restricted to certain divisions and kept apart by concrete barriers. The old Semitic doctrine of the seven heavens really presupposes in some respects dualistic influences. Such a conception could not long hold its ground in a monistic faith. It was this dualistic tinge that made it so acceptable with the heretics. We must now follow the subsequent fortunes of this doctrine in the early centuries of Christianity.

First we find in one of the Christian sections (chaps. vi-xi) of the Ascension of Isaiah an elaborate but sinewless account of the seven heavens. Evil has already been expelled, and the inhabitants of one heaven differ from those of another merely in possessing greater degrees of glory and knowledge. This account of the seven heavens is singularly wanting in variety and imaginative power: it is valuable, however, in an historical reference.

¹ The singular and plural of this word are used, according to Sir J. C. Hawkins, in the New Testament as follows:—

	Mat.	Mark	Luke	John	Acts	Paul.	Heb.	James	Pet.	Rev.
οὐρανός	27	12	31	18	24	11	3	2	1	51
οὐρανοί	55	5	4	0	2	10	7	0	5	1*

*xii. 12—a quotation from, or reference to Is. xlv. 23 and xlix. 13.

Leaving the Ascension of Isaiah, we shall now give the evidence of Clement of Alexandria and Origen on the prevalence of this doctrine.

In the Stromata iv. 25 of Clement there is a reference to the seven heavens which are obviously regarded as a true conception; while in v. 11 we have a quotation from a lost Apocalypse of Zephaniah: ἀρ' οὐχ ὅμοια ταῦτα τοῖς ὑπὸ Σοφονία λεχθείσι τοῦ προφήτου; καὶ ἀνέλαβέν με πνεῦμα καὶ ἀνήνεγκέν με ὡς οὐρανὸν πέμπτον καὶ ἐθεώρουν ἀγγέλους καλουμένους κυρίους . . . ὑμνοῦντας θεὸν ἄρρητον ὕψιστον.

This passage seems to be ultimately derived from the Slavonic Enoch xviii.

In the lost Book of Baruch the Prophet, there was some account of the seven heavens according to Origen, de Princip. ii. 3, 6: 'Denique etiam Baruch prophetae librum in assertionis huius testimonium vocant, quod ibi de septem mundis vel coelis evidentius indicatur.'

But to proceed to Origen's own views we read in contra Cels. vi. 21 as follows: ἐπὶ τὰ δὲ οὐρανοὺς, ἣ ὅλως περιωρισμένον ἀριθμὸν αὐτῶν, αἱ φερόμεναι ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τοῦ θεοῦ οὐκ ἀπαγγέλλουσι γραφαί· ἀλλ' οὐρανοὺς, εἴτε τὰς σφαῖρας τῶν παρ' Ἑλλησι λεγομένων πλανήτων, εἴτε καὶ ἄλλο τι ἀπορρητότερον εἰκόασι διδάσκειν οἱ λόγοι.

Though Origen says that there is no authoritative teaching as to there being seven heavens, it is clear that he really believes in there being this number; for elsewhere he identifies these heavens with the planets of the Greeks, de Princip. ii. 11. 6: 'Si quis sane mundus corde, et purior mente, et exercitior sensu fuerit, velocius proficiens cito ad aeris locum adscendet, et ad coelorum regna perveniet per locorum singulorum, ut ita dixerim, mansiones, quas Graeci quidem sphaeras, id est globos, appellaverunt, scriptura vero divina coelos nominat: in quibus singulis primo quidem perspiciet ea, quae ibi geruntur, secundo vero etiam rationem quare gerantur agnoscet: et ita per ordinem digredietur singula, sequens eum, qui transgressus est coelos, Iesum filium Dei, dicentem : “ Volo, ut ubi sum ego, et isti sint mecum.” ’

We shall now cite the evidence of Christian Apocalyptic works as attesting the prevalence of this belief in the seven heavens.

In the Apocalypse of Moses, p. 19 (Apocalypses Apocryphae, ed. Tischendorf, 1866), Eve is bidden to look up to the seven firmaments : ἀνάβλεψον τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς σου καὶ ἴδε τὰ ἑπτὰ στερεώματα ἀνεωγμένα. On p. 21 Michael is bidden : ἄπελθε εἰς τὸν παράδεισον ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ οὐρανῷ. Thus the writer of this Apocalypse, so far as he touches on the subject of the seven heavens, agrees with the teaching of the Slavonic Enoch. In the Apoc. Esdrae (pp. 29, 30 op. cit.) there is mention made of a plurality of the heavens, and of Paradise as lying in the east. In the Apoc. Johannis (p. 84 op. cit.) the seven regions of the heavens are spoken of : καὶ γενήσεται κρότος μέγας ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, καὶ σαλευθήσονται τὰ ἑπτὰ (a. l. ἐννέα) πέταλα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ.

In our account of the third heaven according to the Slavonic Enoch, we showed that hell was situated in the north of that heaven. Similarly in the Testament of Isaac (Testament of Abraham, ed. James, pp. 146–8) hell is understood to be in one of the heavens. The same holds true of the Testament of Jacob (op. cit. p. 153), and of the Apoc. Esdrae, p. 29.

Finally in the Acts of Callistratus (ed. Conybeare), pp. 311–12, the seven circles of the heavens are mentioned.

Speculations about the seven heavens prevailed largely among the heretics. Thus according to Irenaeus, contra Haer. i. 5, 2, the Valentinians taught : ἑπτὰ γὰρ οὐρανοὺς κατεσκευακέναι, ὧν ἐπάνω τὸν δημιουργὸν εἶναι λέγουσι. Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο Ἐβδομάδα καλοῦσιν αὐτόν, τὴν δὲ μητέρα τὴν Ἀχαμῶθ Ὀγδοάδα . . . τοὺς δὲ ἑπτὰ οὐρανοὺς οὐκ (?) εἶναι νοητοὺς φασιν, ἀγγέλους δὲ αὐτοὺς ὑποτίθενται . . . ὥς καὶ τὸν παράδεισον ὑπὲρ τρίτον οὐρανὸν ὄντα, τέταρτον ἄγγελον λέγουσι δυνάμει ὑπάρχειν.

In Tertullian, Adv. Valent. xx, practically the same account is given : ‘ Tum ipsam caelorum septemPLICEM scenam solio desuper suo finit. Unde et Sabbatum dictus ab hebdomade sedis suae . . . Caelos autem noeros deputant, et interdum angelos eos faciunt . . . sicut et Paradisum Archangelum quartum, quoniam et hunc supra caelum tertium pangunt.’

The heretic Marcus taught according to Hippolytus a similar doctrine of the heavens, but according to Irenaeus, adv. Haer. i. 17, 1, he reckoned eight heavens in addition to the sun and moon.

Basilides’ view as to their being 365 heavens is well known (Augustine, de Haer. i. 4).

The Ophites (Irenaeus, adv. Haer. i. 30. 4, 5) believed in seven heavens ruled over by seven potentates, named Jaldabaoth, Jao, Sabaoth, Adoneus, Eloeus, Horeus, Astaphaeus—a Hebdomad which with their mother Sophia formed a Ogdoad. A fuller account of this Hebdomad will be found in Origen, contra Celsum, vi. 31, and in Epiphanius Haer. xxvi. 10.

In the mysteries of Mithras described by Origen, contra Celsum, vi. 22, there are certain speculations akin to the doctrine of the seven heavens.

A fragment of Theodotus preserved by Clement is found regarding the creation of man : ὁθεν ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ τῷ τετάρτῳ οὐρανῷ δημιουργεῖται¹.

The doctrine of the seven heavens, therefore, being associated with so many grotesque and incongruous features even in the thoughts of the orthodox, became in due time an offensive conception to the sounder minds in the Church, and this offensiveness was naturally aggravated by the important role it played in heretical theology. Augustine, though he expounds a peculiar doctrine of his own which asserts the existence of three heavens (de Gen. ad Litt. xii. 67), feels himself beset with abundant difficulties on this question. On the subject in general he writes : ‘ Si autem sic accipimus tertium coelum quo Apostolus raptus est, ut quartum etiam, et aliquot ultra superius coelos esse credamus, infra quos et hoc tertium coelum, sicut eos alii septem, alii octo, alii novem vel decem perhibent . . . de quorum ratione sive opinione nunc disserere longum est' (de Gen. ad Litt. xii. 57). In the fourth century of the Christian era, Churchmen were required according to the clear tenor of Scripture to believe in the plurality of the heavens, but as to the number of these heavens they were at liberty to decide for themselves without prejudicing their orthodoxy. Thus Philastrius, Bishop of Brescia, at the close of the fourth century holds it a heresy to doubt the plurality of the heavens, but a man may without offence believe in seven, three, or two. 'De caelorum diversitate est haeresis quae ambigat. Scriptura enim in primo die caelum et terram facta declarat duo haec elementa, secundo firmamentum aquae factum, et nihilominus ipsum firmamentum caelum appellatum fuisse testatur. David autem dicit de caelis ita: Laudate dominum caeli caelorum et aquae quae super caelos sunt. Sive ergo sex caelos, secundum David, et septimum hoc firmamentum accipere quis voluerit, non errat; nam Solomon tres caelos dicit, ita: Caelum et caelum caeli. Paulus aequè apostolus usque ad tertium caelum se raptum fatetur. Sive ergo septem quis acceperit, ut David, sive tres, sive duos, non errat, quia et Dominus ait: Pater qui in caelis est.' (De Haeres. Liber xciv.)

¹ The Valentinians also placed Paradise in the fourth heaven.

But these and the like speculations had become so objectionable to the master mind of Chrysostom, that despite 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3 he declares the doctrine of a plurality of the heavens to be a mere device of man and contrary to holy scripture: τίς ἂν οὖν λοιπὸν μετὰ τὴν τοσαύτην διδασκαλίαν ἀνέχοιτο τῶν ἀπλῶς ἐξ οἰκείας διανοίας φθέγγεσθαι βουλομένῳ, καὶ ἀπεναντίως τῇ θείᾳ γραφῇ πολλοῖς οὐρανοῖς λέγειν ἐπιχειρούντων (Hom. in Gen. iv. 3). And again, in order to discredit the last traces of this view he maintains that the heaven neither revolves nor is spherical (In Epist. ad Hebraeos, Hom. xiv. 1).

Our task is now nearly done. It only remains for us to point out that this doctrine, on its rejection by the Christian Church, passed over with many similar ones into Mohammedanism. In fact, Mohammedanism formed in many respects the cloaca maxima into which much of the refuse of Christianity discharged itself.

Thus in the Koran xxiii it is written: 'And we have created over you seven heavens, and we are not negligent of what we have created.' And again in xli: 'And he formed them into seven heavens in two days, and revealed unto every heaven its office.'

Into a detailed representation of these heavens by later Mohammedan writers it is not necessary for us to enter.

So far as I am aware every detail is borrowed from Jewish and Christian Apocalypses. Some form of the Slavonic Enoch seems to have been in Mohammed's hands¹.

¹ The four streams of Paradise (Slav. En. viii. 5) which pour honey and milk and oil and wine, reappear in the Koran xlvii. Again, irrational animals are to be restored to life at the resurrection, to receive the recompense due to them, and then to return to the dust, with the exception of Ezra's ass and the dog of the seven sleepers (cf. Koran iii; xviii; Sale's note on vi; Slav. Enoch lviii. 4-6).

THE BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH THE SON OF ARED; A MAN WISE AND BELOVED OF GOD¹.

[Concerning the Life and the Dream of Enoch*².]

THERE was a very³ wise man and a worker of great things : God loved him, and received him, so that he should see the heavenly abodes, the kingdoms of the wise, great, inconceivable and never-changing God, the Lord of all, the wonderful and glorious, and bright and all-beholding station of the servants of the Lord, and the unapproachable throne of the Lord, and the degrees and manifestations of the incorporeal hosts, and should be an eye-witness of the unspeakable ministrations of the multitude of creatures, and of the varying appearance, and indescribable singing of the host of Cherubim, and of the immeasurable world.

I. 1. At that time he said: 'Hardly had I accomplished *165 years, when I begat my son Methusal : after that I lived 200 years and accomplished all the years of my life⁴, 365

¹ This general title appears in B as These are the secret books of God which were shown to Enoch.

Introduction. THIS IS ENTIRELY WANTING IN B. ² Sok. om. I have retained the headings of the Sections which are given in A, as they are valuable for critical purposes; but as they do not belong to the original text I have enclosed them in brackets. ³ Sok. om.

I. ⁴ B om.; Sok. supports text.

years. 2. *On the first day of the first month¹ I was alone in my house, *and I rested on my bed and slept. 3. And as I slept a great grief came upon my heart, and I wept with mine eyes² *in my dream, and I could not understand what this grief meant, or what would happen to me³. 4. And there appeared to me two men very tall, such as I have never seen on earth. 5. And their faces *shone like the sun⁴, and their eyes *were like burning lamps⁵; and fire came forth from their lips. *Their dress had the appearance of feathers: their feet were purple⁶, *their wings were brighter than gold⁷; *their hands whiter than snow³. They stood at the head of my bed and called me by my name. 6. I awoke from my sleep and *saw clearly these men standing in front of me⁸. 7. I *hastened and⁹ made obeisance to them and *was terrified, and the appearance of my countenance was changed¹⁰ from fear. 8. And these¹¹ men said to me: "Be of good cheer, Enoch, be not afraid; the everlasting¹² God hath sent us to thee, and lo! to-day thou shalt ascend with us into heaven.

¹ In the second month on an appointed day, B; Sok. is conflate.

² I had made myself melancholy weeping with my eyes, and I lay down on my bed to sleep, B. ³ B om.; Sok. supports text. ⁴ Were like the shining sun, Sok. ⁵ Burnt like lamps, A. ⁶ So Sok. A reads there was a conspicuousness in their raiment and singing, in appearance purple; B, their dress and singing were wonderful. ⁷ And on their shoulders as it were golden wings, B. ⁸ So Sok.; standing up quickly (?), B; A om. ⁹ A B om. ¹⁰ Veiled my face, B. ¹¹ The two, Sok. ¹² Almighty, B.

I. With verses 2, 3, cf. Eth. En. lxxxiii. 3, 5. 5. Faces shone like the sun: cf. xix. 1; Rev. i. 16; 4 Ezra [vi. 71]. Eyes were like burning lamps, from Dan. x. 6 עֵינָיו כְּלַפְיָרִי אֵשׁ: cf. Ezek. i. 13; Rev. i. 14; xix. 12. Fire came forth from their lips: cf. for language Rev. ix. 17; xi. 5. Their dress... purple: the text is corrupt. Their hands whiter than snow; cf. Eth. En. cvi. 2, 10 'his body was whiter than snow': Apoc. Petri τὰ μὲν γὰρ σώματα αὐτῶν ἦν λευκότερα πάσης χιόνος. 7. Countenance was changed: Dan. v. 6, 9, 10. 8. Be of good cheer: Matt. ix. 2 θάρσει; xiv. 27; Mark vi. 50; x. 29; Acts xxiii. 11; xxvii. 22, 25. In LXX Gen. xxxv. 17; Exod. xiv. 13, &c. θάρσει is a rendering of אֲלֵךְ בְּתִרְסָה. Be not afraid: cf. 2 Kings i. 15; Ezek. ii. 6, &c.; Eth. En. xv. 1. The conjunction of Be of good cheer and

9. And tell thy sons and thy servants, all ¹ *who work ² *in thy house ³, and let no one seek thee, till the Lord bring thee back to them.” 10. And I *hastened to obey ⁴ them, and went out *of my house ⁵. And I called my sons Methusal, Regim [*and Gaidal ⁶], and told them what wonderful ⁷ things *the two men ⁸ had said to me.’

[The Instruction: how Enoch taught his Sons.]

II. 1. ‘Hear me, my children, for I do not know whither I am going, or what awaits me. 2. Now, my children, I say unto you: turn not aside from God: *walk before the face of the Lord and keep his judgements ⁹ *and do not worship vain gods ¹⁰, who did not make heaven and earth ¹¹, for these ¹ That they are to do without thee on the earth A. ² A and Sok. om. ³ Sok. om. ⁴ Obeyed, B. ⁵ B omits; A adds and shut the doors as was ordered me. ⁶ B om.; Sok. supports text. See exegetical note in loc. ⁷ B om. ⁸ They, A; these men, Sok.

II. A om. ⁹ Sok. adds do not defile the prayers (offered for) your salvation, that the Lord may not shorten the work of your hands, and ye may not be deprived of the gifts of the Lord, and the Lord may not deprive you of the attainment of His gifts in your treasures. Bless the Lord with the firstlings of your flocks and the firstlings of your children, and blessings shall be upon you for ever; and do not depart from the Lord. ¹⁰ To vain creatures, A. ¹¹ Sok. adds nor any other creature.

Be not afraid is found in Matt. xiv. 27.

10. Sons: these are mentioned though not named in Eth. En. lxxxi. 5, 6; xci. 1. Regim: see lvii. 2. Gaidal: this name is derived from LXX. Gen. iv. 18 ἐγγνήθη δὲ τῷ Ἐνώχ Γαῖδάδ. For Γαῖδάδ Mass. gives Irad (ܝܪܕ) and Syriac Idar (ܝܕܪ), which more nearly approaches LXX. Observe that this Gaidal is the son of Enoch who is the grandson of Cain, and therefore wrongly appears here. As however B omits it both here and in lvii. 2, it is probably spurious. A confusion of Enoch, son of Lamech, and Enos, son of Seth, is to be found in the Clementine Recognitions iv. 12.

II. 1. Know whither I am going, &c.: cf. vii. 5. 2. Turn not aside from God: 1 Sam. xii. 20. Walk before the face of the Lord: Ps. lvi. 13; cxvi. 9. Keep his judgements: Lev. xviii. 5; Ezek. xxxvi. 27. Worship vain gods: Deut. viii. 19; cf. 1 Sam. (LXX, Syr., Vulg.) xii. 21. Vain gods who did not make heaven and earth, for these will perish, from Jer. x. 11; cf. Ps. xevi. 5; Is. ii. 18; Acts xiv. 15 ‘Ye should turn from these vain things unto the living God, who made the heaven and the earth.’ Jub. xii. 2, 3, 4 ‘What help . . . have we from those idols which thou dost worship . . . worship them not. Worship the God of heaven.’

will perish, *and also those who worship them¹. 3. * But may God make confident your hearts in the fear of Him². 4. And now, my children, let no one seek me till the Lord brings me back to you.'

[Of the taking up of Enoch; how the Angels took him up into the first heaven.]

III. 1. It came to pass when I³ had spoken to my sons, *these men⁴ *summoned me and⁵ took me on their wings⁶ and placed me *on the clouds⁷. *And lo! the clouds moved⁸. 2. *And again (going) higher I saw the air and (going still) higher I saw the ether⁹, and they placed me in the first heaven. 3. * And they showed me a very great sea, greater than the earthly sea¹⁰.

[Of the Angels who rule the Stars.]

IV. 1. And they brought *before my face the elders, and the rulers of the orders of the stars¹¹, and they showed me the ¹ B om. ² But keep your hearts in the fear of God, B. For the fear of Him A reads His own paths.

III. Instead of 'Of the taking up of Enoch, &c.' B reads 'The entry of Enoch into the first heaven.' ³ Throughout this verse A speaks of Enoch in the third person. ⁴ The angels, A. ⁵ A om. ⁶ A B add and brought me (him A) to the first heaven, which should be read at end of verse 2. ⁷ There B. ⁸ A B om. ⁹ And there I gazed, and as I gazed higher I saw the air, A. ¹⁰ B trans. after the 200 angels, iv. 1.

IV. ¹¹ Me before the face of the elder, the ruler of the orders of the stars; and showed me their goings and comings from year to year, B.

3. Make confident your hearts in the fear of Him: Prov. xiv. 26.

III. 1. Placed me on the clouds. And lo! the clouds moved: cf. Eth. En. xiv. 8 'the clouds invited me . . . and the winds gave me wings and drove me.' The air . . . and the ether. This corresponds to the firmament in Asc. Is. vii. 9 'Ascendimus in firmamentum et ibi vidi Sammaelem ejusque potestates . . . 13. et postea me ascendere fecit supra firmamentum: hoc jam est (primum) coelum.' 3. A very great sea: cf. Rev. iv. 6; xv. 2 'sea of glass.' In Test. xii. Patriarch. Levi 2 this sea lies between the first and second heavens, ὕδωρ κρεμάμενον ἀνάμεσον τούτου καὶ ἐκείνου.

IV. 1. Rulers of the orders of the stars, &c. For a full but divergent account of these see Eth. En. lxxxii. 9-18, 20. The 200 angels. In the Eth. En. Uriel is the sole ruler of the two hundred angels * who rule the stars and their heavenly service¹; 2. * And they fly with their wings² * and go round all (the stars) as they float¹.

[How the Angels guard the Habitations of the Snow.]

V. 1. And * then I looked and saw³ the treasures of the snow * and ice⁴ and the angels⁵ who guard their terrible⁶ store-places; 2. And the treasures of the clouds from which they come forth and into which they enter.

[Concerning the Dew and the Oil, and different Colours.]

VI. And they showed me the treasures of the dew, like * oil for anointing⁷, * and its form was in appearance like that of⁸ all earthly colours⁹: also many¹⁰ angels keeping their treasures, * and they shut and open them¹⁰.

[How Enoch was taken into the second Heaven*¹¹.]

VII. 1. And the men took me and brought me to the ¹ B om. ² B reads immediately after earthly sea, iii. 3. Sok. om.

V. ³ They showed me, B. There I saw, Sok. ⁴ A om. ⁵ Terrible angels, B. ⁶ B om.

VI. ⁷ The balm of the olive tree, Sok. ⁸ And the appearance of it as also of, A. And their robes are like, B. ⁹ May be rendered flowers.

¹⁰ B om.

VII. ¹¹ The Entry of Enoch into the second Heaven, B; Sok. om.

stars: cf. lxxii. 1; lxxx. 1. In Eth. En. vi. 5 this is the number of angels that apostatized.

V. 1. Treasures of the snow and ice: Job xxxviii. 22; cf. Eth. En. lx. 17, 18. These treasures are placed in the second heaven by the Test. xii. Patriarch. Levi 3 ὁ δεύτερος (οὐρανὸς) ἔχει πύρ χιόνα κρύσταλλον. 2. Treasures of the clouds: cf. Eth. En. lx. 19.

VI. 1. Treasures of the dew: cf. Eth. En. lx. 20. In the Beresch. rabba c. 6, Bammid'ar rabba, c. 17, and the Chagiga 12^b, there is an enumeration of the seven heavens. The lowest of these which is called וָלֵב (Lat. velum) is empty. According to some, it appears in the morning and disappears in the evening (see Weber, p. 197): according to Berachoth 58^b the Wilôn is rolled up in order that the light of the second heaven, the Rakia, may be seen. This heaven seems also to be empty according to the Test. xii. Patr. Levi 3 ὁ κατώτερος διὰ τοῦτο στυγνότερός ἐστιν ἐπειδὴ οὗτος ὁρᾷ πάσας ἀδικίας ἀνθρώπων.

second heaven, and showed me¹ *the darkness, and there I saw² the prisoners suspended³, reserved for (and) awaiting³ the eternal⁴ judgement. 2. *And these angels were gloomy in appearance, more than the darkness of the earth³. *And they unceasingly wept every hour⁵, and I said to the men who were with me: 'Why are these men continually³ tortured?' 3. *And the men⁶ answered me: 'These are they who apostatized from *the Lord⁷: who obeyed not the commandments of God, and took counsel of their own will *and transgressed together with their prince and have been already confined to the second heaven⁸. 4. And I felt great pity for them. *And lo! the angels⁹ made obeisance to me, and said to me: "O man of God! *pray for us to the Lord¹⁰." 5. And I answered¹¹ them: "Who am I, a mortal

¹ Sok. adds and I saw. ² B om. ; after darkness, A adds greater than the darkness on earth. ³ B om. ⁴ Great and immeasurable, A ; immeasurable, Sok. ⁵ And I saw those who were condemned weeping, B. ⁶ And they, A ; The men, Sok. ⁷ God, A. ⁸ B om. For second A Sok. read fifth. ⁹ They, A ; and these angels, Sok. ¹⁰ Oh ! that thou wouldst pray to God for us ! B. ¹¹ Sok. adds and said unto.

VII. 1. The darkness and . . . the prisoners . . . reserved for . . . judgement: cf. 2 Pet. ii. 4 'Committed them (the angels that sinned as here) to pits of darkness to be reserved unto judgement.' These prisoners are the angels that 'kept not their first estate' and are 'reserved . . . under darkness unto the judgement of the great day,' Jude 6. They appear to be referred to also in Test. xii. Patr. Levi 3 ἐν αὐτῇ (τῇ δευτέρῃ οὐρανῷ) εἰς πάντα τὰ πνεύματα τῶν ἐπαγωγῶν εἰς ἐκδίκησιν τῶν ἀνόμων, where ἐπαγωγῶν seems corrupt. Observe that the angels who sinned with women are imprisoned under the earth in the Eth. En. x as also in our text xviii. 7. On the other hand the angels who sinned through lust for empire are prisoners in the second heaven. 3. Took counsel of their own will. For phraseology cf. Eph. i. 11; Is. xlvi. 10. These angels wished to form a kingdom of their own. Cf. Weber, p. 244. Their prince Satanail: xviii. 3. Second heaven. This emendation is necessary. When the angels of the fifth heaven rebelled they were cast down to the second heaven and imprisoned there. 4. The angels ask Enoch to intercede for them, exactly as in Eth. En. xiii. 4. 'They besought me to draw up a petition that they might find forgiveness.' Man of God: Deut. xxxiii. 1; 1 Tim. vi. 11; 2 Tim. iii. 17. 5. Cf. Eth. En. xv. 2 'Say to the watchers of heaven . . . you should intercede for men and not men man, that I should pray for angels? Who knows whither I go, or what awaits me: or who prays *for me¹? ”.

[* *Of the taking of Enoch to the third Heaven*².]

VIII. 1. And these men took me from thence, and brought me to the third heaven, and placed me in the midst of a garden³— a place⁴ such as has never been known for * the goodness of its appearance⁵. 2. And * I saw⁶ all the trees of beautiful colours and⁷ their fruits ripe * and fragrant⁶, and all kinds of * food which they produced⁸, springing up with delightful fragrance⁹. 3. And in the midst (there is) the tree of life, in that place, on which God rests, when He comes into Paradise. And this tree cannot be described for its * excellence and sweet odour¹⁰. 4. And it is beautiful more than any created thing. And on all sides in appearance it is like gold and crimson and transparent as fire, and it covers everything¹¹. 5. * From its root in the

¹ B om.

VIII. ² Entry into the third Heaven, B. ³ So B and Sok. A reads There, I looked below and I saw gardens. ⁴ I looked below and saw that place, Sok. ⁵ Their goodness, A and Sok. ⁶ B om. ⁷ And I beheld, A. ⁸ Agreeable food, B. ⁹ B adds and four rivers flowing with soft course and every kind of thing good that grows for food. These words belong to verse 6. ¹⁰ The excellence of its sweet odour, B. ¹¹ The whole garden, Sok. After this A adds and the gardens have all kinds of fruits; Sok. adds and the garden has all kinds of trees planted and all fruits. B OMITTS VERSE 4.

for you. Who knows whither I go, &c.: cf. ii. 1.

VIII. 1. A garden: as in 2 Cor. xii. 2, 4 Paradise is placed in the third heaven. 2. All the trees . . . fragrant: cf. Gen. ii. 9; Eth. En. xxix. 2; Apoc. Mosis (p. 20) . . . All kinds of food which they produced: cf. Rev. xii. 2 ‘Bearing twelve manner of fruits.’ 3. In the midst the tree of life: Gen. ii. 9. This is a familiar feature in Jewish Apocalypses. Cp. Eth. En. xxv. 4, 5; Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 2, 14; 4 Ezra vii. 53; viii. 52; Test. Levi 18. See also Iren. i. 5, 2. When we come to Epiphanius we find it denounced as a Manichaean doctrine, Haer. 66, p. 278. The tree of life . . . on which God rests. This is reproduced in a modified form in the Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 64) δένδρον παμμεγέθη ὡραῖον, ἐν ᾧ ἐπανεπαύετο τὸ πνεῦμα ἅγιον. There is a modification of this idea in Apoc. Mosis (ed. Tischend. p. 12) καὶ ὁ θρόνος τοῦ θεοῦ ὅπου ἦν τὸ ξύλον τῆς ζωῆς ἐντρεπίζετο. 5. From its root, &c. This is the source of the words in Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 64) καὶ ἐκ τῆς ῥίζης αὐτοῦ ἐξήρχετο πᾶν εὐωδέστατον ὕδωρ, μεριζόμενον εἰς τέσσαρα ὀρύγματα. The garden¹ there go forth four² streams which pour honey and milk³, oil and wine, and are separated in four directions, and go about with a soft course. 6. And they go down to the Paradise of Eden, between corruptibility and incorruptibility. And thence⁴ they go along the earth, and have a revolution in their circle like also the other elements⁵. 7. * And there is another tree, an olive tree always distilling oil⁶. And there is no tree there without fruit, and every tree⁷ is blessed⁸. 8. And there are *three hundred angels very glorious, who keep the garden⁹, and with never ceasing voices and blessed singing, they serve the Lord *every day¹⁰. And I said¹¹: 'What a very¹² blessed place is this!' And those men spake unto me :

[The showing to Enoch of the Righteous, and the Place of Prayers.]

IX. 'This place, O Enoch, is prepared for the righteous

¹ Emended with Apoc. Pauli from its root; B omits; A and Sok. add in the going out towards earth Paradise is between corruptibility and incorruptibility. This is clearly a corrupt addition. See quotation from Apoc. Pauli in explanatory notes. ² Two, A and Sok. See note 9 on p. 7 for text of B. ³ A adds and the streams pour. ⁴ Sok. adds they go forth and are divided into forty (four ?) and; B omits verse 6. ⁵ Sok. adds of the air. ⁶ A Sok. om. ⁷ Place, A. ⁸ Sok. adds in its fruit and every place is blessed. ⁹ Angels guarding them, very bright in appearance, B. ¹⁰ Every day and hour, A; the whole day, Sok. ¹¹ A adds lo! ¹² B om.

writer has tried to reduce to one organic conception the two originally different conceptions of the heavenly and the earthly Paradise. The latter seems to have been the older: Gen. ii. 8-17; Eth. En. xxxii. 3-6; lxxvii. 3. The heavenly Paradise is referred to in Eth. En. lx. 8; lxi. 12; lxx. 3. Four streams which pour honey and milk and oil and wine. Cf. Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 52) ποταμοὶ τέσσαρες ἐκύκλουν αὐτὴν, ῥέοντες μέλι καὶ γάλα καὶ ἔλαιον καὶ οἶνον. These four streams are taken over into the Koran xlvii, save that instead of a river of oil there is a river of incorruptible water. The earthly Paradise is said to be between corruptibility and incorruptibility, because existence in it was a probation and might issue either in corruptibility or incorruptibility: or because it lay on the confines of the regions of corruptibility and incorruptibility. 7. Another tree . . . distilling oil: Cf. xxi. 7. These are the arbor misericordiae and the oleum misericordiae of Evang. Nicodemi ii. 3: cf. ch. xxii. 8.

IX. 1. Prepared for the righteous:

who endure *every kind of attack¹ *in their lives² *from those who³ afflict their souls: who turn away their eyes from unrighteousness, and accomplish a righteous judgement, and also give bread to the hungry, and clothe the naked, and raise the fallen, and assist the *orphans who are⁴ oppressed, and who walk *without blame⁴ before the face of the Lord, and serve him only. For them this place is prepared as an eternal inheritance.'

[Here they showed Enoch the terrible Places, and various Tortures.]

X. 1. And the men then⁵ led me to the Northern region⁶, and showed me there⁷ a very terrible place. 2. And there are all sorts of tortures in that place. Savage⁷ darkness and impenetrable⁷ gloom; and there is no light there⁷, *but

IX. ¹ Attacks, B.

² A om.

³ Who, B.

⁴ B om.

X. ⁵ Removed me from thence and, B.

⁶ Part of the heavens, B.

⁷ B om.

cf. Matt. xxv. 34. See note on Eth. En. lx. 8. Turn away their eyes from unrighteousness: Ps. cxix. 37; cf. Is. xxxiii. 15. Execute righteous judgement: Ezek. xviii. 8. Give bread to the hungry, and clothe the naked: Ezek. xviii. 7: cf. Tob. iv. 16; 4 Ezra ii. 20; Or. Sibyll. ii. 83; viii. 404-405. Assist the orphans who are oppressed: cf. Is. i. 17; Jer. xxii. 3, 16. Walk without blame before . . . the Lord: cf. Luke i. 6. Eternal inheritance: cf. Heb. ix. 15.

X. 1. Northern region. To the modern mind it may seem strange that a division of heaven should be assigned to the wicked, but this idea presented no difficulty to the Jews and early Christians. Thus in the O. T. Satan can present himself in heaven, Job i. 7, 8; while in the N. T. evil may not only appear, but can also have a settled habitation there: Eph. vi. 12 'the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavens' (ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις). In Rev. xii. 7, 8, 9 this condition of things is represented as being at an end. Satan is cast out of heaven with his angels, and the sphere of his activity and residence is now limited to the earth, Rev. xii. 12. The old idea of wickedness being in heaven reappears in Test. Levi 3, where however it is limited to the second heaven (see also Test. Isaac 146, 147; Test. Jacob 153); but it was subsequently banished from Christian and Jewish thought. See Introduction. 2. Darkness and . . . gloom: Apoc. Petri 12 τὸ πᾶν σκοτεινῶ: Apoc. Pauli, p. 62, where one region of a gloomy fire is always burning¹, *and a fiery river goes forth². * And all that place has fire on all sides, and on all sides³ cold and ice, * thus it burns and freezes⁴. 3. * And the prisoners are very savage². And the angels terrible and without pity, carrying savage² weapons, and their torture was unmerciful. 4. And I said: * 'Woe, woe²! How terrible is this place⁵!' And the men said to me: 'This place, ¹ Neither fire nor flame and a gloom is over that place, B. ² B. om.

³ In that place; on both sides fire and on both sides, Sok.; B om. ⁴ So Sok. A reads thirst and freezing, B; and murkiness. ⁵ What a terrible place is this! A.

Hades is said σκότους καὶ ζόφους πεπληρωμένον. There is no light there: quoted by Apoc. Pauli (p. 57) οὐκ ἦν ἐκεῖ φῶς. Fiery river. This idea appears first in Eth. En. xiv. 19; Dan. vii. 10, but not there as an instrument of punishment. It seems however to have been applied early to that purpose, as here, and in the form of a lake of fire in Rev. xix. 20; xx. 10, 14, 15; xxi. 8. Or. Sibyll. ii. 196-200, 252-253, 286; iii. 84; viii. 411: cf. Apoc. Petri 8 λίμνη τις ἦν μεγάλη πεπληρωμένη βορβόρου φλεγόμενου. Apoc. Pauli (ed. Tischend. p. 57) ἐνθα ἐπέρρεεν ποταμὸς πύρινος. In Clem. Alex. Exc. Theod. 38 the two ideas are combined: ποταμὸς ἐκπορεύεται πυρὸς ὑποκάτω τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ τόπου, καὶ ῥεῖ εἰς τὸ κενὸν τοῦ ἐκτισμένου, ὃ ἐστὶν ἡ γέεννα (quoted by James, Test. Abraham, p. 160). Fire on all sides, and on all sides cold and ice. This seems to be drawn from Eth. En. xiv. 13, where God's dwelling in heaven is said to be 'hot as fire and cold as ice.' 3. Angels terrible and without pity, carrying savage weapons. Angels of destruction are mentioned in the O. T. 2 Sam. xxiv. 16; 2 Kings xix. 35; 1 Chron. xxi. 15. A class of destroying angels may be referred to in Ecclus. xxxix. 28 πνεύματα, ἃ εἰς ἐκδίκησιν ἐκκίσται. In Eth. En. liii. 3, 4; lvi. 1; lxii. 11; lxiii. 1, a class of evil angels whose sole function is to punish is mentioned and the conception is evidently a familiar one, though here found for the first time in Jewish literature. This idea appears in the N. T. Rev. ix. 11, 15; xvi. Of these the angel mentioned in ix. 11 is Ἀπολλύων. In Matt. xiii. 49 good angels cast the wicked into the furnace of fire. These angels of destruction or punishment are frequently referred to in Latin literature. Test. Levi 3 αἱ δυνάμεις... οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλανῆς. These angels of punishment are placed in the third heaven as in our text. Cf. Apoc. Petri 6 οἱ κολάζοντες ἄγγελοι: 8 ἄγγελοι βασανισταί. The words angels terrible and without pity, carrying savage weapons seem to have been before the writer of Test. Abraham A. xii ἄγγελοι... ἀνηλεεῖς τῇ γνώμῃ καὶ ἀπότομοι τῷ

Enoch, is prepared for *those who do not honour God; who commit evil deeds on earth, vitium sodomiticum, witchcraft¹, enchantments, devilish² magic; and who boast of their evil² deeds, *stealing, lying, calumnies, envy, evil thoughts, fornication, and murder². 5. Who steal³ the souls of wretched² men⁴, oppressing⁵ *the poor and spoiling them of their possessions², and themselves grow rich *by the taking of other men's possessions⁶, *injuring them⁷. Who when they might feed the hungry, allow them to die of famine; who when they might clothe them, strip them naked. 6. Who do not know their Creator and have worshipped *gods without life; who can neither see nor hear, being² vain gods, *and have fashioned the forms of idols, and bow down to a contemptible thing, made with hands²; for all these this place is prepared for an eternal inheritance.

[*Here they took Enoch to the fourth Heaven, where is the Course of the Sun and Moon⁸.]

XI. 1. And the men took me and conducted me to the fourth heaven, and showed me all *the comings and⁹ goings forth and all the rays of the light of the sun and moon.

¹ The impure who have done godlessness on the earth, who practise, B. ² B om. ³ B adds secretly. ⁴ B adds who bind them with a galling yoke. ⁵ Who see, A; B om. ⁶ And in order to acquire the goods of strangers, A. ⁷ Oppress them, A; B om.

XI. ⁸ Entry of Enoch into the fourth Heaven, B. ⁹ A om.

βλέμῳ . . . ἀνηλέως τύπτοντες αὐτοὺς ἐν πυρίναις χαρζαναῖς. 4. Prepared for those who do not honour God. Contrast Matt. xxv. 41. Vitium sodomiticum. Cf. Apoc. Petri 17: Test. Isaac (James' ed.), p. 148. 6. Cf. Lev. xix. 4; xxvi. 1; Or. Sibyll. v. 77-85; viii. 378-81; 395-98; Fragm. i. 20-22; iii. 21-45.

XI. 1. Fourth heaven. According to the Rabbinic tradition Chagiga 12^b the fourth heaven was called זבול and it was said to contain the heavenly Jerusalem, the temple, the altar, and Michael who offered daily sacrifice. The following quotation (ἐκ τῶν Θεοδότη . . . Ἐπιτομαί) seems to agree with the Rabbinic view: ὅθεν ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ τῷ τετάρτῳ οὐρανῷ δημιουργεῖται. Comings and goings . . .

* And I measured¹ their goings, * and computed their light. 2. And I saw that² the sun has a light * seven times³ greater than the moon. * I beheld their circle, and their chariot⁴ on which * each goes⁵ like a wind * advancing with astonishing swiftness⁶, and * they have⁷ no rest day or night coming or going. 3. There are four great stars; * each star has under it a thousand stars⁸ at the right of the chariot of the sun; and four at the left⁸, * each having under it a thousand stars, altogether eight thousand⁶. 4. * Fifteen myriads of⁹ angels go * out with the sun and attend him during the day, and by night one thousand⁶. * Each angel has six wings. They go¹⁰ before the chariot of the sun¹¹. 5. And a hundred angels * keep warm and light up the sun¹².

[Of the wonderful Creatures of the Sun.]

XII. 1. * And I looked and saw other flying creatures, their names phoenixes and chalkadri wonderful and strange of the sun and moon: cf. Eth. En. lxxii-lxxviii. 2. The sun has a light seven times, &c.: Eth. En. lxxii. 37. Their chariot on which each goes like a wind: Eth. En. lxxii. 5 'the chariots on which he (the sun) ascends are driven by the wind': so also of the moon in Eth. En. lxxiii. 2 and of both in lxxv. 3; lxxxii. 8. Have no rest day or night: Eth. En. xli. 7 '(the sun and moon) rest not': lxxii. 37 'rests not . . . day and night.' Sibyllines iii. 21 'Ἡελίον τ' ἀκάμαντα. 3, 4. There is nothing corresponding to these verses in Eth. En. 5. Cf. Eth. En. lxxv. 4.

¹ Their dimensions, B. ² And I saw their goings, B. ³ A om.
⁴ His circle and his chariot, A; and around them is a chariot, B. ⁵ They go always, A. ⁶ B om. ⁷ He has, A. ⁸ B adds always going with the sun.
⁹ Fifteen, A; B om. ¹⁰ Six winged creatures go with the angels, A; B om. ¹¹ A adds in a fiery flame. ¹² Minister unto him fire, Sok.; B om. verse 5.

XII. 1. Phoenixes and chalkadri. This seems to be the only reference to such creatures in literature. The phoenix, which according to all ancient writers was solitary and unique ('unus in terris,' Tac. Ann. vi. 28; cf. Mart. v. 7; Ovid, Met. xv. 392) in its kind, is here represented as one of a class. The phoenix is mentioned in Job xxix. 18 according to Jewish authorities, where for 'I shall multiply my days as the sand' they render 'as the phoenix' בַּחֹל. There are many references to it among the Greeks and Romans: Herod. ii. 73; Tac. Ann. vi. 28; Ovid, Met. xv.

in appearance, with the feet and tails of lions, and the heads of crocodiles¹; * their appearance was of a purple colour, like XII. ¹ And the flying creatures are in form like two birds, one like a phoenix and the other like a chalcid. And in their shape they resemble a lion in their feet and tail and in the head a crocodile, Sok.; B om.

392; Mart. Epigr. v. 7, 1; Stat. Sylv. ii. 4, 37; Plin. N. H. x. 2. The fable regarding it is recounted as sober fact by 1 Clem. ad Corinth. xxv; Tertullian, de Resurrect. Carn. xiii; Ambrose, Hexaem. v. 23; Epiphanius, Ancorat. lxxxiv; and the Apostolic Constitutions v. 7. Origen, contra Celsum iv. 98, doubts it: so also Greg. Naz. Orat. xxxi. 10, and among the later Greeks Maximus and Photius, and among the Latins Augustine de Anima iv. 33. To those who believed the fable we should add Rufinus Comment. in Symb. Apost. xi. and the Pseudo-Lactantius, from whose poem De Phoenice we draw the following references, which seem to be derived either directly or indirectly from our text. The phoenix in that poem is an attendant of the sun, 'satelles phoebi' ver. 33, as in xii. 2 are the phoenixes: when the sun appears it greets him with strains of sacred song (verses 43-50) and claps its wings (verses 51-54) exactly as the phoenixes in xv. 1. This poem belongs probably to the fourth century. The voice of the phoenix was celebrated for its sweetness: cf. the Jewish poet Ezekiel v. 10 φωνήν δὲ πάντων εἶχεν εὐπρεπαστάτην: Pseudo-Lactantius, de Phoenice 46 'miram vocem': 56 'innarrabilibus sonis.' Its colour was purple—purpureus (Pliny); κνάνεός ἐστιν ῥόδους ἐμφερής (Achil. Tat.), cf. xv. 1 and xii. 1. On the two different legends in the Talmud about the origin of the phoenix see Hamburger, R. E.

für Talmud 908-9. On the question generally see Lightfoot, and Gebhardt and Harnack on 1 Clem. xxv. 1; Eckermann in Ersch und Gruebersect. iii. xxiv. 310-16; Creuzer, Symbol. und Mythol. ii. 163 (third ed.); Piper, Mythol. und Symbol. der Christl. Kunst i. 446, 471; Ebert, Allgemeine Geschichte der Literatur des Mittelalters i. 93-98; Seyffarth, Z. D. M. G. 1849, 63-89; Gundert, Z. f. luth. Theol. 1854, 451-54. Chalkadri. This may be a transliteration of Χαλκίδραι, brazen hydras, or serpents. They are classed with the Cherubim in Eth. En. xx. 7 'Gabriel . . . who is over Paradise and the Serpents (τῶν δρακόντων in the Greek) and the Cherubim.' Hence they seem to have been a class of heavenly creatures, i. e. the Seraphim שְׂרָפִים⁷¹. The idea of flying serpents was a familiar one from the O. T. Is. xiv. 29; xxx. 6 שֶׂרֶף מְעוּפָף. It was not unfamiliar to the rest of the ancient world: cf. Herod. ii. 75; Lucan ix. 729-30; Ovid, Met. v. 642-4; Fast. iv. 562; also Claudian, Valerius Flaccus, Ammianus, Aelian, Apollonius. In the O. T. these flying serpents are venomous in such passages as Num. xxi. 6; Deut. viii. 15; Is. xiv. 29; xxx. 6. What relation these seraphim bear to those in Is. vi. 2, 6 it is hard to determine. That these latter were winged dragons we must assume according to Delitzsch (Das Buch Jesaia, pp. 124, 5). The analogy of the animal-like forms of the Cherubim in Ezek. i. 5-11 is the rainbow; their size nine hundred measures¹. 2. * Their wings were like those of angels, each with twelve, and they attend the chariot of the sun, and go with him², bringing heat and dew * as they are ordered by God³. 3. * So the sun makes his revolutions, and goes⁴ * under the heavens,

¹ B om. ² So A and Sok., but that the former omits chariot of the. Twelve flying spirits and twelve wings to each angel who accompanies the chariot, B. ³ And as he is ordered by God, Sok. ⁴ B om.; A adds and proceeds.

certainly in favour of this view. The serpent was anciently a symbol of wisdom and healing among the Greeks, the Egyptians (Brugsch, Rel. und Myth. pp. 103, 4), and the Hebrews, Num. xxi. 8, 9; 2 Kings xviii. 4; Matt. x. 16; John iii. 14. Hezekiah's destruction of the 'brazen serpent' as associated with idolatry may have caused the symbol to bear almost without exception an evil significance in later times, so that at last it became a designation of Satan: cf. Rev. xii. 9. We are therefore inclined to identify these Chalkadri with the Seraphim or heavenly creatures of Isaiah vi. These Chalkadri, we should add, sing in xv. 1 as do the Seraphim in Is. vi. 3, though their functions in the main are different. The idea here appears in a developed form and is no doubt indebted for its enlargement to Egyptian mythology. The Seraphim first appear in conjunction with other orders of angels in Eth. En. lxi. 10. Here their original character seems already to have been forgotten almost as wholly as in modern days, and they are regarded merely as a special class of angels; whereas in Eth. En. xx. 7 their true nature is still borne in mind. In the N. T. neither Cherubim nor Seraphim appear, but the characteristics of both reappear, fused together in the 'four living creatures' of Rev. iv. 6-8. However, though the N. T. takes no notice of the Seraphim save the indirect one of Rev. iv. 6-8, the conception obtained in later times the recognition of the Church through Dionysius the Areopagite's scheme of the nine heavenly orders. See Cheyne's Prophecies of Isaiah, i. 36, 42; ii. 283-6. Feet and tails of lions. The feet of the Cherubim in Ezek. i. 7 are like calves' feet. Their size nine hundred measures. In Bochart's Hieroicoicon iii. 225-227 we find by citations from Strabo, Aelian, Valerius, Philostorgius, Diodorus, &c., that the ancients were ready to believe in monstrous dragons or serpents. Aelian, for instance, speaks of one 210 feet long, while an Arabian writer describes one of 8,000 paces in length. In the Talmud there is frequent mention of angels and creatures of a like monstrous size. 2. Each with twelve. As the ordinary angels in xi. 4 have six wings each, these creatures are assigned twelve each. It would seem more natural to read this verse immediately after xi. 5; xii. 1 however must in some form and in some place appear in the text, as we see from xv. 1. Bringing heat and dew. Contrast and goes under¹ the earth with the light * of his beams unceasingly².

[The Angels took Enoch, and placed him on the East at the Gates of the Sun.]

XIII. 1. These men brought me to the East³ and * showed me the gates⁴ by which the sun * goes forth⁵ at the appointed seasons, and according to the revolution of the months * of the whole year⁶, and * according to the number of the hours, day and night⁷. 2. And I saw the six great⁸ gates * open, each gate having sixty-one stadia and a quarter of one stadium⁶; * and I truly measured them and understood their size to be so much⁹, by which the sun goes forth; and he goes to the west * and makes his course correspond. And he proceeds through all the months⁶. 3. * And by the first gates he goes out forty-two days; by the second gates thirty-five days; by the fourth gates thirty-five; by the fifth gates thirty-five; by the sixth gates⁸ forty-five¹⁰. 4. * And so he returns¹¹ * from the sixth gates in the course of time⁶: * and he enters by the fifth gates during thirty-five days, by the fourth gates thirty-five, by the third gates during thirty-five days; by the second gates thirty-five¹⁰. 5. * And so the ¹ To descend upon, B; under the heaven and under, Sok. ² The rays of the sun, B; Of his beams, Sok.

XIII. ³ B adds of the heavens. ⁴ Placed me at the gates of the sun, A. ⁵ Enters, B. ⁶ B om. ⁷ At the shortening up to the lengthening of the days and nights, B. ⁸ A om. ⁹ And I measured their size, and I could not comprehend their size, B. ¹⁰ A B om. ¹¹ B om. A adds to rest.

the conception in Eth. En. lx. 20. 3. Goes under the earth. This is undoubtedly corrupt, as the sun does not go under the earth but through the fourth heaven when he sets in the west. See xiv. 2 (note). Unceasingly: cf. xi. 2 (note).

XIII. 1. The gates by which the sun goes forth. These are the six gates mentioned in the next verse. For an account of the sun's six eastern gates and six western see Eth. En. lxxii. 2-4. Six gates: Eth. En. lxxii. 3. The rest of the chapter is hopelessly corrupt. The account seems to be derived originally from Eth. En.

days of the whole year¹ are finished according to the alternation of the four² seasons.

[They took Enoch to the West.]

XIV. 1. And *then these³ men took me to the * West of the heavens⁴ and showed me six great gates open, *corresponding to the Eastern gates⁵, opposite *to which the sun goes out by the Eastern gates⁶, according to the number of the days *three hundred and sixty-five, and the quarter of a day⁷. 2. * So he sets by the Western gates⁸. When he goes out by the Western gates⁹ *four hundred angels

¹ By his regular departure the years, B. And so the whole year, A.

² B om.

XIV. ³ The, B. ⁴ Western regions, A. ⁵ Corresponding to the Eastern entrance, B. Opposite to the circuit of the Eastern gates, Sok.

⁶ Where the sun retires, A. By which the sun passes, Sok. ⁷ B om.

⁸ A om. ⁹ A adds he conceals his light under the earth and the glories of his luminary.

lxxii. 2-37. 5. Four seasons: cf. xl. 6. The account of two of these seasons is found in Eth. En. lxxxii. 15-20: that of the remaining two is lost.

XIV. 1. Three hundred and sixty-five, and the quarter of a day. I have shown in my edition of the Eth. En. pp. 190-91 that the writer of chs. lxxii-lxxxii. was familiar with the solar year of $365\frac{1}{4}$ days, but that owing to national prejudices he refused to acknowledge it. 2. According to the Eth. En. lxxii. 5 the sun returns after sunset through the north in order to reach the east. In our text, however, the sun revolves through the fourth heaven, xi; xxx. 3, and when he rises in the east goes under the heavens and appears to men. During the night while he passes through the fourth heaven he is without light, or in the words of the text his crown is taken from him: when he is about to reappear in the east his crown, or in other words his light, is restored to him. The reason why the sun is obliged to surrender his crown in passing through the fourth heaven before God is presumably that which is given in the Apoc. Mosis (ed. Tischend. p. 19): the sun cannot shine before the Light of the Universe (ἐνώπιον τοῦ φωτὸς τῶν ὅλων). The passage in this Apocalypse appears undoubtedly to be founded on the present text. Eve is there represented as seeing the sun and moon praying for Adam before God but without their light. She thereupon asks: ποῦ ἐστὶν τὸ φῶς αὐτῶν, καὶ διὰ τί γεγόνασιν μελανοειδεῖς; καὶ λέγει αὐτῇ Σῆθ. οὐ δύνανται φαίνειν ἐνώπιον τοῦ φωτὸς take his crown and bring it to the Lord¹. 3. And the sun revolves² in his chariot *and goes without light³ *for seven complete hours in the night⁴. *And when he comes near the East⁵ *at the eighth hour of the night⁶, *the four hundred angels bring his crown and crown him⁷.

[The Creatures of the Sun; the Phoenixes and Chalkidri sang.]

XV. 1. Then sang the creatures⁸ called the Phoenixes and the Chalkidri. On this account every bird claps its wings, rejoicing at the giver of light, *and they sang a song at the command of the Lord⁹. 2. The giver of light comes to give his brightness to *the whole world¹⁰. 3. *And they showed me the calculation of the going of the sun. And the gates by which he enters and goes out are great gates, which God made for the computation of the year¹¹. 4. *On this account the sun is great¹².

¹ So B and Sok., but that the former reads four instead of four hundred. A reads but the crown of his splendour is in heaven before the Lord: and there are four hundred angels attending Him. ² Revolves, B Sok. Goes under the earth, A. ³ And rests, A. ⁴ B om.; A Sok. support text, but that Sok. omits complete. After night A adds and reaches half his course under the earth. ⁵ At the Eastern gates, B; Sok. om. ⁶ B om. ⁷ He brings forth his luminary and his shining crown, and the sun is lighted up more than fire, A. And places on it again the crown, B.

XV. ⁸ A adds of the sun; B omits verses 1, 2. ⁹ Singing with their voices, Sok. ¹⁰ His creation, Sok.; A adds and there will be the guards of the morning, which are the rays of the sun and the earthly sun will go out and will receive his brightness to light up all the face of the earth. ¹¹ So A and Sok. B reads this arrangement of the gates by which he enters and goes out the two angels showed me; these gates the Lord made for the computation and his yearly record of the sun. ¹² B om.; A adds its revolutions extend to twenty-eight years, and so it was from the beginning.

τῶν ὄλων, καὶ τούτου χάριν ἐκρύβη τὸ φῶς ἀπ' αὐτῶν. 3. Seven complete hours in the night. This is corrupt. The writer must have known that the length of the night varied with the season. In the Eth. En. a chapter (lxxii) is devoted to the explanation of the varying lengths of the day and night.

XV. 1. See xii. 1 (note). Every bird. We should expect 'all these winged creatures,' i.e. the Phoenixes and Chalkidri. Or are we to take it that the early song of birds at sunrise is here referred to? but this is unlikely.

[The Men took Enoch and placed him at the East, at the Course of the Moon.]

XVI. 1. *The other, the computation of the moon these men showed me¹; *all the goings and revolutions². *And they pointed out the gates to me³, twelve great⁴ gates extending *from the West to the East⁵, by which the moon enters *and goes out⁶ at the customary times. 2. She enters *the first gate when the sun is in the West thirty-one days exactly⁷; by the second gate thirty-one⁸ days exactly; by the third gate thirty days exactly; by the fourth gate thirty days exactly; by the fifth gate thirty-one days exactly; by the sixth gate thirty-one days exactly; by the seventh gate thirty days exactly; by the eighth gate thirty-one days exactly; by the ninth gate thirty-one⁹ days exactly; by the tenth gate thirty¹⁰ exactly; by the eleventh gate thirty-one days exactly; by the twelfth gate twenty-eight days¹¹ exactly. 3. And so by the Western gates in her revolutions, and corresponding to the number of the Eastern gates she goes, and accomplishes the year¹². 4. *And unto the sun there are three hundred and sixty-five days and a quarter

XVI. ¹ They also showed me the other arrangement, that of the moon, B. ² And all its course. And the men showed me all the movements of these two, B; A om. ³ A Sok. om. ⁴ Eternal, B. ⁵ Towards the East, B. ⁶ B om. ⁷ B OMITTS ENTIRE VERSE. Sok. reads the first gates (western place of the sun) 31 days to the place of the sun exactly. For 31 A reads 1. ⁸ Emended from 35 A Sok. ⁹ 35, A. ¹⁰ 31, Sok. ¹¹ 22, Sok. ¹² Sok. adds in the days.

XVI. 1. Twelve great gates. These are the same as the gates of the sun in xiii. 2-3. It is obvious that the text is here corrupt, as this account cannot possibly apply to the moon. In order to correct it we have only to read 'sun' instead of 'moon' wherever it occurs. We have thus a description of the Solar year. The numbers when added together = 365. Hence in ver. 4 we are told that a Solar year = 365½ days. Then in ver. 5 we proceed to consider the lunar year which amounts not to 365 but to 354 days, there being a difference of eleven days, or more exactly eleven and a quarter days.

of one day¹. 5. But in the lunar year there are three hundred and fifty-four days, making twelve months of twenty-nine days; and * there remain eleven days over, which belong to the solar circle of the whole year², and are * lunar epacts of the whole year³. [Thus the great circle has five hundred and thirty-two years.] 6. The fourth part (of one day) is neglected during three years and the fourth year completes it exactly. * On account of this they are omitted from the heavens during three years, and are not added to the number of the days⁴, on which account these change the seasons of the year * in two new months, to make the number complete and there are two others to diminish⁵. 7. And when she has gone through the Western gates, she returns and goes to the Eastern, with her light, * and so she goes day and night in the heavenly circles, below all the circles more quickly than ¹ So she sets by the western gates and finishes the year in 364 days that are accomplished, B. This may be the original text, or 364 may be an error for 354. B OMITS VERSE 5. ² Eleven days of the solar circle are wanting, Sok. ³ Epacts of the lunar year, A. ⁴ She goes through the year on this account and therefore the computation is made apart from the heavens, and in the years the days are not reckoned, B. ⁵ B om.

XVI. 5. Twenty-nine days. This should be 'twenty-nine and a half days.' [Thus the great circle has 532 years.] I have bracketed these words as they have no real connexion with the context. They arose obviously from a marginal gloss. The writer in this chapter does not get beyond the Metonic cycle, whereas the great cycle of 532 years is produced by multiplying together the Metonic cycle of nineteen years, and the Solar cycle of twenty-eight years. This great cycle is called the Dionysian or Great Paschal Period. As it includes all the variations in respect of the new moons and the dominical letters, it is consequently a period in which Easter and all the movable and unmovable feasts would occur on the same day of the week and month as in the corresponding year of the preceding cycle. This cycle was first proposed by Victorius of Aquitaine, circ. 457 A.D. It is obvious that any reference to such a cycle here is an intrusion. 6. The fourth part, &c. Explanation of leap year. On which account these change the seasons of the year, &c. Hopelessly corrupt. 7. With her light. This seems to imply that her light is not borrowed from the sun as it is taught in the Eth. En. lxxiii.

the winds of the heavens, and there are spirits and creatures, and angels flying¹, with six wings to each of the angels². 8. * And seven (months) are computed to the circle of the moon during a revolution of nineteen years³.

[Of the singing of the Angels, which cannot be described.]

XVII. 1. In the middle of the heavens I saw an armed host serving the Lord with cymbals, and organs, and unceasing voice⁴. I was delighted at hearing it.

[Of the taking up of Enoch into the fifth Heaven.]

XVIII. 1. The men took * and brought⁵ me up into the fifth heaven⁶, and I saw there many hosts * not to be counted

¹ So Sok. but that it omits of the heavens and of the angels. B reads, So their circle goes as it were round the heavens and their chariot. The wind goes with it, urging its course and the flying spirits draw on the chariots. ² B adds and such is the arrangement of the moon.

³ So Sok.; and its course is in seven different directions for nineteen years, A; B om.

XVII. ⁴ A adds and noble and continuous and varied singing, which it is not possible to describe. And so wonderful and strange is the singing of these angels that it amazes every mind. Sok. adds and with noble singing.

XVIII. ⁵ A B om.

A ⁶ adds and placed me there.

Spirits . . . with six wings. The moon has its attendant six-winged spirits as the sun has its twelve-winged attendants (xii. 2). 8. This verse deals with the Metonic cycle. This cycle consists of a period of nineteen solar years, after which the new moons happen on the same days of the year. As nineteen solar years = 6,939-1860 days = 235 lunar months = nineteen lunar years and seven months, the solar and lunar years can be reconciled by intercalating seven lunar months at the close of the 3rd, 5th, 8th, 11th, 13th, 16th, and 19th years of the cycle.

XVII. An armed host. The purpose for which they are armed is given in Test. Levi 3, though in this Testament they are placed in the third heaven: ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ εἰσὶν αἱ δυνάμεις τῶν παρεμβολῶν, οἱ ταχθέντες εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, ποιῆσαι ἐκδίκησιν ἐν τοῖς πνεύμασι τῆς πλάνης καὶ τοῦ Βελίαρ. Serving the Lord with cymbals . . . and unceasing voice. This is exactly the conception which Test. Levi 3 gives of the functions of the inhabitants of the fourth heaven: ἐν δὲ τῷ μετ' αὐτὸν εἰσὶ θρόνοι, ἔξουσίαι, ἐν ᾧ ὕμνοι ἀεὶ τῷ θεῷ προσφέρονται.

XVIII. 1. Fifth heaven. Our text and Test. Levi 3 differ absolutely called Grigori¹; and their appearance was like men, and their size was *greater than that of the giants². 2. And their countenances were withered, and their lips are always silent. And there was no service in *the fifth³ heaven. And I said to the men who were with me: 'Why are these men very withered, and their faces melancholy, and their lips silent, and there is no service in this heaven?' 3. And they said to me: 'These are the Grigori, who, with their prince Satanail.

¹ B om. ² Greater than great wonders, B. Great and they were huge limbed, A. B OM. REST OF CHAPTER. ³ This, Sok.

as to the inhabitants of the fifth heaven. According to the latter the inhabitants are οἱ ἄγγελοι οἱ φέροντες τὰς ἀποκρίσεις τοῖς ἀγγέλοις τοῦ προσώπου κυρίου. This view, however, seems limited to the Test. of Levi, whereas we find in Chag. 12^b the same view expressed as here: i.e. in מַעֲנַן the fifth heaven are to be found 'hosts of angels praising God by night, but keeping silent by day that God may hear the praises of Israel.' The latter clause is a late Rabbinic idea. Again, in Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 11. 77, we find a fragment of the Apocalypse of Zephaniah which supports, and in all probability is based on, our text: ἄρ' οὐχ ὅμοια ταῦτα τοῖς ὑπὸ Σοφονία λεχθεῖσι τοῦ προφήτου; καὶ ἀνέλαβέν με πνεῦμα καὶ ἀνήνεγκέν με εἰς οὐρανὸν πέμπτον καὶ ἐθεώρουν ἀγγέλους καλουμένους κυρίου . . . ἰμνοῦντας θεὸν ἄρρητον ὕψιστον. This Apocalypse is extant in Thebaic in a fragmentary condition, but these fragments do not contain the passage just quoted. Grigori. These are the Watchers, the Ἐγρήγοροι, or עִירִי, of whom we have so full accounts in the Eth. En. vi-xvi.; xix.; lxxxvi. 3. The Grigori. These are the angels whose brethren rebelled and were confined in the second heaven. See vi. 3 (note). These Watchers rebelled against God before the angels were tempted to sin with the daughters of men. In other words, we have here the agents of the original revolt in heaven, the Satans; and their leader is naturally named Satanail. These existed as evil agencies before the fall of the angels; for in Eth. En. liv. 6 the guilt of the latter consisted in becoming subject to Satan. See Eth. En. xl. 7 (note). The myth here, however, varies somewhat from that in Eth. En. vi-xvi. The leaders in the Eth. En. vi-xvi. are not Satans, but 'watchers,' like their followers. In Eth. En. lxix, however, we have an account which harmonizes with our text. There we see that the superior angels had rebelled before the creation of Adam; that they had tempted Eve and brought about the fall of the angels in the days of Jared. Thus, in Eth. En. lxix. and here, the leaders of the angels who fell in Jared's days are Satans. This is practically the view of portions of the Talmud. See Weber, pp. 211, 243, 244. Who with their prince Satanail. Quoted in Test. Dan. 5 . . . τῶν πνευμάτων τῆς πλάνης. Ἀνέγνω rejected the holy¹ Lord². 4. And *in consequence of these things³ they are kept in great darkness in the second heaven ; * and of them there went three⁴ to the earth from the throne of God to the place Ermon ; and they entered into dealings on the side of Mount Iermon, and they saw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and took unto themselves wives. 5. And they made the earth foul with their deeds⁵. And they acted lawlessly in all times of this age, and wrought confusion, and the giants were born, and the strangely tall men, and there was much wickedness. 6. And on account of this God judged them with a mighty judgement. And they lament for their brethren, and they will be punished at the great day of the Lord. 7. And I said to the Grigori : ' I have seen your brethren and their works, and their great¹ γὰρ ἐν βίβλῳ Ἐνώχ τοῦ δικαίου, ὅτι ὁ ἀρχὼν ὑμῶν ἐστὶν ὁ Σατανᾶς. ὑμῶν is here corrupt for αὐτῶν. The text cannot mean that all the watchers rebelled, but only that it was from the class of the watchers that the rebels proceeded. It is, of course, just possible that the writers' scheme may differ from the conception we have given above, and be as follows. The rebellious watchers, with their prince Satanail, are confined to the fifth heaven. The subordinate angels who followed them are imprisoned in the second heaven, whereas the watchers who went down to earth and sinned with women are imprisoned under the earth. This view is very attractive, but is open to more difficulties of interpretation than the one we have followed. The MSS. reading fifth in vii. 3 is indeed in its favour, but then for 'prince and' in the same verse we must read 'prince and leaders who.' The main objections to this interpretation, however, lie in xviii. 8, 9, and in vii. 3, where the prisoners of the second heaven are clearly identified with the watchers. In xxx. 1-3 Satanail with his angels is cast down from heaven. 4. Kept . . . in the second heaven : see vii. 3. Three. According to Eth. En. ix. 6 Azazel, or vi. 3, ix. 7 Semjaza : according to Jalkut Schim., Beresch 44^a Assael and Semjaza. Ermon : see Eth. En. vi. 2-6 (notes). Entered into dealings on . . . Mount Iermon : Eth. En. vi. 5. 5. Eth. En. x. 8 ; vii. 2. 6. Eth. En. x. 4-15. They will be punished : i. e. the lustful watchers. 7. There is a confusion in this verse. In vii. Enoch has seen the rebellious watchers being tortured in the second heaven ; whereas he says here that he torments¹. And I have prayed for them, but God has condemned them (to be) under the earth, till the heaven and earth are ended for ever.' 8. And I said: 'Why do ye * wait, brethren², and not serve before the face of the Lord? and perform your duties³ before the face of the Lord, and do not anger your Lord⁴ to the end.' 9. And they listened to my rebuke. And they * stood in the four orders in this⁵ heaven, and lo! as I was standing with these men, four trumpets resounded together with a loud voice, and the Grigori sang with one voice, and their voices went forth before the Lord⁶ with sadness and tenderness.

¹ Sok. om. ² Sok. adds to the number of twenty millions. ³ Those who followed them are the prisoners who, Sok. ⁴ Who went, Sok. ⁵ Sok. adds And the wives of men continue to do evil.

[The taking up of Enoch into the sixth Heaven.]

XIX. 1. And these men took me thence and brought me to the sixth heaven, and I saw there seven bands of angels, very bright and glorious, and their faces shining more than * the rays of⁷ the sun. * They are resplendent⁷, and there is no difference * in their countenances, or their manner, or the style of their clothing⁸. 2. * And these orders⁹ arrange and study * the revolutions of the stars, and the changes

¹ Sok. adds and their great entreaties. ² Await your brethren, Sok. ³ Sok. adds and serve. ⁴ Sok. adds your God. ⁵ Spoke to the four orders in, A. ⁶ Sok. adds God.

XIX. ⁷ B om. ⁸ Of form between them nor in the fashion of their raiment, Sok. ⁹ Some of these angels, B.

has seen the lustful watchers who are punished under the earth. I have prayed for them: cf. vii. 5 (note). 8, 9. The watchers are silent out of sympathy with their brethren who are punished in the second heaven and under the earth, but at Enoch's rebuke they resume the worship they had left off. Even so their singing is still marked with sadness.

XIX. 1. The account of the sixth heaven disagrees more or less with that of Test. Levi 3, with that of Chag. 12^b, and with the colourless account in the Asc. Is. There is no difference in their countenances, &c.: Asc. Is. viii. 16 'Omnium una species et gloria aequalis,' seems to be derived from our text, as it emphasizes the differences in glory between the angelic orders in each of the first five heavens, and emphasizes no less the equality in glory of all the angels of the sixth heaven (cf. Asc. Is. viii. 5-7). 2. The heavenly bodies are under Uriel in Eth. En. lxxii-lxxxii.

of the moon, and revolutions of the sun, and superintend the good or evil condition of the world¹. 3. *And they² arrange teachings, and instructions, and sweet *speaking, and³ singing, and all *kinds of glorious⁴ praise. *These are the archangels who are appointed over the angels! They hold in subjection all living things both in heaven and earth⁵. 4. And there are the angels who are over seasons and years, and the angels who are over rivers and the sea, and those who are over the fruits *of the earth, and the angels over every herb, giving all kinds of nourishment to every living thing⁶. 5. And the angels over all souls of men, who write down all their works and their lives⁷ before the face of the Lord. 6. In the midst of them are seven phoenixes and seven cherubims, and seven six-winged creatures, *being as one voice and singing with one voice⁸; and it is not possible to describe their singing, and *they rejoice before the Lord⁹ at His footstool.

[*Thence Enoch is taken into the seventh Heaven*¹⁰.]

XX. 1. And these men took me thence *and brought me¹¹

¹ The peaceful order of the world, and the revolutions of the sun, moon, and stars. ² Other heavenly angels, B. ³ And clear, A; voiced, Sok. ⁴ Things concerned with, A. ⁵ So A Sok.; but that A reads measure for hold in subjection, B om. ⁶ So A Sok.; but that A reads all those who give nourishment for giving all kinds of nourishment; B reads and grass and all things that grow. ⁷ And the angels who write down all the souls of men and all their works and their lives, A; Other angels arrange the things of all men and all living things, and write, B. ⁸ With one voice they sing in harmony, A; Each uttering words by himself, and singing by himself things in harmony, B. ⁹ The Lord rejoices with them, B.

XX. ¹⁰ Entry of Enoch into the seventh heaven, B. ¹¹ A om.

4. In Eth. En. lx. it is subordinate spirits that are over these natural objects. Cf. Eth. En. lxxxii. 13; Rev. ix. 14; xvi. 5. 5. It is Raphael in Eth. En. xx. 3. 6. Six-winged creatures: i. e. seraphim. Cf. xii. 1 (notes). Observe that both cherubim and seraphim are also in the seventh heaven. Chag. 12^b places the Sera-phim, Ophannim, and Chajjoth, and other angels of service in the seventh heaven. Test. Levi 3 in agreement with this verse represents the inhabitants of the sixth heaven as οἱ ἄγγελοι εἰσι τοῦ προσώπου κυρίου, οἱ λειτουργοῦντες.

XX. 1. With this description of the heavenly hosts cf. Is. vi; Ezek.

to the seventh heaven, and I saw there a very ¹ great light and *all the fiery hosts of great archangels, and incorporeal powers²
 *and lordships, and principalities, and powers; cherubim and seraphim, thrones¹ *and the watchfulness of many eyes.
 There were ten troops, a station of brightness³, and I was afraid, and trembled *with a great terror¹. 2. And those men *took hold of me and brought me into their midst⁴ and said to me: 'Be of good cheer, Enoch, be not afraid.'
 3. And they showed me the Lord from afar sitting on His lofty⁵ throne⁶. And all the heavenly hosts having approached stood¹ on the ten¹ steps, *according to their rank: and¹ made

¹ B om. ² A fiery host of great archangels of spiritual forms, A. All the fiery and bright host of the incorporeal archangels, B. ³ And the ten many-eyed bands of bright station, Sok.; B om. After brightness A Sok. add the gloss like the followers of John. For nine (A) I have read ten with Sok. ⁴ Placed me in their midst, B. For unto their midst A reads after them. ⁵ Very lofty, Sok., B om. ⁶ A adds for it is that upon which God rests. In the tenth heaven, in the tenth heaven is God. In the Hebrew language it is called Avarat.

i; Eth. En. xiv. 9-17; lxi. 7-9; Rev. iv. For Chag. 12^b see xix. 6 (note). But this account can well compare for grandeur with any of the above. Lordships, and principalities, and powers . . . thrones. So exactly Col. i. 16 εἶτε θρόνοι εἶτε κυριότητες εἶτε ἀρχαὶ εἶτε ἐξουσίαι. Cf. Eph. i. 21 ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ κυριότητος; also Rom. viii. 38; Eph. iii. 10, 15; 1 Pet. iii. 22; Eth. En. lxi. 10. Watchfulness of many eyes seems to be derived from Ezek. x. 12. These are the Ophanim, Eth. En. lxi. 10. Ten . . . brightness. These are the ten orders of angels mentioned in ver. 3. Was afraid and trembled: Eth. En. xiv. 14. 2. Be of good cheer, &c.: cf. i. 8. 3. The Lord . . . on His lofty throne: Is. vi. 1; Eth. En. xiv. 20; Rev. xix. 4. All the heavenly hosts . . . on the ten steps according to their rank.

These hosts consist of the ten troops mentioned in ver. 1, arranged in the order of their rank. According to Maimonides in the Mishne Thora S. 1; Jesode Thora C. 2, they are: Chajjioth, Ophannim, Arellim, Chashmallim, Seraphim, Mal'achim, Elohim, Bene Elohim, Kerubim, Ishim (Weber, p. 163). In the Berith menucha the list is different: Arellim, Ishim, Bene Elohim, Mal'achim, Chashmallim, Tarshishim, Shina'nim, Kerubim, Ophannim, Seraphim (Eisenmenger, ii. 374). But the nearest parallel is to be found in the nine orders of Dionysius the Areopagite, i.e. Σεραφίμ, Χερουβίμ, Θρόνοι, Κυριότητες, Δυνάμεις, Ἐξουσίαι, Ἀρχαί, Ἀρχάγγελοι, Ἄγγελοι. These are reproduced in Dante, Par. c. xxviii, where the slightly differing arrangement of Gregory the Great (Hom. xxxiv. 7) is censured.

obeisance to the Lord. 4. And so they proceeded to their places in joy and mirth, and in boundless light *singing songs with low and gentle voices¹, *and gloriously serving Him².

[How the Angels placed Enoch there at the limits of the seventh Heaven, and departed from him invisibly.]

XXI. 1. They leave not *nor depart day or night³ standing before the face of the Lord, working His will⁴, cherubim and seraphim, standing round His throne. *And the six-winged creatures⁵ overshadow all⁶ His throne, singing *with a soft voice⁶ before the face of the Lord: *‘Holy, Holy, Holy: Lord God of Sabaoth! heaven and earth are full of Thy glory⁶!’ 2. When I had seen all these things, *these men said unto me: ‘Enoch, up to this time we have been ordered to accompany thee.’ And⁶ those men departed from me, and I saw them no more. And I remained alone at the extremity of the heaven⁷, and was afraid, and fell on my face, *and said within myself: ‘Woe is me! what has come upon me!⁸’ 3. And the Lord sent one of His glorious archangels⁶, Gabriel, and he said to me: ‘Be of good cheer, Enoch, *be not afraid⁹, *stand up, come with me¹⁰, and stand up before the face of the Lord for ever. 4. And I answered him, *and said¹¹: ‘Oh! Lord, my spirit has departed from me with fear *and trembling⁶! *call to me the men¹² who have brought me to this place: upon them

¹ B om. ² The glorious ones seeing Him, Sok.

XXI. ³ A om. ⁴ B adds and the whole host of. ⁵ With six wings and many eyes, A. ⁶ B om. ⁷ Seventh heaven, A. ⁸ B om. ⁹ Fear not thou these hosts, B. ¹⁰ Come unto me, B. A transposes these words after for ever. ¹¹ B om.; A adds within myself. B adds Woe is me, O Lord! ¹² I called the men, A B.

XXI. 1. Leave not nor depart depart.’ ‘Six-winged creatures . . .
day or night. This is derived from Holy, holy, holy, &c.,’ Is. vi. 2, 3.
Eth. En. xiv. 23 ‘The holy ones 3. Be of good cheer, be not afraid. of the holy—leave not by night nor See i. 8; xx. 2; xxi. 5; Eth. En.

I have relied, and with them I would go before the face of the Lord.' 5. And Gabriel hurried me away like a leaf carried off by the wind, *and he took me¹ and set me before the face of the Lord².

XXII. 4. I fell down³ and worshipped the Lord. 5. And the Lord spake with His lips to me: 'Be of good cheer, ¹ Having taken me, Sok., A om. ² A adds 6. And I saw the eighth heaven, which is called in the Hebrew language, Muzaloth, changing in its season in dryness and moisture, with the twelve signs of the zodiac, which are above the seventh heaven. And I saw the ninth heaven, which in the Hebrew is called Kukhavim, where are the heavenly homes of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

Michael the Archangel led Enoch into the tenth heaven before the face of the Lord.

XXII. 1. In the tenth heaven Aravoth, I saw the vision of the face of the Lord, like iron burnt in the fire, and brought forth and emitting sparks, and it burns. So I saw the face of the Lord; but the face of the Lord cannot be told. It is wonderful and awful, and very terrible. 2. And who am I that I should tell of the unspeakable being of God, and His wonderful face? And it is not for me to tell of His wonderful knowledge and various utterances; and the very great throne of the Lord not made with hands. And how many stand around Him, hosts of cherubim and seraphim. 3. And moreover their never-ceasing songs, and their unchanging beauty, and the unspeakable greatness of His beauty, who can tell?

In Sok. a duplicate, but somewhat different, version of XXII. 1-3 is given:—

I also saw the Lord face to face. And His face was very glorious, marvellous and terrible, threatening, and strange. 2. Who am I to tell of the incomprehensible existence of the Lord, and His face wonderful, and not to be spoken of: and the choir with much instruction, and loud sound, and the throne of the Lord very great, and not made with hands: and the choir standing around Him of the hosts of cherubim and seraphim!

³ B adds and could not see the Lord God.

xv. 1. 5. Cf. ver. 3. [6. This verse is clearly an interpolation. It is not found either in B or Sok. Furthermore, throughout the rest of the book only seven heavens are mentioned or implied. The term Muzaloth is the Hebrew name for the twelve signs of the Zodiac מְזָלוֹת. Kukhavim is merely a transliteration of כּוֹכָבִים. Some ground for this conception may be found in Eth. En.

xiv. 17, where the path of the stars is above the throne of God, and as the throne of God according to this book is in the seventh heaven, the signs and stars might be regarded as in the eighth or ninth.]

XXII. [1-3. Aravoth a transliteration of עֲרִבּוֹת, which according to Chagig 12^b was really the seventh heaven. The rest of ver. 1 and verses 2, 3, may in some form have belonged

Enoch, be not afraid: rise up and stand before my face for ever.' 6. And Michael, the chief captain, *lifted me up, and ¹ brought me before the face of the Lord, and the Lord said to His servants making trial of them: 'Let Enoch come to stand before My face for ever!' 7. And the glorious ones made obeisance *to the Lord, and said: 'Let Enoch proceed according to Thy word ²!' 8. And the Lord said to Michael: '*Go and take from Enoch his earthly robe, and anoint him with My holy ³ oil, and clothe him with the raiment of My glory.' 9. And so Michael *did as the Lord spake unto him. He ⁴ anointed me ⁵ and clothed me, and the appearance of that oil was more than a great light, and its anointing was like excellent dew; and its fragrance like myrrh, shining like a ray of the sun. 10. *And I gazed upon myself, and I was like one of His glorious ones ⁶. *And there was no difference, and fear and trembling departed from me ⁷. 11. And the Lord called one of His archangels, by name Vretil ⁸, who *was more wise than the other archangels, and ⁹ wrote down all the doings of the Lord. 12. And the Lord said to Vretil ⁸, 'Bring forth to the text. I have with some hesitation rejected them]. 6. Michael. Cf. Eth. En. lxxi. 13, 14, where Michael takes charge of Enoch. He is likewise the chief of the archangels, Eth. En. xl. 9. As being the angel set over Israel, Eth. En. xx. 5, he is naturally the chief captain. 8. This is τὸ ἔλαιον τοῦ ἐλέου of Apoc. Mosis ed. Tischend. p. 6. Holy oil. See viii. 7: Evang. Nicod. ii. 3. This oil is described in ver. 9, and its effects in ver. 10. Raiment of my glory. These are the garments of the blessed. Cf. Eth. En. lxii. 15; cviii. 12; 2 Cor. v. 3, 4; Rev. iii. 4, 5, 18; iv. 4; vi. 11; vii. 9, 13, 14; 4 Ezra ii. 39, 45; Herm. Sim. viii. 2; Asc. Is. ix. 9. 11. Vretil. I cannot find this name anywhere else. 12. Give a reed to Enoch. These words are drawn upon in Liber S. Joannis Apocryphus (Thilo, Cod. Apocr. N. T. vol. i. p. 890) 'Ele-vavit Henoc super firmamentum . . . et praecepit ei dari calamus . . . et sedens scripsit sexaginta septem libros.

¹ B om. and transposes verses 8-10 before 5. ² And told me to come forth, B. ³ Take Enoch and strip from him all earthly things and anoint him with fine, B. ⁴ Stripped me of my clothes and, B. ⁵ With blessed oil, B. ⁶ Sok. om. ⁷ A Sok. om. ⁸ Pravuil, A; Vrevoil, Sok. ⁹ With wisdom, B.

the books from my store-places, *and give a reed to Enoch ¹, *and interpret to him the books ².' *And Vretil made haste and brought me the books, fragrant with myrrh, and gave me a reed from his hand ³.

[Of the Writing of Enoch how he wrote about his wonderful Goings and the heavenly Visions, and he himself wrote 366 Books.]

XXIII. 1. And he told me all the works of *the heaven and ⁴ the earth and the sea, *and their goings and comings ⁵, *the noise of the thunder; the sun and moon and the movement of the stars; their changings; the seasons and years; days and hours ⁶; and ⁷ goings of the winds; and the numbers of the angels; *the songs of the armed hosts ⁸. 2. And everything relating to man, and every language of their songs, and the lives of men, and the precepts ⁹ and instructions, and sweet-voiced singings, and all which it is suitable to be instructed in. 3. *And Vretil instructed me thirty days and thirty nights, and his lips never ceased speaking; and I did not cease thirty days and thirty nights writing all the remarks ¹⁰. 4. And Vretil ¹¹ said to me: *'All the things which I have told thee, thou hast written down. Sit ¹² down and *write all about ¹³ the souls

¹ And take a reed for speedy writing and give it to Enoch, A Sok.
² A om. ³ And show him the books wonderful and fragrant with myrrh from thy hand, A; Sok. agrees with text, save that he adds wonderful before books, and adds for speedy writing after reed.

XXIII. ⁴ B om. ⁵ The movements of all the elements, B; A om.
⁶ The living things and the seasons of the year, and the course of his days and their changings, and the teaching of the commandments, B; Sok. supports text, save that for movement of the stars he reads stars and their goings. After hours Sok. adds and the coming forth of the clouds.
⁷ B omits from and goings to end of ver. 2. ⁸ The fashion of their songs, A. ⁹ Narratives, A. ¹⁰ A om.; Sok. supports text, but that for remarks he reads marks of every creature. After creature Sok. adds and when I had finished the thirty days and nights. ¹¹ Pravuil, A; Vrevoil, Sok. So also in previous verse. ¹² Lo! what things I have instructed thee in and what thou hast written: and now sit, Sok.
¹³ Write down all, Sok.

XXIII. 1. This verse would not unsuitably describe the Book of Celestial Physics in Eth. En. lxxii-lxxxii. Songs of the armed hosts: see xvii.

of men, those of them which are not born, and the places prepared for them for ever.

5. For every soul was created eternally¹ before the foundation of the world.' 6. And I *wrote all out continuously² during thirty days and thirty nights, *and I copied all out accurately, and I wrote 366 books³.

¹ For eternity, Sok.
written 360 books, B.

² Sat, Sok.

³ And so I ceased and I had

5. Every soul was created . . . before the foundation of the world. The Platonic doctrine of the pre-existence of the soul is here taught. We find that it had already made its way into Jewish thought in Egypt; cf. Wisdom of Solomon, viii. 19, 20 παῖς δὲ ἤμην εὐφυής, ψυχῆς τε ἔλαχον ἀγαθῆς, μᾶλλον δὲ ἀγαθὸς ὢν ἦλθον εἰς σῶμα ἀμίαντον. This doctrine was accepted and further developed by Philo. According to him the whole atmosphere is filled with souls. Among these, those who are nearer the earth and are attracted by the body descend into mortal bodies (τούτων τῶν ψυχῶν αἱ μὲν κατίασιν ἐνδεθσόμεναι σώμασι θνητοῖς, ὅσαι προσγειύτατοι καὶ φιλοσώματοι, De Somn. i. 22). When they have entered the body they are swept off by it as by a river and swallowed up in its eddies (ἐκεῖναι δὲ ὥσπερ εἰς ποταμὸν τὸ σῶμα καταβάσαι τοτὲ μὲν ὑπὸ σερμοῦ δίνης βαιοτάτης ἀρπασθεῖσαι κατεπόθησαν, De Gigant. 3). Only a few escape by obedience to a spiritual philosophy and come to share in the incorporeal and imperishable life that is with God (De Gigant. 3). But there were other souls, called demons in philosophy and angels in Scripture, who dwelling in the higher parts were never entangled by love of the earthly (μηδενὸς μὲν τῶν περιγείων ποτὲ ὄρεσθῆναι τὸ παράπαν, De Somn. i. 22), and who reported the commands of the Father to the children, and the needs of the children to the Father (τὰς τοῦ πατρὸς ἐπικελεύσεις τοῖς ἐκγόνοις καὶ τὰς τῶν ἐκγόνων χρείας τῷ πατρὶ διαγγέλλουσι, De Somn. i. 22; cf. De Gigant. 4). This doctrine of the preexistence of the soul was according to Josephus, Bell. Jud. ii. 8. 11, held by the Essenes: καὶ γὰρ ἔρρωται παρ' αὐτοῖς ἥδε ἡ δόξα, φθαρτὰ μὲν εἶναι τὰ σώματα καὶ τὴν ὕλην οὐ μόνιμον αὐτοῖς, τὰς δὲ ψυχὰς ἀθανάτους αἰεὶ διαμένειν, καὶ συμπλέκεσθαι μὲν, ἐκ τοῦ λεπτοτάτου φοιτώσας αἰθέρος, ὥσπερ εἰρκταῖς τοῖς σώμασιν ἵνγγι τινι φυσικῇ κατασπώμενας, ἐπειδὰν δὲ ἀνεθῶσι τῶν κατὰ σάρκα δεσμῶν, οἷα δὴ μακρὰς δουλείας ἀπηλλαγμένas, τότε χαίρειν καὶ μετεώρους φέρεσθαι. It became a prevailing dogma in later Judaism. All souls which were to enter human bodies existed before the creation of the world in the Garden of Eden (Tanchuma, Pikkude 3) or in the seventh heaven (Chagig 12^b) or in a certain chamber (אוצר) (Sifre 143^b) whence God called them forth to enter human bodies. These souls were conceived of as actually living beings. According to Bereshith rabba c. 8, God takes counsel with the souls of the righteous before He creates the earth (cf. Weber, pp. 204, 205, 217-220). See xxx. 16 (note).

[Of the great Secrets of God, which God revealed and told to Enoch, and spoke with him Face to Face.]

XXIV. 1. And the Lord called me *and said to me: 'Enoch, sit thou on My¹ left hand with Gabriel.' And I made obeisance to the Lord. 2. And the Lord spake to me: 'Enoch², * the things which thou seest at rest and in motion were completed by me³. I will tell thee * now, even⁴ from the first, what things I created from the non-existent, and what visible things from the invisible⁵. 3. Not even to My angels have I told My secrets, nor have I informed them of * their origin, nor have they understood My infinite creation⁶ which I tell thee of to-day. 4. * For before anything which is visible existed⁷, * I alone held my course among the invisible things⁸, like the sun from the east to the west, * and from the west to the east. 5. But even the sun has rest in himself, but I did not find rest, XXIV. ¹ And placed me on His, B. ² Beloved Enoch, A. ³ Thou seest the things which are now completed, A. ⁴ All, Sok. ⁵ A adds Listen Enoch and pay attention to these words, for. ⁶ Their origin nor of My infinite empire, nor have they understood the creation made by Me, A. My mysteries nor their explanations nor My boundless and inexplicable plans in creation, B. ⁷ B om. ⁸ I revealed the light: I went about in the light as one of the invisible.

XXIV. 2. From the non-existent. Here creation ex nihilo seems to be taught. In Philo, on the other hand, the world was not created, but only formed from pre-existent chaotic elements. In one passage, however, where the absolute creation of the world is taught, we have an actual and almost verbal agreement with our text—ὡς ἥλιος ἀνατείλας τὰ κεκρυμμένα τῶν σωμάτων ἐπιδείκνυται, οὕτω καὶ ὁ θεὸς τὰ πάντα γεννήσας οὐ μόνον εἰς τὸ ἐμφανὲς ἤγαγεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἂν πρότερον οὐκ ἦν ἐποίησεν, οὐ δημιουργοῦς μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ κτίστης αὐτοῦ ὢν (De Somn. i. 13). Probably, however, from the non-existent is a rendering of ἐκ τῶν μὴ ὄντων. This will harmonize with xxv. 1. Visible things from the invisible: cf. passage just quoted from Philo; also Heb. xi. 3 'The worlds have been formed by the word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which do appear.' These words from Hebrews do not necessarily imply creation, but can naturally be interpreted after Philo's conceptions. In Gen. i. 2 LXX we find the idea of invisible elements introduced, as it gives ἡ δὲ γῆ ἦν ἀόρατος as a rendering of what we translate with 'the earth was waste.' 3. Not even to My angels: cf. xl. 3; 1 Pet. i. 12.

because I was creating every thing¹. And I planned to lay the foundations and to make the visible creation.

[God tells Enoch how out of the lowest Darkness, there comes forth the visible and the invisible.]

XXV. 1. ‘* And I commanded in the depths that visible things should come out of invisible. And out came Adoil very great², * and I gazed upon him. And lo! his colour was red, of great brightness³. 2. And I said unto him: “Burst asunder, Adoil⁴, and let that which comes from thee be visible.” 3. And he burst asunder, and there came forth a great light⁵, and * I was in the midst of a great light, and as the light came forth from the light⁶, there came forth the great world, * revealing all the creation³, which I had purposed to make, and I saw that it was good. 4. And I made for Myself a throne, and sat upon it, and I said to the light:

¹ B om.

XXV. ² I summoned from the regions below the great Adoil to come forth who had in his belly a great stone, B. ³ B om. ⁴ A om.

⁵ Stone, B. ⁶ I was in the midst of light, and the light thus appearing out of it, Sok.; B om.

XXV. 1. Here the formation of the world from pre-existing elements is taught, as in the Book of Wisdom xi. 17 ἐξ ἀμόρφου ὕλης. Cf. also Philo, De Justitia 7 Μηνύει δὲ ἡ τοῦ Κόσμου γένεσις . . . τὰ γὰρ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι. This is in the main the teaching of the Talmud. See Weber, 193–196. Adoil. Is this from אֱלֹהֵי, the hand of God? The word does not occur elsewhere that I am aware of. In this and the two subsequent verses we have an adaptation of an Egyptian myth. 2. We have here a modification of the egg theory of the universe. See Clem. Recog. x. 17, 30. In Brugsch, Rel. u. Myth. d. alten Aegypter, p. 101, we find a very close parallel. According to the monuments: ‘der erste Schöpfungsact began mit der Bildung eines Eies aus dem Urgewässer, aus dem das Tageslicht, die unmittelbare Ursache des Lebens in dem Bereiche der irdischen Welt herausbrach.’ 3. There came forth a great light. This exactly agrees with the ancient Egyptian myth as described in preceding note. Cf. also Brugsch, Rel. u. Myth. pp. 160, 161 on Die Geburt des Lichtes. There came forth the great world. This should refer to the world of the heavens, as the earth is dealt with in the next chapter. 4. I made for Myself a throne. This throne was created before the world according to Bereshith rabba c. 1 as here. This idea may have found support in the LXX of Prov. viii. 27, where wisdom declares that she was with “Go forth * on high¹ and be established above My throne², and be the foundation for things on high.’ 5. And there was nothing higher than the light, and as I reclined, I saw it from My throne.

[God again calls from the Depths and there came forth Arkhas, Tazhis³, and one who is very red.]

XXVI. 1. And I summoned a second time from the depths, *and said: ‘Let the solid thing which is visible come forth from the invisible⁴.’ And Arkhas *came forth⁵ firm⁶ and heavy³ and *very red⁷. 2. And I said: ‘Be thou divided, O Arkhas, and let *that be seen which is⁸ produced from thee.’ And when he was divided, the world came forth, very dark and great, *bringing the creation of all things below⁹. 3. And I saw that it¹⁰ was good. And I said to him: ‘*Go thou down¹¹ and be thou established. *And be a foundation for things below’; and it was so. And it came forth and was established¹², and was a foundation for things below. *And there was nothing else below the darkness¹².

[How God established the Water, and surrounded it with Light, and established upon it Seven Islands.]

XXVII. 1. *And I ordered that there should be a separation between the light and the darkness, and I said: ‘Let

¹ Above My throne, Sok. ² Sok. om.

XXVI. ³ Corrupt in A, from ТАЖЕСТЬ = heaviness (Old Slav.). ⁴ I told him to come forth from the unseen into that which is fixed and visible, B; and said: ‘let the strong Arkhas come forth,’ and he came forth strong from the invisible, A. ⁵ A om. ⁶ Very firm, B. ⁷ Black, B. ⁸ The thing, A; B OMITTS ENTIRE VERSE. ⁹ Bearer of the created things from all things below, A. ¹⁰ All, B. ¹¹ Come forth from below, A Sok. ¹² B om.

God at the creation when he established His throne upon the winds (ὅτε ἀφώριξεν τὸν ἑαυτοῦ θρόνον ἐπ’ ἀνέμων).

XXVI. 1. Formation, but not creation, of the earth. Arkhas may be from עֲרִיךְ or even from ἀρχή.

XXVII. The title is very corrupt.

1. Separation between the light and the darkness: Gen. i. 4. I do there be a thick substance,' and it was so¹. 2. * And I spread this out and there was water, and I spread it over the darkness², below the light. 3. And thus I made firm the waters, that is, the depths, and I surrounded the waters with light, and I created seven circles and I fashioned them like crystal, moist and dry, that is to say, like glass and ice, and as for the waters, and also the other elements, I showed each of them their paths, (viz.) to the seven stars, each of them in their heaven, how they should go; and I saw that it was good. 4. And I separated between the light and the darkness; that is to say, between the waters here and there. And I said to the light: 'Let it be day³'; and to the darkness, 'Let it be night.' And the evening and the morning were the first day⁴.

XXVIII. 1. ⁵ And thus I *made firm the circles of the heavens, and caused the waters *below, which are under the heavens to be gathered into one place, and that the waves should be dried up, and it was so. 2. Out of the waves I made firm and great stones, and out of the stones I heaped together a dry substance, and I called the dry substance earth. 3. And in the midst of the earth I appointed a pit, that is to say an abyss. 4. I gathered the sea into one place, and I restrained it with a yoke. And I said to XXVII. ¹ And I ordered that they should take from the light and the darkness and I said: 'Let it be thick and covered with light,' Sok.; B om. ² So A Sok., but that A adds with light after out. B reads And having clothed (spread out?) certain things with light, I made broad and stretched out the path of the waters above the darkness. B OMITS THE REST OF THE CHAPTER. ³ Be thou day, Sok. ⁴ A adds as title of XXVIII, Sunday. On it God showed to Enoch all His wisdom and power: during all the seven days how He created the powers of the heaven and earth and all moving things and at last man.

XXVIII. ⁵ A and Sok. agree in this chapter. B is fragmentary and transposed, and reads: (2) And I made the great stones firm, (1) and ordered not pretend to understand what follows.

xxx. 5. 4. Gen. i. 4, 5.

XXVIII. 1. Gen. i. 9. 2. I called the dry substance earth.

An exact rendering of Gen. i. 10.

3. This may be Sheol, or Tartarus (cf. xxix. 5), or it may be the abysses of the waters: cf. Gen. vii. 11; viii. 2; Eth. En. lxxxix. 7, 8; Jubilees ii.

the sea: 'Lo! I give thee an eternal portion and thou shalt not move from thy established position.' So I made fast the firmament and fixed it above the water. 5. This I called the first day of the creation. Then it was evening, and again morning, and it was the second day¹.

XXIX. 1. And for all the heavenly hosts I fashioned² a nature like that of fire, and My eye gazed on the very firm and hard stone. And from the brightness of My eye the lightning received its wonderful nature. 2. And fire is in the water and water in the fire, and neither is the one quenched, nor the other dried up. On this account lightning is brighter than the sun, and soft water is stronger than hard stone³. 3. And from the stone I cut the mighty fire. *And from the fire I made the ranks of the spiritual hosts, ten thousand angels⁴, *and their weapons are fiery, and the waters of the abysses to dry up, (4) and having collected into rivers the overflowings of the abysses and the seas into one place, I bound them with a yoke. I made an everlasting separation between the earth and the sea, and the waters cannot burst forth. And I made fast the firmament, and fixed it above the waters. ¹ A adds as title of the next three verses: The day is Monday, the fiery creations.

XXIX. ² B adds the sun of a great light and placed it in the heavens that it might give light upon earth. ³ So A and Sok., but that Sok. adds keener and before brighter. B omits a nature . . . hard stone. ⁴ And from stones I created the hosts of spirits, B. A supports text, but that for ten thousand it read of the ten. B adds and all the starry hosts, and the Cherubim, and the Seraphim, and the Ophannim, I cut out of fire.

2. 4. Cf. Job xxvi. 10; Ps. civ. 9; Prov. viii. 29; Jer. v. 22. Firmament: Gen. i. 7, 8. 5. This verse should be read immediately after xxix, and together with that chapter should be restored before xxviii. This is clear from the analogy of xxx. 1, 2, 7, 8. It is impossible in its present position.

XXIX. This chap. is clearly dislocated from its original position before xxviii. There is no mark of time attached to it. The work of the first day is given in xxv-xxvii; that of the second day in xxviii. 1-4; that of the third in xxx. 1. xxviii. 5, as we have already seen, must have been differently placed originally. Hence, if we recall the fact that in Jubilees ii. 2, and occasionally in patristic tradition, the creation of the angels is assigned to the first day—evidently on the ground of Job xxxviii. 7—we can restore the text to perfect harmony with itself and Jewish tradition by placing xxix, followed immediately by xxviii. 5, after xxvii.

their garment is a burning flame, and I ordered them to stand each in their ranks¹.

[Here Satanail was hurled from the Heights with his Angels.]

4. * One of these in the ranks of the Archangels, having turned away with the rank below him, entertained an impossible idea, that he should make his throne higher than the clouds over the earth, and should be equal in rank to My power. 5. And I hurled him from the heights with his angels. And he was flying in the air continually, above the abyss¹.

XXX. 1. * And so I created all the heavens, and it was the

¹ B om.

3. From the fire I made the . . . angels. So Pesikta 3^a: see Weber L. d. J. 161. 4. One of these . . . with the rank below him. This is clearly Satan. The rank below him is probably the watchers. But however we interpret the text we are beset with difficulties. There are conflicting elements in the text. See xii. and xviii. with notes: vii; xix; xxxi. 3-7 (notes). Make his throne higher than the clouds. If this is genuine we must take clouds in the sense of heavens. Satan was one of the highest angels before his fall: cf. xviii. 4. Satan and Sammael can not be distinguished in Rabbinic writings. On the attempt of Sammael to found a kingdom see Weber, 244. The following passage from the Book of Adam and Eve, I. vi. is evidently derived from our text: 'The wicked Satan . . . set me at naught and sought the Godhead, so that I hurled him down from heaven.' 5. He was flying in the air continually. This view seems to have been generally received amongst the Jews. Cf. Eph. ii. 2 'The prince of the power of the air'; vi. 12; Test. Benj. 3 τοῦ ἀερίου πνεύματος τοῦ Βελίαρ: Asc. Is. iv. 2 'Berial angelus magnus res huius mundi . . . descendet e firmamento suo'; vii. 9 'Et ascendimus in firmamentum, ego et ille, et ibi vidi Sammaelem eiusque potestates'; x. 29 'descendit in firmamentum ubi princeps huius mundi habitat.' Tuf. haarez, f. 9. 2 'Under the sphere of the moon, which is the last under all, is a firmament . . . and there the souls of the demons are.' Cf. Eisenmenger, ii. 411. According to the Stoics, on the other hand, the abode of the blessed was under the moon. Cf. Tertull. De An. 54; Lucan ix. 5 sq. For other authorities see Meyer on Eph. ii. 2; Eisenmenger, ii. 456. It is hard to get a consistent view of the demonology of this book; it seems to be as follows: Satan, one of the archangels (xviii. 4; xxix. 4), seduced the watchers of the third day. On the third day¹ I ordered the earth to produce *great trees, such as bear fruit, and mountains², and *every sort of herb and every³ seed that is sown⁴, *and I planted Paradise, and enclosed it, and placed fiery angels armed, and so I made a renewing. 2. Then it was evening, and it was morning, being the fourth day⁵. On the fourth day⁶ I ordered that there should be great lights in the circles of the heavens. 3. In the first and highest circle I placed the star Kruno; and on the second⁷ Aphrodite; on the third

XXX. ¹ B om. In verse 1 A adds Tuesday as title before On the third day. ² All sorts of trees and high mountains, B. ³ A om. ⁴ B adds before I produced living things and prepared food for them. ⁵ B om.; Sok. supports text, but adds of the earth after renewing. A adds Wednesday as title of 2^b—7. ⁶ B OMITTS VERSES 2—7^a. ⁷ Sok. adds lower I placed.

fifth heaven into revolt, in order to establish a counter kingdom to God, xxix. 4. Therefore Satan, or the Satans (for it is the name of a class) (Weber, 244), were cast down from heaven, xxix. 5; xxxi. 4, and given the air for their habitation, xxix. 5. As for his followers, the watchers of the fifth heaven, they were cast down to the second and there kept imprisoned and tortured, vii. 3; xviii. 4. Some, however, of the Satans or Watchers went down to earth and married the daughters of men, xviii. 4. From these were born giants, xviii. 5. Thereupon these watchers were imprisoned under the earth, xviii. 6, 7, and the souls of the giants, their children, became subjects of Satan. To return to the Satans, however, when man was created, Satan envied him and wished to make another world, xxxi. 3. Out of envy he tempted Eve to her fall, xxxi. 6.

XXX. 1. Cf. Gen. i. 10, 11. Mountains. This is corrupt. We should have a reference here probably to non-fruit-bearing trees, as in Jub. ii. 7 τὰ ξύλα τὰ κάρπιμά τε καὶ ἄκαρπα. Every seed that is sown. This phrase is found in Jubilees, ii. 7, as one of the third day creations. Paradise. Also in Jub. ii. 7, among the creations of the third day. 2. Circles of the heavens. In Philo, De Mundi Op. 38, we find seven circles as here, though with a different meaning: τὸν οὐρανὸν φασιν ἑπτὰ διεξῶσθαι κύκλοις. 3. Gen. i. 14—19. In the Chronography of Joel, circ. 1200 A. D., p. 34 (ed. Bekker, 1836), the discovery of the signs of the Zodiac, the solstices and the seasons, and the naming of the planets, are assigned to Seth; but as such discoveries were anciently assigned to Enoch, and were only in later tradition ascribed to Seth, we may not unreasonably regard the mention in Joel of the five planets, Kronos, Zeus, Ares, Aphrodite, Hermes, as ultimately derived from the Enoch literature. The statement in Joel is, ὁ δὲ Σῆθ πρῶτος ἐξεύρε . . . τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν . . . καὶ τοῖς ἄστροις ἐπέθηκεν ὀνόματα καὶ τοῖς πέντε πλανήταις εἰς τὸ Ares; *on the fourth the Sun¹; on the fifth Zeus; on the sixth Hermes; on the seventh² the moon. 4. And *the lower air I adorned with the lesser stars. 5. And³ I placed the sun to give light to the day, and the moon and the stars to give light to the night; the sun that he should go *according to each sign of the Zodiac⁴; and the course of *the moon through the twelve signs of the Zodiac⁵. 6. And I fixed their names *and existence, the thunders, and the revolutions of the hours, how they take place⁶. 7. Then it was evening and the morning, the fifth day. *On the fifth day⁷ *I commanded the sea to produce⁸ fish, *and

¹ A om. ² A adds the lesser.

³ And I adorned it with the lesser stars, and on the lower, A.

⁴ To every living thing, A.

⁵ The twelve months, A.

⁶ And their reverberations, and new births, and making of the hours as they go, Sok.

⁷ B om. After fifth day A adds Thursday, and after sixth day it adds Friday.

⁸ B adds and multiply.

γνωρίζεσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ μόνον· καὶ τὸν μὲν πρῶτον πλανήτην ἐκάλεσε Κρόνον, τὸν δὲ δεύτερον Δία, τὸν τρίτον Ἄρεα, τὸν τέταρτον Ἀφροδίτην καὶ τὸν πέμπτον Ἑρμῆν. In the mysteries of Mithras, described in Origen, Contra Celsum vi. 22, the five planets and the sun and moon are said to be connected by a heavenly ladder. From the first words of the preceding ch. we see that these heavenly bodies had some connexion with the seven heavens, as in our text. The order in which the planets and the sun and moon are mentioned in Contra Celsum differs from that given above, and is as follows: Kronos, Aphrodite, Zeus, Hermes, Ares, Selene, Helios. The five planets are first referred to by Philolaus, a Pythagorean, and later by Plato in his Timaeus, but not by their individual names (ἥλιος καὶ σελήνη καὶ πέντε ἄλλα ἄστρα ἐπὶ κλην ἔχοντα πλανήται). These names, which are not found till we come down to the Epinomis, the work of a disciple of Plato, are enumerated as follows, each with an appellation derived from a god: τὸν τοῦ Κρόνου, τὸν τοῦ Διός, τὸν τοῦ Ἄρεος, τὴν τῆς Ἀφροδίτης, τὸν τοῦ Ἑρμοῦ. According to Archimedes (Macrob. in Somn. Scip. i. 19. 2) the order of the planets was as follows: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, the Sun, Venus, Mercury, the Moon, and this order was generally adopted by Cicero (de Div. ii. 43), Manilius (i. 803, 6), Pliny, H. N. ii. 6. The five planets were known to Israel in O. T. times: Kronos as כִּיּוֹן Amos v. 26; Aphrodite as הִילֵל Is. xiv. 12; Ares as נִרְגַּל 2 Kings xvii. 30; Zeus as גֵּר Is. lxv. 11; Hermes as נִבּוֹ Is. xlvi. 1. 5. The Sun . . . according to each sign of the Zodiac. See ch. xiii-xiv. and Eth. En. lxxii. The moon, &c. See lvi. and Eth. En. lxxiii-lxxiv. 7. Cf. Gen. i. 20-26. Observe that most of the creations of the sixth day, Gen.

winged fowls of all kinds¹, and all things that creep upon the earth, and four-footed things that go about the earth, and the things that fly in the air, * male and female, and every living thing breathing with life. 8. And it was evening and morning the sixth day¹. * On the sixth day¹ * I ordered My Wisdom to make man² of seven substances. (1) His flesh from the earth; (2) his blood * from the dew; (3) his eyes from the sun³; (4) his bones from the stones; (5) his thoughts from the swiftness of the angels, and the clouds; (6) his veins⁴ and hair from the grass of the earth⁵; (7) his

¹ B om. ² And when I had finished all I ordered My Wisdom to make man, B. B OMTS THE REST OF THE CHAPTER. ³ From the dew and the sun (3) his eyes form the abysses of the seas, Sok. ⁴ For veins we should probably read nails. See quotation from Philo in the Commentary on this verse. ⁵ A Sok. add and from the wind—a manifest dittography.

i. 24-26, are here assigned to the fifth. 8. Ordered my Wisdom. Wisdom is here hypostatized as in Prov. viii. 30 'Then I was by him as a master workman.' In the Book of Wisdom, Wisdom is the assessor on God's throne, ix. 4; was with Him when He made the world, ix. 9; was the instrument by which all things were created, viii. 5; is the ruler and renewer of all things, viii. 1; vii. 27. Compare further this conception of Wisdom with that of the Logos of Philo, which was the instrument by which God created the world. Cf. Leg. All. iii. 31 σκιά θεοῦ δὲ ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ ἐστίν, ᾧ καθάπερ ὀργάνῳ προσχρησάμενος ἐκοσμοποίη : De Cherubim 35 εὐρήσεις γὰρ αἴτιον μὲν αὐτοῦ τὸν θεόν, ὑφ' οὗ γέγονεν, ὕλην δὲ τέσσαρα στοιχεῖα, ἐξ ὧν συνεκράθη, ὄργανον δὲ λόγον θεοῦ, δι' οὗ κατεσκενάσθη. Of seven substances. The list of these substances is corrupt. See Critical Notes. It seems to have some connexion with the speculations of the Stoics (G. Sext. Math. ix. 81) and of Philo. Thus, as in our text, man's body is derived (1) from the earth, De Mundi Op. 51. Again, whilst in (4) his bones are derived from stones, in Philo, Leg. All. ii. 7, he is said at the lowest stage to have a nature in common with the stones and trees (ἡ μὲν ἔξίς κοινή καὶ τῶν ἀψύχων ἐστὶ λίθων καὶ ξύλων, ἧς μετέχει καὶ τὰ ἐν ἡμῖν ἐοικότα λίθοις ὁστέα): again whilst in our text (6) his veins (?) and hair are from the grass of the earth, in Philo, Leg. All. ii. 7, he is said in the next higher stage to be allied to plant-nature, such as the nails and hair (ἡ δὲ φύσις διατείνει καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ φυτὰ καὶ ἐν ἡμῖν δὲ εἰσὶν ἐοικότα φυτοῖς, ὄνυχές τε καὶ τρίχες): finally, (7) agrees with Philo's doctrine: cf. De Mundi Op. 46. If we could restore the text as it stood originally the resemblance would probably be closer. Philo's view of man's nature is well summed up in De Mundi Op. 51 πᾶς ἄνθρωπος κατὰ μὲν τὴν διάνοιαν spirit from My spirit and from the wind. 9. And I gave him seven natures: hearing to his body, sight to his eyes, smell to the perception, touch to the veins, taste to the blood, the bones for endurance, sweetness for thought. 10. *I purposed a subtle thing¹: from the invisible and visible nature I made man. From both are his death and life, *and his form²; *and the word was like a deed³ *both small in a great thing⁴, and great in a small thing. 11. And I placed him upon the earth; like a second angel, in an honourable, great, and glorious way. 12. And I made him a ruler *to rule upon the earth, and to have My wisdom⁵.

¹ Lo! I purposed to say a subtle word, Sok. ² Sok. om. ³ A word is a message as it were something created, Sok. ⁴ Both in great things and in little things, A. ⁵ Upon the earth having rule by My wisdom, Sok.

ᾠκεῖται θείῳ λόγῳ, τῆς μακαρίας φύσεως . . . ἀπαύγασμα γεγοῶς, κατὰ δὲ τὴν τοῦ σώματος κατασκευὴν ἅπαντι τῷ κόσμῳ· συγκέκριται γὰρ ἐκ τῶν αὐτῶν, γῆς καὶ ὕδατος καὶ ἀέρος καὶ πυρός, ἐκάστου τῶν στοιχείων εἰσενεγκόντος τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος πρὸς ἐκπλήρωσιν αὐταρκεστάτης ὕλης, ἣν ἔδει λαβεῖν τὸν δημιουργόν, ἵνα τεχνιτεύσῃται τὴν ὁρατὴν ταύτην εἰκόνα. For the later Talmudic views cf. Weber, 202–204; Malan's Book of Adam and Eve, pp. 209–15. In the Anglo-Saxon Ritual (circ. 950), to which Dr. Murray has called my attention, man is said to be made out of eight substances: 'Octo pondera de quibus factus est Adam. Pondus limi, inde factus est caro; pondus ignis, inde rubeus est sanguis et calidus; pondus salis, inde sunt salsae lacrimae; pondus roris, inde factus est sudor; pondus floris, inde est varietas oculorum; pondus nubis, inde est instabilitas mentium; pondus venti, inde est anhela frigida; pondus gratiae, inde est sensus hominis.' 9. Seven natures. Here again the text is very untrustworthy and the following words seem corrupt: body, veins, blood, whilst the clauses the bones . . . thought are quite irrelevant. Here we should possibly follow Philo, De Mundi Op. 40 τῆς ἡμετέρας ψυχῆς τὸ δίχα τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ μέρος ἐπταχῇ σχίζεται, πρὸς πέντε αἰσθήσεις καὶ τὸ φωνητήριον ὄργανον καὶ ἐπὶ πᾶσι τὸ γόνιμον, and thus for the corrupt clauses read the vocal organ and the generative power. Cp. Test. Napht. 2. Philo's division of man's nature is derived from the Stoics: cf. Plut. Plac. iv. 4 οἱ Στωικοὶ ἐξ ὀκτῶ μερῶν φασὶ συνιστάναι (τὴν ψυχὴν), πέντε μὲν τῶν αἰσθητικῶν, ὁρατικοῦ, ἀκουστικοῦ, ὁσφρητικοῦ, γευστικοῦ, ἀπτικοῦ, ἑκτοῦ δὲ φωνητικοῦ, ἐβδόμου σπερματικοῦ, ὀγδόου αὐτοῦ τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ. Cf. also Plut. Plac. iv. 21. 10. Man's spiritual and material nature. 11. Like a second angel. According to the Beresh. Rab. fol. 17, Adam, when first created, reached from the earth to the firmament. In the Book of Adam and Eve, i. 10, Adam is called a 'bright angel.' 12. Gen. i. 26, 28. 13. This verse may

And there was no one like him upon the earth of all My creations. 13. And I gave him a name from the four substances: the East, the West, *the North, and the South¹. 14. And I appointed for him four special stars, and I gave him the name Adam. 15. *And I gave him his will², and I showed him the two ways, the light and the either be the source of or may be derived from the Sibylline Oracles, iii. 24-26

¹ A transposes.² A om.

Αὐτὸς δὴ θεὸς ἐστ' ὁ πλάσας τετραγράμματος Ἀδὰμ,

Τὸν πρῶτον πλασθέντα, καὶ οὖνομα πληρώσαντα

Ἀντολίην τε δύσιν τε μεσημβρίην τε καὶ ἄρκτον.

The third line is used frequently, though with a different application, in the Oracles, i. e. ii. 195; viii. 321; xi. 3. It will be observed that this arrangement gives the initials Adma in the wrong order. This etymology is next found in the anonymous writing De Montibus Sina et Sion, 4, formerly ascribed to Cyprian: 'Nomen accepit a Deo. Hebraicum Adam in Latino interpretat "terra caro facta," eo quod ex quattuor cardinibus orbis terrarum pugno comprehendit, sicut scriptum est: "palmo mensus sum caelum et pugno comprehendere terram et confinxerunt hominem ex omni limo terrae; ad imaginem Dei feci illum." Oportuit illum ex his quattuor cardinibus orbis terrae nomen in se portare Adam; invenimus in Scripturis, per singulos cardines orbis terrae esse a conditore mundi quattuor stellas constitutas in singulis cardinibus. Prima stella orientalis dicitur anatole, secunda occidentalis dysis, tertia stella aquilonis arctus, quarta stella meridiana dicitur mesembria. Ex nominibus stellarum numero quattuor de singulis stellarum nominibus tolle singulas litteras principales, de stella anatole α, de stella dysis δ, de stella arctus α, de stella mesembria μ; in his quattuor litteris cardinalibus habes nomen αδαμ.' This etymology is given with approval by Bede, In Genesim Expositio iv. 'Hae quattuor literae nominis Adam propria habent nomina in partium nominibus, id est anatole, dysis, arctus, mesembria; id est oriens occidens, septentrio, merides. Et haec proprietas significat dominatum Adam in quattuor supradictis partibus mundi.' It is found also in the Chronikon of Glycas (circ. 1150), p. 143: κατὰ τοῦτο δὲ τῷ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ ὀνόματι προσηγόρευσε αὐτὸν . . . καὶ ὅρα τὰ τοῦ τοιοῦτου ὀνόματος γράμματα· τὰ τέσσαρα γὰρ ὑπεμφαίνουσι κλίματα· ἄλφα ἀνατολή, δέλτα δύσις, ἄλφα ἄρκτος, μὴ μεσημβρία. See Jubilees iii. 28 (notes); Targ.-Jon. on Gen. ii. 7.

14. Four special stars. These stars are named from the four quarters of the earth, and Adam's name is formed from their initial letters. See citation from De Montibus Sina et Sion, which seems to be derived from our text. Stars may here mean 'angels.' According to the Jalk. Rub. fol. 13; Jalk. Shim. fol. 4 (see Book of Adam and Eve, p. 215) certain ministering angels were appointed to wait on Adam. 15. I gave him his will: cf. Tanchuma Pikkude 3 (quoted by Weber, p. 208), 'God does not determine beforehand whether a man shall be righteous or wicked, but puts this in the hands of the man darkness. And I said unto him: 'This is good and this is evil'; that I should know whether he has love for Me or hate: that he should appear in his race as loving Me. 16. I knew his nature, he did not know his nature. Therefore his ignorance is *a woe to him that he should sin, and only.' In the text free-will is conceded to man, but this is prejudicially affected by his ignorance (ver. 16): cf. Eccelus. xv. 14, 15 αὐτὸς ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐποίησεν ἄνθρωπον καὶ ἀφῆκεν αὐτὸν ἐν χειρὶ διαβουλίου αὐτοῦ. ἐὰν θέλῃς συντηρήσεις ἐντολὰς καὶ πίστιν ποίησαι εὐδοκίας. On the question generally see Joseph. B. J. ii. 8. 14; Antt. xiii. 5. 9; xviii. 1. 3; Psalms of Solomon, ed. by Ryle and James, pp. 95, 96. 15. The two ways, the light and the darkness. This popular figure of the Two Ways was suggested by Jer. xxi. 8 'Thus saith the Lord: Behold, I set before you the way of life and the way of death'; by Deut. xxx. 15 'I have set before thee this day life and good and death and evil'; Eccelus. xv. 17 ἐναντι ἀνθρώπων ἡ ζωὴ καὶ ὁ θάνατος, καὶ ὁ ἐὰν εὐδοκήσῃ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ: xvii. 6 καὶ ἀγαθὰ καὶ κακὰ ὑπέδειξεν αὐτοῖς. For parallel N. T. expressions cf. Mt. vii. 13, 14; 2 Pet. ii. 2. Of the two great post-apostolic descriptions of the Two Ways, in the Didachè and in the Ep. of Barnabas, that of the latter presents the nearest parallel to our text: chap. xviii. 1 ὁδοὶ δύο εἰσὶν διδασχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας, ἥ τε τοῦ φωτὸς καὶ ἡ τοῦ σκότους. In the Dilachè i. 1 we have ὁδοὶ δύο εἰσὶ, μία τῆς ζωῆς καὶ μία τοῦ θανάτου: cf. Test. Asher 1 δύο ὁδοὺς ἔδωκεν ὁ θεὸς τοῖς υἱοῖς ἀνθρώπων . . . ὁδοὶ δύο, καλοῦ καὶ κακοῦ: Sibyll. Or. viii. 399, 400 αὐτὸς ὁδοὺς προέθηκα δύο, ζωῆς θανάτου τε Καὶ γνώμην προέθηκ' ἀγαθὴν ζωὴν προελεῖσθαι: cf. also Pastor Hermiae

Mand. vi. 1, 2; Clem. Alex. Strom. v. 5; Apost. Church Order, iv; Apost. Constitutions, vii. 1; Clem. Homilies v. 7. I said unto him: 'This is good and this is evil,' &c. This does not harmonize with the account in Gen., where the knowledge of good and evil follows on eating the forbidden fruit. That I should know whether he has love for Me or hate. Deut. xiii. 3 'Your God proveth you to know whether ye love the Lord your God.' 16. Ignorance is a woe to him that he should sin. This ignorance, as we see from the preceding verse, is not first and directly an ignorance of moral distinctions, but of his nature with its good and evil impulses (יצר הרע and יצר הטוב). Ignorance is thus regarded here as an evil in itself. This is probably the result of Platonic thought, which had gained great influence over Hellenistic Judaism, and the idea of the text seems related, however distantly, to that ethical system which may be summed up in the words πᾶς δ' ἄδικος οὐχ ἐκὼν ἄδικος (Plato, Legg. 731 c): οὐδένα ἀνθρώπων ἐκόντα ἑξαμαρτάνειν (Prot. 345 D): κακὸς μὲν γὰρ ἐκὼν οὐδεὶς (Tim. 86 D). See also Legg. 734 B; Rep. ix. 589 c; Hipp. Maj. 296 c. Herein it is taught that no man wilfully chooses evil in preference to good; but in every act of moral judgement the determining motive is to be found in the real or seeming preponderance of good in the course adopted: and that, should this course

I appointed death on account of his sin¹. 17. And²
I caused him to sleep, and he slumbered. And I took from ¹ Worse than sinning, and for sin there is nothing else but death, Sok.

² Sok. adds I cast upon him a shadow and.

be the worse one, the error of judgment is due either to physical incapacities or faulty education, or to a combination of both. This view of sin as an involuntary affection of the soul follows logically from another Platonic principle already enunciated by our author (see xxiii. 5, note). This principle is the pre-existence of the soul. The soul, as such, according to Platonic teaching, is wholly good. Evil, therefore, cannot arise from its voluntary preferences; but from its limitations, i. e. from its physical and moral environment, from its relation to the body and from wrong education. In the Book of Wisdom this view is widely diverged from. There the body is not held to be irredeemably evil, but souls are already good and bad on their entrance into this life (viii. 19, 20). In Philo, on the other hand, there is in the main a return to the Platonic and Stoic doctrine. The body is irredeemably evil; it is in fact the tomb of the soul (σῶμα = σῆμα); and only the sensuously-inclined souls are incorporated with bodies (see above, xxiii. 5, note). The views adopted by our author on these and kindred points stand in some degree in a closer relation to the Platonic principles than do those of Philo or the author of the Book of Wisdom. Thus he held: (1) That the soul was created originally good. (2) That it was not predetermined either to good or ill by God, but left to mould its own destiny (see xxx. 15). (3) That its incorporation in a body, however, with its necessary limitations served to bias its preferences in the direction of evil. (4) That faithful souls will hereafter live as blessed incorporeal spirits, or at all events clothed only in God's glory (xxii. 7); for there is no resurrection of the body. Death on account of his sin. So Ecclus. xxv. 24 ἀπὸ γυναικὸς ἀρχὴ ἀμαρτίας, καὶ δι' αὐτὴν ἀποθνήσκομεν πάντες; for 'man was created exactly like the angels,' Eth. En. lxix. 11, righteous and immortal, but death came through sin, Book of Wisdom, ii. 23, 24; Eth. En. xcvi. 4. The same teaching is found in the Talmud: see Weber, 208, 214, 239. This doctrine of man's conditional immortality and of death entering the world through sin does not belong to O.T. literature; for Gen. ii. 17, when studied in its context, implies nothing more than a premature death; for the law of man's being is enunciated in Gen. iii. 19 'Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return,' and his expulsion from Eden was due first and principally to the need of guarding against his eating of the tree of life and living for ever. Furthermore, even in Ecclus., where the idea of death as brought about by sin is first enunciated, the doctrine appears in complete isolation and in open contradiction to the main statements and tendencies of the book; for it elsewhere teaches that man's mortality is the law from everlasting (ὅ γὰρ διαθήκη ἀπ' αἰῶνος Ecclus. xiv. 17): and that being formed from earth unto earth must he return, xvii. 1, 2; xl. 11. Nor again is this doctrine a controlling principle in the system him a rib¹, and I made him a wife. 18. And by his wife death came, and I received his last word. And I called her by a name, the mother; that is Eve.

[God gives Paradise to Adam, and gives him Knowledge, so as to see the Heavens open, and that he should see the Angels singing a Song of Triumph.]

XXXI. 1. Adam had a life on earth², . . . and I made a garden in Eden in the East, and (I ordained) that he should observe the law and keep *the instruction³. 2. I made for him the heavens open that he should perceive the angels singing the song of triumph. And there was light *without any⁴ darkness continually in Paradise. 3. And the devil took thought, as if wishing to make another world, because things were subservient to Adam on earth, to rule it and have lordship over it. 4. The devil is to be the evil spirit of the lowest places⁵; *he became Satan, after he left the heavens. His name was formerly Satanail⁶. 5. And then, *though he became different from the angels in nature, he did not change his understanding of just and sinful

¹ Sok. adds as he slept.

XXXI. ² There is evidently a lacuna here. ³ It, Sok. B omits ENTIRE CHAPTER. ⁴ That never knew, Sok. ⁵ A adds as he wrought devilish things. ⁶ As flying from the heavens he became Satan, since his name was Satanail, Sok.

of the writers of the Book of Wisdom. When, however, we come down to N. T. times we find it the current view in the Pauline Epistles: cf. Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 21; 2 Cor. xi. 3. On various views on sin and death and their causes see Eth. En. vi-viii; x. 8; xxxii. 6; lxix. 6, 11; xcvi. 4, with notes. 18. By his wife death came: cf. Eccus. xxv. 23; 1 Tim. ii. 14. See preceding note. I received his last word. Corrupt.

XXXI. 2. This verse is almost quoted in the Book of Adam and Eve I. viii. 'When we dwelt in the garden . . . we saw the angels that sang praises in heaven.' According to S. Ephrem, i. 139, Adam and Eve lost the angelic vision on their fall (Malan). Philo, Quaest. xxxii. in Gen., believes 'oculis illos praeditos esse quibus potuerunt etiam eas quae in coelo sunt.' For the continual light in Paradise see Book of Adam and Eve, I. xii; xiii; xiv. 3. On the envy of Satan see Wisdom, ii. 24; Joseph. Antt. i. 1. 4; Weber, 211, 244. 4. See notes on xviii. 3 and xxix. 4.

thoughts¹. He understood the judgement upon him, and the former sin which he had sinned. 6. And on account of this, he conceived designs against Adam; in such a manner he entered² and deceived Eve. But he did not touch Adam. 7. * But I cursed him for (his) ignorance³: but those I previously blessed, them I did not curse⁴, 8. nor man did I curse, nor the earth, nor any other things created, but the evil fruit of man, and then his works.

[On account of the Sin of Adam, God sends him to the Earth, 'From which I took thee,' but He does not wish to destroy him in the Life to come.]

XXXII. 1. I said to him: 'Earth thou art, and to earth also from whence I took thee shalt thou return. I will not destroy thee, but will send thee whence I took thee. Then I can also take thee in My second coming'; and I have blessed all My creation, visible and invisible⁵. 2. And I blessed the seventh day, * which is the Sabbath⁶, for in it I rested from all My labours.

[God shows Enoch the Duration of this World, 7000 Years, and the eighth Thousand is the End. (There will be) no Years, no Months, no Weeks, no Days.]

XXXIII. 1. Then also I established the eighth day. Let ¹ Though he was changed from the angels, he did not change his nature, but he had thought, as is the mind of just men and sinners, Sok.

² Sok. adds into Paradise. ³ Sok. om. ⁴ Sok. adds and those whom before I had not blessed, them also I did not curse.

XXXII. ⁵ A adds (against B Sok.) And Adam was five and a half hours in Paradise. B omits entire chapter. ⁶ Sok. om.

6. See xxx. 18, note; Weber, 211, 244.

7. Cursed him for (his) ignorance. This ought to refer to the Serpent or to Satan.

XXXII. 1. My second coming. God's coming to judge the earth, to bless His people, and to punish their enemies. This is called καιρὸς ἐπισκοπῆς and ἡμέρα διαγνώσεως in the Book of Wisdom, iii. 7, 18. It is referred to again in xlii. 5 of our text. God's first coming to the earth was for the sake of Adam and to bless all that He had made, lviii. 1.

XXXIII. 1, 2. From the fact that Adam did not live to be 1000 years the eighth be the first * after My work¹, and let * the days² be after the fashion of seven thousand. 2. * Let there be at the beginning of the eighth thousand a time when there is no computation, and no end; neither years, nor months, nor weeks, nor days, nor hours³. 3. And now Enoch, what XXXIII. ¹ Of my rest, Sok. BOMITS VERSES 1, 2. ² A om. ³ And let the eighth day be for a beginning in the likeness of eight thousand. So concerning the first day of My rest, and also the eighth day of My rest, let them return continually, Sok. Margin of Sok.'s MS. reads: the beginning of unrighteousness, the time without end, neither years, nor months, nor weeks, nor days, nor hours.

old, the author of the Book of Jubilees, iv. 30, concludes that the words of Gen. ii. 17 'In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die' were actually fulfilled. It is hence obvious that already before the Christian era 1000 years had come to be regarded as one world-day. To arrive at the conception of a world-week of 7000 years—6000 years from the creation to the judgement, followed by 1000 years, or a millennium of blessedness and rest—it was necessary to proceed but one step further, and this step we find was taken by the author of our text. In Irenaeus, moreover, Contra Haer. v. 28. 3 this reasoning is given explicitly: ὅσαι . . . ἡμέραις ἐγένετο ὁ κόσμος, τοσαύταις χιλιοντάσι συντελεῖται. Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο φησιν ἡ γραφή. Καὶ συνετέλεσεν ὁ θεὸς τῇ ἡμέρᾳ 5' τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ ἃ ἐποίησε, καὶ κατέπαυσεν ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ζ' ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ. τοῦτο δ' ἐστὶ τῶν προγεγονότων διήγησις καὶ τῶν ἐσομένων προφητεία· ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα κυρίου ὡς α' ἔτη. ἐν ἑξ ὧν ἡμέραις συντελέσεται τὰ γεγονότα. φανερόν οὖν ὅτι ἡ συντέλεια αὐτῶν τὸ 5, ἔτος ἐστί. Clemens Alex. Strom. iv. 25 refers to this conception—possibly to our text. It is not improbable that the statements of Cedrenus on this head are drawn from our text. Thus on p. 9 he writes: τούτου χάριν ἡὐλογήθη καὶ αὕτη (ἡ ἡμέρα) ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἡγιασθή καὶ σάββατον ὡς καταπαύσιμος προσηγορεύθη, καὶ ὡς τύπος τῆς ἐβδόμης χιλιοετηρίδος καὶ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν συντελείας, ὡς Ἰώσηπος μαρτυρεῖ καὶ ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις ἣν καὶ Μωσέως εἶναι φασὶ τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. It is, we repeat, not improbable that our text is the original source of Cedrenus' statements, inasmuch as nothing of the kind is found either in Josephus or the Book of Jubilees, from which he professes to derive them. Syncellus, on whom Cedrenus is largely dependent, is frequently wrong in his references in the case of Apocalyptic literature. A most interesting expansion and an adaptation of the text to Christian conceptions are to be found in Augustin, De Civ. xxii. 30. 5 'Ipse etiam numerus aetatum, veluti dierum, si secundum eos articulos temporis computetur qui in Scripturis videntur expressi, iste Sabbatismus evidentius apparebit, quoniam septimus invenitur: ut prima aetas tanquam dies primus sit ab Adam usque ad diluvium, secunda inde usque ad Abraham . . . ab Abraham usque ad David una, altera inde usque ad transmigrationem in Babyloniam, tertia inde usque ad Christi carnalem nativitatem. Fiunt itaque omnes quinque. Sexta things I have told thee, *and what thou hast understood, and what heavenly things thou hast seen ¹, and what thou hast seen upon the earth, and what *thou hast ² written in books, by My wisdom all these things I devised *so as to create them ³. and I made them from the highest foundation to the lowest, *and to the end ¹. 4. And there is no counsellor ⁴ *nor inheritor of My works ¹. I am the eternal One, and the One not made with hands: *My thought is without change, My wisdom is My counsellor ⁵ and My word is reality; and My eyes see all things, *if I look to all things ³ they *stand fast ⁶. If I turn away My face, all are in need of Me. 5. And now pay attention, Enoch, and know thou who is speaking to thee, and do thou take the books which thou thyself hast written. 6. And I give thee *Samuil and Raguil ⁷ who brought thee *to Me ³. And go *with them ⁸ upon the earth, and tell thy sons what things I have said to nunc agitur . . . post hanc tanquam in die septimo requiescet Deus, cum eundem septimum diem, quod nos erimus, in se ipso Deo faciet requiescere. . . . Haec tamen septima erit Sabbatum nostrum, cuius finis non erit vespera, sed dominicus dies velut octavus aeternus. . . . Ecce quod erit in fine sine fine.' For other speculations in reference to the world-week see Evang. Nicodemi, ii. 12; Book of Adam and Eve, I. iii. A time when there is no computation . . . neither years nor months, &c. Sibyll. Or. viii. 424-427 may have been influenced by our text where it speaks of the eternity of blessedness:

¹ B om. ² I have, A. ³ A om. ⁴ Lamp, B. ⁵ My thought is a lamp, B. ⁶ Stand and tremble with fear, A Sok. ⁷ Semil and Basuil, B; B adds and him. ⁸ B Sok. om.

Οὐκ ἔτι λοιπὸν ἐρεῖς λυπούμενος "αὔριον ἔσται,"

Οὐκ "ἐχθὲς γέγονεν" οὐκ ἡματα πολλὰ μερίμνης,

Οὐκ ἔαρ, οὐ χειμῶν, οὐτ' ἄρ θέρος, οὐ μετόπωρον,

Οὐ δύσις ἀντολίη· ποιήσω γὰρ μακρὸν ἡμαρ.

3. I made them from the highest foundation to the lowest: cf. Ecclus. xviii. 1 ὁ ζῶν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα ἔκτισε τὰ πάντα κοινῇ, where κοινῇ is a rendering of יְיָיָ. 4. My thought is without change. Num. xxiii. 19; 1 Sam. xv. 29; Ezek. xxiv. 14. My wisdom is My counsellor. See xxx. 8 (note). Cf. Ecclus. xlii. 22 καὶ οὐ προσεδέθη οὐδενὸς συμβούλου. My word is reality. So Eth. En. xiv. 22 (Gk.) πᾶς λόγος αὐτοῦ ἔργον. Cf. Ps. xxxiii. 9; Ecclus. xlii. 15 ἐν λόγοις κυρίου τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. My eyes see all things: cf. Ecclus. xxxix. 19. If I turn away My face, &c. Ps. civ. 29 'Thou hidest Thy face, they are thee, and what thou hast seen from the lowest heaven up to My throne. 7. For I have created all the hosts, and all the powers, and there is none that opposes Me, or is disobedient to Me. For all are obedient to My sole power, and labour for My rule alone. 8. Give¹ them the works written out by thee, *and they shall read them, and know Me to be the Creator of all; and shall understand that there is no other God beside Me². 9. *They shall distribute the books of thy writing to their children's children³, and from generation to generation, and from nation to nation. 10. *And I will give thee, Enoch, My messenger, the great captain Michael, for thy writings and for the writings of thy fathers, Adam, Seth, Enos, Kainan, Malaleel, and Jared, thy father⁴. 11. *And I shall not require them till the last age, for I have instructed My two angels, Ariukh and Pariukh, whom I have put upon the earth as their guardians. 12. And I have ordered them in time to guard them that the account of what I shall do in thy family may not be lost in the deluge to come⁵.

¹ I will give, A. ² B om. ³ Let the children give them to the children, B. ⁴ As being the messenger Enoch of my captain Michael. Because that thy writings and the writings of thy fathers, Adam and Sit, B. ⁵ (Because these) will not be required till the last age, I have ordered my angels, Oriokh and Mariokh, to give orders to guard in season the writings which I have placed upon the earth, and that they should guard the writings of thy fathers, so that what I have wrought in thy family may not be lost, B; A om. In the text I have followed Sok., but that for to punish them I have read to guard them with B.

troubled.' 6. Cf. Eth. En. lxxxi. 5, 6. Samuil. This is either from שְׁמוֹעַ אֵל = heard of God, 1 Sam. i. 20, or from שְׁמוֹ and אֵל = name of God. Raguil is a transliteration of רֵעִי אֵל = friend of God. 9. Cf. xlvii. 2, 3; xlviii. 7-9; liv; lxv. 5; Eth. En. lxxxii. 1, 2, where, exactly as here, the books are to be transmitted straightway to the generations of the world, whereas in i. 2; xciii. 10; civ. 12 the method and times of the disclosure of the books are different. Though the writings are committed to the keeping of men, they are under the guardianship of special angels until the time for their complete disclosure and understanding has come. See verses 11, 12. 10. Michael was the guardian angel of Israel: Dan. x. 13, 21; xii. 1. See Eth. En. ix. 1; x. 11; xx. 5 (note); xl. 4, &c.; Weber, 165. 11. Till the last age. At last the time for the due comprehension of these books will arrive: see ver. 9, note; xxxv. 2, 3; (liv); Eth. En. xciii. 10; civ. 12. Ariukh. This proper

[God accuses the Idolators ; the Workers of Iniquity, such as Sodom, and on this account He brings the Deluge upon them.]

XXXIV. 1. * For I know the wickedness of men that they will not bear the yoke which I have put upon them, nor sow the seeds which I have given them, but will cast off My yoke and accept another, and sow vain seeds and bow to vain gods, and deny Me the only God¹. 2. And they will fill all the world with * wickedness and iniquity, and foul impurities with one another, sodomy and all other impure practices, which it is foul to speak about². 3. And on this account I will bring a deluge upon the earth * and I will destroy all³, and⁴ the earth shall be destroyed in great corruption.

[God leaves one Just Man from the Family of Enoch, with all his House, which pleased God according to His Will.]

XXXV. 1. And I will leave a righteous man * of thy race⁵, with all his house who shall act according to My will. From XXXIV. ¹ Sok. supports text but that it omits nor sow . . . given them. A reads: They turned from My law and My yoke and raised up worthless races such as feared not God nor worshipped Me, but began to bow before vain gods, and denied Me, the only God. ² Unjust deeds and harlotries and services of idols, B; Sok. adds and evil service. ³ B Sok. omit. ⁴ A adds all.

XXXV. ⁵ A B om.

name is found in Gen. xiv. 1, 9; Dan. ii. 14. The derivation is doubtful, being êri-aku = servant of the moon-god (Delitzsch), or a compound from עֲרִיאִי: hence a lionlike man (Gesenius).

XXXIV. 1. Cast off My yoke: cf. for phrase xlvi. 9; Ecclus. xxviii. 19, 20; Matt. xi. 29. Sow vain seeds. This is obscure. The words seem to be metaphorical and not to refer to Deut. xxii. 9. Deny, &c.: cf. Josh. xxiv. 27. 2. It is this verse that is referred to in Test. Napht. 4, though it is there somewhat differently applied: ἀνέγνων ἐν γραφῇ ἀγία Ἐνώχ, ὅτι καί γε καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀποστήσεσθε ἀπὸ κυρίου, πορευόμενοι κατὰ πᾶσαν πονηρίαν ἐθνῶν, καὶ ποιήσετε κατὰ πᾶσαν ἀνομίαν Σοδόμων. 3. The words immediately subsequent to those just quoted from Test. Napht. seem to be in part derived from this verse: καὶ ἐπάξει ὑμῖν κύριος αἰχμαλωσίαν . . . ἕως ἂν ἀναλώσῃ κύριος πάντας ὑμᾶς is simply an adaptation of I will bring a deluge upon the earth, and I will destroy all.

XXXV. 1. Righteous man, i. e.

their seed *after some time¹ will be raised up a numerous² generation, but *of these, many will be¹ very insatiable. 2. Then on the extinction of that family, I will show them the books of thy writings, and of thy fathers, and the guardians of them on earth will show them to the men who are true, *and please Me, who do not take My name in vain¹. 3. And they shall tell to another³ generation, and these *having read them¹, shall be glorified at last more than before.

[God ordered Enoch to live on the Earth thirty Days, so as to teach his Sons, and his Sons' Sons. After thirty Days he was thus taken up into Heaven.]

XXXVI. 1. And now, Enoch, I give thee a period⁴ of thirty days to work in thy house. And tell thou thy sons⁵, *and all thy household before Me; that they may listen to what is spoken to them by thee⁶; that they read and understand, how there is no other God beside Me; *and let them always keep My commandments, and begin to read and understand the books written out by thee⁶. 2. And after thirty days, I will send My angels⁷ for thee, and they⁸ shall take thee from the earth, and from thy sons, *according to My will⁹.

[Here God summons an Angel.]

[XXXVII. 1. And God called one of His greatest angels,

¹ B om. ² Another, Sok. ³ That, B.

XXXVI. ⁴ Sok. adds of preparation. ⁵ B adds all that thou guardest in thy heart. ⁶ B om. ⁷ Angel, A Sok. ⁸ He, A Sok. ⁹ To Me, A Sok.

Noah. 2. On the extinction of that family. This seems to refer to the destruction of the wicked during the period of the sword. About the same time the books of Enoch were to be given to the righteous. See for the same connexion of ideas Eth. En. xciii. 9, 10; xci. 12. The guardians. See xxxiii. 9, 11 (notes). 3. The period of the sword and the disclosure of Enoch's books introduces the Messianic age.

XXXVI. 1. In Eth. En. lxxx. 6 the period is one year. Read and understand, &c.; cf. Eth. En. lxxxii. 1-3. 2. Cf. Eth. En. lxxx. 6.

XXXVII. This chapter, which *terrible and awful¹, and placed him by me, *and the appearance of that angel was like² snow, and his hands were like ice; *he had a very cold appearance³, and my face was chilled because I could not endure *the fear of the Lord⁴; *just as it is not possible to⁵ endure the mighty fire and heat of the sun, and the frost of the air. 2. And the Lord said to me, ‘ Enoch, if thy face is not chill here, no man can look upon thy face⁶.’]

[Mathusal had Hope, and awaited his Father Enoch by his Bed, Day and Night.]

XXXVIII. 1⁷. And the Lord said to those men who first took me: ‘Take Enoch with you to the earth, and wait for him till the appointed day.’ 2. And at night they placed me upon my bed, and Mathusal, expecting my coming by day and by night, was a guard at my bed. 3. And he was terrified when he heard my coming, and I gave him directions that all my household should come, that I might tell them everything.

[The mournful Admonition of Enoch to his Sons, with Weeping and great Sorrow, speaking to them⁸.]

XXXIX. 1. *Listen, my children, what things are according to the will of the Lord. I am sent to-day to you to tell you from the lips of the Lord, what was and what is happening now, and what will be before the day of XXXVII. ¹ In a voice like thunder, B. ² In appearance he was white as, A. ³ In appearance having great cold, Sok.; Bom. ⁴ The great terror and awe, B. ⁵ For I could not, A; B omits just as . . . frost of the air. ⁶ B om.

XXXVIII. ⁷ B OMITS ENTIRE CHAPTER.

XXXIX. ⁸ The Instructions given by Enoch to his Sons, B.

is found in all the MSS., is read in its present position in A Sok., but after xxxix in B. I have bracketed it as it seems irrelevant to the entire text.

XXXVIII. 1. Cf. xxxvi. 2.

Cf. i. 2-4. 3. Cf. Eth. En. xci. 1.

judgement. 2. Hear, my children, for I do not speak to you to-day from my lips, but from the lips of the Lord who has sent me to you. For you hear¹ *the words of my lips, a mortal man like yourselves². 3. *I have seen the face of the Lord as it were iron that is heated in the fire, and when brought out sends forth sparks and burns. 4. Look at the eyes of me³, *a man laden with a sign for you⁴. *I have seen the eyes of the Lord shining like a ray of the sun and striking with terror human eyes. 5. You, my children, see the right hand of a man⁵ *made like yourselves⁵ *assisting you. I have seen the right hand of the Lord assisting me, and filling the heavens. 6. You see the *compass of my actions, like to your own⁶. I have seen the measureless and harmonious⁷ form of the Lord. To Him there is no end. 7. You therefore hear the words of my lips, but I have heard the words of the Lord, like great thunder, with continual agitation of the clouds. 8. And now, *my children⁸, listen to the⁸ discourses *of your earthly father³. It is terrible and awful to stand before the face of an earthly prince—*terrible and very awful³ because the will of the prince is death and the will of the prince is life⁹; how much more is it terrible and awful to stand before the face of the *Lord of lords, and of the earthly¹⁰ and the heavenly hosts. Who can endure this never-ending terror?

¹ 1. Hear, my children, my beloved ones, the admonition of your father: how according to the will of God, I am sent to you now. What exists and what was, and what is happening now, and what will be before the day of judgement, I do not now tell you from my own lips, but from the lips of the Lord; for the Lord sent me to you. 2. And do you therefore hear, A. I was sent of late to tell you from the lips of the Lord what things are, and what shall be before the day of judgement. And now, my children, I do not speak to you from my own lips, but from the lips of the Lord, B. ² B om.; Sok. adds I have heard from the fiery lips of the Lord: for the lips of the Lord are like a fiery furnace, and his angels [winds] are a flame of fire going forth. You, my children, as that of a man made like yourselves, but. ³ B om. ⁴ A man in his marks just like you, Sok.; B om. ⁵ A B om. ⁶ So A Sok., but that for actions Sok. reads body; B om. ⁷ Incomparable, B. B transposes 6^b after 7. ⁸ My, B. ⁹ A om.; B adds or great terrors, and omits the rest of the verse. ¹⁰ Heavenly Ruler, the Lord of the living and the dead, A.

[Enoch instructs faithfully his Children about all Things, from the Mouth of the Lord; how he saw, and heard and wrote them down.]

XL. 1. And now, my children, I know all things¹ from the lips of the Lord; for² my eyes have seen from the beginning to the end³. 2. I know all things and have written all things in the books, both the heavens and the end of them, and their fulness, and all the hosts, and I have measured their goings, and written down the stars and their innumerable quantity.) 3. What man has seen their alternations and their goings? Not even the angels know their number; I have written down the names of all. 4. And I have measured the circle of the sun, and I have measured his rays; *and his coming in and going out, through all the months, and all his courses, and their names I have written down. 5. I have measured the circle of the moon, and its waning which occurs during every day, and the secret places in which it hides every day and ascends according to all the hours. 6. I have laid down the four seasons, and from the seasons I made four circles, and in the circles I placed the years; I placed the months, and from the

XL. ¹ A Sok. add One thing I have learned. Throughout this chapter B is transposed in every way imaginable. B OMITTS VERSES 2-7. ² And another, A Sok. ³ Sok. adds and from the end to the return.

XL. 1. I know all things . . . my eyes have seen, &c. This seems to be the passage to which Clem. Alex. Eclog. Proph. (Dind. iii. 456) refers: ὁ Δανιὴλ λέγει ὁμοδοξῶν τῷ Ἐνώχ τῷ εἰρηκότι 'καὶ εἶδον τὰς ὕλας πάσας': and Origen (de Princ. iv. 35) 'scriptum namque est in eodem libello dicente Enoch universas materias perspexi.' Cf. Sibyll. Or. viii. 375, where, in a passage recalling several phrases of this chapter, ἀρχὴν καὶ τέλος οἶδα, ὃς οὐρανὸν ἐκτίσα καὶ γῆν. 2. Stars and their innumerable quantity.

Cf. Eth. En. xliii. 1, 2; xciii. 14. 3. Not even the Angels, &c. Cf. xxiv. 3. 4. See xiii, xiv (notes). 5. See xvi (notes). Its waning which, &c. There is not a single reference to this phenomenon in the Slav. Enoch, but there is a complete account of its waxing and waning in Eth. En. lxxiv. Secret places in which it hides, &c. Corrupt. 6. I have laid down the four seasons. In xiii. 5 we have a reference to the four seasons, but in Eth. En. lxxxii. 11-20 there is an account which, though months I calculated the days, and from the days¹ I have *calculated² the hours³. 7. Moreover, I have written down all things *moving⁴ upon the earth⁵. *I have written down all things that are nourished⁶, all seed sown and unsown, which grows on the earth, and all things belonging to the garden, and every herb and every flower, and their fragrance and their names. 8. And the dwellings of the clouds, *and their conformations and their wings⁷, how they bring rain and *the rain-drops, I investigated all. 9. And I wrote down the course of the⁷ thunder *and lightning⁷, and they⁸ showed me the keys, *and their guardians⁹ and their path¹⁰ by which they go. They are brought forth in bonds, in measured degree, *and are let go in bonds¹, lest by their *heavy course and vehemence¹¹ they should overload the clouds of wrath and destroy everything on earth. 10. I have written down the treasures of the snow, and the store-houses of the hail, and the cool breezes. *And I observed the holder of the keys of them during the season: and how he fills the clouds with them¹², and yet does not exhaust their treasures. 11. I *wrote down¹³ the abodes of the winds, *and I observed and saw⁷ how those who hold *their keys¹⁴ bear balances and measures, and in the first place they put them on a balance, in the second they¹⁵ let them go in measure *moderately, with care⁷ over the whole earth, so that with their heavy breathing they should now defective, was clearly complete originally. 8. Cf. Eth. En. lx. 19-22 for an account of these phenomena. 9. Course of the thunder, &c.

¹ A om. ² Measured and calculated, Sok. ³ Sok. adds and written them down. ⁴ That were arranged, Sok. ⁵ Sok. adds making inquiries into them. ⁶ Sok. om. ⁷ B om. ⁸ The angels, B. ⁹ Which guarded them, B. ¹⁰ Coming in and going out, Sok. ¹¹ Grievous vehemence, B. Heavy opening (?) and vehemence, Sok. ¹² I saw at that time how the clouds are restrained by them as a key does prisoners, B. I watched their seasons: how those that hold the keys of them fill the clouds with them, Sok. ¹³ Saw, B. ¹⁴ Keys of their prisons, B. ¹⁵ B adds measure and.

This is to be found in Eth. En. lix; lx. 13-15. 10. Cf. vi. 1, 2; Eth. En. lx. 17, 18. 11. See Eth. En. xli. 4.

not shake the whole¹ earth. 12. * For I have measured the whole earth, its mountains and all hills, fields, trees, stones, rivers; all things that exist I have written down, the height from earth to the seventh heaven, and down to the lowest hell¹, * the place of judgement and the mighty hell² laid open, and * full of lamentation. And I saw how¹ the prisoners suffer, awaiting the immeasurable judgement. 13. * And I wrote out all of those who are being judged by the judge, and all the judgement they receive, and all their deeds¹.

¹ B om. ² From thence I was taken to the place of judgement, and I saw hell, B. I append here chapter XL in full, as it appears in B. This chapter in B is manifestly fragmentary and disarranged, and serves to justify the originality of the fuller form as preserved in A Sok. 1. My children, I know all from the lips of the Lord. For mine eyes saw from the beginning to the end, 8. and the dwelling places of the clouds, 9. with those which bring storms and thunder. And the angels showed me the keys which guarded them. 10. I saw the treasure of snow and ice, 9. and the path by which they go: they are brought forth in bonds in measure, and let go in bonds, so that with grievous vehemence they should not oppress the clouds and destroy in the earth, 10. both the air and the cold. I saw at that time how the clouds are restrained by them as a key does prisoners, and they are not allowed to exhaust their treasures. 11. I saw the abodes of the winds, how those who hold the keys of their prisons bear with them the balances and the measures: in the first place they lay on the balances; in the second they measure, and in measure do they let them go over the whole earth: so that by their powerful breath they should not shake the earth. 12. From thence I was taken to the place of judgement and I saw hell open and the prisoners and the eternal judgement.

12. Down to the lowest hell. We come here upon a conception irreconcilable with the general scheme of the author. Hell, according to this scheme, is really located in the third heaven. See x, where the place, its horrors, and the classes it is prepared for, are described at length. But the old Jewish beliefs of an underworld of punishment are too strong to be wholly excluded, and so consistency is here sacrificed to completeness. For an analogous comparison cf. xviii. 7. It is possible, further, that the author may have had some idea of a series of seven hells, as he speaks here of 'the lowest hell,' and as this idea is afterwards found in Rabbinic tradition; see Eisenmenger, ii. 302, 328-330. If, however, we observe how close this hell is to the Garden of Eden, in xlii. 3, we shall be inclined to identify it with the place of punishment described in x. The interpretation, however, of xlii. 3 is difficult. Awaiting the immeasurable judgement. These words, which are found also in vii. 1, in reference to the fallen watchers, would seem to imply an intermediate place of punishment, in fact, Sheol or Hades. 13. This was an ancient belief of the Jews: cf. liii. 2; lxiv. 5; Jubilees iv. 23; x. 17.

[How Enoch wept for the Sins of Adam.]

XLII. 1. And I saw *all our forefathers from the beginning with Adam and Eve¹, and I sighed and wept, *and spake of the ruin (caused by) their wickedness²: *Woe is me for my infirmity and that of my forefathers¹. 2. And *I meditated in my heart and said³: 'Blessed is the man who was not born, or, having been born, has never sinned before the face of the Lord, so that he should not come into this place, to bear the yoke of this place!' ✓

[How Enoch saw those who keep the Keys, and the Guardians of the Gates of Hades standing by.]

XLII. 1. I saw *those who keep the keys, and are the guardians of the gates of hell, standing⁴, like great serpents, XLII. ¹ Bom. ² The destruction of the unholy, B. ³ I said in my heart, B.

XLII. ⁴ The guardians of hell holding the keys, standing opposite to the gates, B. B blends xli and xlii. 1-2 together in this order, xlii. 1; xli; xlii. 2. It will be seen that it omits reference to Adam and Eve.

From being the scribe of God's works, as he is universally in the Eth. and the Slav. Enoch, the transition was easy to the conception of Enoch as a scribe of the deeds of men. Cf. for later tradition Test. Abraham (ed. James), p. 115 καὶ εἶπεν 'Αβραὰμ πρὸς Μιχαήλ· Κύριε, . . . τίς ἐστιν ὁ ἄλλος ὁ ἐλέγχων τὰς ἀμαρτίας; καὶ λέγει Μιχαήλ πρὸς 'Αβραάμ . . . ὁ ἀποδεικνύμενος οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ διδάσκαλος τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τῆς γῆς καὶ γραμματεὺς τῆς δικαιοσύνης 'Ενώχ· ἀπέστειλεν γὰρ κύριος αὐτοὺς ἐνταῦθα, ἵνα ἀπογράψωσιν τὰς ἀμαρτίας καὶ τὰς δικαιοσύνας ἐκάστου.

XLII. 1. It seems to be implied here that the forefathers of Enoch, including Adam and Eve, are in the place of punishment, and that they are to remain there till God comes to judge the world (xlii. 5, note). That Adam and the patriarchs were in Hades was a prevalent early Christian belief. Cf. Descensus ad Inferos, viii-ix. 2. Cf. 4 Ezra iv. 12 'Melius erat nos non adesse quam advenientes . . . pati.' Eth. En. xxxviii. 2; Apoc. Bar. x. 6.

XLII. 1. Who keep the keys. In Sibyll. Or. viii. 121-2 we have a strange application of this idea:

αἰὼν κοινὸς ἅπασιν κλειδοφύλαξ εἰρκτῆς μεγάλης ἐπὶ βῆμα θεοῦ.

Keys. Cf. Rev. ix. 1; xx. 1. Guardians of the gates of hell. According to Emek hammelech, fol. 144, col. 2, each division of hell is under the control of a certain angel (Eisenmenger, ii. 332). The Greek word here may have been τημελοῦχοι. In the singular number it has become a proper name in Apoc. Pauli. Like and their faces were like quenched lamps, and their eyes were fiery¹, and their teeth were sharp². *And they were stripped to the waist³. 2. And I said *before their faces⁴, 'Would that I had not seen you, *nor heard of your doings⁵, *and that those of my race had never come to you⁶! *Now they have only sinned a little in this life, and always suffer in the eternal life⁷.' 3. *I went out to the East, to the paradise of Eden, where rest has been prepared for the just, and it is open to the third heaven, and shut from this world⁸. 4. *And guards are placed at the very great gates of the east of the sun, i. e. fiery angels, singing triumphant songs, that never cease rejoicing in the presence of the just. 5. At the last coming they will lead forth Adam with our forefathers, and conduct them there, that they may rejoice, as a man calls those whom he loves to feast with him; and they having come with joy hold converse, before the dwelling of that man⁷, *with joy awaiting his feast, the enjoyment and the immeasurable wealth, and joy and merriment in the light, and eternal life⁹. 6. *Then quenched lamps. Contrast the faces and eyes of the heavenly angels, i. 5. 2. Cf. xli. 2. 3. The expression 'open to the third heaven' is strange; it would seem to imply that this is not the heavenly Paradise in the third heaven, but the original Garden of Eden. On the other hand, as this Paradise is prepared for the righteous, we are obliged to identify it with the Paradise of this third heaven described in viii-ix. 5. The last coming. See xxxii. 1 (note); lviii. 1. Adam with our forefathers. See

¹ Like a darkened flame, B. ² B Sok. om. ³ A om. ⁴ To the persons (there), B. ⁵ B om. A OMITS VERSES 2-14^a. ⁶ Nor brought my family to you, Sok. ⁷ B om. ⁸ B seems to recall this verse in the words: And I saw there a blessed place and every created thing blessed. B introduces this section with the words: Entry of Enoch unto the Paradise of the Just. ⁹ And all living there in joy and in boundless happiness and eternal life, B.

xli. 1 (note). The idea that the patriarchs were in hell or hades is at variance with what is stated or implied in some parts of the Eth. En. Cf. lx. 8, 23; lxi. 12; lxx. 3, 4, where we find Paradise already peopled with the righteous; but it is not incompatible with lxxxix. 52; xciii. 8, where apparently Enoch and Elijah are its only inhabitants. According to xxii the patriarchs were to remain in hades till the final judgement. This would, in some degree, harmonize with our text. 6-14. Nine

I said¹, 'I tell you, my children: blessed is he who fears
 * the name of the Lord, and serves continually before His face, and brings his gifts with fear continually in this life², * and lives all his life justly, and dies³. 7. Blessed is he who executes a just judgement, * not for the sake of recompense, but for the sake of righteousness, expecting nothing in return: a sincere judgement shall afterwards come to him³. 8. * Blessed is he who clothes the naked with a garment, and gives his bread to the hungry. 9. Blessed is he who gives a just judgement for the orphan and the widow, and assists every one who is wronged⁴.
 10. Blessed is he who turns from the * unstable path of this vain world⁵, and walks by the righteous path * which leads to eternal life³. 11. Blessed is he who sows just seed,

¹ Sok. om. ² And serves the Lord; and do you, my children, learn to bring gifts to the Lord that you may have life, B. ³ B om.

⁴ Blessed is he who has given a just judgement, and assists the orphan and the widow, and every one who is oppressed: clothes the naked, and gives bread to the hungry, B. ⁵ Path of deceit, B.

beatitudes. These are very colourless. 7. Executes a just judgement. Cf. ix; Ezek. xviii. 8. This verse recalls in some measure the words of Antigonus of Socho: 'Be not like servants who serve their master for the sake of reward, but be like those who do service without respect to recompense, and live always in the fear of God.' Expecting nothing in return. Cf. Luke vi.
 35. Sincere. Corrupt. With the entire verse we have a good parallel in Orac. Sibyll. ii. 61, 63 πάντα δίκαια νέμειν, μηδ' εἰς ἄδικον κρίσιν ἐλθῆς.

ἦν σὺν κακῶς δικάσης, σὲ θεὸς μετέ-πειτα δικάσσει.

8. These words are found in ix.
 9. Cf. ix; Ps. x. 18; Is. i. 17; Jer.
 xxii. 3, 16; Zech. vii. 9, 10. 10.

Walks by the righteous path. Cf.
 Prov. iv. 11; Or Sibyll. iii. 9-10

τίπτε . . . οὐκ εὐθείαν ἀταρπὸν βαίνετε ἀθανάτου κτιστοῦ μεμνημένοι αἰεί:

also Fragm. i. 23 sq. 11. Is the blessing for those who sow seed that is justly their own? In Orac. Sibyll.
 ii. 71-72, 'he who steals seed is accursed for ever':

σπέρματα μὴ κλέπτειν* ἐπαράσιμος
 ὅς τις ἔληται
 ἐς γενεὰς γενεῶν, ἐς σκορπισμὸν βιότοιο.

On the other hand, the reference may be metaphorical and the sense as follows: 'From your righteous deeds ye will reap sevenfold.' This is probably an adaptation of Ecclus. vii. 3 μὴ σπεῖρε ἐπ' αὐλάκας ἀδικίας, καὶ οὐ μὴ θερίσης αὐτὰς ἑπταπλασίως. Cf. Job iv. 8;

he shall reap sevenfold. 12. Blessed is he in whom is the truth, that he may speak the truth to *his neighbour¹. 13. Blessed is he *who has love upon his lips, and tenderness in his heart². 14. Blessed is he who understands every work of the Lord, *and glorifies the Lord God³; *for the works of the Lord are just, and of the works of man some are good, and others evil, and by their works those who have wrought them are known⁴.

[Enoch shows his Children how he measured and wrote out the Judgements of God.]

XLIII. 1. *Lo! my children, the things which I have gained on the earth and meditated upon from the Lord God I have written down both winter and summer. I have compiled the account of all, and concerning the years I have calculated each hour; I have measured the hours and written out the lists of them and I have ascertained all their differences⁵. 2. As one year is more honourable than another⁶, so is one man more honourable than another. This ¹ The man who is sincere, Sok. ² Upon whose lips are tenderness and mercy, B. ³ Accomplished by the Lord and glorifies him, Sok. ⁴ B om. A reads And I saw all the works of the Lord how righteous they are, and of the works of men some (are righteous) but others wicked. And the impure are known by their deeds.

XLIII. ⁵ I, my children, have measured and written out every deed and every measure, and every just judgement (weight, Sok.), A Sok. Sok. adds: And have written them out as the Lord ordered me, and in all these I have found diversity. ⁶ B adds and one day more than another and one hour more than another.

Prov. xxii. 8; Hos. x. 13. 12. Cf. Lev. xix. 11; Eph. iv. 25; Orac. Sibyll. ii. 58 ψεύδεα μὴ βάζειν: 64 μαρτυρίην ψευδῇ φεύγειν, τὰ δίκαι' ἀγορεύειν. 13. Cf. Prov. xxxi. 26. 14. By their works . . . are known. Cf. Mt. vii. 16, 20.

XLIII. 2, 3. As one year, &c. We should expect rather as one day, &c. Cf. Eccclus. xxiii. 7 διὰ τί ἡμέρα ἡμέρας ὑπερέχει; The main thought of these verses is derived from Eccclus. x. 20, 22, 24 (cf. Jer. ix. 23, 24): in fact no one is greater than he who fears God is a direct quotation from x. 24. This passage runs: 20 ἐν μέσφ' ἀδελφῶν ὁ ἡγούμενος αὐτῶν ἔντιμος, καὶ οἱ φοβούμενοι κύριον ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ. 22. πλοῖσιος καὶ ἔνδοξος καὶ πτωχός, τὸ καύχημα αὐτῶν φόβος κυρίου. 24. μεγιστὰν καὶ κριτῆς καὶ δυνάστης δοξασθήσεται, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτῶν τις μείζων τοῦ φοβουμένου τὸν κύριον. . . . 30. πτωχός δοξάζεται δι' ἐπιστήμην αὐτοῦ, καὶ πλούσιος δοξάζεται διὰ τὸν πλοῦτον αὐτοῦ. Cf. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 125.

man on account of many possessions, that man on account of the wisdom¹ of the heart; this man on account of understanding, another on account of cunning; this man for the silence of the lips²; * this man on account of purity, that on account of strength; this man on account of comeliness, another on account of youth; this man on account of sharpness of mind, another on account of quicksightedness of body, and another for the perception of many things. 3. Let it be heard everywhere³; there is no one greater than he who fears God. He shall be the most glorious for ever.

[Enoch instructs his Sons that they should not revile the Persons of Men, whether they are great or small.]

XLIV. 1. God⁴ made man with His own hands, in the likeness of His countenance, both small and great the Lord created him. He who reviles the countenance of * man, reviles the countenance of the Lord⁵. 2. * He who shows wrath against another without injury, the great wrath of the Lord shall consume him. 3. If a man spits at the face of another⁶ * insultingly, he shall be consumed⁷ * in the great judgement of the Lord⁸. 4. Blessed is the man who * does not direct his heart with malice against any⁹ man, and who assists the man who is * injured, and¹⁰ under judgement, and raises up the oppressed, * and accomplishes the prayer of him who asks¹¹! 5. For in the day of the great judgement,

¹ Benevolence, B.

² Tongue and lips, B.

³ B om.

XLIV. ⁴ B adds fashioned and. ⁵ The prince, and loathes the countenance of the Lord; despises the countenance of the Lord, A. Man reviles the countenance of the prince and loathes the countenance of the Lord, Sok. ⁶ There is the anger of the Lord, and a great judgement for whoever spits in the face of a man, B. ⁷ His insolence will consume him, Sok.; B om. ⁸ B om. ⁹ Puts confidence in, B. ¹⁰ A, Sok. om. ¹¹ Performs a kindness to him who wants it, Sok.; B om.

XLIV. 1. He who reviles the countenance, &c. We may reasonably compare James iii. 9. 2. Cf.

Matt. v. 22. 4. This beatitude seems out of place here. It would come in fittingly at the close of xlii.

every measure and standard and weight, * which is for traffic, namely, that which is hung on a balance and stands for traffic¹, knows its own measure, and * shall receive its reward by measure².

[God shows that He does not wish Sacrifices from Man, nor Burnt-Offerings, but pure and contrite Hearts.]

XLV. 1. * He who hastens and brings his offering before the face of the Lord, then the Lord will hasten the accomplishment of his work, and will execute a just judgement for him³.
2. He who increases his lamp before the face of the Lord, the Lord increases greatly his treasure * in the heavenly kingdom⁴.
3. God does not require bread, nor a light, * nor an animal, nor any other sacrifice⁵, * for it is as nothing⁶. 4. * But God requires a pure heart⁴, and by means of all this, He tries the heart of man.

¹ Hang as on a balance, that is on the scale and which stands for traffic, Sok. B OMITTS ENTIRE VERSE. ² Its measure shall receive its reward, Sok.

XLV. ³ If a man hastens to work folly before the Lord, the Lord furthers him in the carrying out of his work, and makes his judgement faulty. So A through a corruption of ПРИНОСЪ into ПРАЧНО and insertion of HE before СОВОРИТЬ; B om. ⁴ B om. ⁵ Nor food of any kind nor meat, B. Nor an animal, nor an ox, nor any other victim, Sok. ⁶ That is not so, Sok.; B om.

XLV. 3. Cf. Ps. xl. 6; li. 16; Is. i. 11; Mic. vi. 6-8; Eccl. xxxii. 1-3; Orac. Sibyll. viii. 390, 391 οὐ χρήζω θυσίης ἢ σπονδῆς ὑμετέρηφιν

οὐ κνίσσης μαρῆς, οὐχ αἵματος ἐχθίστοιο:

also ii. 82; Athenag. Supplic. pro Christo, 13. This is not Essenism: see lix. 1-3. We find the same spiritual appreciation of sacrifices in Ecclus. xxxii. 1-5 side by side with injunctions to offer them: ὁ συντηρῶν νόμον πλεονάζει προσφοράς, θυσιά-ζαν σωτηρίου ὁ προσέχων ἐντολαῖς ἀντα-ποδιδούς χάριν προσφέρων σεμίδαλιν, καὶ ὁ ποιῶν ἐλεημοσύναν θυσιάζαν αἰνέσεως καὶ ἐξιλασμοὺς ἀποστῆναι ἀπὸ πονηρίας. 4. A pure heart. Ps.

li. 10. Tries the heart of man.
Deut. viii. 2; 2 Chron. xxxii. 31;
Ps. xxvi. 2.

[How an earthly Prince will not receive Gifts from Man which are contemptible and impure. How much more does God loath impure Gifts, and rejects them with Wrath, and will not receive the Gifts of such a Man.]

XLVI. 1. *Hear, my people, and pay attention to the words of my lips¹. If any one brings gifts to an earthly prince, but having unfaithfulness in his heart: if the prince knows it, will he not be angry with *him on account of that, and he will not take² his gifts, and will hand him over to condemnation? 2. Or if a man flatters another *in his language, but (plans) evil against him in his heart, will not the other understand the craft of his heart, and he himself will be condemned, so that his unrighteousness will be evident to all³? 3. But when God shall send a great light, by means of that there will be judgement⁴ to the just and unjust, and nothing will be concealed.

[Enoch instructs his Sons from the Lips of God, and gives them the Manuscripts of this Book.]

XLVII. 1. Now, my children, put my thoughts in your hearts; pay attention to the words of your father, which *have come to⁵ you from the mouth of the Lord. 2. Take these books of the writings of your father, and read them, *and in them ye shall learn all the works of the Lord. There have been many books from the beginning of creation, and shall be to the end of the world, but none shall make XLVI. ¹ Sok. om. B OMITS ENTIRE CHAPTER. ² Sok. om. ³ With falsehood and is good in his tongue but evil in his heart, will not his heart perceive this and he will judge by himself so that he is proved not to be right, Sok. ⁴ Just judgement that is no respecter of persons, Sok.

XLVII. ⁵ I tell, Sok. B OMITS ENTIRE CHAPTER.

XLVI. 2. Cf. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 120 μηδ' ἕτερον κεύθοις κραδίη νόον ἄλλ' ἀγορεύων. 3. What the great light means is not clear.

XLVII. 1. Cf. xxxix. 2. 2.

None shall make things known things known to you like my writings¹. 3. But if you shall preserve² my writings, you will not sin against God. For there is no other besides the Lord, neither in heaven nor on earth, nor the depths below, nor the solitary foundations. 4. God established the foundations upon things that are unknown, and stretched out the *visible and invisible heavens³, and made firm the earth upon the waters, and established the waters on things that are not fixed⁴. Who has created all the innumerable works of creation? 5. * Who has numbered the dust of the earth⁵, and the sand of the sea, and the drops of rain, and the dew of the morning, *and the breath of the wind⁶? Who has *bound earth and sea with bonds⁷ that cannot be broken up: *and has cut⁸ the stars out of fire, *and beautified⁹ the heavens¹⁰, and placed *the sun¹¹ in the midst of them * so that¹¹.

[Of the course of the Sun throughout the seven Circles.]

XLVIII. 1. The sun¹² goes in the seven circles of the ¹ For the books are many and in them we shall learn all the words of the Lord. Such as they are from the beginning of creation, so shall they be to the end of the world, A. ² Keep strictly, Sok. ³ Heavens over the visible things, Sok. ⁴ A reads And He considered what is the water and the foundation of things that are not stedfast and, and transposes these words to end of verse. ⁵ Sok. om. ⁶ Has filled earth and sea and the winter, A. ⁷ Emended from And I cut, A; and (who) sowed, Sok. ⁸ And I beautified, A. ⁹ Sok. adds and placed. ¹⁰ A om. XLVIII. ¹² He, Sok.

to you like my writings. Cf. Eth. En. xciii. 10. 3. But... not sin against God. Cf. xxxiii. 9; xlviii. 7-9. This claim is analogous to that made in the Eth. En. xxxvii. 4; xcii. 1; xciii. 10; c. 6; civ. 12, 13. With this we may contrast Ecclus. xviii. 3 οὐθενὶ ἐξεποίησεν ἐξαγγεῖλαι τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. There is no other besides the Lord. Cf. Is. xlv. 5, 14, 18, 22. This is a favourite sentiment in the Sibylline Oracles. Cf. iii. 69 αὐτὸς γὰρ μόνος ἐστὶ θεὸς οὐκ ἔστιν ἕτ' ἄλλος:

also iii. 760; viii. 377; Fragm. i. 7, 15; iii. 3; v. 1. 4. Stretched out, &c. Ps. civ. 2; Is. xl. 22; xlii.

5. Made firm the earth upon the waters, 2 Pet. iii. 5. 5. Who has numbered... the sand of the sea, and the drops of rain. This is drawn word for word from Ecclus. i. 2 ἄμμον θαλασσῶν καὶ σταγόνas ὑετοῦ . . . τίς ἐξαριθμήσει; Cf. Is. xl. 12, and the oracle in Herod. i. 47 οἶδα δ' ἐγὼ ψάμμου τ' ἀριθμὸν καὶ μέτρα θαλάσσης, and likewise recalls LXX Job xxxvi. 27 ἀριθμηταὶ δὲ αὐτῷ σταγόνες ὑετοῦ. Beautified the heavens. Cf. Ecclus. xvi. 27 ἐκόσμησεν εἰς αἰῶνα τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ.

XLVIII. 1. The text is corrupt heavens, *and I gave him¹ 182 thrones when he goes on a short day, and also 182 thrones when he goes on a long day. 2. And he has two great thrones on which he rests, returning hither and thither above the monthly thrones. From the month Tsivan² after³ seventeen days he descends to the month Thevan⁴, and from the seventeenth day of Thevad⁴ he ascends. 3. And so the sun goes through all the courses of the heaven⁵; when he goes near the earth, then the earth rejoices and produces its fruit; when he departs, then the earth is sad, and the trees and all the fruits have no development. 4. *All this by measure and minute arrangement of time He has arranged by His wisdom⁵, both in the case of things visible and invisible. 5. He has made all things visible out of invisible, Himself being invisible. 6. Thus I tell you, my children, distribute the books to your children, in all your families, and among the nations. 7. Those who are wise let them fear God, and let them receive them *and let them love them more than

¹ Which are the support of the, A. B OMITS ENTIRE CHAPTER.

² Pamorus, Sok. ³ A om. ⁴ Thibith, Sok. ⁵ Hereby he gives a complete measure and with good arrangement of the times and has fixed a measure, A.

and unintelligible. According to xi. 1; xxx. 3 the sun is in the fourth circle of the heavens and does not revolve through the seven circles. Again the twice-mentioned 182 thrones are really when added the 364 world-stations of which we have some account in the Eth. En. lxxv. 2, i.e. 'the harmony of the course of the world is brought about through its separate 364 world-stations.' These world-stations or thrones as in our text are the 364 different positions occupied by the sun on the 364 days of the year. Just as in the Eth. En. lxxii-lxxxii and Jubilees iv no attempt is made here to get the complete number of days in the solar year, i.e. 365 $\frac{1}{4}$: contrast xiv. 1. This passage therefore either belongs to or is built upon the oldest literature of Enoch. This reckoning of the year at 364 days may be due partly to opposition to heathen systems and partly to the fact that 364 is divisible by 7, and amounts to 52 weeks exactly. See Eth. En. 190-91. 2. Tsivan . . . Thevad. The text is here corrupt. As apparently the two solstices are meant, we should read either Sivan . . . Kislev or Tamuz . . . Tebet. 5. Cf. xxiv. 2 (note); xlvii. 2 (note). Has made here was no doubt ἐπλασε, not ἐποίησε. 6. See xxxiii. 9 (note). 7. Let them love them more than any kind of food.

any kind of food¹, and read them². 8. * But those who are senseless and have no thought of the Lord and do not fear God³ will not receive them but turn away, and * keep themselves from them⁴, * the terrible judgement shall await them⁵. 9. Blessed is the man who bears their yoke, and puts it on, for he shall be set free in the day of the great judgement.

[Enoch instructs his Sons not to swear either by the Heaven or the Earth; and shows the Promise of God to a Man even in the Womb of his Mother.]

XLIX. 1. For⁵ I swear to you my children⁶, but I will not swear by a single oath, neither by heaven, nor by earth, nor by any other creature which God made. God⁷ said: 'There

¹ And the books will be more profitable to them than all good food on earth, Sok. A adds or earthly advantage. ² Sok. adds And let them cling to them. ³ And it shall result to them if they have no thought of God nor fear him, and if they, A. ⁴ Do not receive the books, A. ⁵ Sok. om.

XLIX. ⁶ B om. rest of verse.

⁷ For the Lord, Sok.

So Eth. En. lxxxii. 3 'this wisdom will please those that eat (thereof) better than good food.' Cf. xlvii. 2 (note). 8. Those who . . . will not receive them . . . the terrible judgement shall await them. The punishment denounced against those who refuse the disclosures of this book is more severe than anything to be found in the Eth. En. For a perfect parallel we must go to Rev. xxii. 18, 19. 9. The appeal for reception is far wider in this book than in the Eth. En. There only 'the elect of righteousness,' 'the righteous and the wise,' 'those who understand,' receive the revelations of Enoch: cf. lxxxii. 3; xciii. 10; civ. 12. Bears their yoke, cf. xxxiv. 1.

XLIX. 1. Swear . . . neither by heaven, &c. From this passage and from Philo it is clear that Mt. v. 34-35 was a Jewish commonplace. For in Philo de Special. Leg. ii. 1 we find: ὁ γὰρ τοῦ σπουδαίου, φησί, λόγος ὅρκος ἔστω βέβαιος, ἀκλινής, ἀψευδέστατος, ἐρηρυσμένος ἀληθείᾳ . . . εἰώθασι γὰρ ἀναφθεγξάμενοι τοσοῦτον μόνον 'νὴ τόν,' ἢ 'μὰ τόν,' μηδὲν παραλαβύντες, ἐμφάσει τῆς ἀποκοπῆς, τρανοῦν ὅρκον οὐ γενόμενον. Ἀλλὰ καὶ παραλαβέτω τις, εἰ βούλοιο, μὴ μὴν τὸ ἀνωτάτω καὶ πρεσβύτατον εὐθὺς αἴτιον, ἀλλὰ γῆν, ἥλιον, ἀστέρας, οὐρανόν, τὸν σύμπαντα κόσμον: De decem Orac. 17 Κάλλιστον δὴ καὶ βιωφελέστατον καὶ ἀρμόττον λογικῇ φύσει τὸ ἀνώμοτον, οὕτως ἀληθεύειν ἐφ' ἐκάστου δεδιδραγμένη, ὥς τοὺς λόγους ὅρκους εἶναι νομίζεσθαι. Cp. also Leg. All. iii. 72; De Sac. Abelis et Caini, 28; De Plant. Noe 19; Quod Omnis Probus Liber, 12. It was Mr. Conybeare is no swearing in me, nor injustice, but truth. If there is no truth in men, let them swear by a word, yea, yea, or nay, nay. 2. * But I swear to you, yea, yea¹, that * there has not been even a man in his mother's womb, for whom a place has not been prepared for every soul²; * and a measure is fixed how long a man shall be tried in this world³. * O! my children, be not deceived¹ * there is a place prepared there for every soul of man⁴.

[How Nobody born upon the Earth can hide himself, nor are his Deeds concealed. (God) commands that he should be on the Earth a short time, endure Temptation, and Annoyance, and not injure the Widow and Orphan.]

L. 1. I have laid down in the writings the actions of every man, * and no one born on the earth can hide himself, nor can his deeds be concealed; I see all⁵. 2. Now, therefore, my children, in patience and meekness accomplish the number of your days, and ye shall inherit the endless life which is to come. 3. * Every wound, and every affliction, and every ¹ B om. ² So A Sok. but that for every A reads the rest of that. B reads Even before man was created a place of judgement was prepared for him. ³ And a measure and a standard how long a man shall live in this world, and shall be tried in it, Sok.; And it was measured out and fixed, and there man will be tried, B. ⁴ So A Sok. but that Sok. adds previously after place. B reads As before it was appointed for him.

L. ⁵ B om.; Sok. adds as in a looking-glass.

that first called my attention to these passages in Philo. On the various forms of swearing usual among the Jews and censured in Mt. v. 33-36 and indirectly in the text, see Lightfoot in loc.; Eisenmenger, ii. 490 sqq.

XLIX. 2. A place . . . prepared for every soul. So Tractat Chagiga, fol. 15, col. 1; Torath Adam, fol. 101, col. 3; Avodath hakkodesh, fol. 19, col. 1, where it is said that a place is prepared for every man either in Paradise or Hell (Eisenmenger, ii. 315).

L. 1. Nor can his deeds be concealed. Eth. En. ix. 5. 2. In patience, &c. Cp. Luke xxi. 19 'In your patience ye shall win your souls.' A blessed immortality for the righteous is taught in this book, but apparently no resurrection of the body. 3. Cp. Eccus. ii. 4; 2 Tim. iv. 5; Heb. x. 32; 1 Pet. ii. 19; evil word, and attack¹ endure for the sake of the Lord.

4. And when you might have vengeance² do not repay, either *your neighbour or your enemy³. For God⁴ will repay as your avenger in the *day of the great judgement⁵. *Let it not be for you to take vengeance⁶. 5. Whoever of you shall spend gold or silver for the sake of a brother, shall receive abundant treasure in *the day of judgement⁷ *and stretch out your hands to⁸ the orphan, the widow, and the stranger⁹.

[Enoch instructs his Sons, not to hide their Treasures upon Earth, but bids them give Alms to the Needy.]

LI. 1. *Stretch out your hands to the poor man¹⁰ according to your powers. 2. *Do not hide your silver in the earth¹¹:

¹ Whatever wound or disease or affliction or evil end shall light upon you, B. Put away from you every wound and every injury and every evil word. If an attack and an injury be inflicted upon you for the sake of the Lord, Sok. ² Sok. adds an hundredfold. ³ Your neighbour, B; one who is near you or afar off, Sok. ⁴ Living God, B; Lord, Sok. ⁵ Great day of, A. ⁶ Therefore be not avenged here from men but then from the Lord, Sok. B om. ⁷ That world, A Sok. ⁸ Do not oppress, A. ⁹ B om.; A adds lest the wrath of God should come upon you.

LI. ¹⁰ And assist the poor man, B; Sok. om. ¹¹ Sok. reads in your treasures after come upon you, B om.

Jam. i. 12. See li. 3. 4. Cp. Ecclus. xxviii. 1 ὁ ἐκδικῶν παρὰ Κυρίου εὐρήσει ἐκδίκησιν, καὶ τὰς ἀμαρτίας αὐτοῦ διαστηριῶν διαστηρίσει. 2. ἄφες ἀδίκημα τῷ πλησίον σου, καὶ τότε δεηθέντος σου αἱ ἀμαρτίαι σου λυθήσονται. See also verses 3-6. God will repay . . . in the day of the great judgement. These words follow the LXX of Deut. xxxii. 35 ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐκδικήσεως ἀνταποδώσω. The LXX thus read לְיוֹם נָקָם אֱשֶׁלֶם instead of the Mass. לִי נָקָם וְשָׁלַם. The Samaritan likewise reads לְיוֹם. Cp. also Prov. xx. 22; xxiv. 29. In Rom. xii. 19; Heb. x. 30, the writers follow a text of Deut. xxxii. 35 agreeing partly with the Mass. and partly with that implied by the LXX. 5. Whoever, &c. Cp. Prov. xix. 17: Ecclus. xxix. 10. See LI. 2 (note). Stretch out your hands to the orphan, &c. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 75 ὀρφανικοῖς χήραις τ' ἐπιδευομένοις τε παράσχου. Cf. ix.

LI. 1. Stretch out your hands to the poor, &c. This is drawn from Ecclus. vii. 32 πτωχῷ ἔκτεινον τὴν χεῖρά σου, which in turn seems drawn from Prov. xxxi. 20. Cf. Job vii. 9: Orac. Sibyll. ii. 88. According to your powers. Cf. Ecclus. xiv. 13; xxix. 20. 2. Do not hide your silver in the earth. Cf. Ecclus. xxix. 10 ἀπόλεσον ἀργύριον δι' ἀδελφὸν καὶ φίλον καὶ μὴ ἰωθήτω ὑπὸ *assist the honest man in his affliction, and affliction shall not come upon you, in the time of your labour. 3. And whatever violent and grievous yoke shall be put upon you, endure all for the Lord's sake¹, and so you will receive your reward in the day of judgement. 4. Morning, afternoon, and evening, it is good to go into the house of the Lord to glorify *the Creator of all². 5. Wherefore³ let every thing that hath breath glorify Him, and let every creature visible and invisible give forth praise.)

[God instructs His faithful Servants how they are to praise His Name.]

LII. 1. Blessed is the man who opens *his lips to praise the God of Sabaoth, and praises the Lord with his heart⁴. 2. Cursed is every man who opens his *lips to abuse and to calumniate his neighbour⁵. 3. Blessed⁶ is he who opens his lips to the blessing and praise of God! 4. Cursed is he who opens his lips to swearing and blasphemy before the face of the Lord all his days. 5. Blessed is he who

¹ B om. ² Your Creator, A. ³ For, Sok.; Sok. also puts the verbs in the indicative; B OMITTS VERSE.

LII. ⁴ Heart and lips to the praise of the Lord, B. ⁵ Heart to abuse, abusing the poor and calumniating his neighbour, Sok.; B supports text but that it omits and to calumniate. After neighbour A adds for him shall God rebuke. ⁶ B OMITTS VERSES 3, 4.

τὸν λίθον. Assist... in his affliction. Cf. Eccus. iv. 4 ικέτην θλιβόμενον μὴ ἀπαναίνου. 3. Eccus. ii. 4 πάν ὁ ἐὰν ἐπαχθῇ σοι . . . μακροθύμησον. Cf. 1 Pet. ii. 19; iii. 14. Cf. L. 3. 4. Ps. lv. 17: Cf. Dan. vi. 10. These three Jewish hours of prayer—the third (that of morning sacrifice), the sixth (noon), the ninth (that of evening sacrifice)—are observed in Acts ii. 15; iii. 1; x. 9. See Lightfoot in loc. for his Talmudic references. House of the Lord. This means the temple; for though the author is a Jew living in Egypt, he is writing for Judaism as a whole, and is giving herein the ideal conduct of an inhabitant of Jerusalem. In LIX. 2, 3, he prescribes the right method of sacrifice, and sacrifices could only be offered in Jerusalem. 5. Every thing that, &c. Ps. cl. 6.

LII. With these beatitudes compare xlii. 6-14. Like the latter these are wanting in vigour. They seem to be in the main derived from Ecclesiasticus. 2. Cf. Wisdom i. 11 ἀπὸ καταλαλιᾶς φείσασθε γλώσσης. 4 Swearing and blasphemy. Cf. Eccus. xxiii. 9-12. 5. Cf. Eccus.

blesses all the works of the Lord. 6. Cursed is he who speaks ill of¹ the works of the Lord. 7. Blessed is he who *looks to raise his own hand for labour². 8. Cursed is he who looks to³ make use of another man's labour. 9. Blessed is he who preserves the foundations of his fathers *from the beginning⁴. 10. Cursed is he who breaks the enactments⁵ of his fathers. 11. Blessed is he who *establishes peace and love⁶. 12. Cursed is he who troubles those who *are at peace⁷. 13. Blessed is he who *does not speak peace with his tongue, but in his heart there is peace to all⁸! 14. Cursed is he who speaks peace with his tongue, but in his heart there is no peace⁹. 15. For all these things in measures and in books will be revealed in the day of the great judgement¹⁰.

[Let us not say that our Father is with God, and will plead for us at the Day of Judgement. For I know that a Father cannot help his Son, nor a Son a Father.]

LIII. 1. And now, my children, do not say; Our father

¹ Sok. adds all. ² Looks to the work of his own hands, B. Looks to raise up the fallen, A. ³ A adds and is eager to. ⁴ B om. ⁵ B adds and ordinances. ⁶ Goes to seek peace and leads others to peace, B. ⁷ Love their neighbours, A. ⁸ Speaks peace, for peace abides with him, B. Speaks with a humble tongue and heart to all, A. ⁹ A adds a sword. B OMITTS ENTIRE VERSE. ¹⁰ B adds Therefore, my brethren, preserve your hearts from everything unjust that you may inherit an habitation of light for ever.

xxxix. 14 εὐλογήσατε κύριον ἐπὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτοῦ. 7. Cf. Eph. iv. 28. 8. Seems to be derived from Eccus. xxxi. 26 φονεύων τὸν πλησίον ὁ ἀφαιρούμενος συμβίωσιν, καὶ ἐκχέων αἷμα ὁ ἀποστερῶν μίσθον μισθίου. Cf. Orac. Sibyll. ii. 56-57 :

μὴ πλουτεῖν ἀδίκως, ἀλλ' ἐξ ὁσίων βιοτεύειν.

ἀρκεῖσθαι παροῦσι καὶ ἀλλοτρίων ἀπέχεσθαι.

10. Cf. Eth. En. xcix. 2, 14; Eccus. xvii. 11. 11. Cf. Mt. v. 9. 12. This is derived from Eccus. xxviii. 9 ἀνὴρ ἁμαρτωλὸς ταραξεί φίλους καὶ ἀνὰ μέσον εἰρηγενόντων ἐκβάλλει διαβολήν. Cf. also Eccus. xxviii. 13. 14. Cf. Ps. xxviii. 3; lv. 21; lxii. 4; Orac. Sibyll. ii. 120, 122.

LIII. 1. This idea that departed saints interceded on behalf of the living has been attributed by some scholars to Is. lxiii. 16 (see Ewald, History of Israel, i. 296; Cheyne, Prophecies of Isaiah, ii. 107-108; 299-300). If, however, the doctrine of a blessed immortality or of the resurrection was a late development stands before God, and prays *for us (to be released) from sin¹; *for there is no person there to help any man who has sinned². 2. You see how I have written down all the works of every man *before his creation², *which is³ *done in the case of all men for ever². 3. And no man *can say or unsay⁴ what I have written with my hand. For God sees all things, *even the thoughts of wicked men⁵, *which lie in the storeplaces of the heart². 4. And now, LIII. ¹ Concerning our sins, A. what things are, Sok.; B om.

² B om.

³ And I shall write

⁴ Destroy, B; contradict, Sok.

⁵ The thoughts of man that they are vain, A; B om.

among the Jews, this idea must necessarily have been later still, and accordingly unless we are prepared to bring down considerably the date of Is. lxiii, we shall have some difficulty in justifying such an interpretation. It seems indeed that this idea among the Jews was comparatively late in origin. The first indubitable evidence in its favour is to be found in the Eth. En. xxii. 12; xcvii. 3, 5; xcix. 16; and thus we find that it was an accepted Pharisaic belief early in the second century B.C. The next mention of this belief is to be met with in 2 Macc. xv. 14 where Jeremiah, who appears in a vision to Judas Maccabaeus, is described as follows: ὁ φιλάδελφος οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πολλὰ προσευχόμενος περὶ τοῦ λαοῦ καὶ τῆς ἁγίας πόλεως Ἰερεμίας ὁ τοῦ θεοῦ προφήτης. This was also the teaching of Philo, de Exsecrat. 9: τρισὶ χρησόμενοι παρακλήτοις τῶν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα καταλλαγῶν . . . δευτέρῳ δὲ τῇ τῶν ἀρχηγῶν τοῦ ἔθνους οὐσίῳ, ὅτι ταῖς ἀφειμέναις σωματικαῖς ψυχαῖς ἀπλαστον καὶ γυμνὴν ἐπιδεικνυμέναις πρὸς τὸν ἄρχοντα θεραπείαν τὰς ὑπὲρ νῶν καὶ θυγατέρων ἱκετείας οὐκ ἀτελεῖς εἰώθασιν ποιεῖσθαι, γέρας αὐτοῖς παρέχοντος τοῦ πατρὸς τὸ ἐπήκοον ἐν εὐχαῖς. The same view was obviously held by Joseph. Antt. i. 13. 3, where he describes Abraham as saying to Isaac when on the point of sacrificing him: μετ' εὐχῶν δὲ καὶ ἱερουργίας ἐκείνου τὴν ψυχὴν τὴν σὴν προσδεξιόμενον καὶ παρ' αὐτῷ καθέξοντος ἔσθ' μοι εἰς κηδεμόνα καὶ γηροκόμον. And also in Orac. Sibyll. ii. 330-333:

τοῖς καὶ ὁ παντοκράτωρ θεὸς ἄφθιτος ἄλλο παρέξει εὐσεβέεσσ', ὅπότ' ἂν θεὸν ἄφθιτον αἰτήσωνται ἐκ μαλεροῖο πυρός τε καὶ ἀκαμάτων ἀπὸ βρυγμῶν ἀνθρώπους σῶσαι δώσει· καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσει.

Finally this doctrine is recognized and apparently accepted in certain parts of the N. T.: Matt. xxvii. 47, 49; Luke xvi. 24-31; John viii. 56 (?); Heb. xii. 1?; Rev. vi. 9-11. For the prevalence of this belief in later Judaism, see Eisenmenger, ii. 357-9; 361. The idea of intercession may be derived from ancestor-worship, and not from the doctrine of a future life as I have implied above; cf. Cheyne's Introd. to the Book of Isaiah, 352, 3. 2. Enoch is the universal scribe. 3. Cf. Ps. xciv. 11; Eccles. xvii. 15. 20.

my children, pay attention to all the words * of your father which I say to you¹: *that ye may not grieve afterwards and say: Our father for some cause or other, never told them to us, in the time of this folly².

[Enoch admonishes his Sons that they should give the Books to Others.]

LIV. * Let these books which I have given you be the inheritance of your peace³: *do not conceal them⁴ but tell⁵ them to all desiring them *and admonish them⁶ that *they may know the works of the Lord which are very wonderful⁷.

[Here Enoch makes a Declaration to his Sons: and speaks to them with Tears: 'My children, my Hour draws near, that I should go to Heaven. Lo! Angels stand before me!']

LV. 1. My children, the appointed day and time⁸ have drawn near *and constrain me to depart⁹. The angels *will come and¹⁰ stand before me *on the earth awaiting what has been ordered them¹¹. 2. In the morning I shall go to the highest¹² heavens¹³ to my eternal habitation. 3. Therefore I tell you to do all that is good before the face of the Lord.

[Methosalem asks a Blessing of his Father; that he may give him Bread to eat.]

LVI. 1. Methosalem having answered his father Enoch said¹⁴: 'If it is good in thine eyes, my father¹⁵, let me

¹ Of the lips of your father, B. ² B om.

LIV. ³ That you may have an inheritance of peace and the books which I have given you from God, B. ⁴ A om. ⁵ Give, A. ⁶ Sok. om. ⁷ Words cannot make known the works of God, B.

LV. ⁸ B adds appointed by God. ⁹ A reads after stand before me. ¹⁰ Who wish to go with me, A Sok. ¹¹ So A Sok. but that before on the earth, A adds they now stand; B om. ¹² Upper, B; A om. ¹³ A adds to the highest Jerusalem.

LVI. ¹⁴ B om. ¹⁵ Enoch, Sok.

LIV. See xxxiii. 9 (note). Works LV. 1. See xxxvi. 2. Highest . . . wonderful. Job xxxvii. 14, 16; heavens. Cf. lxxvii. 2. Ps. lxxi. 17, &c.

put food¹ before thy face and then, having blessed our houses and thy sons, *and all thy family², let thy people be glorified by thee; and then afterwards thou wilt depart, *as God hath said³.' 2. Enoch answered his son *Methosalem and said⁴: 'Hear, my child, since God has anointed me with the oil of his glory, there has been no² food in me, *and my soul remembers nothing of earthly pleasure⁵ nor do I desire *anything earthly⁶.

[Enoch orders his Son Methosalem to call all his Brothers.]

LVII. 1. But⁷ call all⁸ thy brothers, and all your⁹ families, and the elders of the people, that I may speak to them and depart *as is appointed for me⁸. 2. And Methosalem hastened, and called his brethren. Regim, Riman¹⁰, Ukhan¹¹, Khermion. [Gaidal⁸], and¹² the elders of¹³ the people, *and brought them all¹⁴ before the face of his father Enoch¹⁵. And having blessed them, he spake to them¹⁶.

[The Instruction of Enoch to his Sons.]

LVIII. 1. 'Listen to me, my sons. *In those days when the Lord came upon the earth for the sake of Adam, and visited¹⁷ all his creation, which He Himself had made¹⁸. 2. The¹⁹ Lord²⁰ called all the cattle of the earth²¹, and all ¹ Let me do, A: let us put food, Sok. ² A om. ³ As God wishes, Sok.; B om. ⁴ And said, Sok.; B om. ⁵ B om. ⁶ Earthly food, B.

LVII. ⁷ My son Methosalem, A. ⁸ B om. ⁹ Our, B. ¹⁰ Rim, B. ¹¹ Azukhan, B. ¹² A adds all. ¹³ Sok. adds all. ¹⁴ And called them, Sok.; A om. ¹⁵ Sok. adds and they bowed before his face, and Enoch saw them. ¹⁶ Sok. adds saying.

LVIII. ¹⁷ So A and Sok., but that Sok. adds your father after Adam; B reads in the days of our father Adam the Lord came to visit him and. ¹⁸ A adds and after all these created Adam: Sok. adds in brackets in the previous thousand years and after all these created Adam. ¹⁹ And the, A B Sok. ²⁰ Lord God, B. ²¹ B adds and all the wild beasts and all the fourfooted things.

LCI. 2. Cf. xxii. 7, 8.

Khermion are not mentioned in i. 10.

LVII. 1. Cf. xxxvi. 1; Eth. En. xci. 1. 2. Riman, Ukhan, and

On Gaidal, see i. 10 (note).

LVIII. 1. When the Lord came creeping things, and all the fowls that fly *in the air¹, and brought them all¹ before the face of our father Adam², and he gave names to all living things on the earth. 3. And the Lord made him lord over all, and put all things under his hands³, and *subdued (them) to submission and to all obedience⁴ *to man⁵. So the Lord created⁶ man as master over all His possessions. 4. The Lord will not judge any soul of beast on account of man, *but he will judge the soul of man on account of the souls of beasts in the world to come⁷. 5. *For as there is a special place for mankind for all the souls of men according to their number, so there is also of beasts. And not one upon the earth . . . and visited. See xxxii. 1 (note). 5. Special place . . . for all the souls of men. See xlix. 2 (note). So also of beasts. As the Jews believed at the beginning of the Christian era that all animals had spoken one language before the fall, and therefore in some degree possessed rationality (Jubilees iii. 28; Joseph. Antt. i. 1.4), it was only natural that they should proceed to infer a future existence of the animal world. The O. T. indeed does not show a single trace of this belief, though it always displays a most tender solicitude for their well-being; nor do we find it in any pre-Christian Jewish writing, with the exception of the present text. Even here the future life is of a limited nature. It is ethically motivated. This further term of existence is not conceded for the brute's own sake, but wholly with a view to the punishment of man. The brute creation is to live just long enough to bring an indictment for ill-treatment against man at the final judgement. Though this idea of any future life in connexion with the brute creation may move the wonder of the modern mind, it is justified by perfectly analogous ideas in the ancient world. Not to speak of the doctrine of metempsychosis in Greece and the deification of animals in Egypt, such conceptions as those in the text would not unnaturally flow from the powers and qualities frequently assigned to animals by Greek thinkers. Thus, according to Plut. Plac. v. 20, 4, the souls of brutes were rational though soul shall perish which God has made till the great judgement. 6. And every soul of beast shall bring a charge against man if he feeds them badly¹.

¹ B om. ² Sok. adds that he should give names to all fourfooted things. ³ Made subject to Adam all the newly created things, B. ⁴ Secondly he placed all things under the rule of and made them obedient, B. Made them dumb and made them deaf to obey, A. ⁵ As unto every man, Sok. ⁶ A adds every. ⁷ But the soul of man shall judge the animals in this world, A; B gives the sense of the verse; but there shall not be a judgement of every living soul but only of that of man, and (?) in the great life to come.

¹ I have followed Sok. in verses 5, 6. B partly preserves the sense there is one place and one fold for the souls of beasts. For every living soul which God has made was not reserved for the great judgement. And every soul of beasts, &c., as in text. A is transposed and corrupt; There is a special place for mankind; as there is every soul of man according to his number, so the beast also shall not perish. And every soul of beast which God has made shall bring a charge against man at (or until) the great judgement if, &c., as in text.

incapable of acting rationally on account of their bodies; according to Xenocrates they possessed a consciousness of God, καθόλου γοῦν τὴν περὶ τοῦ θείου ἔννοιαν Ξενοκράτης . . . οὐκ ἀπελπίζει καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀλόγοις ζώοις (Clem. Strom. v. 590). Chrysippus ascribed reason to brutes (Chalkid in Tim. p. 148 b); while Sextus Medicus (ix. 127) maintained that the souls of brutes and of men were alike. Hence it was generally believed that the souls of men could pass into brutes, πρῶτον μὲν ἀθάνατον εἶναί φησι τὴν ψυχὴν, εἶτα μεταβάλλουσιν εἰς ἄλλα γένη ζώων (Porph. V. P. 19): while Plato indeed went further and derived the souls of all brutes ultimately from those of men, through a process of deterioration, ὥς γάρ ποτε ἐξ ἀνδρῶν γυναικες καὶ τᾶλλα θηρία γενήσονται, ἠπίσταντο οἱ ξυνιστάντες ἡμᾶς (Tim. 76 D). With regard to individual animals, some thinkers believed that bees contained a divine element (Virg. Georg. iv. 219-221), while Democritus and Pliny placed religion among the moral virtues of elephants (H. N. viii. 1). But the closest parallels are to be found in Zoroastrianism, to which indeed we should probably trace in some measure the ideas of the text. Thus in the Zend-Avesta Vendidad Fargard 13 (Darmesteter) we find an entire chapter dealing with the sacredness of the life of the domesticated dog and the crime of attempting its life—its murderer was to lose his soul to the ninth generation (1-4): with the food that was to be given to it and the penalties entailed by feeding it badly (20-28), which were to range from fifty to two hundred blows with the horse-goad. Nay more, the land, its pastures and crops were to suffer for the unatoned death of the dog, and these plagues were not to be removed till the man who had slain it was slain in turn or had offered sacrifices three days and three nights to the pious soul of the departed dog (54, 55). Finally, the soul of the dog went after death to the source of the waters (51). In the Midrash Koheleth, fol. 329, col. 1, we find the following quaint and slightly analogous thought: ‘Rabbi Chama, the son of Gorion, said that wolves and unfruitful trees must give account: just as man must give account, so also must unfruitful trees.’ Eisenmenger, i. 468. It is noteworthy that the ideas of the text have passed over into the creed of the Mohammedans. Thus, according to Sale’s note on the sixth chapter of the Koran, irrational animals will be

[Enoch teaches all his Sons why they must not touch the Flesh of Cattle, because of what comes from it.]

LIX. 1. He, who acts lawlessly with regard to the souls of beasts, acts lawlessly with regard to his own soul. 2. For a man offers clean animals *and makes his sacrifice that he may preserve his soul¹. And if he offer as a sacrifice from clean *beasts and² birds³, he preserves his soul. 3. Everything that⁴ is given you for food, bind by the four feet: that is an atonement: he acts righteously (therein) and preserves his soul. 4. But he who kills a beast without a wound kills his own soul and sins against his

LIX. ¹ And then he preserves his soul, B. ² B om. ³ A adds it is a salvation for man. ⁴ A om.; B OMITTS VERSES 3, 4, 5.

restored to life at the resurrection that they may be brought to judgement and have vengeance taken on them for the injuries they had inflicted on each other in this life. Then after they have duly retaliated their several wrongs, God will turn them again to dust (Sale's Koran, Prelim. Discourse, Sect. iv), with the exception of Ezra's ass and the dog of the seven sleepers which will enjoy eternal life in Paradise (Koran iii; xviii). Are we to interpret in this manner Orac. Sibyll. viii. 415-418?—

καὶ ὕστερον ἐς κρίσιν ἤξω κρίνων εὐσεβέων καὶ δυσσεβέων βίον ἀνδρῶν·

καὶ κρινὸν κρινῶ καὶ ποιμένι ποιμένα θήσω καὶ μύσχον μύσχῳ πέλας ἀλλήλων ἐς ἐλεγχον.

Even in Christian times animals were credited with intelligence, conscience, responsibility, as well as with the passions, vices and virtues of mankind (see Bestie delinquenti, D'Addosio, 1892, from which the following facts are taken). They were accordingly solemnly tried, and advocates were assigned at the public expense to them to plead their cause. Thus moles (824 A. D.), a sow (1324), a cock (1474), snails (1487) were duly tried and condemned. They were also occasionally subjected to torture, and their cries were regarded as a confession of guilt (l. c. p. 46). Even as late as 1531 a book was written by Chassauée to discuss the lawfulness of trying animals judicially, and the legitimate methods of procedure (l. c. p. 75).

LIX. 1. He who acts lawlessly, &c. At first sight this would seem to refer to the sin of bestiality, and such was the view of the scribe of A: see title, but the context is against this, as verses 2-4 clearly show. Hence some illegitimate method of sacrificing or slaughtering animals seems to be referred to here. 2, 3. These verses point to a date prior to the destruction of the temple, 70 A.D. 4. Against own flesh. 5. And if any one does an injury to an animal secretly, it is an evil custom and he sins against his soul.

[*How we ought not to kill a Man, neither with Weapon nor with Tongue*¹.]

LX. 1. If he does an injury to the soul of man, he does an injury to his own soul; and there is no salvation for his flesh, *nor forgiveness² for ever³. 2. He who kills the soul of a man, kills his own soul, and destroys his own body, and there is no salvation for him for ever. 3. He who prepares a net for another man *will fall into it himself and there is no salvation for him for ever⁴. 4. He, who prepares a weapon against a man, shall not escape punishment in the great judgement for ever. 5. If a man acts crookedly or speaks evil against any soul, he shall have no righteousness for himself for ever.

[Enoch admonishes his Sons to preserve themselves from Unrighteousness, and to stretch out their hands frequently to the Poor, and to give them something from their Labours.]

LXI. 1. Now therefore, my children, preserve your hearts from every unrighteousness which the Lord hates. As a man asks his soul from God, so let him do to every living soul⁵. 2. *For in the world to come², *I know all things

LX. ¹ A inserts this title after verse 1. ² B om. ³ B adds but when a man is in Paradise he is liable to judgement no more. ⁴ Shall not lose the punishment for it in the day of judgement for ever, Sok. B OMITTS VERSES 2-5.

LXI. ⁵ B adds Even if it be not for eternal life.

strangling beasts. 5. Bestiality may be here referred to.

LX. 1. The sin referred to in 1 Thess. iv. 6. 3. Cf. Pss. ix. 15; xxxv. 8; lvii. 6. In this verse and the next two there is an utter want of proportion between the sin and its punishment. 5. Cf. Ps. ci. 5.

LXI. 1. Unrighteousness which the Lord hates. Cf. Jud. v. 17; Ecclus. xv. 11, 13. 2. In the world to come . . . many mansions. Cf. Eth. En. xxxix. 4, 7, 8; xli. 2; John how that¹ there are many mansions prepared for men; *good for the good; evil for the evil; many and without number². 3. Blessed are those who shall go to the mansions of the blessed³; for in the evil ones there is no rest nor any means of return from them. 4. Listen, my children, both small and great: When a man *conceives a good thought in his heart and brings⁴ gifts before the Lord of his labours—if his hands have not wrought them⁵ then the Lord turns away His face from the labour of his hands, and *he cannot gain advantage from⁶ the work of his hand. 5. But if his hands have wrought, but his heart murmurs *and he does not make an offering of his heart, but murmurs⁷ continually, he has no success.

[How it is proper to bring one's Gifts with Faith, and how there is no Repentance after Death.]

LXII. 1. Blessed is the man who in patience shall bring ¹ I know that, Sok.; B om. ² Numberless abodes for the good and the evil, B. ³ B omits the rest of the chapter. ⁴ Sets it in his heart to bring, Sok. ⁵ The labour, Sok. ⁶ It is impossible for him to find, Sok. ⁷ The sickness of his heart will not cease and making a murmur, Sok.

xiv. 2. Good for the good, evil for the evil. This is adapted from Ecclus. xxxix. 25 ἀγαθὰ τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἐκτισται ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, οὕτως τοῖς ἀμαρτωλοῖς κακά. Cf. Or. Sibyll. Fragm. iii. 18–19 τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς ἀγαθὸν προσφέρων πολὺ πλείονα μισθόν, τοῖς δὲ κακοῖς ἀδίκους τε χόλον. 4. The text seems corrupt. The idea is: it is a good thing to offer gifts to God; but if a man sacrifice to God that which is another man's or is gotten wrongfully, God turns away His face from him. Cf. lxvi. 2. The author appears to have had before him Ecclus. xxxi. 21 θυσιάζων ἐξ ἀδίκου, προσφορὰ μεμωκημένη, 22 καὶ οὐκ εἰς εὐδοκίαν μωκήματα ἀνόμων. 23 οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ὁ ὕψιστος ἐν προσφοραῖς ἀσεβῶν.

Further in ver. 24 ὁ προσάγων θυσίαν ἐκ χρημάτων πενήτων is condemned. Finally with he cannot gain advantage from, &c., compare ver. 28 τί ἀφέλῃσαν πλεῖον ἢ κόπον; If his hands have not wrought them. Cf. Or. Sibyll. viii. 403, 406:

τούτῳ μὲν καθαρὴν θῆς ἀναίμακτόν τε τράπεζαν ἐκ μόχθων ιδίῳ πορίσας ἀγναῖς παλάμῃσιν.

5. Men must offer willingly: only those are blessed. Cf. Exod. xxv. 2; xxxv. 5; Prov. xi. 25. But his heart murmurs. Cp. lxiii. 2; Deut. xv. 10 'thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him.' Ecclus. xxxii. 10, 11 ἐν ἀγαθῷ ὀφθαλμῷ δέξασον τὸν κύριον . . . καὶ ἐν εὐφροσύνῃ ἀγίασον δεκάτην.

his gifts¹ before the face of the Lord, for he shall avert the recompense of his sin. 2. *If he speaks words out of season² *there is no repentance for him: if he lets the appointed time³ pass and does not *perform the work, he is not blessed; for⁴ there is no repentance after death. 3. For every deed which a man does *unseasonably is⁵ an offence before men, and a sin before God.

[How one must not despise the Humble, but give to them truly, so that thou mayest not be accursed before God.]

LXIII. 1. When a man clothes the naked and feeds the hungry, he gets a recompense from God. 2. If his heart murmurs, *he works for himself a double evil: he works destruction to that which he gives and there shall be no reward for it⁶: 3. *And the poor man, when his heart is satisfied or his flesh is clothed⁷ and he acts contemptuously, he destroys the effect of *all his endurance of poverty⁸ and *shall not gain the blessing of a recompense⁹. 4. For the Lord hates every contemptuous *and proud-speaking¹⁰ man: *and likewise every lying word: and that which is covered with unrighteousness. And it is cut with the sharpness of a deadly sword, and thrown into the fire, and burns for ever¹¹.)

LXII. ¹ A adds with faith. ² If he remembers the appointed time to utter his prayer, B. If before the time he recalls his word, Sok. ³ B omits, AND ALSO THE REST OF THE CHAPTER. ⁴ Act righteously, A. ⁵ Before the time and after the time is altogether, Sok.

LXIII. ⁶ He works for himself a double destruction and when he gives anything to a man there shall be no reward for that which he has given, A. B reads He renders his deeds of mercy profitless. ⁷ Nay more if food fill his heart to the full or his flesh is clothed, A. If he becomes overfed. B. ⁸ His good works, B. ⁹ Does not return with gratitude the benefits he has received, A. Gains nothing, B. ¹⁰ B om. ¹¹ And every lying word is sharpened with unrighteousness, and is cut with the sharpness of a deadly sword, and that cutting has no healing for ever, Sok. B om.

LXII. 1. Forgiveness is not the message of this book. For most sins there is no pardon. 2. Words out of season. The text is hopeless here.

LXIII. 1. See ix (notes). 2. See lxi. 5 (note). 4. The Lord hates, &c. Pss. xviii. 27; ci. 5; Prov. vi. 16, 17.

[How the Lord calls Enoch: the People take Counsel to go to kiss him in the Place called Achuzan.]

LXIV. 1. When Enoch said these words to his sons, *and the princes of the people¹, all the people *far and near² heard how the Lord called Enoch. And³ they took counsel, *and they all said⁴: ‘Let us go and kiss Enoch!’ 2. And the men assembled to the number of 2000⁵, and came to the place Achuzan⁶, where Enoch was, and his sons. 3. And⁷ the elders of the people⁸ *came together and made obeisance and⁹ kissed Enoch, and said to him: ‘*Enoch, our father⁹; be thou blessed of the Lord, the eternal King!’ 4. And now bless thy *sons, and all the⁹ people, that we may be glorified *before thee to-day. 5. For thou art glorified⁹ before the face of the Lord *for ever¹; since God has chosen thee *above all men upon the earth, and has appointed thee⁹ as *the scribe of His creation of visible and invisible things, and⁹ an avenger¹⁰ of the sins of men, *and a succour to thy family⁹!’ And Enoch answered all his people saying⁹:

[Of the Exhortation of Enoch to his Sons.]

LXV. 1. ‘Listen, my children: before that anything existed *and all creatures were made, the Lord made¹¹ all things both visible and invisible. 2. *When the times of these things

LXIV. ¹ A om. ² And all his neighbours, B. For how the Lord, B reads how the Lord God. ³ A B om. ⁴ Saying, B; A om. ⁵ 4000, B. ⁶ Asukhan, B. ⁷ A adds all the host of. ⁸ Sok. adds and all the host. ⁹ B om. ¹⁰ One who removes, A B.

XLV. ¹¹ The Lord made the world and then created, B. The Lord made, A.

LXIV. 5. Scribe of His creation. See xl. 13 (note); liii. 2. Avenger, &c. This may refer to Enoch’s office at the final judgement when he recounts all the deeds of men. See quotation from Test. Abraham given in note on XL. 13. The reading, however, of A B one who removes may be right. Enoch may be conceived as a mediator. Cf. Philo’s conception of the Logos i. 501.

LXV. 1. Made. This must mean had come and were passed, understand how¹ after all these things He made man in His own image *after His¹ likeness, and placed in him eyes to see; and ears to hear; and a heart to understand, and reason² to take counsel. 3. And the Lord contemplated the world for the sake of man³, and made all the creation for his sake⁴, and divided* it into times. And from the times He made years, and from the years He made months, and from the months He made days, and of the days He made seven. 4. And in these He made the hours⁵ *and divided them into small portions¹, that a man should understand *the seasons, and compute years and months, and hours; their alternations and beginnings and ends: and⁶ that he should compute *his life from the beginning till death⁷, *and should meditate upon his sin, and should write down his evil and good deeds. 5. For nothing done is concealed before the Lord. Let each man know his deeds, and not transgress the commandments and let him keep My writings securely from generation to generation¹. 6. When *all the creation of visible and invisible things⁸ comes to an end which the Lord has made; then every man shall come to the great judgement of the Lord⁹. 7. Then¹⁰ the times shall perish, *and

¹ B om. ² With his mind, A. ³ Saw all the works of man, A. B om. ⁴ A om. B transposes it into next sentence. ⁵ Time for the sake of man, and determined the times and the years, and the months and the hours, B. ⁶ The changes of the times and the end and the beginning of the years, and the end and the days and hours, B. ⁷ The death of his life, B. ⁸ The world, B. ⁹ A om. ¹⁰ And then all, A.

‘devised,’ if it is original. 2. Made man in his own image . . . understand. This agrees too closely to be accidental with Ecclus. xvii. 3 κατ’ εἰκόνα αὐτοῦ ἐποίησεν αὐτούς. 5. . . ὀφθαλμούς, ὦτα καὶ καρδίαν ἔδωκε διανοεῖσθαι αὐτοῖς. 4. Understand the seasons . . . beginnings and ends. We have here a close resemblance to Wisdom vii. 17-18 αὐτὸς γὰρ ἔδωκε . . . εἶδέναι . . . ἀρχὴν καὶ τέλος καὶ μεσότητα χρόνων, τροπῶν ἀλλαγὰς καὶ μεταβολὰς καιρῶν. 5. See xxxiii. 9 (note). 6. The judgement closes the existence of man on earth. At this judgement all men must appear, but there is nothing to suggest that there is a resurrection of the body. 7. See there shall be no year, nor month, nor day, and there shall be no hours nor shall they be reckoned¹. 8. There shall be one eternity, and all the just * who shall escape the great judgement of the Lord² shall be gathered together in eternal life * and for ever and ever the just shall be gathered together and they shall be eternal³. 9. Moreover there shall be no labour, nor sickness, nor sorrow, * nor anxiety, nor need⁴, nor night, nor darkness, but a great⁵ light. 10. * And there shall be to them a great wall that cannot be broken down²; and bright⁶ * and incorruptible² paradise * shall be their protection, and their eternal habitation⁷. * For all corruptible things shall vanish², * and there shall be eternal life⁸.

[Enoch instructs his Sons, and all the Elders of the People: how with Fear and Trembling they ought to walk before the Lord, and serve Him alone, and not to worship Idols; for God made Heaven and Earth and every Creature and its Form.]

LXVI. 1. And now, my children, preserve your souls from all unrighteousness, which the Lord hates⁹. Walk before His face with fear * and trembling¹⁰, and serve Him alone.

¹ And the years moreover shall perish and the months and days and hours shall be dispersed and moreover shall not be counted, Sok. For hours . . . counted A reads there shall be no hours nor shall there be any addition to them or calculation. ² B om. ³ And there shall be one everlasting time for the just and they shall live for ever, A. And there shall be everlasting life for the just, being eternal, Sok. After eternal B adds and incorruptible. ⁴ A adds nor violence; Sok. reads nor necessary anxiety nor constraint. ⁵ B adds unending and never disturbed. ⁶ Great, B Sok. ⁷ B om. Sok. reads and there shall be the roof of the eternal habitation, and transposes to end of Chapter. ⁸ And incorruptible things shall come, Sok.

LXVI. ⁹ B OMITTS THE REST OF THE CHAPTER.

¹⁰ Sok. om.

xxxiii. 2. 8-9. A blessed immortality. 10. Wall. This may be the wall that divides Paradise (see ix) from the place of punishment (see x). 11. Cp. Ecclus. xiv. 19 πάν ἔργον σιγήμενον ἐκλείπει.

LXVI. 1. Unrighteousness which the Lord hates. Cf. Deut. xii. 31; Wisdom xiv. 9. Walk before His face with fear and trembling. Cf. Phil. ii. 12 'work out your own salvation with fear and

*Worship the true God, and not dumb idols. 2. But pay attention to His command¹, and bring every just offering before the face of the Lord. But the Lord hates that which is unrighteous. 3. For the Lord sees every thing; whatever man meditates in his heart, *and what counsel he plans², and every thought is continually before the Lord. 4. *If ye look at the heavens there is the Lord, as the Lord made the heavens. If ye look at the earth then the Lord is there since the Lord made firm the earth and established every creature in it³. If ye scrutinize the depths of the sea, and every thing under the earth there also is the Lord. For the Lord created all things. 5. Do not bow down to the work of men, *nor to the work of the Lord⁴, leaving *the Lord of all creation⁵; for no deed is concealed before the face of the Lord. 6. Walk, my children, in long suffering, in humility⁶, in spite of calumny, and insult; in faith, and truth: in the promises, and sickness, in abuse, in wounds, in temptation, *in nakedness, in deprivation⁷, loving one another, till ye depart from this world of sickness. Then ye shall be heirs of eternity. 7. Blessed are the just, who shall escape the great judgement⁸! And they shall be seven times brighter than the sun, for in this age altogether the seventh part is separated. 8. (Now concerning) the light, the darkness, the food, the sweetnesses, trembling.' For fear and trembling cf. also 2 Cor. vii. 15; Eph. vi. 5. 2. Bring every just offering. See lxi. 4 (note). 3. Sees every thing whatever man meditates, &c. Cf. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9; 2 Chron. vi. 30; Ps. xciv. 11; Prov. xv. 11; Dan. ii. 30. 4. Founded partly on Ps. cxxxix.

¹ Sok. om. ² Then his reason counsels, Sok. ³ So Sok. transposed and defective in A. Who made firm the earth, and established every creature in it. If ye look at the heavens there is the Lord. ⁴ A om. ⁵ The works of the Lord, A. ⁶ A adds honour. ⁷ Deprivation and nakedness, Sok. ⁸ Sok. adds of the Lord.

8-12. The author has rightly omitted all reference to Sheol as this is already included in his conception of the heavens. 5. No deed is concealed, &c. Cf. Jer. xvi. 17; Eccus. xvii. 15. 6. Cf. Rom. viii. 35; 2 Cor. xi. 27; 2 Pet. i. 4. 7. Cf. lxxv. 8. 8. Sweetnesses, &c. Eth. En. lxix. 8.

the bitternesses, the paradise, the tortures, *the fires, the frosts and other things¹; *I have put² all this down in writing, that ye may read and understand.

[The Lord sent a Darkness upon the Earth, and covered the People and Enoch; and he was taken up on high; and there was Light in the Heavens.]

LXVII. 1. When Enoch had discoursed with the people, the Lord sent a darkness upon the earth, and there was a gloom, and it hid those men standing³ with Enoch. 2. And *the angels hasted and took Enoch and carried him⁴ to the highest heaven where the Lord⁵ received him, and set him before *His face⁶, and the darkness departed from the earth, and there was light. 3. And the people saw and did not understand, how Enoch was taken, and they glorified God. And they *who had seen such things⁷ departed⁸ to their houses⁹.

LXVIII. 1. Enoch was born on the sixth day of the month Tsivan¹⁰! he lived 365 years. He was taken up into heaven on the first day of the month Tsivan¹¹, and he was in heaven sixty days. 2. He wrote down the descriptions of all the creation which the Lord had made, and he wrote 366 books, and gave them to his sons. 3. And he was on earth

¹ Sok. om. ² Put, A.

LXVII. ³ A adds and talking. ⁴ They took him, A. ⁵ A adds is and they. ⁶ The face of the Lord, A. ⁷ Sok. om. A reads Found the roll in which was the instruction concerning the invisible God and they. ⁸ A adds all. ⁹ B adds and concludes with to our God be glory for ever, Amen.

LXVIII. ¹⁰ Pamorus, Sok.

¹¹ Nisan, Sok.

LXVII. 2. Highest heaven. LV. 2. In Asc. Is. ix. 7 the seventh This is an exceptional privilege; for heaven is represented as the future Paradise in the third heaven is the habitation of the righteous. eternal abode of the righteous. See thirty days¹, and thus he was taken to heaven in the same² month Tsivan³ on the *same day the² sixth day; the day on which he was born, and the same hour. 4. As each man has *but a dark existence⁴ in this life, so also is his beginning *and birth⁵, and departure from this life. In what hour he began; in that he was born, and in that he departs. 5. And Methusalem hastened, and all⁵ his brethren⁶, the sons of Enoch, and built an altar in the place called Achuzan, *whence and when Enoch⁷ was taken up *to heaven⁵. 6. And they took⁸ cattle, and invited all the people and sacrificed victims⁹ before the face of the Lord. 7. *All the people came and the elders of the people; all the host of them to the festivity, and brought their gifts to the sons of Enoch, and made a great festivity, rejoicing and being merry for three days; praising God who had given such a sign by means of Enoch, who had found favour with Him. And that they should hand it down to their son's sons, from generation to generation, for ever. Amen⁵.

¹ Sok. adds having spoken with them. ² A om. ³ Pamorus, Sok.
⁴ An equal nature, Sok. ⁵ Sok. om. ⁶ Sok. adds and all. ⁷ Where, Sok.
⁸ Sok. adds animals and. ⁹ Victim, Sok.

APPENDIX.

THE following fragment of the Melchizedekian literature was found by Professor Sokolov in the chief MS. on which he has based his text. In this MS. it is given as an organic factor of the Slavonic Enoch. This is done by omitting all the words in A lxviii. 7, after 'merry for three days,' and then as we see below immediately proceeding 'And on the third day,' &c. No hint of this large addition is found in A or B, but Sokolov writes that it appears in several MSS. to which he had access. The reader will observe that in many passages it implies the Slavonic Enoch. The text is obviously corrupt in many places.

We have in this fragment a new form of the Melchizedek myth. For the other forms it took see Bible Dictionaries in loc. This fragment seems to be the work of an early Christian heretic as we may infer from iii. 34 ; iv. 8.

I. 1. And on the third day at the time of the evening the elders of the people spake to Methusalam saying : 'Stand before the face of the Lord, and before the face of all the people, and before the face of the altar of the Lord, and thou shalt be glorified among the people.' 2. And Methusalam answered his people : 'Wait, O men, until the Lord God of my father Enoch—shall himself raise up to himself, a priest over his people.' 3. And the people waited yet a night to no purpose on the place Akhuzan. 4. And Methusalam was near the altar, and prayed to the Lord and said, 'Oh ! only Lord of all the world, who hast taken my father Enoch, do thou raise up a priest for thy people, and teach their hearts to fear thy glory, and to do all according to thy will.' 5. And Methusalam slept, and the Lord appeared to him in a nightly vision, and said to him 'Listen, Methusalam, I am the Lord God of thy father Enoch, hear the voice of this people, and stand before My altar and I will glorify thee before the face of all the people, and thou shalt be glorified all the days of thy life.' 6. And Methusalam arose from his sleep, and blessed the Lord who had appeared to him. 7. And the elders of the people hastened to Methusalam and the Lord God inclined the heart of Methusalam to hear the voice of the people, and he said: 'The Lord God gives His blessing upon all these people before my eyes to-day. (May the Lord your God) do what is a good thing in His eyes to this people.' 8. And Sarsan and Kharmis, and Zazus, the elders of the people hastened and clothed Methusalam in beautiful garments and placed a bright crown on his head. 9. And the people hastened, and brought sheep and cattle and of birds all that was known (to be proper for) Methusalam to sacrifice before the face of the Lord, and in the name (before the face) of the people. 10. And Methusalam went out to the altar of the Lord, and his face shone like the sun, as it is rising in the day, and all the people were following after him. 11. And Methusalam stood before the altar of the Lord, and all the people stood round the altar. 12. And the elders of the people took sheep, and oxen, and bound their four feet, and laid them on the top of the altar, and said to Methusalam; 13. 'Lift the knife and kill them according to the proper way before the face of the Lord.' 14. And Methusalam stretched out his hands to the heavens and called to the Lord, saying thus: 'Woe is me, O Lord! who am I to stand at the head of Thy altar and at the head of these people.' 15. Now, Lord, look down on Thy servant and on all these people. Now let all the things sought for happen and give a blessing to Thy servant before the face of all the people, that they may understand that thou hast appointed a priest over Thy people. 16. And it came to pass that when Methusalam had prayed, the altar shook, and a knife rose from the altar, and leaped into the hand of Methusalam before the face of all the people. And the people trembled, and glorified the Lord. 17. And Methusalam was honoured before the face of the Lord, and before the face of all the people from that day. 18. And Methusalam took the knife, and killed every thing that was brought by the people. And they rejoiced, and were merry before the face of the Lord and before the face of Methusalam on that day. 19. And afterwards the people departed each to his own house.

II. 1. Methusalam began to stand at the altar before the face of the Lord and all the people from that day for ten years, trusting in an eternal inheritance, and having taught well the whole land and all his people; and no man was found to turn from the Lord in vanity during all the days in which Methusalam lived. 2. And the Lord blessed Methusalam and was pleased with his sacrifices, and his gifts and all his services which he served before the face of the Lord. 3. And when the time of the days of the departure of Methusalam took place, and the Lord appeared to him in a nightly vision, and said to him: 'Listen, Methusalam! I am the Lord God of thy father Enoch, I order thee to see, how the days of thy life are finished, and the day of thy rest has drawn near. 4. Call Nir, the son of thy son Lamech, the second, born after Noah, and clothe him in the robes of thy consecration, and place him by my altar, and tell him all that shall be in his days, because the time of the destruction of the whole earth draws near, and of every man and every living thing upon the earth. 5. For in his days there shall be a very great confusion upon the earth, because a man has been envious of his neighbour, and people have become inflamed against people and nation stirs up war against nation, and all the earth is filled with foulness and blood, and every kind of evil. 6. And moreover in addition they deserted their Maker, and have bowed down to vain gods, and to the firmament of heaven, and the course of the earth and the waves of the sea. And the adversary is multiplied and rejoices in his deeds to My great vexation. 7. And all the earth changes its form, and every tree and every fruit changes its seeds, expecting the time of destruction. And all peoples are changing upon the earth to My grief. 8. Then I shall command the abysses to pour themselves upon the earth, and the great treasures of the waters of heaven shall come upon the earth in their nature and according to their first nature. 9. And all the stability of the earth shall perish and all the earth shall tremble and shall be deprived of its strength from that day. 10. Then I will preserve the son of thy son Lamech, his first son Noe and from his seed I will raise up another world, and his seed shall exist for ever till the second destruction when also men shall sin before my face. 11. Methusalam leaped up from his sleep and his dream troubled him greatly. And he called all the elders of the people and told them all that the Lord had said to him, and all the vision that had appeared to him from the Lord. 12. And the people were grieved at his vision, and answered him: 'Let the Lord God do according to his will! And now, Methusalam, accomplish thou all things which the Lord enjoined thee.' 13. And Methusalam called Nir, the son of Lamech, the younger brother of Noe, and clothed him in the robes of the priesthood before the face of all the people, and placed him at the head of the altar, and taught him all that he was to do among the people. 14. And Methusalam called to the people: 'Lo! Nir will be before your face from to-day as a prince and a leader.' 15. And the people said to Methusalam, 'Let it be unto us according to thy word, and let the voice of the Lord be as He spoke to thee.' 16. And when Methusalam had spoken to the people before the altar, his spirit was confused, and he bent his knees, and stretched out his hands to the heavens, and prayed to God. And as he prayed his spirit went forth to the Lord. 17. And Nir and all the people made haste and made a grave for Methusalam in the place Aruzan. 18. And Nir came in glorious attire in all his priestly robes, with lights, with much pomp, and the people lifted up the body of Methusalam, and having glorified it, laid it in the grave, which they had made for him, and buried him, and said: 'Blessed was Methusalam before the face of the Lord, and before the face of all people.' 19. When they were about to depart to their own households, Nir said to the people: 'Go quickly now, and bring sheep and heifers, and turtle-doves, and pigeons, and let us offer them before the face of the Lord, and then go to your houses.' 20. And the people listened to Nir the priest, and hastened and brought the victims, and bound them to the head of the altar. 21. And Nir took the sacrificial knife, and slew all the [victims] that were brought, and offered them before the face of the Lord. 22. And all the people rejoiced before the face of the Lord, and glorified on that day the Lord of Nir, the ruler of heaven and earth. From that day there was peace and order over the whole earth in the days of Nir, during 202 years. 23. And then the people turned from God and began to be jealous one of another, and people rebelled against people, and tongue arose against tongue, in reviling. 24. And if lips were the same, hearts chose different things. 25. And then the devil began to reign for the third time, the first time before paradise, the second time in paradise, the third time outside of paradise, he continued (doing so) till the deluge. 26. And there arose a great dispute and confusion. And Nir the priest heard it, and was greatly grieved, and said in his heart, 'In truth I have understood that the time has drawn near, and the end which the Lord spake to Methusalam, the father of my father Lamech.

III. 1. And the wife of Nir, named Sopanima, being barren, brought forth no child to Nir. 2. And Sopanima was in the time of her old age, and on the day of her death she conceived in her womb, and Nir the priest did not sleep with her, nor knew her from the day that the Lord appointed him to serve before the face of the people. 3. When Sopanima knew of her conception she was ashamed, and felt humbled, and concealed herself all the days, till she brought forth, and no one of the people knew. 4. And when 282 days were accomplished and the day of birth began to draw near, Nir remembered about his wife, and called her to himself in his house, that he might talk to her. 5. And Sopanima came to Nir, her husband, being with child, and the appointed day of the birth was drawing near. 6. And Nir saw her and was very much ashamed, and said to her: 'What hast thou done, wife, and hast shamed me before the face of these people. And now depart from me, and go where thou didst commence the shame of thy womb, so that I defile not my hand upon thee, and sin before the face of the Lord!' 7. And Sopanima spake unto Nir, her husband, saying: 'My lord, lo! the time of my old age, and the day of my death has come (and there was no youth in me) and I do not know when the period of my years is past, and the unfruitfulness of my womb begin.' 8. And Nir did not believe his wife, and said to her a second time: 'Depart from me lest I do thee an injury, and sin before the face of the Lord!' 9. And it came to pass, when Nir had spoken to his wife, Sopanima fell at the feet of Nir, and died. 10. And Nir was very much grieved, and said in his heart: 'Was this from my voice, since a man by his voice and thought sins before the face of the Lord. 11. Now the Lord is merciful to me; I know in truth in my heart, that my hand was not upon her. And so I say: "Glory to thee, oh! Lord, since no one on earth knows this deed, which the Lord has wrought!"' 12. And Nir hastened and shut the doors of the house, and went to Noe, his brother, and told him all, that had happened concerning his wife. 13. And Noe hastened, and came with Nir, his brother, into the house of Nir, on account of the death of Sopanima, and they talked to themselves (and saw) how her womb was at the time of the birth. 14. And Noe said to Nir: 'Let it not be a subject of sorrow to thee, Nir, my brother, that the Lord has to-day concealed our shame because no one of the people knows this. 15. Now let us go quickly, and bring her secretly, and may the Lord hide the ignominy of our shame. 16. And they laid Sopanima on the bed, and they wrapped her with black robes, and shut her in the house ready for burial, and dug a grave in secret. 17. And then came an infant from the dead Sopanima, and sat on the bed at her right hand. And Noe, and Nir entered, and saw the infant sitting by the dead Sopanima and wiping its clothes. 18. And Noe, and Nir were tempted with a great fear, for the child was complete in its body, like one of three years old; and spake with its lips, and blessed the Lord. 19. And Noe, and Nir gazed upon it; and lo! the seal of the priesthood was on its breast, and it was glorious in countenance. 20. And Noe, and Nir said 'See the Lord renews the consecration according to our blood, as he desires (this is from the Lord, my brother, and the Lord renews the blood of consecration in us).' 21. And Noe and Nir hastened, and washed the child, and clothed it in priestly raiment, and gave it the blessed bread. And it ate. And they called its name Melchizedek. 22. And Noe and Nir took the body of Sopanima, and stripped from her the black robes, and clothed her in very bright robes, and built a church for her (another house—a beautified grave). 23. And Noe, and Nir, and Melchizedek came and buried her publicly. And Noe said to his brother Nir: 'Watch this child in secret till the time, because deceitful people shall arise over all the earth and shall begin to reject God, and having perceived nothing shall put him to death. And then Noe went out to his own place. 24. And great lawlessness began to multiply over the whole earth, in the days of Nir. 25. And Nir began to be very anxious, especially about the child, saying: 'Woe is me, eternal Lord. In my days have begun to multiply all kinds of lawlessness upon the earth, and I understand, how that the end is near unto us more (than ever), and upon all the earth for the lawlessness of the people. 26. And now, Lord, what is the vision, and what is the solution of it, and what shall I do for (the child)?—Will it also go with us to destruction?' 27. And the Lord heard Nir, and appeared to him in a nightly vision, and said to him: 'Nir, I do not endure the great lawlessness that has been on the earth in many things, and lo! I wish now to send a great destruction upon the earth, and every earthly creature shall perish. 28. But do not trouble thyself about the child, Nir, for in a short time I will send my chief captain Michael, and he shall take the child and place him in the paradise of Eden, in the garden where Adam was formerly during a period of seven years, having the heaven always open until the time of his sin. 29. And this child shall not perish with those who perish in this generation, as I have shown, but shall be a holy priest in all things, Melchizedek, and I will appoint him that he may be the chief of the priests who were before (alia lectio—that he may be a priest of priests for ever, and I will consecrate him, and will appoint him over the people being made greatly holy). 30. And Nir rose from his sleep, and blessed the Lord, who had appeared unto him, saying: 'Blessed is the Lord God of my fathers, who has spoken unto me, (some MSS. add—who will not allow the depreciation of my priesthood in the priesthood of my fathers, as thy word), who made a great priest in my days in the womb of my wife Sopanima. (Some MSS. add—31. Because I had no family and this child shall be to me in the place of my family, and shall be as a son to me, and thou shalt honour him with Thy servants the priests, with Seth, and Enoch, and Tharasidam, Maleleil, and Enos, and thy servant, and thus Melchizedek shall be a priest in another generation. 32. For I know that this generation shall end in confusion, and all shall perish. And Noe, my brother, shall be preserved in that day. 33. And from my race shall rise up many people, and Melchizedek shall be the chief of the priests among the people, ruling alone, serving thee O Lord!) 34. Because I had not another child in this family, who might be a great priest, but this son of mine, and thy servant; and do thou great Lord, on this account honour him with thy servants, and great priests—with Seth, and Enos, and Rusii, and Almilam, and Prasadam, and Maleleil, and Seroch, and Arusan, and Aleem, and Enoch, and Methusalam, and me, thy servant Nir, and Melchizedek shall be the head over twelve priests who lived before, and at last shall be the head over all, (being) the great high priest, the Word of God, and the power to work great and glorious marvels above all that have been. 35. He, Melchizedek, shall be a priest and king in the place Akhuzan, that is to say, in the middle of the earth where Adam was created: there shall at last be his grave. 36. And concerning that chief priest it has been written that he also shall be buried there, where there is the middle of the earth, as Adam buried his son Abel there whom his brother Cain killed, wherefore he lay three years unburied, till he saw a bird called a jackdaw, burying its fledgling. 37. I know that a great confusion has come and this generation shall end in confusion, and all shall perish except that Noe my brother shall be preserved, and afterwards there shall be a planting from his family, and there shall be other people, and another Melchizedek shall be the head of the priests among the people, ruling, and serving the Lord.'

IV. 1. And when the child had been forty days under the roof of Nir, the Lord said to Michael: 'Go down upon the earth to Nir, the priest, and take My child Melchizedek, who is with him, and place him in the paradise of Eden for preservation, because the time draws nigh, and I will discharge all the water upon the earth, and all that is upon the earth shall perish. 2. (And I will establish another race, and Melchizedek shall be the chief of the priests, in that family, just as Seth is to me in this family¹.) 3. And Michael hastened, and came by night, and Nir was sleeping in his bed. And Michael appeared to him, and said to him: 'The Lord says unto thee, Nir: "Send the child to me; I entrusted him to thee."' 4. And Nir did not know that the chief captain Michael was speaking to him, and his heart was confused, and he said: 'If the people know about the child, and take him, they will slay him. For the heart of this people is crafty before the face of the Lord. And Nir said to him who spoke to him 'The child is not with me, and I do not know who thou art, who art speaking to me.' 5. And he who was speaking to me answered: 'Be not afraid, Nir, I am the chief captain of the Lord. The Lord hath sent me, and lo! I will take thy child to-day, and will go with him, and will place him in the paradise of Eden, and there shall he be for ever. 6. And when the twelfth generation shall be, and a thousand and seventy years shall be, in that generation a just man shall be born, and the Lord shall tell him to come out upon that mountain where the ark of thy brother Noe shall stand, and he shall find there another Melchizedek who has lived there seven years, concealing himself from the people who worship idols, so that they should not slay him, and he shall lead him forth and he shall be priest, and the first king in the town of Salem after the fashion of this Melchizedek, the commencement of the priests. And 3432 years shall be fulfilled till that time from the beginning and creation of Adam. 7. And from that Melchizedek there shall be twelve priests in number till the great Igumen, that is to say leader, who shall bring forth all things visible and invisible. 8. And Nir understood his first dream, and believed it, and having answered Michael, he said: 'Blessed is the Lord, who has glorified thee to-day to me, and now bless thy servant Nir, as we are drawing near our departure from this world, and take the child, and do unto him as the Lord hath spoken unto thee. 9. And Michael took the child on that night on which he came, and took him on his wings, and placed him in the paradise of Eden. 10. And Nir having risen on the following day, went to his house, and did not find the child, and there was instead of joy very great sorrow, because he had no other son except this (alia lectio—because he looked upon this child in the place of a son). 11. So died Nir, and after him there was no priest among the people. And from that time a great confusion arose on the earth.

¹ Clearly a variant of iii. 37.

V. 1. And God called Noe on the mountain of Ararat, between Assyria, and Armenia, in the land of Arabia, by the sea, and said to him: 'Make there an ark of 300 ells in length, and in breadth 50 ells, and in height 30, and two stories in the midst, and the doors about an ell. 2. And of those 300 ells, and of ours 15,000, and so of those 50, and of ours 2000 and 500, and so of those 30, and of ours 900, and of those one ell, and of ours 50.' 3. According to this number the Jews keep this measure of the ark of Noe, as the Lord said to him, and (so) they make each measure, and each rule even up to the present time. 4. The Lord God opened the doors of the heavens, and rain came on the earth 150 days, and all flesh died. 5. Noe was in the 500th year and begat three sons: Shem, Ham, and Japhet. 6. 100 years after the birth of his three sons, he went into the ark in the month according to the Hebrew Itsars, according to the Egyptian Famenoth in eighteen days. 7. And the ark floated forty days. And altogether they were in the ark 120 days. 8. And he went into the ark, being 600 years (old), and in the sixth hundred and first year of his life he went out of the ark in the month Farmut according to the Egyptians, and according to the Hebrews Nisan about twenty-eight days. 9. Then he lived 250 years, and died; he lived altogether 950 years according [to the will of] the Lord our God, to him be glory from the beginning, and now, and to the end of the world. Amen. 10. Enoch was altogether 365 years old.

11. In another way it is written here concerning Noah's ark. Of their 300 ells, and of ours 15,000, of theirs 100, and of ours 5000: of theirs 20, and of ours 1000; of theirs 10, and of ours 500: of theirs 5, and of ours 250: of theirs 1, and of ours 50! This is the truth spoken.

ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE PHOENIXES.

WHEN I wrote the note on the Phoenixes in XII. 1 I was not aware that mention of a class of these birds was to be found elsewhere. I have, however, since found in Dr. Kohler's article on 'The pre-Talmudic Haggada' (Jewish Quarterly, 1893, pp. 399-419) a quotation from an old Essene Mishna—Massecheth Derech Eretz—in which it is said that 'the generation of the bird כלהב' went alive into Paradise. This bird Dr. Kohler identifies with the Phoenix. The question is discussed in the Alphabetum Siracidis edited by Steinschneider, 1858, p. 28^b.

INDEX I.

PASSAGES FROM THE SCRIPTURES AND ANCIENT WRITERS CONNECTED OR CLOSELY PARALLEL WITH THE TEXT.

GENESIS:— SLAVONIC ENOCH:—

i. 4, 5 xxvii. 1, 4.
9, 10 xxviii. 1, 2.

LEVITICUS:—

xxiii. 5 ii. 2.

DEUTERONOMY:—

viii. 2 xlv. 4.
19 ii. 2.
xii. 31 lxvi. 1.
xxxii. 35 (lxx) . . l. 4.

I SAMUEL:—

xii. 20 ii. 2.

I CHRONICLES:—

xxviii. 9 lxvi. 3.

JOB:—

xxxviii. 22 v. 1.

PSALMS:—

xxviii. 3 lii. 14.
lv. 17 li. 4.
civ. 29 xxxiii. 9.
cxvi. 9 ii. 2.
cxix. 37 ix.
cxxxix. 8-12 . . lxvi. 4.
cl. 6 li. 5.

PROVERBS:—

vi. 16, 17 lxiii. 4.
xiv. 26 ii. 3.

ISAIAH:—

vi. 2, 3 xxi. 1.

JEREMIAH:—

x. 11 ii. 2.

EZEKIEL:—

x. 12 xx. 1.
xviii. 7, 8 ix.

DANIEL:— SLAVONIC ENOCH:—

v. 6, 9, 10 i. 7.
x. 6 i. 5.

ST. MATTHEW:—

v. 9 lii. 11.
22 xlv. 2.
34, 35, 37 xlix. 1.
vii. 16, 20 xlii. 14.
xiv. 27 i. 8; xx. 2.
xxv. 34 ix. 1.

ST. LUKE:—

vi. 35 xlii. 7.

ST. JOHN:—

xiv. 2 lxi. 2.

ACTS:—

xiv. 15 ii. 2.

EPHESIANS:—

i. 21 xx. 1.
iii. 10 p. xli.
iv. 10 p. xli.
iv. 25 xlii. 12.
vi. 12 p. xl.

COLOSSIANS:—

i. 16 xx. 1.
20 p. xli.

PHILIPPIANS:—

ii. 12 lxvi. 1.

HEBREWS:—

iv. 14 p. xli.
vii. 26 p. xli.
xi. 3 p. xxii; xxiv. 2;
xxv. 1.

I PETER:—

iii. 19 p. xli.

2 PETER:— SLAVONIC ENOCH:—

ii. 4 vii. 1.
 iii. 5 xlvii. 4.

REVELATION:—

i. 16 i. 5.
 iv. 6 iii. 3.
 ix. 1 xlii. 1.
 17 i. 5.
 x. 5, 6 p. xxiii; xxxiii.
 2; lxv. 7.
 xi. 5 i. 5.
 xix. 20 x. 2.

APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH:—

iv. 3 p. xxi; xxxi. 2.

APOCALYPSE OF EZRA:—

p. 29 (ed. Tisch.) . p. xlv.

APOCALYPSE OF PAUL:—

p. 52 (ed. Tisch.) . viii. 5.
 p. 57 „ . x. 2.
 p. 64 „ . viii. 3, 5.

APOCALYPSE OF MOSES:—

p. 12 (ed. Tisch.) . viii. 3.
 p. 19 „ . xiv. 2-4.

APOCALYPSE OF ZEPHANIAH:—

Fragment in Clem. Alex.
Strom. v. 11. 77 . xviii. 1.

ASCENSION OF ISAIAH:—

viii. 16 xix. 1.

BOOK OF ADAM AND EVE:—

I. vi. xxix. 4, 5.
 I. viii. xxxi. 2.

ECCLESIASTICUS:—

i. 2 xlvii. 5.
 ii. 4 li. 3.
 vii. 3 xlii. 11.
 32 li. 1.
 x. 20, 22, 24 . . . xliii. 2, 3.
 xiv. 19 lxv. 11.
 xv. 14, 15 xxx. 15.
 xvii. 3, 5 lxv. 2.
 xxviii. 9 lii. 12.
 xxxi. 21-24, 28 . lxi. 4.
 26 lii. 8.
 xxxix. 14 lii. 5.
 25 lxi. 2.

EPISTLE OF BARNABAS:—

xv. 4, 8 p. xxi.
 xviii. 1 xxx. 15.

ETHIOPIIC ENOCH:—

vi. 2-6 xviii. 4.
 vii. 2 xviii. 5.
 ix. 5 l. 1.
 x. 8 xviii. 5.
 xiii. 4 vii. 4.
 xiv. 8 iii. 1.
 13 x. 2.
 19 x. 2.
 20 xx. 3.
 22 (Greek) . xxxiii. 3.
 23 xxi. 1.
 xv. 1 i. 8.
 2 vii. 5.
 xxv. 4, 5 viii. 3.
 xxix. 2 viii. 1.
 xli. 4 xl. 11.
 xliii. 1, 2 xl. 2.
 lix; lx. 13-15 . . xl. 9.
 lx. 17, 18 xl. 10.
 19 v. 2.
 19-22 xl. 8.
 20 vi. 1.
 lxi. 10 xx. 1.
 lxix. 8 lxvi. 7.
 lxxii. 2-37 . . . xiii. 2-4.
 5 xi. 2.
 37 xi. 2.
 lxxiii. 2 xi. 2.
 lxxiv. xl. 5.
 lxxv. 3 xi. 2.
 lxxxii. 1, 2 . . . xxxiii. 9.
 3 xlviii. 7.
 11-14 xl. 6.
 lxxxiii. 3, 5 . . . i. 2, 3.
 xciii. 10 xlvii. 2.
 cvi. 2 i. 5.

4 EZRA:—

iv. 12 xli. 2.
 [vi. 71] i. 5.

GOSPEL OF NICODEMUS:—

ii. 3 viii. 7.

JUBILEES:—

ii. 7 xxx. 1.

SIBYLLINE ORACLES:—

ii. 75 l. 5.
 iii. 24-26 xxx. 13.
 viii. 390, 391 . . . xlv. 3.
 403, 406 lxi. 5.

TESTAMENT OF SLAVONIC ENOCH:—

ISAAC:—

pp. 146-148 (ed.

James) . . . p. xliv.

TESTAMENT OF

JACOB:—

p. 153 (ed.

James) . . . p. xliv.

TESTAMENTS OF THE XII

PATRIARCHS:—

Levi 2 (see pp.

xxiii, xxiv) . . . iii. 3.

3 vii. 1.

3 x. 3.

3 xvii.

Dan. 5 xviii. 3.

Naphth. 2 xxx. 9.

4 xxxiv. 2, 3.

Benj. 9 „ p. xxiv.

Jud. 18 „ „

WISDOM:—

vii. 17, 18 lxv. 4.

AUGUSTINE:—

De Civ. xxii.30. 5 p. xix; xxxii.
2—xxxiii. 2.

CLEMENT OF

ALEXANDRIA:—

Strom. v. II. 77 . . . xviii.

CLEMENT OF SLAVONIC ENOCH:—

ALEXANDRIA:—

Eclog. Prophet.

(ed. Dind. iii.

456) xl. 1.

IRENÆUS:—

Adv. Haer. v.28. 2 xxxii. 2—xxxiii. 2.

PHILO:—

De Somn. i. 13 . . . xxiv. 2.

i. 22 . . . xxiii. 5.

De Justitia, 7 . . . xxv. 1.De Mundi Op.

40, 46, 51 . . . xxx. 9.

46, 51 xxx. 8.

Leg. All. ii. 7 . . . xxx. 8.De Spec. Leg.

ii. 1 xlix. 1.

PSEUDO-CYPRIAN:—

De Montibus etSion, 4 xxx. 13.

ORIGEN:—

De Princip. i.3, 2 p. xx; xxiv—xxx; xlvii.

3, 4

iv. 35 xl. 1.

INDEX II.

NAMES AND SUBJECTS.

(When thick type is used in this Index, it is to indicate that the subject in question is specially dealt with under the reference so given.)

- Abyss, the, xxviii. 3.
Achuzan, lxiv. 2; lxviii. 5.
Adam, creation of, xxx. 10-12.
,, named from the four quarters of the world, xxx. 13.
Adam and Eve, the Book, pp. xviii; 36, 40, 41, 44, 47.
Adoil, xxv. 2.
Angels created from fire on the first day, xxix. 1, 3.
,, of punishment, x. 3.
,, ten orders of, xx. 1, 3.
Aphrodite, the planet, xxx. 3.
Ares, the planet, xxx. 3.
Ariukh, xxxiii. 11.
Arkhas, xxvi. 2.
Augustine, pp. xix; xlv; 46, 47.

Barnabas, Epistle of, pp. xxi; 42.
Baruch, the Apocalypse of, p. xxi.
Bede, 41.
Bochart, 14.
Brandt, p. xxxix.
Brugsch, 14, 32.

Callistratus, the Acts of, p. xlv.
Cedrenus, p. xviii; 46.
Chalkadri, xii. 1; xv. 1.
Cherubim, xix. 6; xx. 1.
Cheyne, p. 14, 69, 70.
Chrysostom, p. xlv.
Clement of Alexandria, pp. xx; xliii. xlv; 10, 21, 74.
Clementine Recognitions, p. 3, 32.
Conybeare, 65.
Creation of the world, the, xxv-xxx.
Cycle, the Metonic, xvi. 8.

D'Addosio, p. 75.
Death came through Eve, xxx. 18.
,, caused by sin, xxx. 16.
Dionysian cycle, p. 19.

Ecclesiasticus, pp. xxv; 42, 43, 47, 58, 59, 61, 63, 66, 67, 68, 69, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82.
Egg-theory of the universe, the, xxv, xxvi.
Eisenmenger quoted, pp. xxxix; 25, 36, 66, 70, 74.
Elders, the rulers of the stars, the, pp. xxxvi; iv. 1.
Enoch, the scribe of God's works, xxiii. 1-3.
,, of men's deeds, xl. 13; liii. 2; lxiv. 5.
Enoch, the Slavonic: its relation to the Ethiopic Enoch, pp. vii, viii; xi.
,, its MSS., pp. xii-xiv.
,, written in Greek at Alexandria, pp. xvi, xvii.

- Enoch, the Slavonic : based in part on Hebrew originals, p. xxiv.
 „ „ written circ. 1-50 A.D. by an Egyptian Jew, pp. xxv, xxvi.
 „ „ its teaching on creation, anthropology, and ethics, pp. xxvii-xxix.
 „ „ its relation to Jewish and Christian literature, pp. xvii-xxiv.
 Ezra, fourth, pp. xxi ; xxxviii ; 7, 9, 56.
 „ the Apocalypse of, p. xlv.
 Feuchtwang, p. xxxii.
 Freewill, man's, xxx. 15.
 Gaidal, i. 10 ; lvii. 2.
 Garden of Eden, the, viii. 6 ; xxxi. 1, 2.
 Glycas, 41.
 God's first coming to the earth, lviii. 1.
 „ second coming to the earth, xxxii. 1 ; xlii. 5.
 Grigori, the (i.e. oi Eγγήγοροι), the Watchers, xviii. 1, 3.
 Guardians of the gates of hell, the, xlii. 1.
 Gunkel, pp. xxxvi ; xxxviii.
 Hawkins, p. xlii.
 Heaven, the old Semitic conception of, pp. xxxiv-xxxix ; x. 1.
 „ „ „ „ accepted partially in New Testament, pp. xxxix-xlii.
 Heaven, the first, iii-vi.
 „ the second, p. xxxv ; vii.
 „ the third, pp. xxxvi ; xxxix ; xl ; xlv ; viii-x.
 „ the fourth, pp. xxxvii ; xlv ; xi-xvii.
 „ the fifth, pp. xxxvii ; xlii ; xviii.
 „ the sixth, p. xxxvii ; xix.
 „ the seventh, p. xxxviii ; xx, xxi.
 Heavens, the seven, pp. xxx-xlvii ; iii-xxi.
 Hell or Hades, xl. 12 ; xli. 1 ; xlii. 1.
 Hermes, the planet, xxx. 3.
 Intercession of departed saints for the living denied, liii. 1.
 Irenaeus, pp. xxx ; xlv ; xlv ; 7.
 Isaiah, the Ascension of, p. xx ; 4, 23, 28, 36, 83.
 Jensen, p. xxxii.
 Joannis, Liber Apocryphus, quoted, 28.
 Joel the Chronographer, p. xvii ; 37.
 Josephus, 30, 44, 70, 73.
 Jubilees, the Book of, pp. 3, 35, 37, 41, 55.
 Khermion, lvii. 2.
 Kohler, p. 94.
 Koran, the, pp. xlvi ; xlvii ; 8, 75.
 Kruno, the planet, xxx. 3.
 Man created from seven substances, xxx. 8.
 „ with seven natures, xxx. 9.
 „ with freewill and knowledge of good and evil, xxx. 15, 16.
 „ to be judged for his treatment of animals, lviii. 5, 6.
 Man's works ordained before his creation, lii. 2.
 „ time in this world pre-ordained, xlix. 2.
 „ final abode prepared, xlix. 2, 3 ; lviii. 5.
 Methuselah, i. 10.
 Michael, xxii. 6, 9 ; xxxiii. 10.
 Millennium, the, pp. xxvii ; xxix ; xxx ; xxxii. 2-xxxiii. 2.
 Moon, the course of the, xvi. 5-7.
 Moses, the Apocalypse of, pp. xviii ; xlv ; 7, 16, 17, 28.

Noah, xxxv. 1.

Oil of mercy or of glory, the, xxii. 8, 9; lvi. 2.

Orders of angels, the ten, xx. 1, 3.

Origen, pp. xx; xliii; xlv; 13, 38.

Paradise, the earthly, viii. 6.

„ the heavenly, viii. 1-4; xlii. 3, 4.

Pariukh, xxxiii. 11.

Paul, the Apocalypse of, pp. xix; 7, 8, 9, 10.

Peter, the Apocalypse of, pp. 2, 9, 10, 11.

Philastrius, p. xlv.

Philo, pp. xvii; xxvi; 30, 31, 32, 37, 39, 40, 43, 44, 65, 70, 79.

Phoenixes, the, xii. 1; xv. 1.

Planets, the, xxvii. 3; xxx. 3.

Plato, pp. 38, 42, 74.

Prayer, the hours of, li. 4.

Pseudo-Lactantius, p. 13.

Regim, i. 10; lvii. 2.

Resurrection, the, xxii. 8; 1. 2; lxxv. 6.

Riman, lvii. 2.

River, the river of, x. 2.

Sacrifices, directions as to, xlv. 3; lix. 2, 3; lxi. 4, 5; lxxvi. 2.

Satan, xxix. 4, 5; xxxi. 4-7.

Satanail, xviii. 3; xxix. 4, 5; xxxi. 4.

Sayce, p. xxxii.

Seraphim, the, p. xxx; xii. 1; xix. 6.

Sibylline Oracles, the, p. xix; 9, 10, 11, 12, 41, 42, 47, 53, 56, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 67, 69, 70, 75, 77.

Souls created before the foundation of the world, xxiii. 5.

Strangling of animals forbidden, lix. 4.

Sun, the course of the, xiii; xiv; xvi.

Swearing condemned, xlix. 1, 2.

Talmud, the, pp. xxxviii; 5, 21, 22, 24, 25, 32, 40, 66.

Tertullian, pp. xlv; 36.

Testament of Abraham quoted, pp. 10, 56.

„ Isaac quoted, p. 11.

„ Jacob quoted, p. 9.

Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, pp. xxxiii; xxxiv; xxxv; 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 20, 21, 24, 36, 40, 49.

Theodotus, pp. xlv; 11.

Thevan or Thevad, xlviii. 2.

Tree of life, the, viii. 3.

Tree of mercy, the, viii. 7; xxi. 7.

Tsivan, xlviii. 2; lxviii. 1, 3.

Ukhan, lvii. 2.

Vretil, xxii. 11, 12; xxiii. 3, 4.

Ways, the two, xxx. 15.

Weber, pp. xxxix; 5, 6, 21, 25, 30, 32, 36, 37, 40, 41, 43, 44, 45, 48.

Wisdom, the Book of, pp. xxv; 30, 32, 39, 43, 45, 68, 80, 81.

Wisdom hypostatized, xxx. 8; xxxiii. 3.

Works of man ordained before the foundation of the world, the, liii. 3.

Zend-Avesta, 74.

Zodiac, the, xxx. 5.

SELECT LIST

OF

STANDARD THEOLOGICAL WORKS

PRINTED AT

THE CLARENDON PRESS, OXFORD.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, ETC.	page 1	ENGLISH THEOLOGY	page 6
FATHERS OF THE CHURCH, ETC. „	4	LITURGIOLOGY	„ 8
ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, ETC. „	5

1. THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, ETC.

HEBREW, etc. Notes on the Text of the Book of Genesis. By G. J. Spurrell, M.A. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 12s. 6d.

— Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Kings. By C. F. Burney, M.A. 8vo. 14s. net.

— Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel. By S. R. Driver, D.D. 8vo. [Out of print.]

— Treatise on the use of the Tenses in Hebrew. By S. R. Driver, D.D. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

— The Psalms in Hebrew without points. Stiff covers, 2s.

— A Commentary on the Book of Proverbs. Attributed to Abraham Ibn Ezra. Edited from a MS. in the Bodleian Library by S. R. Driver, D.D. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 3s. 6d.

— Ecclesiasticus (xxxix. 15-xlix. 11). The Original Hebrew, with Early Versions and English Translation, &c. Edited by A. E. Cowley, M.A., and Ad. Neubauer, M.A. 4to. 10s. 6d. net.

— — Translated from the Original Hebrew, with a Facsimile. Crown 8vo, stiff covers, 2s. 6d.

— — Facsimiles of the Fragments hitherto recovered of the Book of Ecclesiasticus in Hebrew. 60 leaves. Collotype. In a Cloth Box. 1l. 1s. net. (Published jointly by the Oxford and Cambridge University Presses.)

— The Book of Tobit. A Chaldee Text, from a unique MS. in the Bodleian Library. Edited by Ad. Neubauer, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s.

— A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, with an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic, based on the Thesaurus and Lexicon of Gesenius, by Francis Brown, D.D., S. R. Driver, D.D., and C. A. Briggs, D.D. Parts I-XI. Small 4to. 2s. 6d. each.

— Gesenius' Hebrew Grammar. As Edited and Enlarged by E. Kautzsch. Translated from the Twenty-fifth German Edition by the late Rev. G. W. Collins, M.A. The Translation revised and adjusted to the Twenty-sixth Edition by A. E. Cowley, M.A. 8vo. 21s.

— Hebrew Accentuation of Psalms, Proverbs, and Job. By William Wickes, D.D. 8vo. 5s.

— Hebrew Prose Accentuation. By the same Author. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

— The Book of Hebrew Roots, by Abu 'l-Walid Marwān ibn Janāh, otherwise called Rabbi Yōnāh. Now first edited, with an appendix, by Ad. Neubauer. 4to. 2l. 7s. 6d.

ETHIOPIC. The Book of Enoch. Translated from Dillmann's Ethiopic Text (emended and revised), and edited by R. H. Charles, M.A. 8vo. 16s.

Oxford: Clarendon Press. London: HENRY FROWDE, Amen Corner, E.C.

GREEK. A Concordance to the Septuagint and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament, including the Apocryphal Books. By the late Edwin Hatch, M.A., and H. A. Redpath, M.A. In six Parts, imperial 4to, 21s. each.

— Supplement to the above, Fasc. I. Containing a Concordance to the Proper Names occurring in the Septuagint. By H. A. Redpath, M.A. Imperial 4to. 16s.

— Essays in Biblical Greek. By Edwin Hatch, D.D. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

